

BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA

STARR KING SCHOOL
FOR THE MINISTRY

THE INQUIRER.

1901.

THE INQUIRER

A WEEKLY JOURNAL

OF

LIBERAL RELIGIOUS THOUGHT AND LIFE.

SEEK AFTER TRUTH, BY WHICH NO MAN EVER YET WAS INJURED."--MARCUS ANTONINUS.

STARR KING SCHOOL

FOR THE MINISTRY

VOL. LX.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER, 1901.

LONDON:

1901.

24799
X288.41
I1
V.60
1901

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

No. 3054. NEW SERIES, No. 158.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 1
ARTICLES :—
The War and Peace of Christ 3
War and Conscience 5
"He could not be Hid" 5
At the Dawn of a Century 9
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Central Postal Mission Religious Conferences 6
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 7
LEADER :—
Steadfast, Unmovable, Always Abounding in the Work of the Lord 8
POETRY :—
Via, Veritas, Vita 7
Faith and Work 8
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
London 12
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 13
ADVERTISEMENTS 14

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

IN the silent night the new century was born, in a silence greater than all the noise of careless crowds which thronged many of our streets, a silence eloquent of earnest thought and of solemn issues. In the cathedrals and in thousands of places of worship throughout the land watch-night services were held, and again special services on New Year's Day. The text of the New Year's sermon in St. Paul's and at many other services was :—

Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward.

And to this, as one of the best of New Year's mottos, we will add the lines from Lowell's "Present Crisis" :—

New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward, who would keep abreast of Truth.

Some of the most searching words were those spoken by Canon Gore at the watch-night service in Westminster Abbey. The century was closing, he said, with a wide-spread sense of disappointment and anxiety among those who cared most for righteousness and truth in the world. The literature of the day was singularly without "inspiration," and the people without conspicuous leaders. The dominant cry was of Empire. That was a word which might cover a noble and rich patriotism, a belief both humbling and inspiring in a Divine purpose working through us. But, looked at as it existed, it could not afford much satisfaction to any one who believed that righteousness alone exalteth a nation. It was poor in moral quality, and appeared, behind only too thin a veil, as the worship of our unregenerate British selves, without humility or fear of God. And meanwhile great vices were dominant and unabashed, and the mass of the people remained stolidly indifferent to the efforts of religious teachers. But "the good old times" existed only in imagination, and they had really gone forward and not backward. The forces of religion and righteousness were not exhausted. We must wait in humility and penitence and hope for a fresh movement of the Divine Spirit, to fulfil the purpose of God for ourselves and for the world.

WE should be glad to think that the service held on New Year's Day in the Evesham parish church was but one out of many instances of an earnest spirit of civic unity and harmony among the members of different churches at the opening of the century. At Evesham the Vicar and the Mayor (who is a member of the Baptist Church) issued a joint invitation to the people of the town to attend a united service in All Saints' Church. The Baptist, Wesleyan, and Unitarian ministers, together with the vicar of a neighbouring parish, joined by invitation in the procession of the Mayor and Corporation, magistrates, and others from the Town Hall to the church, and the service was of a helpful and impressive character.

THE Commonwealth of Australia was inaugurated on New Year's Day by a great gathering of the people at Sydney, and a picturesque ceremony, at which Lord Hopetoun took the oath of office as Governor-General, representing the Queen, and the new Federal Ministry were sworn. The proceedings began with the singing, by a choir of a thousand voices, of the hymn, "O God, our help in ages past." The following message from the Colonial Secretary was read :—

The Queen commands me to express through you to the people of Australia Her Majesty's heartfelt interest in the inauguration of the Commonwealth, and her earnest wish that, under Divine Providence, it may ensure the increased prosperity and well-being of her loyal and beloved subjects in Australia.

There was a further message of cordial greeting from Her Majesty's Government welcoming Australia to her place among the nations united under the Queen's sovereignty, recognising the accomplished Federation as making for the permanent unity of the Empire, and recognising with satisfaction "that the wider powers and responsibilities henceforth secured to Australia will give fresh opportunity for the display of that generous loyalty and devotion to the Throne and Empire which has always characterised the action in the past of its several States."

AMONG the New Year's honours it is announced that Mr. Edmund Barton, Q.C., the first Prime Minister of the new Australian Commonwealth, and Sir Samuel Griffith, the Chief Justice of Queensland, have been admitted to the Privy Council. Many of our readers will have noted with pleasure the honour of knighthood conferred on Mr. Edward Henry Busk, Chairman of Convocation of the London University.

To Dr. Brooke Herford, at the opening of this year, which marks his jubilee in the ministry, we must add here to what Mr. Tarrant has so well said at the close of his "Provincial Letter" a word of the most cordial and affectionate greeting and good wishes, in which we are sure that our readers will heartily join.

THE January Mill Hill Pulpit contains the sermon preached by the Rev. Charles Hargrove before the Yorkshire Unitarian Union on the first day of the new century, with the title "Forward!" Looking into the future, Mr. Hargrove sees all the old dangers and the old enemies of Pilgrim's Progress, though in different guise, still standing in the way. Nevertheless, he bids his hearers take courage and go forward. The prospect neither of death nor of failure must daunt those who have simply to be true to their high calling, "to do righteousness and speak truth and fear none but God." The spirit of uncompromising selfishness is the spectre of the twentieth century, but may be, it will vanish, as we boldly approach to the encounter :—

Let us so hope and pray, but rather "take to ourselves the whole armour of God, and with the shield of faith and sword of the Spirit" go forth to the battle. Of this, more than aught else, afeard—lest we be ourselves overtaken with the blindness which limits our vision within the narrow horizon of the material world, lest the souls begotten of God die within us. Nay, we need not fear, so long as we "go forward." With this our motto we shall march secure, and failing all on earth shall not fail of the Kingdom which Jesus won, "going before" his disciples to Calvary and death.

MR. HARGROVE'S sermon, "Forward," was preached at a special united service of consecration and communion in Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, which was conducted by the Revs. J. Ellis and E. W. Lummis, the subsequent communion service being conducted by the Revs. J. E. Manning and E. Ceredig Jones. In the afternoon a conference of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union was held in the Priestley Hall, to consider the work of Unitarians in the new century. The chair was taken by Mr. Grosvenor Talbot, president of the Union, and important resolutions were passed. The meeting was reported with some fulness in the Leeds Mercury of Jan. 2, but a copy did not reach us in time for use this week, and we must reserve our report for next week.

THE report published last week in the Daily Chronicle that the late Lord O'Hagan before his death had been received into the Roman Church, we received with entire disbelief, and we now hear from Lord O'Hagan's family that a telegram, in answer to inquiries, has reached them from South Africa, in which it is stated that Lord O'Hagan arrived in a conscious condition at the hospital in which he died and entered himself on his arrival as a Protestant on the official register, according to the regulation. It follows from the contents of that telegram that the rumour above referred to cannot have any foundation in fact, since his fatal illness, from beginning to end, did not last a month, while the rumour suggested that a conversion had been effected, not during the illness but before it, when Lord O'Hagan was still quite well. The Daily Chronicle, in publishing this contradiction on Wednesday, added that its statement had been made "on the authority of a leading ecclesiastic and also of a near relative of the priest who claimed to have received him into the Church." It is well known how eager "leading ecclesiastics" are in such cases to make the most of any rumour of conversion, and even without the explicit testimony which we have quoted, we should have been quite satisfied as to the meaning of the rumour. Our readers will remember the testimony borne (by one who had the most intimate knowledge) in the memorial notice which we published on Dec. 22, to the fact that Lord O'Hagan "had embraced with singular lucidity and moral courage the principles for which our Free Churches stand."

ON New Year's Day the Daily News published a number of interesting "Interviews with Experts" as to the outlook into the new century. As to religion the Rev. H. R. Haweis, of St. James's, Marylebone, said that the only hope of the Church of the Twentieth Century was "that it should make a clean sweep of 1900 years of theology and get back to Christ." The various theological statements have been useful in their own age, as vehicles of a certain amount of Christian truth, "but as Dean Milman said in his wise 'History of Christianity,' Theophilus of Antioch, who invented the doctrine of the Trinity—or, at all events, coined that theological word—did not thereby very greatly benefit the Church." And so with every other dogma, the underlying spiritual truth needs to be stated afresh, when the expression, living, and satisfactory to one age, has become false and dangerous to another.

The Twentieth Century Church will insist upon re-statement on a large scale. Present theological text-books are obsolete. They practically teach men and women infidelity. The Cimmerian darkness of Sunday-school teaching must be abandoned; the conscientious agonies of devout Sunday-school teachers must be relieved. . . . Our mistake is in pretending to believe obsolete statements which once expressed truth, but which are now seen to be defective. We should discard them openly and plead for proper re-statements, as Harvey Goodwin, late Bishop of Chester, said not long before he died. What would be thought of the astronomer who proposed to revive the Ptolemaic theory that the sun went round the earth when we know better? What is the use of teaching the verbal inspiration of the Bible when we know that the Bible is not verbally inspired? People now despise the clergy on account of the old rubbish they are not ashamed to teach. The twentieth century will not tolerate them unless they mend their ways.

So with regard to hell, and the resurrection of the body. And the new century will have to change its attitude towards the religions of the world, recognising that God has always been revealing Himself, as men were able to receive it. "The teachings of Buddha, Zoroaster, Confucius, Moses, by a certain moral and spiritual solidarity, show that all religions are of Divine origin, though Christianity is the religion which belongs to the fulness of time."

The whole missionary method must be altered in the coming century. The Christian religion can only spread properly from the Christian life—the lives of Englishmen and Englishwomen, not merely from the Christian dogma, nor the Christian machinery, the Christian calico, or even the Christian bayonet. The only way for missions to be healthy is for the English people abroad so to improve their minds and intelligences as to make the natives come and implore them to reveal the secret of such marked superiority and goodness, which under their own faulty system they seem unable to attain. The real Christian influence should spread as Christ spread His religion, by enthusiasm for ameliorating the physical as well as the spiritual condition of the people.

As to the different churches of this country, Mr. Haweis looks forward to a spiritual federation, voluntary, not enforced, and to the claims of the sacerdotalists giving place of spiritual facts.

THIS week's Punch contains the last cartoon that we are to have from Sir John Tenniel, who, at the age of eighty, in the fulness of his powers, as this week's cartoon clearly shows, retires from the position which he has held with so much distinction for fifty years. Tenniel, as the dignified and graphic exponent of the united wisdom of Mr. Punch's council, has written history in a form which will remain among the records, by no means the least valuable, of the last fifty years, and his work is worthily closed by this last cartoon, which represents Old Time, with the infant 1901 on his arm, and the angel of Peace by his side, checking, with uplifted hand, the destructive chariot of War.

THE special attention of our London readers is called to the advertisement in another column of Mr. J. H. Leigh's reading of The Merchant of Venice next Saturday afternoon (Jan. 12), in aid of the funds of the London Domestic Mission.

LORD ARMSTRONG, who died on Thursday week, at the age of ninety, was one of the great inventors, in an age remarkable beyond all others for progress in mechanical and scientific knowledge. Yet he was educated, and for some years practised as a lawyer in his native city of Newcastle-on-Tyne. His first great invention was the hydraulic crane, after which he turned his attention to ordnance, and the Armstrong gun achieved for him a terrible fame throughout the world. In 1863 Sir William Armstrong, as he was at that time, was president of the British Association and dealt with the question of the coal supply of this country. His peerage, which dies with him, dates from the Jubilee year, 1887. Preaching on Sunday morning at the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne, the Rev. Frank Walters referred to the death of Lord Armstrong, speaking of him as "a master in scientific research, a magnificent organiser of industry, and a veritable creator in mechanical design." And Mr. Walters added:—

It is worth pondering how that fragile physical frame enshrined those mental powers that yoked the forces of nature to his will, and embodied his ideals in the mighty steamer, the thunderous gun, and the electric dynamo. The forces of nature were the strength to which this genius was allied; and the laws of God became the instruments whereby he achieved his triumphs. He needs no monument to perpetuate his memory amongst the people who always speak his name with such honourable pride. The workshops of Elswick must remind us of his achievements; the parks of Jesmond must immortalise his philanthropy; the beauties of Cragside must tell of the taste and culture which touched with a finer grace the character of this captain of modern industrial enterprise. His tenacity of purpose, his perseverance in thought and labour, his victories of mind over matter, his persistent reduction of raw material to useful purposes and ideal ends—all these characteristics mark him out as one of those unique men who are chosen for some special work, and then laid under a necessity to spend their lives in its discharge. His was the brilliant genius allied to the strength of nature; and, as we have learnt this morning, the strength and order of nature is only another name for the power and wisdom of God.

WE regret to hear of the death of Sir Thomas Clark, Bart., head of the well-known firm of Edinburgh publishers, Messrs. T. and T. Clark, to whom we are indebted for a large number of valuable theological works, not the least of which is Dr. Hastings' "Dictionary of the Bible," now in course of publication. Sir Thomas, we learn from the Athenæum, entered the firm in 1846, and on the death of his uncle became sole partner until joined by his two sons. He took a leading part in Edinburgh public life. During his term of office as Lord Provost the foundation-stone of the Public Library was laid.

A NEW story by Edna Lyall, "In Spite of All," in the time of the great Civil War, begins in this week's Christian World, and the Literary World gives an interesting account of the author, with a good portrait.

THE veteran Dr. Cyrus Augustus Bartol, who was born in 1813, and, after passing through Bowdoin College and Harvard Divinity School, was for fifty-two years one of the best known Unitarian ministers in Boston, passed away on Sunday morning Dec. 16. The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. C. G. Ames, D.D., at the Church of the Disciples.

THE PRISON AND THE ANGEL.

SELF is the only prison that can ever bind the soul;
Love is the only angel that can bid the gates unroll;
And when he comes to call thee, arise and follow fast;
His way may lie through darkness, but it leads to light at last.

HENRY VAN DYKE.

THE WAR AND PEACE OF CHRIST.

A New Year's Sermon.

BY THE REV. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

"I came, not to send peace on earth, but a sword."—Matt. x. 34.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you."—John xiv. 27.

THIS seems a strange contrast, even a contradiction; and it seems stranger still when we think, as we think at this time, and in the midst of war, of the angelic proclamation with which the birth of Jesus Christ was welcomed—that cry, the fulfilment of which we have so long expected but never attained. "Peace on earth" seems farther away than ever. Europe is a great camp of war; Asia is seething from the Caspian to Kamtskatcha; Africa's garments are rolled in blood; and America has lately allowed herself to be dragged into the hurly-burly. Nothing saves us from universal war but the terror of what will be, when the appalling weapons with which scientific men have furnished the selfishness of men are let loose, like dragons, to desolate and devour humanity at the bidding of greed of power and greed of wealth. Therefore, when we look out over the world, we are tempted to pass our days in sorrow. There is not peace on earth, and our hope is too like despair.

A few years ago we had a Sunday called "Peace Sunday." It was well that the ministers of Christ in this land should support against the agonies of war the claims of peace. It was well that an eager and conscientious young man, at the head of a great people, and struck with the misery of the world, should hope for disarmament. This deserved our thanks. It is not a common thing for kings and emperors, eaten up for centuries with the cancer of militarism, to call armament disease, and to wish to get rid of it. But the Tsar must have known, unless he were quite blind, that there would be no disarmament as long as the nations cherished jealousy of one another; national hatred, revenge, envy and greed—and these are rampant now. The passion for mere money-making has never been greater, and it has blown, like a hot blast, these evil national passions into a fiercer flame than usual. France will not disarm, nor Germany, nor England, nor Turkey, nor Austria, nor Russia, and America and the Eastern peoples are preparing for battle. The world seems handed over to Mammon; though, thank God, there are many still in England who refuse the worship of the great golden image, yet its worship has collared the soul of the nations, and, to my infinite sorrow, nowhere is it worse and viler than in republics.

Under the rule of Mammon, wars are inevitable. Every dividing and destroying passion is then swollen into fury. Would we have peace, we must change the present temper of the soul of society, all over the world, from greed to self-sacrifice, from selfishness to love of one another. Half the foundations of our present society will have to be shaken out of their place, upturned, and rebuilt, before we shall have a chance of peace; and a new foundation laid on that truth of human brotherhood which Jesus preached; of which we talk so much and do so little.

It is well, as I said, that this young Emperor should speak for peace, for the sake of the suffering world; it is well that the ministers of religion should support his call; but it were better still if he were to look after his own people, and be just to them, keep them out of the yearly starvation which besets them, check the persecution of honest opinion, reduce his personal expenses for the sake of example, and destroy the incredible corruption of Russian administration. And it were better also if the ministers of the Church of England and of Nonconformity were to go to the root of the matter, and speak more than they do against the unbridled competition and race for wealth beyond what is necessary, which prevails from the highest to the lowest classes; which is as vile and degrading in kings, governments and capitalists as it is in the small tradesmen of the towns and small farmers of the country. The one text which we should preach on now, if we desire to put an end to wars, is this—"Take heed and beware of covetousness." That is the multitudinous mother of all wars, from the quarrels of a village council to the quarrels of the nations of the world. And till this mother of theirs is weakened almost to inanition (for we cannot as yet hope for her destruction) out of her fruitful womb the dragons of war will issue, troop after troop, to burn and slay the poor, to destroy the blessed fruitage of the earth, to decivilise mankind. Yet terrible as a universal war would be, it is not half so terrible and deadly as universal covetousness is, nor are its victims so many as those whom covetousness pitilessly slaughters. And it may be if covetousness should deepen, as it has been deepening of late, that the only cure of its evil will be that its legitimate fruits should follow on it, and proclaim by the results of universal war the abomination of universal covetousness. The moral laws of God are inevitable in their action; and the punishment of greed is no arbitrary judgment of God. To all greed is linked, as the fruit is to the seed, disunion and division, mutual hatred, strife, the splitting up of states, war and red ruin, the sun darkened, and the moon turned to blood. Look for that judgment; and it will fall heaviest on those who have been most guilty, among whom covetousness has been most universal. The time will come, if men do not repent and do works meet for repentance, when God will take His fan in His hand and will thoroughly purge His floor. Covetousness will inevitably produce war. We shall eat the fruit of our own devices.

That should be the prophetic cry of kings and Tsars, of governors of republics, of ministers of states, and of ministers of religion. And for ourselves to work to root covetousness out of our spirit, and wherever we have influence to diminish it—that should be the preaching and action of our life. For that will bring peace—peace without its evils—the peace which Christ desired for man, the peace of which the story says the angels sang when he was born.

II.—The peace of Christ, if it is to come on earth, and bring the final overthrow of wars, can only be gained by the nations when they have gained that spirit of his love which is the destruction of covetousness. Love, the root of Brotherhood, means Peace on Earth. But Christ knew well that the whole forces of selfishness—the desire of power, the desire of wealth, the desire of splendour, the desire of enslaving men to do our will and fill our purse or our pride—would be arrayed against his doctrine of love. To be served by men is the longing of the children of the world. To serve men was the longing of Jesus. And the two longings are at internecine war. You cannot serve self and at the same time serve mankind or serve God. Therefore, Christ, knowing this, was not blind enough to proclaim a world-peace. On the contrary he proclaimed war. "I am not come," he said, "to bring peace, but a sword." But the sword he drew, and with which his servants fight, was not the sword of the warriors of this world, but a sword of keener temper, mightier, sharper, more piercing than any fabled sword, and flashing brighter light. It was the sword of Ideas, of the Truths of God. And the war he proclaimed was, on his side, a spiritual war; the war of light against darkness, of righteousness against wrong, of truth against lies, of love against self-desire, of forgiveness against hate, of justice against injustice, of pity against hardness of heart, of simplicity against luxury, of humility against the pride of life.

These are days in which to follow that ideal, to pray the Father to grant us grace and strength to draw the sword of Christ, and to wage his war worthily, with his banner, which is Love, waving above our armies. It is our work to take to ourselves not only the inward Peace that Jesus promised for our comfort, but also, for our duty, the outward war he bade us wage. Take the whole armour of God, that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. For we wrestle, not against flesh and blood, but against those ideas of evil which are the princes and powers of the selfish world, the world-rulers of this darkness, the spiritual hosts of wickedness which dwell in the hearts of men, and urge their action against the Brotherhood of men. A noble war! worthy of life's devotion; a war to think of with all high emotion and joy, for it will close in certain victory. "I beheld," said Jesus, in his symbolic way, and in an hour of high spiritual rapture, "I beheld Satan, like lightning, fall from Heaven."

There are some who will say that this explanation of the text eludes its direct meaning, and there are others who, with pitiful want of intelligence, attack Christ for this saying, and express a moral horror of his having said so dreadful a thing. "I am come to send a sword." "Nothing can be more wicked"—so they say. I allow that what I have said is not a direct explanation of the text, but it is a good corollary from the direct explanation which I shall now give. And the explanation will be an answer to the false attack made, on account of it, against the character of Christ.

The phrase is, like all he said, not the expression of a passing mood, but the statement of a universal truth. Every great genius, in whatever sphere of intellect or feeling he may work, comes, when he brings his truth into the world, not to bring peace but a sword, comes to initiate a war. He does not want to make war, but the result is war. And he initiates it by proclaiming the truths (with their ideas) which he has discovered. The moment he brings these truths, whether they be political, scientific, artistic, or religious, to man, he arouses against them all the falsehoods which deny them, all the interests which the truths or ideas damage, all the persons who dislike them. And then the war arises, the sword is brought to the battle. All true ideas ever set forth by their possessor do not bring peace, but a sword; and this is universally true, and it was that which Jesus meant.

When in politics the idea of free trade was started, what was the result in the sphere of politics? Not peace, but a sword. When, after a long concealed struggle, the ideas of the French Revolution burst upon the world, did they bring peace? No, but a sword. They set father against son, husband against wife, sister against brother. They divided the closest ties, so powerful are ideas, not for peace, but for battle. When Wordsworth restored nature to poetry he raised against the new conception of poetry all the false conceptions, and the swords of the furious critics waved in every magazine. When the Pre-Raphaelites threw their new idea of the true aim of art into the field the result, the inevitable result, was war. When Darwin astonished England by the ideas contained in the Origin of Species, we know the result. Peace did not come of it, but the flashing of swords. And when Jesus came, bringing with him ideas which were revolutionary of the existing ideas of religion, of the Church, of power, of wealth, of all the forces of the kingdoms of this world, the necessary result was the mighty war of his ideas with the ideas of the world. He did not come with the intention of bringing "a sword," as the attack on his character falsely postulates; he came, and the inevitable result of the Truths he proclaimed was to wake into the fiercest opposition all the Lies which existed in the spiritual world. Seeing, then, this universal result, he said, with his profound common sense and intuition combined. "I come not to send peace, but a sword."

This is the true explanation of his phrase. It is the statement of a universal truth, not only in the world of the spirit, but in the world of conscience, of politics, of law, of science, of the arts, of domestic economy, of public government, of literature, and of the vast movements of the history of the world. The result of the proclamation of true ideas in any of these spheres is not peace, but war. It is a war of ideas; and its weapons, on the side of truth, are, for the most part, not carnal, but intellectual, moral and spiritual. But sometimes, because on the side of Lies, the weapons used are those of earthly power, greed and oppression, the war of ideas becomes actual war. And if ever actual war is justified it is when it is waged for the sake of truths necessary for the good and progress of mankind. But, in general, we fight these wars all over the world with the weapons which most befit them, with the weapons of the intellect, of the primal emotions, of the Spirit of Love.

There, then, it lies before us—this mighty war between Truth and Falsehood, in which the whole world is now concerned, with which the whole world has been occupied from the beginning even until now—and it is well not to lull ourselves to rest with a false idea of peace. For us, there is no peace of this outward kind, nor did Jesus come to bring it. It is best to look the truth in the face to-day, and to know our work. For so, when we come to realise what was indeed the peace he brought, we shall not imagine that it frees us from the duty of fighting in the war he brought.

But before I speak of his Peace, there are two things to remember about this war. First: we must choose our side, now, at this very time. There are abundant forms of this general war around us now. It will not do, through sloth, indifference, or selfish desire of comfort, to hang back or retire from the strife. For, then, we shall either be rushed in at the end, and enter on it powerlessly, having no experience—or we shall be crushed beneath the feet of the combatants. How long, cried Elijah, at a crisis in such a war—halt ye between two opinions? Choose God or Baal. And so I say to you—choose Truth or Falsehood, Justice or Injustice, Service of Man or Self-service—and fly your flag. Anything is better than lying in your tent, shutting your ears, lest your comfort be disturbed, hiding your sword, and amusing yourselves, while Heaven and Hell are striving. At every moment of the day of work, in every society, in your trade or business, you are called on to take your side, in a thousand ways, on behalf of true and against false ideas. Proclaim the true; let all the world understand the side you take. Steadfastly, when a crisis comes, set your face to go to Jerusalem.

That is one thing to say. The other is—that though this world-wide war may last yet thousands and thousands of years, yet, in the end, when truth has conquered all falsehood, it will close in victory; and then, but not till then, there will be peace in the Universe, peace on the earth, peace in every star. And the peace will be the peace which is the Child of Universal Love. At last, love will have rooted out all selfishness, and service, one of another, be the Lord of Life. The Love which Christ lived and taught shall reign alone. The certainty of that noble conclusion of the War of Mankind for Truth, is the deepest joy which fills our heart. We stand often, in some hush of the world-conflict, in an hour of peace—and we behold Christ's conquest, far away in time, but near to faith. We hear the Angels' song, and however hot the battle, we, knowing there shall be peace at last, join in their rapturous cry: "Glory to God in the highest." Far in the future, beyond the noise and trouble of the war in which we labour, we live by hope in the quiet which shall be when love, omnipotent, has made the universal peace. And when again we take up our war, we shall wage it all the better for the noble vision we have seen.

III.—And now for the last part of this sermon. There is a peace which, in the midst of our warring, we may possess. We are not left without its blessing. But it is a peace within, and not without. It is a peace which co-exists with the war I have described. It abides in the depths of the soul. Christ called it "my peace," and he left it to us. It is his most beloved legacy. His peace, then, it is; and it ought, if we look into his life, to be easily discovered; though not fully comprehended, so infinite it was in him.

It was not peace from the war with evil. All his life long he waged that battle. And he died because he would not make peace with the false ideas of of the world. Nor was it peace from the troubles and pains of life. In the very hour in which he spoke of his peace, there gathered round his head some of the worst storms which can befall a man. Whatever his peace was, it was consistent with outward peacelessness. Nor are his followers better off. "In this world," he said, "ye shall have tribulation."

It was not, then, the peace of an easy life which Jesus left to his disciples. Was it then freedom from the unrest of the heart; freedom from sorrow and care, and bitter pain of thought and love? No, not that either, for it was "my peace," he said, and even while he said the words, he was torn with the troubles of the human heart. "Now is my soul troubled, Father, save me from this hour"; for there lay heavily on his heart the pain of the coming days. "When Jesus had thus said," it is written again, "he was troubled in spirit, and said: 'Verily, I say to you, one of you shall betray me.'" Bitter to his heart was the pang of deep ingratitude. Afterwards, so far from him was this kind of peace, there came the lonely agony in the garden, the cry of desolation on the cross. This was not peace from the troubles of the heart. O, because we follow our Master, we are not saved from the natural sorrows of mankind. That is not his peace.

Not outward peace then of any kind, but inward peace. It was the peace which comes of righteousness and of fulfilment of the Father's will, the peace of perfect obedience to perfect law. Christ had a work to do on earth, and when death drew near, he knew that he had done it. "I have finished the work Thou gavest me to do, and now I am no more in the world, and I come to Thee." Can we conceive a deeper peace than that? That peace and joy which the artist feels, when having conceived and brought to birth a conception of beauty, and laboured in it faithfully, and loved it more deeply as he gave it form more fully, and at last is satisfied, is but a faint image of the unspeakable quiet of joy which Jesus had, when, abiding in the peace of duty done, he said: "Peace, my peace I give to you."

But not only in the last hours when he looked back, but all through life he had known within that noble peace which lies in inward harmony. That is derived from the mastery over the whole nature of one aim alone. There is war in the inner life when many desires divide the will and the conscience; but when one thing—love of the will of the Father, that is, the redemption of man—overrides all physical, intellectual, emotional, and imaginative pains and pleasure, then the government of this one thing makes inward peace. All the qualities and powers of being move in melodious concentration, in unwarring flow, to union with that divine Will in whom is peace. That was the peace of Christ, the peace he left to us. And we may have it, if we will.

Then again, the inward peace of Christ came from the triumph of love within him. It is in the depth of God's love that God's peace is rooted. None of our anger with Him, none of our sins, none of our ignorant rebellion against His righteousness, changes for one moment the eternal perseverance of His quiet love to us. No tempest of passion (such as we know on earth) disturbs the peace of love. God is only conscious of the profound, patient, unspeakable tenderness which is always quietly at rest in the knowledge of His own goodwill.

And in his oneness with that love was the peace of Christ. Had he met all that the world made him suffer with anger, with sulky complaint, with unforgiveness, with any of the forms of self; had he even spoken to the Pharisees in indignation for himself, and not for the cause of man, he had lost the exquisite peace of love. But over all, love rose triumphant, a sun above the clouds of storm, and out of the stillness of love fell on his soul the dew of peace. Think of the spiritual peace which looked from the cross on the mocking crowd and said: "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." This also may be ours, if we will love and forgive, and think not of self—if we serve mankind.

And out of all these came the last, the highest peace—conscious union and communion with God his Father. That we cannot define. The depths of feeling escape analysis. But it lies deep in that region of Being that many now deny, but which is the one eternal substance for us in a world of fleeting shadows. There the spirit communes with its source and end, and feels its immortal essence in the essence of God. There, in consciousness of its unbroken union with everlasting righteousness and love beyond the sorrows of the world, beyond baffled doubt, injured love, and all the oppressions of the earth, the spirit knows God, and with God the peace which passeth understanding. And this absolute knowledge of God is joy. When God's absolute goodness fills our will with itself; when infinite love is at home with us—this is the unutterable joy, the joy which Christ possessed; the joy which, with our Master, shall be ours; the joy which we presage for Man, who has grown into so many sorrows; who has been crucified, it may be, for the good of the whole universe of spirit.

When we are weary with war, beaten by the storms of the heart, when, even in the midst of our pleasant human joys, we think of all our trouble, and conceal it, lest we should trouble those who are not yet troubled; when, heavier than any personal pain, the weight of the vast sorrow of the world in the mighty war of good and evil descends upon our heart—let us then hear, above the noise of the world-combat, and hear for strength and consolation, the prophecy of the angels on the dawn when Christ was born—the prophecy of the end of war in the victory of Love—"Glory to God, and on earth peace"—hear and believe; and for ourselves, in the silence within, silence like the chill of dawn, hear for our ineffable comfort, hear and realise in the inmost secret of the soul, the voice of Jesus: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give to you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you."

THE Times record of 1900, published on New Year's Eve, concluded with a strangely incomplete obituary column. The names of Max Müller and Henry Sidgwick were included, but Martineau and Ruskin were forgotten! On the other hand, the chronological survey of the century, in two instalments of fifty years each, published on that day and on Jan. 1, formed by reprinting items of news and other passages from contemporary issues of the paper, is of the utmost interest and value.

WAR AND CONSCIENCE.

PREACHING in the Hope-street Church, Liverpool, on "Peace Sunday," Rev. R. A. Armstrong pleaded with his hearers to recognise the duty and blessing of international peace, and then proceeded to speak of the moral effect of the war in South Africa on the people at home. He pointed sorrowfully to the change which had come over the average sentiment of English people during the last two years.

Two years ago the common creed among us was that, if war, the organised slaying of men, is ever justifiable, it can only be so in defence of national freedom or for the succour of some people horribly oppressed, in such case, for example, as the Armenians were at the hands of Turkey. We had all of us, had we not, given up the notion that war was the right remedy for diplomatic disagreements, or that it ought to be waged for an adjustment of a franchise, or for any of those things which can be settled by conference or arbitration? We should all of us have said then, I think, that in such disagreement it would be our duty with an infinite patience to try to find a friendly solution of the dispute, and, failing that, to seek to agree on an arbitrator as we had done in many a grave dispute before, and to be willing to yield something to the judgment of an arbitrator if he should not wholly support our case, rather than plunge our own people or another into the awful horrors of war.

That was an opinion becoming to civilised and Christian men. But a year later, when the war was begun, things had changed. The question of the responsibility for the outbreak of hostilities he would not there discuss; on that opinions were sharply divided; but undoubtedly a change had come over the sentiments of average Englishmen.

They now had no horror to express at what a year previously they would have recognised as a terrible thing indeed. The war spirit was in full fling. It was sought to silence by intimidation all criticism, all disapproval, all questioning of the divine right of arms. The popular sentiment caught up the military spirit. The gospel of force was in full ascendancy. We were ready to spend blood and wealth without measure in the hapless quarrel. Will anyone say that the Christian character of England had suffered no deterioration, that there had been no slackening in us of the love of peace and good-will, of brotherly love and kindness? Why, to love your enemies, which is a plain and simple element of the Gospel of Christ, was already accounted a traitor's part, a breach of the laws of patriotism. But still chivalry was not dead, and there were none who would not have said that the war must be fairly fought out in the field, man against man, fighter against fighter; none who would not have shrunk with horror from the thought of burning the homes of the women and children, destroying the food supplies of the people, devastating the country, and sweeping it naked of inhabitants.

But now these things, declared by the nations of Europe at the Conference at The Hague to be outside the legitimate operations of war, had been done, and were justified by alleged necessity, while voices had been heard urging even more savage proceedings; and if the war continued for another year, who could tell whether the general conscience of England would not move on to that standpoint?

On "Peace Sunday" of 1901 shall we have that to our account, and be set to reconcile that with the Gospel of Christ? It would not be a greater advance from the standpoint of to-day than the standpoint of to-day from that of last year, or that of last year from that of the year before. I cannot tell; but I would willingly die—and so would thousands and thousands more of us—if we could turn back the conscience of the England that we love—our dear motherland—so great in the records of nobility, to the place where it seemed to stand but two short years ago.

"HE COULD NOT BE HID."

A CHRISTMAS ADDRESS BY THE REV. EDGAR I. FRIPP, B.A.

"He entered into an house, and would have no man know it; but he could not be hid."—Matt. vii. 24.

JESUS, seeking change and rest, went down from the hill-country of Israel to the Mediterranean Sea. He wanted to be quiet, and hoped he would not be recognised. "But," says the writer, "he could not be hid."

No doubt there was something in his appearance which made him remarkable. The old painters used to distinguish the figure of Jesus from others in their pictures by putting a halo round his head; but when their art became more perfect they made him known from the rest by the spiritual beauty in his countenance, and dispensed with the artificial sign. The real halo of Christ was his great love shining in his face as in his words and deeds. This revealed him both to the glad and the troubled.

Therefore, though he did not wish to be known he could not help it. You may hide sweet flowers in a place where they cannot be seen, but their fragrance will betray where they are. It is the same with character. It may keep out of sight, yet it will reveal itself. When Dante fled from Florence as a political exile, worn by worries and the hatred of his enemies, he came to a lonely monastery among the mountains. The monks asked him who he was, and where he came from, and what he wanted. He only replied, "I want peace." That was enough. They recognised him. There was only one Dante, and he quickly disclosed himself. So there was only one Jesus, and he could not be hid.

Jesus cannot be in any part of the world long without his presence being felt.

In Syro-Phœnicia he was among people who worshipped idols. What a contrast was there between his lofty spiritual religion and the woman's heathendom! He was a light in darkness, which could not be concealed. And wherever his Spirit has gone forth, in the hearts and lives of faithful missionaries, into the haunts of superstition and sin, its mark is unmistakeable. We may trace it in every civilised country. In the history of the Roman Empire we may observe how with the growth of Christianity the thirst for blood diminished, gladiatorial shows were abolished, industry and art gained distinction, labour was honoured, slavery done away with, marriage sanctified, and womanhood respected. Who accomplished all this? Many workers, but before all Jesus Christ.

In modern life his influence cannot be hid. We may see it in the growing disgust at warfare, in the steady improvement in the material condition of the working classes, in the occupation by women of a freer and larger position in the state, and their increasing share in educational and social reform, in the progress of the sense of justice, the employment of humaner methods in punishment, and the deepening of sympathy for the weak. In such things Christ cannot be hid.

Changes in language often speak of him. The word "grace," for example, in Greek chiefly meant beauty of form and person; but in the early Church and thence through all Christendom it has primarily stood for the beauty of kind and holy feeling, for the gracious goodness of God and Jesus and Christian souls. "Service" and "patience," too, among the Romans were mainly the attributes of dependents. "Service" usually meant subserviency, and was the mark of servitude. "Patience" generally denoted sufferance, or the putting up with the harsh words and blows of a master through fear. But Christianity invested these expressions with a new dignity. It made them the marks not of inferiors but of superiors. Without these very qualities, it said, no man could be a Christian gentleman.

If some ancient Roman could hear these words in the pulpit, in the poetry, and in all the higher teaching of the day, he might ask, "Who lifted them out of the slave-quarter and the dungeon to this altitude? Who was it set up an ideal, not of power and gravity and station and the receiving of deference, but of gentle ministration to the needs of others and loving endurance of the world's trouble?" And we should answer, "Christ."

Wherever Christ's influence is it must tell.

Do you remember how he once came to a house in Capernaum where his disciples were, and found them disputing; and when he asked the subject of their dispute, they held their peace? On his entrance there was a pause in the conversation—not merely through politeness as a silent welcome to him into their circle, but because the subject was one which they all immediately knew he would disapprove of. His coming into the house was of itself sufficient to cause the disciples to judge themselves. His mere presence was a rebuke to their contention as to who should be the greatest.

And do you remember that silent but terrible rebuke administered by Jesus to St. Peter in the judgment-hall? St. Luke tells us that after St. Peter had denied him again and again, when the cock crew Jesus turned and looked upon him; and St. Peter, remembering what the Lord had said, "went out and wept bitterly." Here is that magnetic, living touch which makes itself felt without noise or argument, and is always the chief element in the communion of Jesus and his followers. We need it constantly. Our discipleship suffers and character degenerates without it. It is not enough to have the gospels and a well-founded Christian belief. We want the personal influence of the Master breathing through them to raise and inspire. Dr. Sadler once said:—

> When we allow ourselves to be actuated by such low motives as "nothing succeeds like success," or when we abandon the nobler paths of duty to spend our days in frivolous pursuits, or when the object nearest to our hearts is to be well abreast of the fashions of the day, then what can be so good for us as that Christ should turn and look upon us, as he turned and looked upon Peter?

In our private lives, as in our public morals and institutions, we want, as the best antidote to our self-seeking and self-assertion, the influence of character, and the cry of our hearts is that of the Christian of old, "Come, Lord Jesus."

But, my friends, the main reason why I chose our text for consideration this morning was because it speaks of Jesus in the house. "He entered into an house, and would have no man know it, but he could not be hid."

It cannot long be a secret that Jesus has taken up his dwelling in a household. The neighbours soon find out that he is there. As the pride of Diogenes looked through the holes in his carpets, the love of Jesus shines out of the windows and through the door. Nobody can enter the place without feeling the warmth of it. The members of the family unconsciously communicate it. It radiates from their faces. There is cheerfulness about them which tells of inward joy. They show it in their love for one another, in their esteem for their friends, in their kindly judgments, in their high view of the worth of life and their hopefulness for the world. They combine good cheer with serious thought and earnest purpose.

What, then, can I wish for you and for myself more ardently at this time than that the Spirit of Christ may be in our homes? May no immoderation nor anxiety nor any touch of ill-will injure our happiness, but by our love and innocent merriment, and by our faith and hope that spring from love and a good heart, may we rejoice in the presence of the Lord.

Cornhill is forty years old this month, and in the current number Mr. George Smith writes on "Our Birth and Parentage," telling the story of the magazine's great success, with Thackeray as its first editor. Mr. Smith's original idea had been simply to secure a novel of Thackeray's to run through the magazine, and he asked Tom Hughes to be the editor; it was only after this and other attempts had failed, that he arranged with Thackeray to undertake the work. Of the first number some 120,000 copies were sold, and a success was assured to Cornhill hitherto unprecedented among magazines; but Thackeray was too unbusinesslike to make a good editor, and too tender-hearted to be happy in the work, so in May, 1862, he was liberated from the yoke. Mr. Smith has many interesting things and some amusing stories to tell of the early days of the magazine. The January Woman at Home opens with the first of what we suppose are to be a series of "Chapters from the Life of Mr. Chamberlain," by Miss J. T. Stoddart, this first chapter dealing with "Wiltshire Associations and early Life in London." There are three capital portraits of the Colonial Secretary and a number of other interesting illustrations, including Unity Church, Islington, where, on the removal from Carter-lane, the Chamberlains were among the first worshippers; also the house in the Grove, Camberwell, where Mr. Chamberlain was born, and 25, Highbury-place, where he lived as a boy.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION RELIGIOUS CONFERENCES.

SIR,—May I be allowed to draw attention to the series of conferences which are being held at College Chapel, Stepney-green, advertised in your columns this week.

For the past three years I have dedicated the first Sunday afternoon of each month to meeting Postal Mission inquirers and any others who desired the quiet discussion of religious problems. Letters often come from those who have left London, saying how helpful these afternoons have been, and with what pleasure they look back to those peaceful hours at Chapel College, and the sympathetic and stimulating talks with friends.

This year the conferences will be of more public interest. They will be on "The Religion the Age Wants," considering in the first place Christian Brotherhood, and how this principle should be applied in the various relations of life, international, national, industrial, &c. Several noted ministers and laymen are good enough to co-operate with me, thereby rendering these conferences of far greater value. I feel sure there are many people who will highly appreciate the opportunity of hearing them, and of discussing with them these problems.

There are times when it seems a mere platitude or mockery to enunciate religious principles without showing also their practical application. This is such a time. War and its degrading influences both in England and America, the terrible events taking place all over the world, the repeated advocacy of principles of revenge, self-interest and greed, by so-called Christians, make one long to go back to the root principles of Christianity, and consider their application. We are all more or less guilty. We all need to be purified and invigorated by carrying Christianity into practical life.

Never was there more need for expressing and making vividly real the grand principles of Unitarian Christianity as set forth by our great Channing. The Fatherhood of God, the Brotherhood of Man: brotherhood not springing from mere amiable, vague, altruistic emotion, but based on the fact that we are all equally God's children, all destined to rise to the fulness of the stature of Christ. Brotherhood of sacred bodies and immortal souls: what a changed world would this be if we all really believed this and acted up to it.

FLORENCE HILL.

Hon. Sec. Central Postal Mission,
Jan. 1.

IN the Retrospect of the year 1900, which we published last week, referring to the books published by Mr. Philip Green at Essex Hall, by a strange lapse of memory we omitted to mention the most recent one, the "Seven Services for Public Worship," edited by Mr. Bowie. Two valuable sermons have also been lately added to the publications of the B. and F.U.A., "The Flowers of the Field" by the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, and "The Rev. R. J. Campbell on the Trinity" by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, contrasting Mr. Campbell's recent interpretation of the old doctrine with his own thought of God. the Father, and of the human Christ.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

To all who read this "Children's Column," a Happy New Year! I hope our children have all had a very happy Christmas, and then if they have learnt from it something more of the secret of unselfish love, the future will look bright to them and they will be full of hope and courage as they enter on the new time.

For a New Year's greeting let me give you these beautiful lines of Longfellow's. Those of you who enjoy poetry should read the whole of the two poems from which they are taken. First from "The Ladder of St. Augustine," about the earnest purpose with which we must take up the duties that lie before us:—

We have no wings, we cannot soar;
But we have feet to scale and climb
By slow degrees, by more and more,
The cloudy summits of our time.

. . . .

The heights by great men reached and kept
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night.

. . . .

Nor deem the irrevocable Past
As wholly wasted, wholly vain,
If, rising on its wrecks, at last
To something nobler we attain.

And this other verse, from "The Bells of San Blas," which so beautifully expresses the feeling with which we see the dawning of a new day, with its great opportunities and its hope of good:—

O Bells of San Blas, in vain
Ye call back the Past again!
The Past is deaf to your prayer:
Out of the shadows of night
The world rolls into light;
It is daybreak everywhere.

May this New Year be to you all, dear children, full of light, full of hope and courage, as you try to make it better than the past! EDITOR.

"THE STOREHOUSE OF MEMORY."

For the New Year.

A LITTLE company of children, tired with a long afternoon of play, sat in the dusk round the fire on the last day of the year, watching the burning coals fall apart and take fresh shapes as they fell. "Ah! there's a castle!" cried one; "There's a lion's head!" cried another; "There's a range of mountains and valleys," cried a third, and so on, as different fancies struck them. From this they began to talk about what the unknown future held for them, and to make plans about the sort of lives they would like to lead. "I'll be a traveller," said one, "I'll be a soldier," and "I, a nurse," and "I'll be an artist," and "I, an actress"; and so they went on exclaiming, till, wearied of making plans that seemed so distant, their thoughts turned to the New Year that would begin to-morrow, and they talked gaily on till all the wishes were told. Perhaps next day they were all forgotten.

How often just now we are all wishing each other a "happy New Year." What different answers we should give if we were all asked what we meant by this wish, and if we all had to say what we thought would help most to make our own coming year a happy one. Like the children who sat talking round the fire we should, some of us, have strange fancies. Wise people who have had experience in life tell us that it is not what we have that brings us real happiness; real happiness does not depend on our circumstances and possessions, but on what is within ourselves.

A long time ago I saw a French Christmas card which I have never forgotten. On the card was a picture of a little band of angels drawing near to a brightly-lighted house which stood by the side of a dark country road. A child was looking out of the window with beaming face eager to welcome the approaching messengers. It seemed to me that I could almost hear her say, first the sad words "They are passing by!" and then her joyful cry, "Ah no! they come to dwell with me"—words printed below the picture on the card.

Now, this little Christmas card serves to remind us of what we are too apt to forget, that we must be ready always to watch for and welcome all beautiful thoughts and grand examples which are like angels sent by God—messengers to make us good and happy. This is one thing that would make the coming year rich for us—if we grew quick to see all that is beautiful and good in the world about us, not only to see the sunny side of life, which we may all learn to do, but to find in books and in noble deeds, and in countless other ways, treasures to keep in our memories which shall help us to grow beautiful in spirit.

Have you ever heard of the "storehouse of memory" which is within each of us? The other day I was reading about an island in the river Nile, on which every rocky surface is covered with hieroglyph characters (the picture writings of ancient times) recording the names of visitors thousands of years ago, "carved on the rocks for ever." On these rocks, too, are cut records of events that happened as long ago as 2,000 years before the birth of Christ. Little did those ancient carvers think, as they cut into the stone, that their inscriptions would last for ages.

Well, within each of us there is a "storehouse of memory." Deep down within our real selves—the selves that will live on when our bodies die—are stored our thoughts and memories of what we have heard and read and seen and done and said, and these will all come to light when we wake up to the new life after death. We think we forget a great deal; but no! like the carvings on the island rocks, these memories of ours are safely preserved. Should we not then always resolutely turn away from books and words and examples and thoughts that are not pure and good, and try to fill this "storehouse of memory" only with what is worth storing? Riches lie all round us. Every day we may find them; good and beautiful thoughts which come to us from books and the words of friends, and straight to our hearts from God Himself. Let us be ready to welcome them, as the child on the Christmas card was ready to welcome the angels, and they will "come in and dwell with us." There is one way to happiness in the New Year.

Is this a hard saying to understand—"What you are you have, and that only will you keep"? It is a very true one. Think of the grand men and women, the heroes and saints who have lived in past times, and those who are among us still. How they help us and uplift us by their example, and make us long to follow in their steps. We all grow like what we love, and they became noble and unselfish and faithful because they loved what was beautiful and good. If we, too, love and strive after only what is worth loving, who knows but in time to come we also may be able to help and uplift others.

These are the things that make the real happiness of life. Let us think of them sometimes in the coming year.

FRANCES E. COOKE.

FAITH AND WORK.

O WORLD, so full of great things to be done!
"Ah, wait," my Friend says, "quell thy eager heart;
These things are not attained by human art,
Trust God, and take His time and way alone."

But here, I cry, is light;
And strength I cannot shirk;
For God in every hour,
And God in every power
Cries "Work!"

H. M. LIVENS.

THE Sunday-school Association has issued an illustrated card, with the following motto for the New Year:—

They helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother:

"Be of good courage."—Isaiah xli. 6.

"Courage, Brother, do not stumble,
Though thy path be dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble:
'Trust in God and do the right.'
Norman Macleod.

The picture shows a boat homeward bound on a stormy night, and a man on the rocky coast holding up a torch to guide its course. On the back of the card is a calendar of short Scripture lessons for every Sunday in the year. Daniel iii. 8-30 is no doubt a popular lesson, but it must be an oversight that it is put down twice over.

WITH the new year our old friend the Christian Freeman begins a new series with Sunday School Monthly added to its name and with a green cover, three sides of which are left blank for local use, where it may be adopted for school and congregational purposes. The Editor's hope is to bring this little monthly into closer touch with the Schools and their associated societies, and particularly with Guilds and Religious Unions, to the importance of which special attention is now being called. An article on this subject, by the Rev. John Ellis, appears in this first number, in which Miss F. E. Cooke also writes on "Environment." There is the usual series of lessons for the month, followed by short illustrative stories, the January lessons being on "Thoughts for the New Year," by Miss E. M. Lawrence. A column is devoted to news of the schools.

DR. BROOKE HERFORD has received so many kind letters and cards and tokens of friendship that he would like to acknowledge them individually; for every one brings its special message or association. But it is impossible; and so he wishes in this way to thank each and all of the kind senders who have made his Christmas a very happy one.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, JANUARY 5, 1901.

STEADFAST, UNMOVABLE, ALWAYS ABOUNDING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD.

ON the threshold of a new year, and a new century, we must turn our faces to the light, and with a good courage be determined to press forward, and to walk steadfastly in the way of our appointed service. We must welcome the new day, even though storm-clouds seem to overshadow its dawning. It is a day of the Lord, and the light of the Eternal is yet shining in the heavens, not to be diminished or long resisted by any darkness of the earth. In that faith we must be unmovable, and know that the light divine is for our life, even though it should pierce us through and through, and strike us dumb with shame at some of the things it may reveal.

Whatever be our secret confessions, our prayer of penitence and hope, we are to press forward on the path of service, "always abounding in the work of the Lord"—not of our own will, but always, more and more perfectly, to do the FATHER'S will. For fifty years the aspiration of TENNYSON'S noble spirit has been stirring in the hearts of English men and women in every quarter of the globe. Now, at the beginning of a new century, how does it touch and search our conscience?

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
  Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
  Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
  The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
  Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

We must not shrink from the rebuke, and we may be thankful to know in how many hearts there is a response to that old appeal.

For ourselves, and in the community of our Free Churches, we have our own special call to service. In what spirit we should enter on the new century, and with what aims—of these things not a few of our trusted friends and leaders speak in this new year's number, and we are grateful for their cordial greetings and their strong and earnest words of faith. There is much in what they say to be earnestly pondered, to be taken for reproof and for encouragment; and especially is this the case with Mr. STOPFORD BROOKE'S sermon, which goes so directly to the heart of the chief troubles of our time, in its warning against the sin of covetousness and its call to CHRIST'S warfare of the spirit. Even in the midst of that warfare his inward peace and his joy may be ours, and they must be, if we are rightly to do our work.

There are some things which the lessons of the past century have made quite clear to us, concerning the ideal of service to which our churches are called, to which we must give ourselves with complete surrender, and in which we shall find CHRIST'S secret of peace. These we shall do well to recall at this time, setting ourselves with a new persistence, and fresh consecration, to fulfil their aim.

We are called in the fellowship of our Free Churches to demonstrate the power, the grace, and the sacred privilege of spiritual freedom. In the bond of a Free Church we are united simply for the worship of GOD. To become a member of such a church, if its meaning is fully realised, is the greatest confession of faith; it is the acknowledgment of GOD and of our life in Him, a giving up of self to His guidance, a prayer that His will may be done, and His truth revealed. It is the confession of a present GOD, the Eternal, the all-sustaining and enlightening Spirit of Truth and Love, whom we know as our FATHER, who gives to us the fulness of life in the fellowship of CHRIST and all living souls, awakened to the same trust and love. Here is a first demand on us for renewed faithfulness and more complete surrender. Let us realise more fully in the coming time how great and sacred is the trust committed to us in our Free Churches, how great the demand upon our service and the joy of that complete surrender. We are to be servants of Truth, to be led only in GOD'S way.

But His revealing is not through the critical understanding alone, it is through the whole of life at its best (and so most perfectly in the mind and heart of CHRIST), in reverence and love and the spirit of worship. Therefore let us see to it that in our churches we are prepared to receive the light, with open hearts and attentive spirit, and that there may be a life in our midst, that shall kindle life in others. Here is a great work to which we are called, of which in the past our churches have been often sadly neglectful. With a new intensity of purpose let us make our house of prayer beautiful, and chiefly with the beauty of holiness, peaceful, that in the divine silence the Holiest may speak to attentive spirits, and vocal with heartfelt reverence and praise. In every church let the whole people realise that it is they who must bring the offering, who must make the beautiful order and the reverent quietness, coming with prepared hearts, not only to be ministered unto but to minister; let them realise with a deeper and more searching understanding that it is to the house of prayer they come, that they, with him who is called especially the minister, must live the life of prayer, if theirs is to be a living church and do its true work in the world.

Then follows at once the thought which goes with all true prayer, the thought of faithful work. In every church let there be a deeper sense of the need of vigorous action, inspired by the hidden faith which GOD has given. The supreme surrender involves that steadfast service of the Kingdom, which is concerned with every aspect of human life, which fearlessly faces all public questions, grapples with social problems, and is unwearied in beneficent activity. With the new spirit of worship must go the new strength of purpose to be of service in the world and to render the highest service. That will add a new dignity as well as a new joy to the life of the church, attracting fresh recruits, extending the circle of its influence, enriching its power to bless. And with service, in the fellowship of the Church, goes brotherhood, brotherhood as CHRIST understood it. Indeed, might not all be said in one word: Let us with a new sincerity try Christianity, in worship, in work, and in brotherly love. For this is the witness of the Spirit, that in such life our service may be perfected, and our joy be made complete.

VIA, VERITAS, VITA.

THEY told me that his steps contain the Way,
  The sheer road beckoneth that all may know.
  Wherefore then seeing do I stumble so,
And, ah, the wilful feet fare still astray?

The Truth doth beacon in his speech, they said,
  The sovereign radiance beams sufficient
    there.
  Why do the old confusions still repair,
And build the helpless night about my-head?

O heart, entangled in th' eternal strife,
  Shut in the dead Word's drear captivity,
To him that liveth open, that the Life
  May speak the Truth and tread the Way in thee.

AMBROSE BENNETT.

AT THE DAWN OF A CENTURY.

I.

WITH silent step our planet glides from century to century, and records by no outward sign that another period of human history is for ever gone. But though the transition affects only the artificial arrangements of men, it strikes the imagination, and affords a fitting opportunity for interrogating the period that has closed, and casting a glance forward into the unknown future. During the past century there has been a profound change in religion; and if we attempt to sum up this in a single statement, we may perhaps say that it consists in a transference of our reliance from external to internal evidence. The old Biblical dogmatism on which Protestantism was built has crumbled away, and the spiritual discernment of the clear conscience and the pure heart has taken its place. And yet the needs of the religious life are not satisfied with a solitary communion between the individual soul and God. In the highest moments, when we are conscious of nothing else, still it is the exalted life of humanity that is beating in our hearts, and our thoughts are shaped and coloured by the ideals which have stamped themselves on the great leaders of our race. And thus Christianity, after all the sifting of criticism which has been applied to its records, is more than ever a power which moulds and guides us. For it is not an external system of precepts and dogmas to coerce the conscience and the understanding, nor is it merely the presentation of a model which we may endeavour to copy, but it is the incorporation of a Divine Life within our life, a fountain of eternal blessedness and peace springing up within, and turning to finest issues the earthly nature which otherwise no culture could redeem from sterility. This life has been manifested to us in Christ, and, through chosen souls, has laid its impress upon the world ever since.

Many perplexing questions may be raised; but these do not affect the heart of religion; and the historical fact remains that through Christ the ideal of Divine Sonship has become a living force among men, and the religious fact remains that through faith and admiration and love this ideal enters the mind as a kindling power of life, and that it is nurtured there through the sympathy of souls that have been touched by the same heavenly fire. These facts, while conserving the operative principle of ancient faith and of present communion, open for us the path of intellectual freedom; for the implicit truths of the Spirit work within the soul and direct the activity even when they can find no articulate expression; and when they present themselves as doctrines to be understood and believed, these doctrines are only the human interpretations of the indwelling life, and must vary not merely with the intelligence and knowledge of the time, but with the depth and energy of the life which they express. Thus we look forward into the dim future with hopes of a great deepening and strengthening of spiritual faith, finding utterance in a grander theology, among our people. We sometimes in our weakness ask for a watchword and a flag to rally our disunited forces. Can we have a grander than the Life of Christ within the heart, creating a holy and beneficent brotherhood, content to bear the cross, and conquer the world by love? Here surely is enough for enthusiasm; and when in all our churches the ideal life of the children of God has become a reality, our difficulties will solve themselves, and we shall draw men to us, not by party cries or appeals to the fugitive interests of the moment, but by the only eternal power, that of a Divine Life.

JAMES DRUMMOND.

Manchester College, Oxford.

II.

THE new Century does not begin with cheerful aspects of national affairs; war clouds overhang us with all the horrors which they inevitably portend, and those of us who have felt compelled from the beginning to object to the policy which has led to active hostilities find no consolation in seeing their forebodings only too sadly realised in the troubles which desolate South Africa, and in the lowered tone of public feeling at home. But we are members of the one true Church of God, and have, I hope, such unconquerable faith in the Father whom we worship, that we can never fail to trust that His hand will lead us safely through the darkest trials, if we but commit ourselves to His guidance. I have no warmer wish for all of us, than that the new century may find among us all a more earnest cultivation of the inward springs of the religious life, and a more zealous consecration of our whole being to the service both of God and man—turning us from considerations of material and temporal aggrandisement to spiritual and eternal aims. We claim to be true followers of Jesus, and should strive to make his spirit rule the world by letting all our actions exemplify his loving spirit, and showing that we regard his Gospel not as an unattainable standard, but as the practical director of our life. The community for whom THE INQUIRER is the mouthpiece is not large in numbers, but if it is animated by the mind which was in Jesus, it will not fail to exert a blessed influence in society, purifyiug its aspirations, strengthening its virtues, and elevating its whole character. May our Heavenly Father shed forth His Spirit upon us, and may we open our hearts to its incoming; then will this indeed be a happy and blessed new year to us all.

S. ALFRED STEINTHAL.

Manchester.

III.

IN this long rest which I am having—the first complete rest in a ministry of fifty years—one cannot help wishing kind wishes to all old friends and fellow workers; but to shape them into such a new year's and new century's greeting as you desire is not so easy—nay, the more I think of it, seems impossible.

It seems a dim, vast thing—a new century! I cannot hope to have much part in it; but for that century which has just ended I have had my place among the workers for a clear half of it. And I began by dreaming great things for the world, of which very few have come to pass. But other things have come: something of humaner life for man; something of larger, surer thought of God; a gospel of hope and trust reaching beyond this world's confusions—these seem to have come out of the screen of passing years, and the light seems a little clearer than it used to do. And so I cannot help thinking with a certain hope and gladness of you to whom the new time brings especially the calls of service.

BROOKE HERFORD.

IV.

LIKE a chord of full-toned harmony come the voices across land and sea, breathing forth messages of love and goodwill to friends and acquaintances; on every side we hear hearty greetings for the coming century, which is even now being heralded by the farewell whispers of the dying year!

Shall we not pause a moment, as we let the good wishes flow so smoothly from our lips, to ask ourselves, what are we going to do to help these wishes to be realised? Are we intending so to act that the new century may bring blessings on our friends and on our fellow-men? Let us not be content to wish; let us will, and do also.

To wish well is good and needful; it is the first step, and poets and seers who can awaken within our hearts a desire for something better should be ranked among our truest friends, for

> The earth yields nothing more divine
> Than high prophetic vision—than the Seer
> Who, fasting from men's meaner joy, beholds
> The paths of beauteous order, and constructs
> A fairer type, to shame our low content!

Therefore let us listen to our poet leaders; let us open our minds to apprehend their Vision Beautiful, and open our hearts so that it may find an entrance there. Then, with heart and mind together, let us go forth to do our work in the world, never forgetting the while that the simple actions of our daily life are the most potent factors we possess for good or evil influence; for it is essentially what we are, rather than what we do, that signifies, in any lasting sense.

Still, outside our daily round, we may all find some opportunity of helping others. We can all do our best—be that much or little—to help to soften sorrow, to lessen evil, and to uplift the fainting heart. This we should do, and this those of us who truly believe in God may do with a full assurance of hope; for if in that Divine Name are enshrined, as we believe, all the Eternal Verities, then Right and Truth and Love must in the end prevail.

May we all be made strong by faith, quickened by hope, and filled with love, and so win blessings for ourselves and others in the years that are coming on!

MARIAN PRITCHARD.

London.

V.

THE nineteenth century has been in many things a century of extraordinary progress. It has been a century of progress in the life of the intellect. Human knowledge has advanced by leaps and bounds. Inventions have, in material things, renewed the face of the earth. Science has been new-born, and its fruits have been gathered in the immense improvement in the outward conditions of life. In religion and theology have been witnessed a great diffusion of enlightenment and a great increase of charity between man and man. And in these things we look on to the twentieth century, which has just dawned upon us, with enthusiastic hope. But the thoughts which come to me at this opening of the new century are not all such as to inspire hopeful dreams. I ask myself, what the story of the nineteenth century has been in our moral life. As men and women and as citizens, how have the English people acquitted themselves? Do we end the old century, and begin the new one, with as high prospects morally as lie before us intellectually and materially? Do we enter on the new century with hopes as firm on the side of practical religion as of theological enlightenment? I say it with a sad heart, I am distressed beyond measure to see a century, which at one time seemed as rich in promise in moral as in intellectual and material things, ending, as I think, in a period of moral reaction. To confine myself to one point, I am old enough to remember the Exhibition of 1851, and the happy dreams of peace on earth and goodwill to men which accompanied it; I remember the days of the Manchester School and of Joseph Hume, when "Peace, Retrenchment and Reform" was the watchword of the party of progress. The coming of a true kingdom of God on earth in international peace and brotherhood seemed nigh. Where are we now, after half a century? It is true there was a rescript from the Tsar two years ago, and a peace congress at The Hague. But its aims remain entirely unrealised, and, instead of their fulfilment, we have beheld the renewed sway in our midst of a rampant military spirit, and a great outburst of war fever, with its bitter race antagonism.

To me this reversion at the end of the nineteenth century to the warlike spirit of its opening, influencing not only politics but the personal lives of men and women, is almost too sad for speech. It is the blighting of the hopes and aspirations of years. I have seen the nation that I so passionately love, after becoming foremost, in the last century, in devotion to justice and liberty, and after rising out of the dark and terrible years with which it opened, into an atmosphere of peaceful progress, fall back once more into the old evil spirit of the past.

But now that the new century has begun, what a call there is to all of us and, most of all, to the churches, to begin afresh, joining together to lift up the life of the nation and of all its members from the least to the greatest to a higher moral level, and making our common Christianity the inspiration of our life, national as well as individual. And so, of all the things for which I pray that we may work and strive in this twentieth century, the chief is the wider brotherhood of man, and the replacement of the spirit of imperial aggrandisement and of rampant militarism by the love of peace, and by the truly Christian aim to promote, alike by public policy and private endeavour, the rights and the liberties and the welfare and happiness, not alone of our own people, but equally of all people upon earth.

Gee Cross. H. ENFIELD DOWSON.

VI.

DEAR INQUIRER,—You and I have known each other for more than forty years, and we are both about to begin a new year and a new century together; but you are still young, and you start afresh on untrodden fields with a courage and hopefulness that are of highest cheer, whilst I, with slower step, go on the way which grows more toilsome as the days go by. But I keep clear in my mind the good brave work you have done, your calm courage, your fidelity to principle, your unfaltering step as you led our way over tangling difficulties; your defence of the free-thinkers who, obedient to our best traditions, broke new ground and ventured, with unshaken trust in God, into fresh provinces of thought and action; your open pages for all who were searchers after truth; your courageous support of solitary workers who but for you could never have spoken to our people; and, above all, your absolute fidelity to the open, comprehensive and Catholic spirit of our faith, which always set forth that while we keep firm grip of the hand of God we never could go astray in His boundless universe.

Still with us is the fine old Editor—our friend and teacher, Thomas L. Marshall—who stamped his personality upon your pages, and made them welcome in the brightest homes among our people, and in many places where our ordinary literature never penetrated. To him all greetings and good wishes old comrades say with loving hearts!

And the other workers, too, Tarrant and yourself, who have carried on, and are carrying on, our great traditions, should know from some of us, who for nearly half-a-century have known your work and teachings, how greatly we value their fidelity, and what store we set upon their ability.

But you, INQUIRER, are impersonal. You live and teach and influence our lives and thoughts though we cannot grasp your hand, or ask you to share the hospitality of our homes. We are glad that though so old you are still so young. Experience does not enfeeble your life, or take away your freshness. Apparently you are going with eager step into the new century. You are ready to welcome new light, new truths, new workers. You are too wise to close your shutters to the light, or to clang your doors against newcomers. With you the motto still is—"Welcome to the Divine Spirit howsoever it shall come."

No one need tell you in what spirit you are to do your work—it is the old spirit of Love, Brotherhood, and Catholicity. You are not likely to forget, amid coming controversies which are sure to arise, that all religion has relation to life, and that the life of religion is to do good. Ever before you, in the future as in the past, will be the all-sustaining thought that the Kingdom of God is here, and that we are to live as its worthy citizens.

So, old friend and teacher, I bid you godspeed in the new century!

Shrewsbury. JAMES C. STREET.

VII.

AMID the greetings and the good wishes which the spirit of Christmas and the advent of a new century must evoke from your many friends, I desire to offer my acknowledgments of your faithful efforts to follow in the train of many a worthy predecessor in your editorial chair.

Not minding the world, or the things of the world, I trust your labours may bear an ever-increasing result of joy for us all in the cultivation of warm and self-sacrificing devotion to the fruitful principles upon which our religious life really depends. May you put forth such an enheartening spirit among our scattered churches, that in the coming time, so full of high possibilities, the word "indifference" may be utterly purposeless; whilst of your aim and spirit, may the words of the last great Laureate be but a prophesy:—

Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell;
That mind and heart according well,
May make one music as before,
But vaster.

Bristol. AMBROSE N. BLATCHFORD.

VIII.

I AM sending you a line to wish you and your little barque a prosperous voyage across the unknown waters of the new century. As a wise bishop may you pilot your vessel. The weather forecasts are not too propitious, and it may well be that before us, as a nation, in the approaching months and years, are times of stress and storm. There will be, as it seems to me, conflicts, exceptionally fierce, between the evil and the good, between light and darkness, between God and Mammon! In those conflicts we know, from past experience, where you and your paper will be found. May you be endowed with all needed wisdom and courage. Like a true prophet may you be bold to speak the word of the Lord as it is given to you, "whether men will hear or whether they forbear." With all good wishes for the coming years, JOHN BYLES.

Northampton.

IX.

IT is asked: What object ought we propose to ourselves at the beginning of this new century? Surely, our main object should be to continue the work of the nineteenth century. It has been the age of science: we must go on learning. It has seen the partial abolition of the tyranny of the letter over the souls of men: we must go in search of the spirit. It has seen the rise of some nobler social ideals: we must go on with social reform.

We must strive to reconcile order with progress, making love the principle of both; we must welcome new truths revealed by new knowledge, and seek to give those truths religious expression in our lives. Our best thoughts are not yet fully our own until they have begun to influence our conscious acts; therefore we must endeavour to live in the light of our highest thought, with simple honesty and humble trust. To-day we may not be able to tell the name or to define the type of the religion of the future, but it is enough for us to feel that Humanity will grow less and less satisfied, as her vision enlarges, with any form of faith which does not equally appeal to her mind and heart. L. DE B. KLEIN.

Liverpool.

X.

THE passing of one century into another is for all who read these words a unique experience. We may safely say we shall none of us live to see it twice. Never does one year pass into another without something of surprise, but when we stand by the grave of a notable century, buried with pomp and honours, and when we turn from its grave to face the strange new-comer, the occasion touches the imagination of the dullest and the heart of the most apathetic. With wide-eyed wonder we ask, What will the new century bring us of joy or sorrow in our personal lot? What new accessions of power, what new discoveries in science, what new revelations of wisdom has this young giant, the heir of all the ages, in store for us and our world? If the nineteenth century has been so wonderful, what will the twentieth be like?

In the sphere of theology, no less than in the spheres of politics, industry, science, and literature, the nineteenth century has been one of change and revolution. We have lived through a new Reformation, more radical and farther reaching than the Reformation under Luther and Calvin. In the great re-shaping of religious thought which has been in process during the whole of the last century our churches have changed as well as others, and we sometimes wonder when the work of reconstruction will end. Probably the growth of thought will never come to an end. There is no finality. Every new age must shape its own expression of religious truth.

Yet it would seem that we are entering on a period of pause from that feverish restlessness of religious thought which has been so characteristic of the last fifty years. The battle against superstition on the one hand, and against materialism on the other, has been fought and won. We have reached a little resting-place for our souls. Not that the vast labour of theological reconstruction is finished. The thought-processes must still go on. But the emphasis in the twentieth century will transfer itself, is even now transferring itself, from thought to life. Christianity has broken through its old doctrinal barriers—that at any rate is accomplished. It has also found for itself a new expression, or is rapidly attaining thereunto. What is now the special work of our churches? The application of Christianity's simple, profound, and universal principles to all the exigencies of life, and to the solution of our economic, social, and political problems. We have made much, we have talked much, of religious thought, of the progress of thought, of the advance of ideas. Yet, after all, Religion is not pre-eminently correct thinking, nor enlarged thinking, fascinating and necessary as these are. The essential thing is not whether we have reached certain intellectual conclusions, nor whether we are progressives in thought. Of course the religious man will be a thoughtful man. But Religion is concerned first of all with Life and Living. The thought-revolution of the last century has left us with a more reasonable, more humane, and more gracious theology. The new century, it is clear, will ask, as its most pressing problem, how to apply the nobler scheme of things to common life; how to make the better theories we have arrived at shape the world's activities, social, political and industrial? The problems of the immediate future are not theological; they are social. The mission of the Church today is not so much with the conversion of the individual, although that is imperative, nor with getting way for a fairer theology, although that can never be neglected, as for bringing culture, commerce, poverty, wealth, work, wages, the social outlook of labour, the ambitions of Imperialism, economic and national ideals into some sort of decent harmony with the Sermon on the Mount. The first demand of the twentieth century upon us is for diviner Life!

JOSEPH WOOD.

Birmingham.

XI.

A NEW YEAR'S card may be large enough to point a moral, though not to tell much of a tale. The story of this past century of Unitarianism is not, perhaps, very encouraging on the whole—save for the fact that all attempts to make an orthodoxy within its borders have conspicuously failed. And may we not say that, on the larger scale, every liberal effort, proposing to serve no end but the cause of truth, has succeeded, while every sectarian effort (on our part at least, for we are very bad sectarians, even if we try) has broken in our hands.

How have the mighty fallen—and the great names, that seemed to justify our boast of intellectual distinction, left blank spaces in our calendar! We only are left; nos numerus sumus, only the rank and file: what can we do? I should say—Before all things let us eschew controversy. Let us regard as a bad tradition, to be left behind with the last century, the notion that it is our duty to be gibing at other people's theology, in the hope that they may smite us in return—and then we can have a course of controversial lectures. The necessity of controversy may arise: but it is ever an unwelcome inroad upon the peace of the Church. Il faut cultiver notre jardin! Let us try before all things to furnish the social religion (which pines away in the strife of tongues)—the cultivation of common faith and worship—which is needed not merely by our own people, but by hundreds who are as weary of new orthodoxies as they are of old ones; who will come to church for common prayer, but would be glad to escape before the exposition of the very latest 'ology begins. Let us have done with the notion that fervour and simplicity of common prayer—and the sentiment that clings to a language which is rather of the heart than of the head—are survivals of orthodoxy that can have no permanent life in the cooler air which is breathed by the theological liberal. Let us have simple sermons; this is a hard saying—every minister knows how hard. It is so easy to discuss the views of the great Mr. Jones: it is so hard to understand the life of the little Mr. Smith. What we want in the opening century is a revival of Church-life, which shall give us at once individual freedom, a broad communion, and a sympathetic public worship. Dogmatism is the enemy of all these alike.

I do not mean that there is not to be clear thinking and speaking on matters of theology. But it is the man who knows how hard it is to arrive at distinct and first-hand conclusions on certain things who is most tolerant of the opinions of others, in whom he recognises an effort like his own for the attainment of truth. There are two classes of Unitarians who do not apprehend this: (1) those who regard their Unitarianism as a ready-made criterion of all theology; and (2) those who regard theirs as a licence to have no theology at all. But with regard to our comprehension—our breadth of communion—a question often arises in my mind when I sit in a pew:—Ought it to be assumed (as constantly appears to be the case), in a church which carefully boasts its freedom from tests and doctrinal conditions of membership, that identity of opinion as to the ultimate nature of Deity, or the unanimous rejection of all Christologies but one, is the one thing which draws us together as a worshipping congregation?

J. EDWIN ODGERS.

Oxford.

XII.

"SOME word of faith and hope as to what things we ought chiefly to care about and aim at, and the spirit in which we should enter upon the new century." That is what you ask of me, Mr. Editor. And I would fain comply. But then faith and hope are not always easy, and a false expression of them will not help. Faith I have deep down; but hope? No, that is not the prevailing sentiment with which I can enter this new time. Sorrow, contrition—even shame: these may be the mood God wants of us. To me this solemn change of record from century to century comes amid much darkness, for I think that a great sin lies upon us as a people. And I view with consternation what seems to me to be the gradual deterioration of our conscience in the last two years: how now we cheerfully accept and justify many things which a little while ago we should all of us have condemned. So that it is not easy to be very hopeful for the coming years.

But I look around and I look back, and I see that this one great and terrible thing does not stand alone—that it is evolved out of preceding moral conditions. For we have gradually been letting financial interests get the main direction of our political life, and luxury creep into our homes and our daily ways. So that the virtues which belong to frugality and temperance and unselfishness have been slipping away from us, and we are not the people that we were ten or twenty years ago. And in these things, the power of financiers and interests (notably the drink interest), and in private self-indulgence, I see the main perils of the twentieth century of our era.

Thus hope does not shine very brightly in my heart as I write in these last hours of the nineteenth century. But deeper than hope lies faith, and faith I have. Faith, first of all, in the moral government of the world. I believe in the laws by which evil is always sowing its own destruction, and good always sowing its own immortality. So that I am very sure, whatever be our sins, that they will work themselves out, with what accompaniment of pain and sorrow, of retribution and woe, I cannot tell; but they will work themselves out. And my faith is further that whatever there is of goodness, of sincerity, of love, of religion in the heart of our people will win its way to the front. And my conviction is—and nothing has shaken it—that of all this there is much in our nation; that the bullying, grasping, selfish character of us is not our real fundamental and permanent character, but that there abides in us a real reverence for truth, a real love of good, a real leaning to mercy, a real passion for justice. It is a question of the appeal. Let the appeal once be rightly made, and the response will come forth. The fact that we are at the moment without any God-endowed prophet, political or religious, is a fact which may cease to-morrow or next year, which must cease ere many decades have gone by. And a Gladstone, a Luther, or a Wesley will arouse conscience and enthusiasm whenever he appears; and there will be tremendous forces at his disposal. I have thus an unswerving faith that things will be well, that the sun of England is not setting, that her true greatness is yet to be.

And two characteristics are bequeathed by the old century as its special and peculiar gift to the new, both of which make for righteousness. The one is a new breadth and tolerance in religion, a recognition that the spirit of Christ counts for more than an orthodox theology. The other is a new philanthropy, an enthusiasm of humanity not confined to those with whom we have personal connection, the beggar at our gates, the fallen traveller whom we meet upon the road, but extending to classes and races afar. This also is a new thing. It began some hundred and twenty years ago with John Howard and Robert Raikes, swelled into power in the hands of Wilberforce and Clarkson, passed into many streams in Elizabeth Fry, Mary Carpenter, Lord Shaftesbury, and is now a great sea of energy potent for untold good.

In these things, the new religious breadth and the new philanthropy, are the new powers which must counteract the evils of the time. I have faith in God, in spite of Matthew Arnold, as a "Great Moral Governor," and I can say, with full assurance, in the song-words of simple Pippa,

> God's in His heaven,
> All's right with the world.

RICHARD A. ARMSTRONG.

Liverpool.

FURTHER New Century contributions from the Revs. J. Estlin Carpenter, F. E. Millson, C. Hargrove, L. P. Jacks. W. Copeland Bowie, R. J. Jones, and George Boros, we are obliged to hold over until next week.

THE Rev. John Byles, who concluded his ministry at Northampton on the last Sunday of the old year, is unable for the present to accept any preaching engagements. He is under medical orders to take a period of complete rest, and it will save trouble, both to correspondents and to himself, if it is understood that for the next six months his services are not available. All good wishes to our friend, and earnest hopes for his complete restoration to health!

IN last Saturday's Daily Chronicle there appeared a review of the century's theology from the pen of the Rev. A. W. Hutton, containing the following passage :—

> One name from among our own people, that of James Martineau, must on no account be omitted, since his life was coextensive with the century, even more than Newman's, while the influence of his frank and fearless, yet always gentle and spiritual, teaching will long be felt outside as well as inside his own not very broad communion. His disciple, Mr. Stopford Brooke, should also be named; though he, by rights, belongs rather to the school of Dean Stanley, within the Established Church.

Mr. Brooke, who cannot with any accuracy be called a disciple of Dr. Martineau's, may be allowed to know better than Mr. Hutton, where he, "by rights," belongs. Twenty years ago he found his position as a Broad Churchman untenable, and has since then cordially thrown in his lot with that "not very broad" communion, which not only produced Martineau, but retained his life-long allegiance.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

LONDON.

THERE is a feeling of stir. It is not all due to New Year's Day, or even New Century's Day, though the idea of a fresh start in chronology is stimulating, while the thought of time already gone by is compulsive. But there is more in it than mere sentiments born of the present hour. Witness the efforts being made at many of our London churches to clear off old liabilities and open up new work. The "Bazaar" enterprise, organised and carried on during two years, has been fruitful. (It ought to be, for it cost much time and labour). The money raised—at an expenditure of little more than 4 per cent. on the total—is but a part of the result. No doubt there was a good deal of what a harsh critic might call "nonsense" about the business; but there was also a good deal of discipline and beneficial co-operation; and while the congregations betake themselves to their individual work they will not forget the brethren at large.

The realised funds—as usual, and as desirable—have led to a good deal of consideration, the upshot of which has been already set forth, Sir, in your columns. Briefly, the arrangements include the formation of a Permanent Chapel Building Fund, and a distribution through the London District Unitarian Society to congregations in certain conditions. The Building Fund stands to-day at £9,000—unless, indeed, your own admirable suggestion hasalready moved some generous hand to round the sum up to five figures! "What will be done with the money?" Rightly asked, for generosity that is blind is continually putting stumbling-blocks in the way of the generosity that sees. Well, the money will not be given away. It is to be lent, and it is to be repaid. The latter point is never to be forgotten, though doubtless the needs of indigent congregations will conspire with the benevolent impulses of the Trustees to put it far away into the background, or even to deny its essential existence. Vain hopes, vain indulgence—it is written in the Rules; the twelve Trustees have bound themselves and their impulses, however benevolent, by a solemn pledge; and the Bazaar Council has with equal unanimity, if not solemnity, accepted and ratified this stipulation.

Therefore, within the limits of borrowing and repaying, the Fund will do all it can for congregations with "Open Trusts." The congregation at Wood Green is first in the field, eager to claim its aid. After a period of ten successful years, this congregation feels itself justified in extending its borders; I understand the scheme is already being pushed forward; and there is no doubt that a loan from the Fund will greatly assist this most promising enterprise.

As to the distribution of the balance of the sum raised in connection with the Bazaar movement, a sum of over £4,000, it is gratifying to note the undeniable stimulus it is affording to local self-help. Thus at Forest Gate, which, after a chequered history, is distinctly "looking up," a debt of £500 is to be wiped off, the congregation raising the balance after a substantial grant-in-aid. But that is not all. The new wine is working and the old bottle looks like breaking. The new bottle, or to drop metaphor, the new building talked about, is to be (if all goes well) in a more favourable position for the work, as well as being more fitted to its needs. There seems ground for hoping that a good business "deal" can be effected which will render this possible. So may it be!

At Plumstead a valiant endeavour is on foot to clear off £1,000 mortgage and debt on the building. At Lewisham a similarly laudable effort is being made to secure the chapel, which is now held on lease. And the best of all is that one hears of excellent work in other ways being done by these congregations while they are thus grappling with finance. No doubt at Kilburn, which is another of our new churches,the scheme which is being shaped will prove equally wise and beneficial; and the same may be said of Kentish Town, which, though no longer new, is young in heart. The grants, made or contemplated, to these five churches range between £400 and £700; a further £500 has been voted to Wood Green for its new church; and an equal sum to Mansford-street towards providing for the ground rent or purchase of the freehold if possible. Smaller sums have been voted, or are in contemplation, to the congregations at Deptford, Highgate, and Peckham; so that no less than ten of our London Churches will, in all probability, feel the direct benefit of this distribution—a benefit, as has been said, not by way of smothering self-help but of encouraging it.

The Domestic Missions, along with which may be associated some congregations not working on exactly the same lines, but dependent for the most part on outside aid and specially aiming to influence a class not usually regarded as church-goers, are, of course, busy with social meetings at this time of the year. In many of them there is also a really large amount of business work done at the close of each year in connection with savings banks and clubs of different kinds. So far, the winter has been mild and work is fairly abundant, so that the pinch has not yet come. But these institutions stand for many of our poor as towers of refuge in times of distress, and a sudden change of weather would bring a pathetic change in their record—amusement and the convivial tea-cup would be less in evidence, and the more serious aspect of the missionary's work would be seen. God give each worker good heart to face the ever-rising billows of poverty and trouble! Man, too, can give something—personal help, personal sympathy, and financial help. It is pleasant to see that our talented friend, Mr. J. H. Leigh, is to read The Merchant of Venice, Jan. 12, at the Steinway Hall, for the benefit of the funds of the Domestic Mission Society. "The play's the thing wherewith to catch the conscience of" all sorts of good people—and not their conscience only, if it be a conscience.

It has not been my good fortune yet to see the renovated Fort-road Hall, Bermondsey, where Mr. E. Howard, with rare zeal and devotion, is trying hard to win amongst a class of people whose apathy has broken many a chivalrous spirit. It is all very well to write novels about this or that wonderful success in winning the working people of London for Christ and religion. When you have done your writing, and especially your comfortable reading of such tales, good people, have a try! All success to Mr. Howard—all success, and many workers!

A few weeks ago a meeting was held at Stratford—"atte Bow," the Stratford, not that place of considerably less ancient fame somewhere in the Midlands. It was not a large meeting, but it was animated with a splendid temper of steadfast courage, self-reliance, and cheery devotion. O si sic omnes! This congregation and that at Stepney have been in the care of Mr. Lucking Tavener, under the supervision of the Missionary Agent of the Province. Mr. Tavener is leaving to take up work at Ipswich, and this work in the East-end is again somewhat unsettled. It is a matter for regret also that the great possibilities at Highgate have been so long left unrealised through the ministerial vacancy. Not that there is any slackening of the work there—far from it; but there is evidently a unique opportunity for the right man when he comes.

As to the other churches, I have nothing of special interest to report. The record of the maintenance of good work is never quite so fascinating as that of its inception—babies and young people are interesting, where the adult is just an ordinary person. But, from all I gather, the sense of stir is pervading these maturer societies, and the new century will not appeal to them in vain.

Two personal matters require mention. One is the retirement of Mr. Bowie from the School Board—a gain to him of much-needed respite from arduous cares, but a very serious loss to the educational resources of this vast community. Let us hope that, notwithstanding his severance from official work, his hand will still be pretty close to "the pulse of the machine," and his sagacity and tolerating influence be felt in the inner councils. But the indomitable energy that possesses him has already flung itself into new ventures. The next Whit-week meetings are to be of a very special character. There are to be a National Sunday-school Teachers' Convention, and an International Conference of Unitarians and other Liberal Religious people. Details may be postponed, but it is going to be a big thing. Mr. Bowie, who, with Mr. Ion Pritchard, has issued a preliminary announcement of the scheme, evidently is one of those who believes it is just as easy to do big things as little ones, while one is about it.

The other matter is one of jubilation, not unmixed with tender sympathy. This year, 1901, is Dr. Brooke Herford's year of jubilee in the ministry. If the anniversary of his first pastoral settlement (I believe it occurs in February) should have found him still active in the work at Hampstead, how we should have rejoiced with him! But the fiftieth year has actually seen him busy there during its greater part; and though he has had to lay off the harness a little while, we hope and trust yet to see him buckling it on again for such service as only the honoured veteran can render. Meanwhile, we would mingle our thanksgiving with his Non nobis, Domine! and send our love to him with a wish for the Happiest of New Years.

W. G. TARRANT.

THE material world is but a film through every pore of which God's Spirit world is shining to us.—Olive Schreiner.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Watch-night Services.

A number of watch-night services were held in our churches on New Year's Eve, while in others the Sunday evening service was devoted specially to the thought of the close of the year and the century. We referred last week to the special watch-night services announced to be held at Stoke Newington and Highgate. Others are referred to below, and we hear also of similar services at the Great Meeting, Leicester, and at Avondale-road, Peckham.

Belfast: Mountpottinger.—Two musical services have recently been held, at which selections were given from Elijah and the Messiah respectively, under the leadership of the Rev. W. J. Davies. On New Year's Eve a watch-night service was held, and also baptismal service. Several new members have recently joined the church, and the debt on the building is now cleared. But there is great need for a schoolroom.

Belfast: York-street.—A very pleasant "At Home" was held in the lecture-hall on New Year's Eve, on the invitation of the minister and Miss Ashworth. The evening concluded with "Auld Lang Syne" and good wishes for the new year.

Bolton: Unity Church.—On Tuesday, Dec. 18, a recitation of Dickens's "Christmas Carol" was given by Mr. John Harwood, in aid of the Christmas Fair Fund, and was greatly enjoyed. On the motion of Mr. F. Taylor, J.P., a cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Harwood was passed.

Bridport.—A tablet to the memory of the late Mrs. Colfox has been placed in the chapel, bearing the following inscription:—"Louisa Colfox. Born April 20, 1821; died Sept. 8, 1899. In memory of her wide sympathy, her zeal and earnestness, and the generosity with which she supported every good work in the Chapel and Sunday-school, this Tablet is erected by her fellow-worshippers."

Chorley.—On Christmas Day the annual tea-party and prize distribution of the Sunday-school was held, Mr. J. Jackson in the chair, supported by the Rev. A. Doel and Mr. W. H. Sutcliffe, each of whom gave a short address, the children contributing to the musical entertainment.

London: Essex Church.—On the first Sunday in the year a Service of Dedication and Welcome for new members of the church will take the place of the morning service. It will be followed at noon by the New Year Communion. In the evening the Rev. Frank K. Freeston will begin a course of addresses on "The New Century," and will speak of "The New Chivalry." Further addresses will deal with "The New Philanthropy," "The New Theology," and "The New Democracy."

London: Islington.—A watch-night service was held at Unity Church on New Year's Eve, conducted by the minister, the Rev. Dr. Hicks, whose short address upon "The Close of the Century" was very impressive, and listened to with deep interest, not only by the members of the church, but also by the many strangers who were present. During the last three Sundays Dr. Hicks has preached at both services, with great acceptance, upon "A Glance at the Nineteenth Century."

London: Lewisham.—The Literary and Scientific Society has just finished the first half of the winter session. The meetings have been held with an average attendance of about a hundred. On Jan. 21 Professor Romesh Dutt, of University College, London, is to lecture on "The Religions of Ancient India." A month ago six ladies of the congregation issued invitations to all members of the church and their friends for Dec. 27. The object was "to form new friendships and to strengthen those already existing." About 120 persons were present. Through the generosity of our friends the fourth annual Sunday-school party was held on Friday, Dec. 28, and was an unqualified success. As part of the entertainment, the children gave a performance of Princess May and her Wonderful Law, by "Aunt Amy." Mrs. Page distributed the year's prizes. Including the children, there were over 200 persons present.

London: Stratford.—On Dec. 21 a social meeting of members and friends was held for the purpose of bidding farewell to Mr. L. Tavener, who has been lay worker at Stratford and Stepney for the past two years, under the superintendence of the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, but is now leaving to become minister at the Old Meeting, at Ipswich. The Rev. T. E. M. Edwards spoke of the good work done by Mr. Tavener in the Sunday-school Teachers' preparation class, Young People's Guild, and Band of Hope. Mr. Hawkins, as church secretary, in the name of members and friends, asked Mr. Tavener's acceptance of a silver watch and birthday book as a mark of esteem and appreciation of his services, and of regret at his leaving. Mr. Waddington, Mr. Noel, and Mr. Robins also spoke on behalf of the Sunday-school Band of Hope and Young People's Guild.

London: Sydenham and Penge.—The last of the series of special services was held at the Public Hall, Sydenham, on Sunday evening, Dec. 30. The attendances have not been of such a character as to justify a further continuance. Although to some extent this effort may have the appearance of failure, there is the satisfaction of knowing that many have been made acquainted with the great principles for which we stand, and have acknowledged their indebtedness to the services and the addresses, for the broadening and quickening thoughts that have been presented concerning God and man and the future. It has been arranged to hold services during the present month at Penge, which is within easy walking distance from Sydenham, and to which some of our Sydenham friends will come. The first of the series will be conducted on Sunday next, at 7 o'clock P.M., by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, "The Message of Unitarianism to the Twentieth Century." The Childwick Hall is in the Beckenham-road, near the Penge Station of the L.B. and S.C.R., and about five minutes' walk from that of the L.C. and D.R. It is hoped that the Unitarians living in the neighbourhood will avail themselves of the privileges of these services, and strengthen the hands of those who are seeking to make known more widely the great truths of our Liberal Faith.

Newbury.—The last week-night lecture was given by Mr. Bell—subject, "Self-made Men"; it was valuable and well received. A successful dramatic reading of Dickens's "Christmas Carol" has also been given. The scholars rendered beautifully their quarterly service of song. Special service was held in the morning of Christmas Day.

Stalybridge.—Following on a correspondence between the Rev. W. Harrison and a local curate, who had been claiming to teach some members of the Unitarian congregation what he called "The Elementary Truths of Christianity," Mr. Harrison delivered a course of five Sunday evening lectures with the above as general title, on the Fatherhood of God, the Brotherhood of Man, Discipleship to Christ, Human Responsibility, and the Future Life. The lectures were well attended, and created considerable interest in the town. These were followed by a course of lectures on the Changes of the Nineteenth Century, Biblical, Theological, Scientific, and Social. On Christmas Day the Sunday-school party was held, and on New Year's Eve a watch-night service.

BE sure, no earnest work
Of any honest creature, howbeit weak,
Imperfect, ill-adapted, fails so much,
It is not gathered as a grain of sand
To enlarge the sum of human action used
For carrying out God's end.

—E. B. Browning.

WE hear with the utmost regret that the December number of the New World, which we expect shortly to receive, is to be the last issue of this valuable Quarterly Review of Religion, Ethics, and Theology. Founded in 1892, the New World has for nine years maintained a high standard of excellence, numbering amongst its contributors some of the most distinguished liberal theologians and thinkers, not only of America but of Europe. The late Professor Charles Carroll Everett was the senior editor, and his coadjutors, Professors C. H. Toy, Orello Cone, and N. P. Gilman, feel that the financial position of the Review does not justify them in continuing the publication. The calamity of its loss we must share with our American brethren, but with the sincere hope that as in the case of our own Prospective, Theological, and Modern Reviews, the succession of so valuable an organ of liberal religious thought may quickly be taken up again.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 6.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Bermondsey, Fort-road, Upper Grange-road, 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. HOWARD.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN, 11 A.M., Boys' Own Brigade, "Be of good courage;" 3 P.M., Children's New Year's Service, and 7 P.M., "All before us."

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON, 11 A.M., Service of Dedication and Welcome; 12, New Year's Communion, and 7 P.M., "The New Century.—I. The New Chivalry."

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN, 11.15 A.M., "The Perfect Sacrifice," followed by Communion Service, 12 30, and 7 P.M., "Watchmen of the Lord."

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEX. GORDON, M.A.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON. Morning, "The Unknown." Evening, "Our Pisgah's Height."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A. Morning, "Fresh Resolves for the New Century." Evening, "A New Year of our Church Life."

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Penge, Childwick Hall, Beckenham-road, 7 P.M., Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, "The Message of Unitarianism to the Twentieth Century."

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. FARRINGTON. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. FELSTEAD.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. "Supply."

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRADFORD, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. LIVENS.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Rev. E. DURANT CECIL.

DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKSPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS

EASTBOURNE, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HASTINGS, Free Christian Church, South Terrace (opposite Recreation Ground), 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. JOHN MCDOWELL.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN.

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall, Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Claremont, 21, Albion-place (facing Harbour), 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. A. HERMANN THOMAS, B.A.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.

SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY. SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Jan. 6th, at 11.15, HERBERT BURROWS, "The Nineteenth Century.—I. Religion."

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION RELIGIOUS CONFERENCE at COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY-GREEN, E., SUNDAY, Jan. 6th, at Five o'clock. Subject, "What do we mean by Christian Brotherhood?" Opened by the Rev. J. FELSTEAD.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. J. B. BARNHILL, 26, Clovelly Mansions, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.

THE "INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

Society for the Abolition of Vivisection

Offices: 62, Strand, London.

"Wandering away from the Light, and from Love, into the outer darkness, whither would the principle underlying vivisection lead us? Once the Spirit of God brooded over the face of the waters, while the grand poem of creation was in conception. What spirit will brood over the new chaos, when mercy and pity are dead, when treachery rules, when might is right, when the possibility of oppression is to be gauged only by the helplessness of the victim? To whom shall we turn when the vivisector has set over us an imaginary God, who looks smilingly on while the work of His hands is marred, and who has 'so arranged the avenues' leading to necessary knowledge, that it can be attained alone 'through the unutterable agonies of beings that trust in us'?"—See Edith Carrington's Leaflets, No. I.

The above Society appeals to the Public for aid.

E. M. WRIGHT, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.

Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY

ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 3, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and

Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

DAILY RE-ENGAGEMENT desired as GOVERNESS or SECRETARY. English and arithmetic (Cambridge Higher Local); good French, Latin, German, music, drawing. Excellent references. — Miss TALBOT, 38, Westbere-road, W. Hampstead, N.W.

LAKE DISTRICT, furnished House; 3 entertaining, 6 bed (2 double bedded) rooms, bath, w.c.—Address, INQUIRER Office.

BIRTHS.

PARRY—On New Year's Day, at Hazlewell, Ilminster, the wife of the Rev. Edward Parry, of a daughter.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION,

College Chapel, Stepney Green, E.

FIRST SUNDAY AFTERNOON OF EVERY MONTH, at FIVE o'clock.

CONFERENCES

ON

"The Religion the Age Wants"

(CHRISTIAN BROTHERHOOD).

Jan. 6th. "What do we mean by Christian Brotherhood?"
Opened by Rev. J. Felstead.
Feb. 3rd. "Brotherhood and Patriotism"
Opened by Rev. George Critchley.
March 5th. "The Brotherhood of Nations"
Opened by Rev. P. H. Wicksteed.
April 7th. "Brotherhood and the Home Life"
Opened by Florence Hill.
May 5th. "Brotherhood in Industry"
Opened by J. R. Macdonald.
June 2nd. "The Basis of Christian Brotherhood"
Opened by Rev. W. H. Lambelle.

At the Evening Service at 7 o'clock, Addresses also will be given

Jan. 6th. "Man as a Seer of Visions"
Rev. J. Felstead.
Feb. 3rd. "A Divine Restoration"
Rev. George Critchley.
March 5th. "Our Duty to South Africa"
Rev. P. H. Wicksteed.
April 7th. "The Gospel of Peace"
Florence Hill.
May 5th. "National Character and Ideals"
J. R. Macdonald.
June 2nd. "The Spirit of the Christian Life"
Rev. W. H. Lambelle.

STEINWAY HALL,

LOWER SEYMOUR ST., PORTMAN SQ., W.

MR. J. H. LEIGH will give his reading of
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE in aid of the funds of
THE LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION,
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 12TH,
AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets 5s., 2s. 6d. (reserved), and 1s.

May be obtained from the following ladies and gentlemen, who have kindly offered their services:—Miss E. M. LAWRENCE, 26, Kensington Palace-gardens, W.; Mrs. BLAKE ODGERS, The Garth, North Finchley, N.; Miss ANNA SHARPE, The Grove, Hampstead, N.W.; Mrs. J. H. LEIGH, 11, Bryanston-street, Portman-square, W.; Rev G. DAWES HICKS, Ph.D., 32, Northolme-road, Highbury, N.; Mr. OSWALD NETTLEFOLD, 27, Devonshire-terrace, Hyde Park, W., also of
Mr. PHILIP GREEN, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, and Mr. J. R. MACKEY, Steinway Hall.

Doors open at 2.30. To conclude at 5.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Schools, etc.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON
(FOR WOMEN),
YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET, W.

SESSION 1900–1901.

The LENT TERM will BEGIN on Thursday, January 17.

Lectures are given in all branches of General and Higher Education. A single course of Lectures in any subject may be attended, or Students can enter for:—(1), A University Course in Arts or Science in preparation for the Examinations for Degrees of the University of London; (2), A College Course; (3), A Professional Training in Teaching (prepares for the Examinations for Teaching Diplomas granted by the Universities of Cambridge and London); (4), A Course of Scientific Instruction in Hygiene (designed to furnish Women with the training for such posts as are now open to them); (5), The Art School. Six Laboratories are open to Students for Practical Work.

Students can reside in the College.

Further information on application to the PRINCIPAL.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON
(FOR WOMEN),
YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET W.

Department for Professional Training in Teaching.
(Recognised by the Cambridge Syndicate).
HEAD OF THE DEPARTMENT:
Miss HANNAH ROBERTSON, M.A.,
to whom all applications should be addressed.

The SESSION for 1901 OPENS on Thursday, January 17.

The Course includes full preparation for the Examinations for the Teaching Diplomas granted by the Universities of London and Cambridge, held annually in December.

A Course of Saturday Morning Lectures for Teachers on School Hygiene will begin January 19.

CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE,
HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
AND BOARDING SCHOOL.

For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home.
Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term:

Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s.
Extras: Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s.
Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d.
Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra.
Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.

Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.

The NEXT TERM begins WEDNESDAY, January 16th.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

MISS JARVIS and MISS CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:
MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

HEAD MASTER, GUY LEWIS, M.A., Oxford.
ASSISTANT MASTERS—Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and Manchester College, Oxford, and H. L. JONES, B.A., Merton College, Oxford.
Visiting Masters for Music, Science, Drawing, Gymnastics, and Manual Instruction.

There are a few Vacancies on the Foundation. For Prospectus and particulars, apply to the Clerk, Mr. E. W. MARSHALL, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Winter Season.—BOARD and RESIDENCE at OSMUNDA, Fir Vale-road, from 30s. weekly. Central, opposite Grand Hotel Gardens.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE HELPER, 1901.
A Handbook for Sunday-school Teachers and for Parents. Edited by W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

With Frontispiece—"Alfred the Great," and many Illustrations of beautiful natural objects—crystals, moss, grasses, insects, &c.

Every Teacher should possess a copy.

YOUNG DAYS.
Volume for 1900. Edited by Rev. J. J. Wright.

Contains 192 pages of brightly-written Stories, Anecdotes and Verses, with over 100 Illustrations. A most attractive volume as a Prize or New Year's Present for young children.

Illustrated boards 1s. 6d., cloth gilt 2s., post free.

PRINCESS MAY AND HER WONDERFUL LAW.
A Fairy Play. By "Aunt Amy."

Published in neat Booklet form, suitable for presentation at the New Year. The cover is blocked in gold, with gilt edges, and tied with silk ribbon. Price 6d. net. Postage 1d.

PRAYERS for the USE of SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.
A collection of suitable Prayers, printed in large type. Cloth, 6d. net. Postage 2d.

ADDRESSES TO CHILDREN.
For Use in Home and School.

This little book consists of Twenty-five Addresses which have appeared in the "Children's Column" of THE INQUIRER, contributed by Revs. John Byles, V. D. Davis, J. J. Wright, and E. P. Barrow; Miss Frances E. Cooke, Miss Gertrude Martineau, Mrs. Farrington, and others.

Price 8d. net. Postage 2d.

HALF HOURS WITH the PARABLES.
SECOND SERIES.

A book for the Sunday School and the Home.
By the Rev. J. CROWTHER HIRST.
Price 1s. net. Postage 3d. extra.

The Parables treated in this second volume are:—

The Mustard Seed.
The Hidden Treasure.
The Two Sons.
The Talents.
The Good Samaritan.
The Barren Fig Tree.
The Great Supper.
The Tower & the Warring King.
The Lost Coin.
The Unrighteous Steward.
The Rich Fool.
Unprofitable Servants.

NOW READY FOR JANUARY.

Price One Penny.

YOUNG DAYS.
Edited by J. J. WRIGHT.

CONTENTS:—

The Months. (Poetry.)
Joan's Strange Adventures in Gnome-land and Sylph-land.—Chap. I.
Feathery Weather. (Picture.)
How a Drummer-Boy won his glory.
The Dance of the Months. (Poetry.)
The Legend of the Christmas Rose.
A Russian Skating Song. (Picture.)
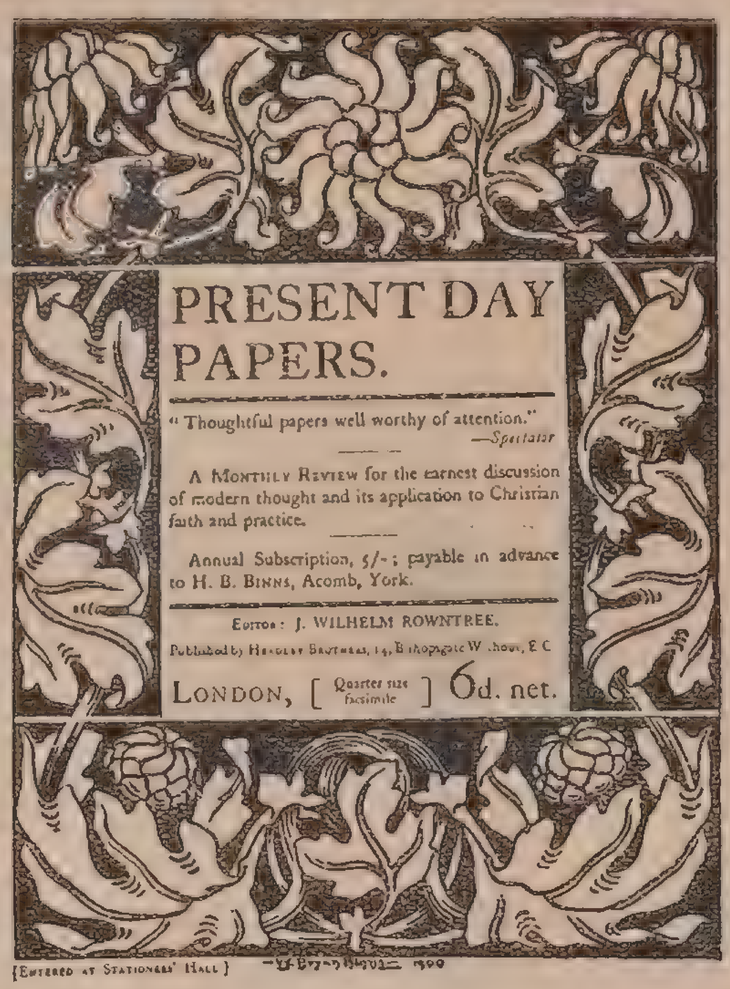
Tall, Handsome, and Brave, but——
The Christ-Child. Aunt Amy's Corner.
Guild Work.
Our Temperance Picture Gallery.—I. Lord Roberts.
The Fog Window-blind.
Turning the New Year Leaves.
Puzzles. Editor's Chat, &c.

Annual Subscription by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 4, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. Manchester Agents: H. RAWSON AND CO., 16, New Brown-street; JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate. Liverpool Agents: THE LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' CO., LTD., 70, Lord-street.



NEW YEAR BOOKLETS.
(By the Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.)

DAILY MEDITATIONS (Fourth Edition, revised), and NIGHT UNTO NIGHT (Second Thousand).

Leather, gilt, 1s. each; cloth, red-edged, 6d.

OF THE AUTHOR, WANDSWORTH; or PHILIP GREEN, ESSEX HALL, W.C.

Special Terms for Quantities.

Fearless, stimulating papers and reviews by able writers on the problems of religious and social thought.

PRESENT DAY PAPERS

for 1901 are expected to contain articles by J. A. Hobson, M.A., Canon Moore Ede, Edward Grubb, M.A., and others on Social Questions and Ideals. Articles have been promised on "The Work of the Spirit" and "The Fatherhood of God."

Write to HEADLEY BROS., enclosing stamped envelope, for Prospectus.

The Papers are published on the 15th of each month. Probable contents of January Number:—

I.—Comments . . . The Editor.
II.—The Work of the Spirit May Kendall.
III.—Our Social Ideal—I. Henry B. Binns.
IV.—Books for Bible Students Prof. A. S. Peake.

7d., post free, from HEADLEY BROS., 14, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY

THE COMING DAY.
ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for JANUARY.

A Calendar of Teachers, Heroes, and Saints.
A New Century Summons to the Young.
Notes on Herbert Spencer's "First Principles."
A Note on the Incarnation.
Practical Imperialism; or, the Brute-Force Policy of the European Powers at the close of the 19th Century.
The Lie Factory.
Who began it?
How we cheat ourselves.
The Colonies and Christmas.
The Unrest at the Cape.
Notes by the Way, Notes on Books, &c.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford:
WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

NOW READY.

Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 1d.
POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1901.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK FOR 1901.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
JESUS OF NAZARETH: Lessons of his Life, Death, and Resurrection Learnt at Ober Ammergau. By CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
RELIGION IN LITERATURE AND RELIGION IN LIFE. Two Lectures by STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Cloth, 2s. net, post free.
A HANDBOOK for MINISTERS of RELIGION. Containing Services for Baptism, Dedication, Communion, Marriage, and Burial, with special Hymns and Readings. Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
SEVEN SERVICES FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP, with special Prayers and Thanksgivings. Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

THE CHRISTIAN FREEMAN
AND SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

CONTENTS.

Stories and Anecdotes:—Walter's Vocation; the Skill of a Mouse; How Frank Won; the Head Nurse's Story.

Articles:—To Our Readers; the Guilds and Unions of the Unitarian and Free Christian Churches, by John Ellis; Review; Environment, by Frances E. Cooke; Children in the early part of the Nineteenth Century; John and Charles Wesley.

News of Our Schools:—Dundee; Holywood; Middlsborough.

Sunday-school Lessons, by E. M. Lawrence:—Thoughts for the New Year; Thy Kingdom Come; Strive; Sympathy.

Poetry:—The Coming Year; the New Year.

Wayside Gatherings.

Subscribers will note that the price of THE CHRISTIAN FREEMAN will in future be reduced to One Penny. Special reductions will be made to Schools taking a large number of copies, or to Churches wishing to use it as a Parish Magazine.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE TERMS:—1 copy, post free, per annum, 1s. 6d.; 3 copies, 4s.; 6 copies, 7s.; 12 copies, 12s.; 50 copies, £2 2s.; 100 copies, £3 15s.

Orders for the New Year should be sent to Miss HAYWARD, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand.

Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to Miss LAWRENCE, and addressed to the Editor of The Christian Freeman, care of Miss HAYWARD.

THE MILL HILL PULPIT.
"FORWARD."

A Sermon preached before the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, at Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, on the First Day of the Twentieth Century, by CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.

Post free, 1½d.; Annual subscription, 1s. 6d.

A complete Catalogue of Sermons in stock, sent free, on application to CHAS. STAINER, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park Leeds.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 5, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

No. 3055. NEW SERIES, No. 159.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 17
LITERATURE :—
The Second Congregation, Belfast 19
A Morning Service for the Young 19
Articles in the Reviews 20
Publications Received... 20
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Boys' Brigade 21
OBITUARY :—
Miss Anna MacAdam 22
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 23
LEADER :—
A Memory : an Inspiration 24
POETRY :—
He that Inhabiteth Eternity... 18
Towards the Land of Promise 22
In Memoriam : January 11, 1900 24
ARTICLES :—
The Kingdom of Man... 21
The Work of the "Y" Branches 22
At the Dawn of a Century 25
MEETINGS :—
Yorkshire Unitarians and the Twentieth Century 26
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
Manchester District 28
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 29
ADVERTISEMENTS 30

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

WE have to acknowledge with sincere thanks several contributions towards the cost of sending copies of THE INQUIRER to Free Libraries in different parts of the country. This is a good service generously rendered, but so far the ground covered last year is not yet made good for the present year, and we should be glad considerably to increase the number of copies sent out.

ON Sunday morning a special service was held in St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, attended in state by the Mayors and Corporations of the new South London boroughs. The Mayors of Battersea, Bermondsey, Camberwell, Greenwich, Lambeth, Lewisham, Southwark, Wandsworth, and Woolwich, with a large number of aldermen and councillors (representing about a third of the whole population of London) were received at the south-west porch by the Bishops of Rochester and Southwark and other clergy, with the choir, and passed in procession up the nave. The Bishop of Rochester, in the course of an eloquent sermon, said that on that occasion he desired two things to stand out clear and far above all personal considerations—the first, their wish to mark the unity of South London ; the second, their desire to inscribe the names of God and Christ upon the great work entrusted to them. Speaking of the lessons taught by the visit of the wise men to the Saviour Child, as affecting the responsibility laid on his hearers by their fellow-citizens, the Bishop (as reported in the Guardian) proceeded :—

In the first place, it taught them the lesson of manhood—to give to those whom they served what was best in their manhood, and to reverence and respect the manhood of others. Humanity, as they saw it, was not always outwardly fair. It was often disfigured and stained. Sometimes it was sodden with drink or degraded with vice, sometimes it was silly and foolish, or made coarse by comfort and success, but in whatever guise it presented itself it was always humanity and worthy of their care. The standard of national and, within its sphere, of municipal effort, should be to give, as far as might be, to each life of man, woman, and child the opportunity of wholesome growth in body and mind, air, cleanliness, pure food, right exercise for the body, room for decency in the home, opportunities for the mind, good, useful, and pleasant knowledge, and pure recreation. In these matters they could do much. Of course, there was a good deal that was out of their power in public bodies. "You cannot," men said, "make people sober by Act of Parliament." No, but they could increase the opportunities of keeping themselves so, just as defective legislation or lax administration might, and did, expose them to almost irresistible temptations. Great in these respects, in the long run, was the power of public authority, but greater still, perhaps, and always ready for immediate use, was the power of individual citizens in office, who steadily used the personal influence which office gave them for the service of their fellow-men.

And a further lesson of the Epiphany was of simplicity, earnestness of purpose, and readiness to bear obloquy for the public good. The good citizen, like the good soldier, must be prepared to endure hardness, and to meet it with pluck and patience and good temper. To do the best work a man must feel that it was not his own, but God's work. The great church, which is destined to be the cathedral of the new diocese of South London, was crowded from end to end.

ON Tuesday a large company of English pilgrims, headed by Cardinal Vaughan and the Duke of Norfolk, were received by the Pope at Rome. In reply to a brief address from the Duke, which expressed indignation at Protestant activity in the city and the hope that the new century might see the restoration of the temporal power, the Pope also deplored the same circumstances.

Under our eyes in this holy city, which should be the inviolate centre of Catholicism, it is permitted to associations for religious propagation to take advantage of the sad economic conditions of the country to corrupt the faith of our children in the name of the specious doctrine of private judgment which pretends to leave each the right of interpreting in his own fashion the doctrine of Christ. You are right in protesting against this state of things, which enables you better to understand the grievous circumstances in which we have lived during the twenty-five years of our Pontificate.

While longing for power to exercise the old tyranny in Rome, the Pope yet congratulates English Catholics on the great freedom they enjoy, to "profess the Catholic doctrine and obey the Church." That others also should enjoy freedom is too much to expect Rome willingly to grant.

A SUMMARY of the present condition of various Nonconformist Twentieth Century Funds is given in this week's Christian World. The Wesleyan Methodists, who aim at a million guineas, have received promises amounting to £921,651, of which more than half-a-million is already paid. Smaller Methodist bodies have also made good progress with more modest undertakings. The Congregational Fund was to be half-a-million, and more than this has been promised, but unfortunately a dual aim has led to what looks like a miscarriage of the Central Fund, for of the £536,648 promised by far the greater proportion is allocated for church extension and the redemption of debts, while only £16,185 has been received for the Central Fund, and it is urged that every effort must be used to obtain a further £200,000 for this purpose. The Baptist Fund, which is to be a quarter of a million, stands at £163,318 promised and £75,858 paid.

AN affectionate address to Mr. P. C. Mozoomdar, on his return home, from the members of the Young Men's Prayer Meeting, Calcutta, is printed in the Interpreter and the New Dispensation of Dec. 16, and also Mr. Mozoomdar's reply. "I do not believe," says Mr. Mozoomdar, "in the conversion of one great religion by another, either by force of arms, or abundant finance, or missionary organisations ; but I fully believe in the free autonomy of every great religious body, leading in the end to a world-wide spiritual federation, when every nation will be represented, and the claims of God's dispensations to all nations shall be vindicated." And he urges his friends to remember that their religion is no mere sentiment or dogma, far less outward ceremony of any kind, but that it always stands for historic continuity in spiritual life, and that there must be scientific accuracy, philosophical depth, the devoutness, saintly righteousness, vital reality, and all-penetrating insight which go to make up the resistless claims of personal religion. At the same time, religion must take form in a brotherhood, a congregation, or church, and there must be mutual dependence and self-renunciation among the members.

As to the lament of his friends over the paucity of inspiration in the Church, Mr. Mozoomdar reminds them that the gift of inspiration is an unceasing gift co-extensive with the genuineness of the true life in God. So long as there shall be one devout soul in the community, and one single genuine prayer, uttered or unuttered, "so long the breath of the Great Awful Spirit shall visit us, and inspire us." His friends had presented him with a crucifix as a souvenir, but in accepting it Mr. Mozoomdar said :—

You know that I do not attach much value to the painted or sculptured Christ, it is the formless Spirit of God in spiritual humanity that I have set up for my model and for yours, or if the Son of God has any image let the soul of each one of you be that heavenly image.

And as to the position he has taken up in regard to Christ and his religion, from which he does not in the least recede, Mr. Mozoomdar says :—

My Christ is not merely the local and historic Christ of the four gospels, but it is the very presence and spirit and incarnation of God in world-wide human nature. This rapt and sacrificed sweetness of the marvellous Galilean is but the seed, the type, the embodiment of that eternal sonship which has germinated and fructified into the fulness of the Divinity in man. We can never do without the historic personality of the gospels, we can do as little without the central teachings of the Christian Church, but least of all we can do without the evolution of the universal Christ-idea in all prophets in all lands, and amidst all consecrated humanity.

IN the January Calendar of the Richmond Free Church, the Rev. S. Farrington writes as follows :—

"This New Year opens for us a New Century, and this brings a kind of distinction to it, as an illuminated letter does to the beginning of a chapter. Somehow, and in some vague way, it seems like the beginning of a new era; something unknown, fresh, original, seems waiting for us in it. . . . Yet as this unknown approaches us, on another side, it will look familiar. It will come day after day, quietly, gently. Each event will unfold out of what has gone before. Exactly the same laws of life will hold. Courage, faithfulness, and hope will still be the good angels which will bear us up on their hands, lest we dash our foot against a stone. There will be the same harvests of thought and feeling, of loving and helpful activities to gather from the new fields as from the old. Measurably we may still choose and accomplish the results that come to us. After all, the secret, the meaning of life remains stable. It is only the incidents and appearances that shift and change. Goodness is the same. Love is the same. Justness of mind, integrity of conduct, are the same. God is the same. Therefore we may well go forward into the new century cheerfully and boldly. Especially let us take this temper into our little fellowship of faith, into our church life and church habits. . . . The new generation cares nothing for the theological controversies which shook men's minds thirty years ago. It pays no attention to them. It asks rather what you can make of your residuum of belief? Whether you can make it as inspiring to your life; if you can express it as nobly and effectively in your worship as of old?

"First of all, then, we must show the effect of our faith on ourselves. If it makes us more devout and reverent; more eager to use the means of religious culture; if it makes us better men and women; then it will stand. If it does not do this, then it will not stand. We have only the things of the spirit to offer here, and to those who do not care for these we have nothing. But if we can only show forth these in their power and attractiveness—if we can only so throw our hearts and souls into these as to ourselves feel their true power and glory—then this coming year and new century will bring our little church the truest prosperity."

AMONG a number of new century contributions to the Christian Life, one of the most interesting was from Dr. Clifford, ex-President of the Baptist Union, who after a cordial word of recognition of the services rendered by Unitarians to the great movements of our age on behalf of human progress, continued :—

For myself, I can never forget that one of the earliest impulses that came to my intellectual activity was from the widow of one of your distinguished ministers. Mrs. Turner, of Lenton Fields, Nottingham, used to visit my home when I was a little boy. I see now her tall figure, her serene and beautiful face; I hear her gentle suasive voice; and I feel as though her touch was on my brain still. Her words gave me some faith in myself, and constrained me to look at the future through mists of hope. I thank God for her serene and strong ministry to me.

I wonder whether your readers know Orville Dewey? I hope he is not forgotten. He taught me the doctrine of "the moral limits of accumulation," in my college days; made me to see that simplicity of living is divine, and that "luxury" is as much a folly and a snare as it is a sin. I hope he still speaks from your pulpits and teaches in your homes.

And Channing! well, everybody who knows, knows him, and welcomes his gracious and illuminating wisdom for the guidance of his life!

THE January Bookman contains an illustrated article by Professor William Knight on "Herbert Spencer: The Man and the Philosopher," and as supplement a full-page reproduction of the portrait by Herkomer, painted in compliance with an address presented to Mr. Spencer at the close of 1896, congratulating him on the completion of his System of Synthetic Philosophy, and signed by a large number of distinguished thinkers and men of letters. Professor Knight, though differing widely from many of Spencer's philosophical conclusions, writes very warmly both of the spirit of his life-long work, and his great achievements—"his supreme intellectual sincerity, and his patient scientific labour in multitudinous fields, along with his remarkable power of delegating research to fellow-workers." The only parallel among English workers of the nineteenth century Professor Knight finds in Darwin.

Both men have done architectonic things, and both have been indifferent to temporary reward. There is a serene potency in the man who can isolate himself from a crowd of admirers and imitators, and devote his solitude to the continuous elaboration of a system which he himself magnificently organised. Knowing well the difference between notoriety and fame, he has been regardless of both in his devotion to knowledge for its own sake.

THE Sunday Strand enters on its second year, and promises a supply of picturesque and pious fiction which will more than match Dr. Watson's "Life of Jesus Christ," which ran through the twelve numbers of last year. The new volume opens with a first instalment of "Voices out of the Past: Stories of the Heroes and Heroines of the Bible Re-told," by L. T. Meade, in which the author makes Mother Eve tell her own story, and near the beginning lets her say: "I must not talk of my son Cain now, or I shall break down."

A CORRESPONDENT draws our attention to the fact that an Act of Parliament of 1751, reforming the Calendar, decreed that the next century should be from 1800 to 1899 inclusive, and asks how such an Act can be ignored, as is now the case. For our own part, we have not seen the Act, and can only say that if it is still there, it is by no means the only dead letter which remains on the Statute Book.

HE THAT INHABITETH ETERNITY.

WHO does not feel how weak
Are all our words to speak
Of him, the Infinite—
Below all depth, above all height!
Yet hath no other speech
To me such wondrous reach
As this the prophet saith: that he Inhabiteth Eternity!

We dwell in time; our ear
Is deafened by things near;
Darkly we see, and know
Only in part, also.
From troubles that annoy
Plucking no future joy,
Sweetening failure's bitterness
With no deferred but sure success—
As if the passing hour were all,
With it we rise and fall;
The while that he
Inhabiteth eternity!

Patient and suffering long
With man's mistakes and wrong;
Seeing how all threads come
In place in Time's vast loom,
And in the finished web fulfil
The pattern of his perfect will;
To whom as one is seen
What is, will be, hath been—
Tranquil and lifted clear
Above our fevered atmosphere,
Forever dwelleth he
In the sure strength of his Eternity!

O, Father of my life,
Give me, amid its strife,
To bear within my breast
The secret of my rest—
The river of thy peace within,
Whose banks are always fresh and green;
Give me, while here in Time I be
Also to dwell with thee in thine Eternity!

FREDERICK L. HOSMER.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following :—H. B.; J. B.; R. B. B.; J. C.; S. D.; W. B. D.; A. E. H; C. H.; W. J.; L. L.; F. T. M.; J. M. M.; T. M.; A. M. N.; F. J. N.; H. N.; F. T. R.; W. H. S.; K. B. T.

My highest wish is to find within the God whom I find everywhere without.—Kepler.

LITERATURE.

THE SECOND CONGREGATION, BELFAST.*

THE Second Congregation of Protestant Dissenters in Belfast had its origin in 1708, from the abundant overflow of the First Congregation, and the peaceful formation of a distinct society, with a second meeting-house built side by side with the first. The available stipend (£160 14s. 3d.) was equally divided, and the Communion plate became, and still is, the joint property of the two congregations. In 1871, on the settlement of the Rev. James Street, the connection of the Second Congregation with the Presbytery of Antrim ceased, and it became an independent society; in 1896, during the ministry of the Rev. E. I. Fripp, the congregation moved from their old meeting-house, in Rosemary-street, to All Souls' Church, their new home in Elmwood-avenue.

The history of this congregation, so rich in interest, from the high place it has held in the religious life of Belfast, its share in the struggles for freedom, and in many efforts for the social well-being of the community, has now been recorded by Mr. S. Shannon Millin, who is a loyal and enthusiastic member of the congregation. In a quarto volume, sumptuously printed, bound with great taste, and enriched by many illustrations, the story is told, and the book is generously placed at the disposal of the members of the congregation, the total proceeds of the sale, without deducting anything for the cost of production, being devoted to the liquidation of the remaining debt on All Souls' Church. There is thus an additional motive for urging a warm response on the part of friends throughout the country interested in the past history and the present welfare of our Free Churches; but quite apart from this, on its own intrinsic merits, Mr. Millin's book is heartily to be commended.

For a history of close upon two hundred years the roll of ministers in unusually short:—

James Kirkpatrick, 1708-1743.
Gilbert Kennedy, 1744-1773.
James Bryson, 1773-1791.
Patrick Vance, 1791-1800.
William Hamilton Drummond, 1800-1815.
W. D. H. McEwen, 1817-1828.
John Porter, 1829-1874.
James C. Street, 1871-1890.
Edgar Innes Fripp, 1891-1900.
William Hamilton Drummond, 1900.

Of all these, except Mr. Vance, excellent portraits are given, and there is a special interest in comparing the features of the elder William Hamilton Drummond, who entered on his ministry more than a hundred years ago, with those of his grandson, the present minister.

After an introductory chapter on "The Growth of Religious Liberty," Mr. Millin tells the story of the congregation more fully in a series of sketches of the successive ministers, each sketch being prefaced by a characteristic utterance of the minister himself, and followed in most instances by a list of his published writings, but we are sorry not to find a list of Dr. Drummond's publications. In following the record, one is struck by the variety of character and gifts in successive ministers, but the constant spirit of fidelity which has animated them, the eminent services rendered by them and their people to the community, and the vigour with which as a religious society the Second Congregation has faced its responsibilities and met the claims of each new generation. The sterling qualities of the early non-subscribers are well exemplified in the following passage from the funeral sermon on Gilbert Kennedy, the second minister:—

> I shall only add one thing more to his honour, that from his youth he entertained enlarged and generous notions of the rights and liberties of mankind, civil and religious. In matters of religion he looked upon all claims of human authority, all impositions upon conscience, not only as injurious to and destructive of the rights and liberties we are justly entitled to as men and Christians, but as greatly obstructing the progress of truth and religious knowledge, and the unhappy source of many other evils. Upon this footing and upon these principles only he knew a dissent from the Established Church can be justified, the reformation from Popery, and Christianity itself defended.

During Mr. John Porter's long ministry came the trying times ended by the passing of the Dissenters' Chapels Act, in which the Irish Churches had as keen an interest as the English, and later also the disestablishment of the Irish Church. Mr. Street's ministry was marked by the erection of school buildings, and by his active interest in public and charitable work. Then with Mr. Fripp came the great move, out from the centre of the town, and the building of All Souls' Church. The pictures of the old meeting-house and of the new church show how strongly the desire for beauty in the expression of worship has taken hold of the congregation, and Mr. Millin's narrative proves how clearly he has grasped the principles of a Free Church. All Souls' he describes as affirming even in its structural arrangements the Reformation principles of personal responsibility and the right of private judgment; but when he adds that at the Reformation "the laity wrested from the clergy the right to remonstrate and, if needs be, to rebuke them," we are not quite sure that we follow him. If this means that the laity vindicated their right to keep the clergy in order, that was no doubt largely the case, and it is a wholesome principle, most useful if used with discretion; but if it means that the laity took from the clergy their right of remonstrance and rebuke, it is very far from having been so historically, nor is it in the least to be desired that the moral fearlessness of a prophetic ministry should be hampered by any such restraint.

One other point we may note in passing. On p. 76 Mr. Millin speaks of one of the oldest Universities in England as having "allowed the Manchester College to be opened at Oxford"; but the University had no choice in the matter, and Manchester College was not admitted to the University, it merely settled in the same city. Nevertheless, that settlement was of great significance as Mr. Millin rightly feels, and it was marked by the grace of a very cordial welcome on the part of distinguished members of the University.

Among other interesting things in the book is a full account of the organ, built in 1806 as the first of its kind in a dissenting chapel in the north of Ireland, and in Belfast second only to the organ in the parish church. Among the Appendices is also a useful chronicle of Legislation affecting Dissenters in Ireland. In his Preface the author expresses his high appreciation of the Rev. Alexander Gordon's "Historical Memorials of the First Presbyterian Congregation, Belfast," and it is pleasant now to be able to add our acknowledgments to Mr. Millin, and our congratulations on the completion of his own work, produced in a form so eminently worthy of its subject. It is a book which should be, at least, in every chapel library, and we would again remind our readers that in buying it they will not only be procuring for themselves a valuable historical record, but making a substantial contribution towards the welfare of All Souls' Church.

* "History of the Second Congregation of Protestant Dissenters in Belfast." By S. Shannon Millin, B.A., Barrister-at-Law, with illustrations by J. Vinycomb, M.R.A.I. 10s. 6d. post free. To be had from Mr. J. W. Kinnear, 3, Donegal-terrace, Belfast.

A MORNING SERVICE FOR THE YOUNG.*

THIS little order of service possesses in a marked degree two qualities—it is full of the spirit of joy and full of originality. The former quality is much easier to praise than the latter. In a service for the young, joy undoubtedly ought to be the keynote. We want such a service to express some of the passionate gladness of youth, we want it to express gratitude for that gladness, and we want it to close in expressing the responsibility and strength of such gladness. Mr. Betham's service evidently has this aim. It begins with a morning carol, of which the first lines are—

> Joyful sing!
> Joyfully bring
> Glad hearts filled with morn's sweet pleasures!

It ends with a hymn, of which the first lines are—

> Work shall be our worship
> In the coming days;
> Deeds are truest voices,
> Theirs the sweetest praise.

The note of joy in life and beauty and truth, and the duty which such joy brings with it, seem well maintained throughout the service. This fact alone makes it well-deserving of the consideration of those who are looking for a liturgical service for the young.

Upon the success of Mr. Betham's originality in the treatment of his theme it is much more difficult to pronounce. A danger in producing an entirely original order of worship is that it tends to be too much coloured with the thoughts and feelings of one man. The carols, hymns and songs are, I suppose, entirely written by Mr. Betham. The responsive sentences are also his own production. Nowhere does any quotation from the Bible occur. In one section, described as "an exhortation," the "officiator," as Mr. Betham calls him, is directed to quote "A thing of beauty is a joy for ever," "To be weak is to be miserable," &c., to each of which the congregation replies by singing two verses of a hymn by Mr. Betham.

It may be freely admitted that there are not many of our ministers who, if they set themselves to compose an entire service, would do it so well as Mr. Betham. This does not, however, settle the question whether it is desirable for a liturgical service to bear the stamp everywhere of one man's thoughts and expressions. For my own part, I want some familiar and historical elements in such a service, and I feel it to be a weakness in the present one that there is too much of Mr. Betham in it. Further, it is surely essential that the words of a religious service should be simple and clear. Mr. Betham well says: "In explanation of the insertion of some of the thoughts it should be said that the young are regarded not as children, but as growing men and women: such thoughts are investments for the future: given to the memory now they will bear interest in the years ahead." One of the chief advantages of liturgical service is to impress thoughts clothed in beautiful language upon the memory which at the time are not half understood. But such an argument does not justify the insertion of the following song:—

* "A New Morning Service for the Young." By Ernest Betham. Price sixpence. To be had (by post only) at the Morland Press, 15, Theobald's-road, E.C.

> On a green hill I lay down,
> By the fair side of a town;
> Smoothest trunks of youngling trees
> Pillared rare noon's elbow ease;
> Sweetest blossoms overhead
> May's sun-chiselled ceiling spread;
> Earth's book at a page gleamed set,
> Fancy never shall forget.

Cryptic utterances like these may, perhaps, be defended as poetry, but they are indefensible in a religious service for the young.

It is, however, an ungrateful task to criticise even mildly what is evidently the work of an original and earnest mind. Mr. Betham clearly wants to avoid mere conventional religion, and to write something which is real and true.

Mrs. Humphry Ward once said of us that "Unitarianism looks too much like the remains of something else." If this means that we are inclined to cling to conventional utterances, and are not creative enough to put our thoughts into their own appropriate forms, there is truth in the charge. Mr. Betham's service is most certainly free from this objection. But, on the other hand, we should want Unitarianism to look like what it is, "the development of something else," and, in my opinion, it is in this lack of historical continuity that Mr. Betham's book has failed. By far the most successful and original of recent liturgies is that by Mr. Jacks. That liturgy does not "look like the remains of something else." It has freed itself from convention, and ventures to move along independent lines. But it does not break with historic Christianity. It is a carefully thought out original development of Christian expression, not in the least an original break with it.

It is along such lines that we should expect success. Nevertheless, Mr. Betham's attempt deserves welcome and praise. He is, above all things, a scorner of convention and an earnest seeker for truth in worship as in thought. His service makes that ideal absolutely clear. The note of sincerity is as marked in it as the note of joy, and to say this of any service is to say that it possesses the two indispensable elements of religious worship.

H. Gow.

THE consequences of one hour become conditions for the next.—Greaves.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

MR. JAMES KNOWLES sees no reason for giving up the Nineteenth Century, but wisely takes a bold leap with it into the twentieth, calling in the aid of Sir Edward Poynter to give picturesque expression to his meaning on the new title-page of The Nineteenth Century and After. A Janiform head adapted from a Greek coin, by the President of the Royal Academy, shows an old man looking back to XIX., while a younger woman, symbolic of new life, is turned towards XX. Mr. Stephen Phillips opens the new volume with a striking poem, on "Midnight—the 31st of December, 1900."

> Lo! now on the midnight the soul of the century passing,
> And on midnight the voice of the Lord!

Throughout the rest of the poem, with bold prophetic imagery, God is represented as speaking, showing how the world, and even the roaring city, is to be redeemed from evil and ugly things, till at last "Anguish and Time and Death" are overcome. Early in the prophecy come the following lines:—

> "In the years that have been I have bound man closer to man,
> And closer woman to woman;
> And the stranger hath seen in a stranger his brother at last,
> And a sister in eyes that were strange.
> In the years which shall be I will bind me nation to nation
> And shore unto shore," saith our God.

This is followed by a dialogue on "A New Century and an Old Riddle," by the Hon. Mrs. Chapman, the riddle being to reconcile our trust in the Eternal Goodness with ugly facts of the Cosmic process. The solution is in remembering that the human will and affections are the highest product of what we find in the unfolding life of the universe, and these clearly imply God.

> When the presumptions of our reason fairly meet the conviction of our heart, then, I think, we may take courage and face the cosmic process, and the seemingly endless whirl of pitiless "Nature," and hope, not foolishly, in the new time—ay, and in what is beyond time.

And just before it has been said:—

> I do not believe that we can attain to more than a presumption in thinking of these things. Conviction belongs to another region—to the region of communion with the Father of spirits.

Mr. Henry Jephson suggests that we should signalise the advent of the new century by instituting an annual "Day of Purification," to be religiously observed as a national festival, for the clearing away of all our dirt—in fact, a huge general wash and spring cleaning, for which he suggests May Day, as not clashing with other public holidays. Mr. John Trevarthen, of the Farm School, Redhill, writing on Hooliganism, points out that if more general advantage were taken of industrial and reformatory schools, the old evil, to which a new name has come to be attached, would be very largely mitigated. Sir Michael Foster, pleading for the more systematic and thorough "Scientific use of Hospitals," very truly points out that all medical and surgical treatment must in varying degree be regarded as experiment; but when he seeks to allay a widespread public uneasiness by the confident assertion,

> Much as the physician or surgeon may desire, and rightly desire, to profit by the knowledge gained through his "experiment," his action is in every case directed not to the desired intellectual gain, but wholly to the welfare of the patient, he is no doubt stating what should be the ideal of all hospital practice, but he does not meet the actual difficulty. It is notorious that in more than one Continental hospital cruel experiments have been made on patients, not in their interest, but solely in the pursuit of knowledge, and this is the logical outcome of the defence of vivisection from the purely scientific point of view. If in our English hospitals it is never done, that is because our medical men are more humane than the logic of their defence of vivisection as applied to other sentient creatures.

In the Monthly Review the first editorial article is on "Unity and Uniformity," arguing from the layman's point of view against any attempt at greater uniformity of doctrine within the Church, since there must be "evolution of religious truth." Any attempt at uniformity could only make mischief. If it were possible, it would be "the spiritual end of the race of man." The article on "Some Boer Characteristics," by Mr. Basil Williams, who was a gunner in the C.I.V. battery, every Englishman should read. It is first hand testimony as to the fine qualities of the fighting burghers, and a strong protest against the burning of farms. The illustrated article this month is a delightful account, by Mr. D. G. Hogarth, of excavations at Lasithi, in Crete, and his valuable finds in "The Birth Cave of Zeus."

The Contemporary opens with a horrible and appalling article, by Dr. E. J. Dillon, on "The Chinese Wolf and the European Lamb," describing what he himself recently saw and heard of the conduct of European troops in China. Of the worst cruelties and bestialities the British and German forces are happily acquitted. With this gruesome exhibition of "Christianity" should be contrasted Mr. Stadling's account of "Shamanism." Other valuable articles are "Women on Education Authorities," by Lady Laura Ridding; "Concerning French and English," by M. A. Bréal, amusing as well as useful; and "The Scottish Church and the Scottish People," by Dr. Fairbairn, which closes with a reference to the new United Free Church, and an aspiration that the last and greatest union may yet be consummated, so that we may see a "whole and undivided Presbytery of Scotland."

The Fortnightly contains an interesting Retrospect of its own history since it was started in 1865 as the first of the reviews with signed articles, and a free platform, followed in the next year by the Contemporary, and in 1877 by the Nineteenth Century. George Henry Lewes was the first editor, soon followed by John Morley, who held the post for fifteen years. The present number contains a further article on China by Sir Robert Hart, and much else of great interest. The Hon. Stephen Coleridge contributes an Open Letter to the new Home Secretary, appealing to him to look behind the official reports on Vivisection, to see what are the real facts as to the pain inflicted on helpless animals for purposes of scientific research.

In the Westminster the first article is by Mr. Franklin Thomasson on "War and Trade," in which he shows, indeed, that a state of war does lead to greater activity of trade, but adds that if industry were better organised there might be peaceful production on just as large a scale, "with something tangible to show for it in the shape of enormously increased wealth in place of well-filled hospitals, devastated lands, and huge war debts." And Mr. Thomasson further points out that if the enemy should be one of our chief customers the fearful loss involved would by no means be counterbalanced by increased activity in other quarters.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—[All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review].

Waverley. By Sir Walter Scott. 2s. (A. and C. Black).

Guy Mannering. By Sir Walter Scott. 2s. (A. and C. Black.)

The Religion of a Gentleman. By Charles F. Dole. (T. Y. Crowell, New York.)

The Baptist Handbook for 1901. 2s. (Veale, Chifferiel and Co.)

All Men Shall at Length be Saved. Four Sermons by F. F. Carmichael, LL.D. (Hodges, Figgis and Co., Grafton-street, Dublin.)

The Dying Century. By G. B. Richmond. ("East Kent Advertiser" Office, Deal.)

The Passing of the Dragon. By F. Jay Ceagh. (Cassell and Co.)

Old and New Certainty of the Gospel. By A. Robinson, M.A., B.D. 2s. 6d. (Williams and Norgate.)

The Bairns' Bible: A Talk about the Old Book. By W. T. Stead. 1d. ("Review of Reviews" Office.)

A Thoroughbred Mongrel. By Stephen Townsend. Illustrated by J. A. Shepherd. 3s. 6d. (Fisher Unwin.)

Types of Christian Life. By E. Griffith-Jones. 1s. 6d. (Clarke and Co.)

Every Living Creature. By Ralph Waldo Trine. 1s. (George Bell and Sons.)

England's Neglect of Science. By John Perry. 2s. 6d. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Reformation. By Williston Walker. 6s. (T. and T. Clark.)

Cassell's Magazine, Nineteenth Century, Strand, Sunday Strand, Captain, Expositor, Wide World, Scribner's, The Crisis, Westminster Teacher, Westminster Primary Quarterly, Junior Quarterly, Westminster Lesson Cards.

IT is to be remembered always, that the goodness, the life, is the thing for which to strive and pray; that the blessedness, the feeling, can only come to such as have forgotten to make search for it, and are wholly given over to the purpose of living in accord with God.—R. A. Armstrong.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
In Tins
And Packets.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Tins 1lb.
And 3lbs.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Packets 1lb.
And ½lb.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Sold by Grocers,
Export Oilmen.

THE KINGDOM OF MAN.

IN the Apostle's vision of the New Jerusalem, the Holy City had its gates open on every side. On the North were three gates, on the West three gates, on the South three gates, and on the East three gates. We may take that description as a symbol of the Christianity for which we stand. Our gates are always open to diviner influences; our windows are always open to clearer visions and fresher breezes from the hills of those celestial ideals whence comes all our help. Ours is not a final creed or a narrow sect. Our communion is not found in a museum of ecclesiastical curiosities and theological fossils. Our church is open to the best influences of human progress. The glories of science, the honours of philosophy, the triumphs of civilisation shall all contribute to the strength and beauty of that City of God, to which the generations of mankind are surely travelling. People are far more nearly prepared for the Larger Gospel than they themselves imagine. What we may call a change of atmosphere has taken place in the religious world; and it only needs the brave word and the outspoken utterance to make the discovery that old things are passed away and all things are made new. It is only courage that is needed to make the world marvel at the transition which the theological atmosphere has already undergone. Congregations are wondering why their preachers do not utter a bolder world of prophecy; preachers are longing for congregations to give them larger freedom of speech. Misunderstandings, conventionalities, and compromises are, really, the most serious obstacles to the extension of a Finer Faith. And, some day, there will be such an awakening of the Spirit of Truth, that compromise and conventionality will be swept away as by a Pentecostal Wind. Men will discover that they cannot live by bread only, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Men must live, not by metaphysical theories and ecclesiastical systems—they must live by a supreme, over-mastering enthusiasm; and that which is animating their souls, at this advent of the twentieth century, is the enthusiasm of humanity. The religion of the future will be that which appeals to such an enthusiasm, and finds in its inspiration the elements of a nobler faith. This must be the animating principle of all our Unitarian enterprise. The message with which we are charged, to-day, is the Gospel of the sacredness of human nature; it is ours to announce that the Kingdom of Man is at hand. Our platform is faith in Man as the offspring of the Eternal. The resources of power, upon which we draw, are the resources of humanity, which are also the reserves of divine strength, and are, therefore, infinite in their provision. We sometimes hear remarks about the "failure of Unitarianism." Well, there may be failure in the ministry of one man here and another man there; our churches and associations may fail in lukewarmness and indifference; but, in so far as Unitarianism represents that grander thought which is moulding the age, in so far as it is a current in the tidal wave of spiritual tendency, it cannot fail. The Cause is not alone ours; it is the Cause of Man, of Providence, of God, and, therefore, it can no more fail than the pillars of the universe can tumble into ruin. That is our work—to inaugurate the Kingdom of Man, to recognise the mighty hopes, the new enthusiasms which fill the world to-day. That is our mission, to say to the eager souls who are listening for brighter prophecies of the future: Yes, our brothers, you are right—you are right to hope, to watch, to work, to pray! You cannot hope for better things than those which the great God has in store for you; you cannot raise one prayer for a blessing too wonderful for the divine Father to bestow; there is a power in Love mightier than legal enactments and political machinery; the bonds of brotherhood are stronger than those of competition and greed and gain; the Kingdom of God is the Kingdom of Man, and that Kingdom is within you and amongst you; its beneficent sway is already come, wherever justice and mercy prevail over jealousy and rivalry and wrong; already, above the dark mountains of ignorance, superstition and sin, you may see the rising of the sun of righteousness; already you may behold the dawn of an ampler day; already you may welcome the "sweet reign" of the Fatherhood of God, the blessed advent of the regenerated Brotherhood of Man!

FRANK WALTERS.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.

BOYS' BRIGADES.

SIR,—I see that the formation of Boys' Own Brigades is being very strongly urged by some of your most respected contributors.

May I be allowed most earnestly to plead that those who are thinking of forming brigades will consider the desirability of organising them on the principle of the Boys' Life Brigade, which entirely excludes the Military element which many experienced people hold to be a great flaw—nay, a very serious evil. The whole tone and principle of this brigade is Life Saving; the object is "to make life saving an instinctive thought in the lives of men. The drill is not associated with the use of arms, but with instruction and exercises in the saving of life from fire, drowning, and from accident."

Mr. H. E. Norton, hon. secretary of the Life Saving Brigade, 56, Old Bailey, London, E.C., is glad to furnish full particulars. His experience and success in organisation render his advice very valuable.

One of our great authorities on education, Sir Joshua Fitch, has just been pointing out the great evil that would ensue if military drill were introduced into the day-schools; he shows that it is not so developing, either physically or mentally, as the Swedish or more varied drill. Certainly, then, it does not seem wise to introduce it in connection with Sunday-schools.

It is urged that military drill is only means to an end, and that it does not induce boys to desire to enter the regular army; but if the means are bad, the use of them, for however good a purpose, cannot be justified, and surely it is setting up a wrong ideal.

At a time when the military spirit is rampant, and even volunteers engage in active warfare across the sea, it is the duty of Christian educators to witness in every possible way to the principle of peace.

The kindly spirit of the young men who devote themselves to brigade work, their effort to come into friendly and living relationship with the lads, and to lead them to something nobler, is most admirable; but why should this be marred by introducing the excitement of military display, or encouraging the blind obedience of the soldier? Even regular attendance at Sunday-school and service should not be bought at such a price. Our Unitarian religion ought to encourage a higher kind of self-control and obedience by developing the conscience and will of the individual. We ought to stimulate our boys to the noble heroism of common every-day work, to life saving, not life destroying; to realise the infinite sacredness of life, so mysteriously granted, so easy to destroy, so impossible to restore. We want our boys to follow Him who came to seek and to save those who are lost; Who came that we might have life, and have it more abundantly. This is the very root of our common Christianity, and the military ideal is diametrically opposed to it.

FLORENCE HILL.

OBITUARY.

MISS ANNA MACADAM.

IN the death of Miss Anna MacAdam on Dec. 28, in the eighty-seventh year of her age, one of the few remaining links which connect old Belfast with the modern city has passed away.

Her father was John MacAdam, an oil and colour merchant residing in Donegal-street, who married a daughter of Samuel Neilson, the well-known United Irishman, and editor of the Northern Star. Another daughter married his brother, George MacAdam, and emigrated to New York, where at the age of ninety years she took part in the ceremony of opening a church erected to the memory of her ill-fated father. He had settled in New York when released from his imprisonment in Fort George, but died at Pough Keepsie in 1803. His youngest daughter married William Hancock, agent to the first Lord Lurgan. Miss Anna MacAdam had a younger sister who was married to Dr. Lakin residing near Tamworth, and a brother who was secretary of the Flax Association and Consul for Portugal, and died abroad some years ago.

In her later years she resided with the family of her cousin the late Robert S. MacAdam, the editor of the Ulster Journal of Archaeology, and recognised as one of the leading antiquaries of his time. His knowledge of languages, particularly of the Celtic, was profound. Miss MacAdam took much interest in these pursuits, and retained to the last a wonderful memory for local history. Endowed with mental powers of a high order and of extensive acquirements, she was able to recall many valuable memories of her grandfather's career, especially of his sojourn at Fort George, where his son William was taught the flute by Robert Emmett. Miss Mary McCracken, the devoted sister of Henry Joy McCracken, was one of her oldest friends.

Although in her declining years Miss MacAdam was almost blind, confined to the house and unable to participate in the busy life of the town in which she had lived so long, yet never did she utter any expression of impatience. Hers was one of those rare natures which, strong in faith, are yet particularly distinguished for the grace of humility. Her memory will long be cherished by those who had the privilege of her friendship.

THE WORK OF THE "Y." BRANCHES.

THE movement called the "Y." or "Young" Branch of the British Women's Temperance Association is too little known by the Unitarian public, although it has now assumed considerable proportions and is doing an immense deal of quiet successful work. Its birth was hailed by Temperance organisations as a step in the right direction, for it was at once realised that a society which aimed to enlist the more youthful members of our population was likely to have great influence on the future. "I shall die happy," said a well-known officer of the B.W.T.A., "now that the cause has been taken up by the young women."

The organisation, though itself juvenile, is a vigorous and healthy child, possessed of remarkable growing powers and fine lungs, for its voice is heard now with no uncertain note in many towns of the United Kingdom, while every year sees a greater space covered by its sturdy limbs. It is of the nature of things that this should be so. Girls fresh from school are not rooted in many habits and prejudices, and therefore form the best possible ground on which the society may find pasture and feed and grow. Again, many parents, though not themselves abstainers, are glad enough that their sons and daughters should start life as such, and so yield to the sweet reasonableness of the appeal that is made to them. The "Y." Branch is content to leave older people alone provided it can capture the rising generation, for the former are of an order that is passing, but the latter are the coming race.

The national work of the "Y.'s" is to support the "Bird's Nest"—i.e., the children's holiday home at Lady Henry Somerset's colony for inebriate women at Duxhurst. Here many little children from the worst slums of London enjoy a fortnight's country holiday under the care of Sister Kathleen, herself a "Y." Every "Y." branch contributes either garments or funds towards the needs of the "Bird's Nest," but, in addition to this, it has local activities of quite a different kind. The terrible spread of the drinking habit amongst women being recognised, the "Y.'s" organise meetings, social in character, at which addresses are given by leading Temperance women, and to which all the girls of the neighbourhood are invited. An increase of membership usually follows. They also meet to work for the "Nest," discuss subjects of importance to the movement, and learn to know each other and give and receive enthusiasm for their common aims.

This part of the local work is mainly, though not entirely, among educated and leisured girls, but a department which makes constant demands upon every energetic "Y." is that of the White Ribbon Bands, small societies formed in factories, clubs, Bible classes, &c., to inculcate total abstinence, and lend to hard-working and often much-tempted girls the strength that comes of union and sympathy. The "Y.'s" provide speakers to instruct these bands, and musicians for their amusement, and if they become numerous, as in large towns they frequently do, a new necessity arises within the "Y." branch which has been their mother. It is found that to supply good speakers is a very real difficulty, and some branches accordingly start a speakers' class, governed by stringent rules, for the purpose of training members to address a girls' meeting in a clear and interesting style. These classes are indirectly of great service in cultivating the general intelligence and public spirit of the "Y.'s," and it might startle some older citizens to hear the advanced views freely expressed on social questions.

The public assemblies are of a very attractive kind, and outsiders who go expecting to be bored by a dull Temperance function are agreeably surprised, while it is not exceptional for those who have hitherto been obdurate to all persuasions to join the cause at one of these gatherings, brought over by the winning grace of some young pleader from London or over seas. Occasionally one or two men beg to be admitted to the society, in which case they are received as associates, for though the masculine woman is not usually approved, the male "British woman" is always welcomed by his associates and bidden to their meetings.

The only member of this great sisterhood who needs to be named is the Hon. Mrs. Bertrand Russell, the national president. Perhaps it is from her that the "Y.'s" have caught the spirit of comradeship which marks all their dealings with one another, a spirit so manifest that no lonely girl settling in a strange place could do better than join the "Y.," when she will find a hand held out to her at once, and, should she wish it, ample opportunities for the expending of superfluous energies.

God speed the message of the white ribbon! THEODORA MILLS.

TOWARD THE LAND OF PROMISE.

COMRADES! together let us tread Life's pathway,
Hand locked in hand, and hearts together beating,
Toward the far-distant, blessed Land of Promise
Travelling steadfast!

Never a woe, but love shall try to heal it,
Never a sin, but all shall truly sorrow,
Never a joy, but all shall share its gladness
With thankful praises!

Lift from the pathway every stone of stumbling,
Warn the unwary, aid the feeble pilgrims,
Guard from all perils the tender helpless children,
Keep them from straying!

When the clouds gather and hide the goal of longing,
Sing songs of hope, recount the former visions,
Onward still press, with pure courageous purpose,
Onward—undaunted!

God is our surety that we at last shall reach it,
See on the earth the Heavenly Kingdom planted,
Justice and mercy the chosen law of nations,
God's will fulfilled!

EDITH GITTINS.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

WE keep at Christmastime the memory of the entrance of a little child into this old world so stained with faults and evils. And this year it brought to my mind a story I read so long ago that I can't remember where I found it—except that it was in a French book—and I shall have to leave out a good deal; but it is about the entrance of a child into a man's life.

He was far enough from being a good man. He was an old soldier. He had been the terror of the village as a boy. Everyone said he would come to no good, and when he drew the number which took him into the army, every one was glad, even his own family. Nobody expected him to come back, or wanted him to. In twenty-six years of fighting he had risen from the ranks to be captain. Now his time of service was over, and he came back to his native place on his pension of less than £100 a year. He did not come back out of affection to the place, but because, having served with the army in Algeria all these years, he really didn't know any other place to come to. This didn't, however, trouble the captain. He arrived one day by the diligence, and settled himself in a house on the outskirts of the town, where there was a room to let; unpacked his trunk, hung up his clothes, set his boots in the corner, brushed his clothes, and then went out to look for a café.

It was the captain's habit to spend a great deal of time at the café. It was there that he satisfied the three master passions of his heart—for tobacco, for drink, and for cards. It was thus that he passed his life; and he could have drawn a plan of all the places he had ever been stationed at—by their tobacco shops, cafés, and clubs.

He was not long in making up his mind. He settled on a neat, cheerful café at the corner of the market-place, and in a week had become one of the pillars of the establishment. He formed a circle of half-a-dozen who took their glass and had their game together, who were glad to listen to his marvellous stories, and on whom he could count for six months, at least, before they would be tired of them.

To all this there was one drawback, however. Monday was market day; and swarms of countrymen, big fellows, with loud voices and heavy whips, overran the café and made it unendurable. When the captain came about eleven for his first glass, he found his seat taken, the place full, everyone too busy to attend to him, and he would return home in a bad temper.

One Monday morning, then, he was sitting at home, being sure that the café would be crowded, and the sunshine tempted him to go down and sit on the stone bench beside the house. He was sitting there, dull, and smoking a damp cigar, when he saw, coming along the rough lane, a little girl of eight or ten, driving before her half-a-dozen geese. As the Captain looked carelessly at her, he saw she had a wooden leg.

There was nothing fatherly in the heart of the captain. He had often driven away with blows the little Arab boys who came begging. But the sight of this wooden leg touched him. He felt a real pain at the sight of the little girl, in her ragged dress, bravely running along behind her geese.

The geese turned into the poultry-yard, and the little girl was going to follow them, when the captain stopped her with the question, "Eh, little girl, what's your name?"

"Pirette, sir," she answered, looking at him with her great black eyes.

"You live in this house, then? I haven't seen you before."

"Yes; I know you though, for I sleep under the stairs, and you wake me every evening when you come home."

"Do I, my girl? Then I must walk quietly in future. How old are you?"

"Nine, sir, come All Saints' Day."

"Is the landlady here a relation of yours?"

"No, sir, I am in her service."

"And what do you get?"

"Soup, and a bed under the stairs."

"And how came you to be lame like that, my poor little one?"

"By the kick of a cow when I was five."

"Have you a father or a mother?"

The child blushed under her sun-burned skin. "I came from the Foundling Hospital," she said.

Then she passed limping into the house, and the captain heard the sound of the wooden leg on the tiles of the courtyard as she went.

"Good heavens!" he thought as he went down the street, "that's not at all the thing. For a soldier now, there's the Invalides, and money for his tobacco. But this poor girl—no, that's not at all the thing."

The captain turned back, and went upstairs to his room. It looked very shabby. The curtains were the colour of an old pipe. The fireplace was full of cigar stumps. One could write his name on the dust on the furniture. Then for want of occupation he looked over his clothes. It was a sad sight of bottomless pockets, socks full of holes, and shirts without buttons.

"I must have a servant," he said. Then he thought of the little lame girl. "That's what I'll do. I'll hire the next little room. Winter is coming on, and the little thing will freeze under the stairs. She will look after my clothes, and keep the barrack clean."

But a cloud came over the picture. He thought how far off quarter-day was, and of the long account at the café. "Not rich enough," he said to himself; "and in the meantime they are robbing me down there. The board is much too high. Who knows? I might put the little one in charge of the mess. Coffee in the morning, soup at noon, stew at evening—just like being on campaign. I know all about that. Quite the thing to try."

Going down at once he met the mistress of the house. Pirette was at work in the yard. "Does she know how to sew, to wash, to make soup?" he asked abruptly.

"Who? Pirette? Of course. She comes from an institution where they teach them to wait on themselves."

"Well—will you let me have her? I want a servant."

"If you will keep her."

"Then that's settled," and with a friendly tap on Pirette's cheek, the captain walked off delighted. Perhaps, he thought, he would have to give up some glasses of beer, and be cautious in playing at cards. But that was nothing.

But the captain had not foreseen all the consequences of his good action. To give up his morning glass had been indeed enough to provide for the modest expense of keeping Pirette. But how many more reforms were wanted. For the little girl was so grateful, and wanted to show it by her zeal. The furniture was dusted, the fireplace cleaned, the floor scrubbed. And when the captain came home the nice smell of the soup, the clean plates on the coarse white cloth, the bunch of flowers, were enough to give him an appetite. And then Pirette confided to him that she wanted andirons for the fireplace, and a mould to bake the little cakes in she knew how to make.

And the captain promised to think of it, and the very next morning replaced his choice cigar by a halfpenny one, and went without his third glass of beer, and his second of chartreuse.

Certainly the struggle was long, it was hard. Often when the hour came for the glass which he denied himself for Pirette's sake, thirst seemed to seize him by the throat. But he almost always returned home, and as he loved the little girl the more for every sacrifice he made for her, he embraced her more fondly every day. She was no longer his servant. Once when she stood waiting on him at table so respectful and calling him "sir," he couldn't stand it, but taking her by the two hands, said, "First kiss me, and then sit down, and call me 'father.'"

And so for his old vices he substituted a new affection. He has already taught Pirette to read and write. His only uneasiness is in thinking that he is growing old, and has nothing to leave his adopted child. He wants to give up his tobacco, to save something out of his slender income, to buy a little stock of fancy goods, that, when he is gone, his little girl may live somewhere a safe and quiet life, hanging up in the little back parlour behind the shop the old cross of the Legion of Honour, her souvenir of the captain.

And that is how it came about. Loving the little girl has saved the man from an ignominious old age.

There is nothing sensational in this story. It is going on all the time. People made better and happier by just loving. They do not always know this is God's life. But it is. Always "Love is of God." And "God so loved the world that He sent His Son."

C. A. F.

THAT which we are we shall teach, not voluntarily, but involuntarily. Thoughts come into our minds by avenues which we never left open, and thoughts go out of our minds through avenues which we never voluntarily opened. Character teaches over our head. The infallible index of true progress is found in the tone the man takes. Neither his age, nor his breeding, nor company, nor books, nor actions, nor talents, nor all together, can hinder him from being deferential to a higher spirit than his own. If he have not found his home in God, his manners, his forms of speech, the turn of his sentences, the build, shall I say, of all his opinions, will involuntarily confess it, let him brave it out how he will.—Emerson.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, JANUARY 12, 1901.

A MEMORY : AN INSPIRATION.

YESTERDAY, January 11, was an anniversary which brings with it a very sacred memory, for last year in the evening of that day JAMES MARTINEAU quietly fell asleep. His completed life was then given to us, not to be honoured merely with passing words of tribute and outward tokens of reverence and gratitude, but to remain a possession and an inspiration, to quicken our own inward life, to lift up our thoughts to a loftier ideal, to confirm us in allegiance to the Highest, to draw us more completely into the holiest communion with the Unseen.

We remember now what those first days were to us, when the burden of his extreme age had been gently laid down, when we had looked for the last time on his beloved face, when the grasp of his hand still seemed to linger in ours, and the tender light of a gracious benediction, which shone in no other human face of our time, passed, not into the silent shadows, but into the fuller glory of the heavenly day. The outward presence was gone, but the hidden companionship remained, with a new richness of understanding and overflowing love and reverence and thankfulness. He would not suffer us to be downcast or to give way to any faithless discouragement, as though we were left desolate, but still, with silent penetrating power, he ministered to us, as he had done throughout our lives and in the lives of those who were before us, as a veritable prophet of GOD, inspirer of faith and courage, the strong vindicator of divinest truth, yet with pure and lowly spirit opening to us the way of childlike trust and heavenly vision.

And now, a year after, we realise with yet profounder thankfulness what we possess in the teachings of this man, and most of all in the inspiration of his life, the memory of his affection, and the hidden companionship which would lift us above all ignoble things in heavenward aspiration. He spoke to us of old of "the Communion of Saints," and still he speaks, of how in the hour of worship we are drawn together, "by a common quest of some holy spirit to penetrate and purify our life ; by a common desire to quit its hot and level dust, and from its upland slopes of contemplation inhale the serenity of GOD ; by the secret sadness of sin, that can delay its confessions and bear its earthliness no more ; by the deep though dim consciousness, that the passing weeks do not leave us where they find us, but plant us within nearer distance, and give us a more intimate view, of that fathomless eternity, wherein so many dear and mortal things have dropped from our imploring eyes. It is no wonder that in meditations solemn as these we love and seek each other's sympathy."

Then he pictures how in worship we are united to a greater company and by a chain of closest sympathy with past generations. We repeat their words of piety, we sing their songs of trust and gladness and thanksgiving or of sorrowful submission, and find in their deep experience the truest interpretation of our own.

And these are not merely the accents of the past, but the anthem of the sainted dead—the strains of immortals that look back upon their toils, and behold us singing their songs of sadness here, while they have already learned the melodies of everlasting joy. Blessed communion of earth with heaven ! making us truly one family, below, above ; and rendering us fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the very household of God !

And soon we, too, shall drop the note of earthly aspiration, and join that upper anthem of diviner love. The hour cometh, when we shall cease the mournful cry with which earth must ever pray to Heaven, and grief ask pity to its tears, and the tempted call for help in the crisis of danger, and the labouring will implore a freshened strength. Exiles as yet from the spirit of unanxious joy, we catch but the echoes of that heavenly peace, and yield response but faint and low. Yet even now the free heart of the happy and triumphant shall be ours, in proportion as we are true to the condition of faithful service, which alone can make us one with them. The communion of saints brings to us their conflict first, their blessings afterwards ; those who will not with much patience strive with the evil, can have no dear fellowship with the good ; we must weep their tears, ere we can win their peace. This sorrowful condition once accepted, the sympathies of Heaven are not slow to arise within the soul : it is the tension of sacred toil, that on the touch of every breath of life brings music from the chords of love. And then the tone that here sinks in the silence of death, shall there swell into an immortal's fuller praise. We shall leave it to others to take up the supplicating strain ; shall join the emancipated brotherhood of the departed ; and in our turn look down on the outstretched hands of our children, waiting our welcome and embrace. O ! may the Great Father, in His own fit time, unite in one the parted family of Heaven and earth !

Thus he still speaks to us, and of every aspect of our life, with its strenuous duty, the simplicity of its trust, the glory of its aspirations, the joy of its undying affections. In this time of sore need, of national stress and perplexity, in the darkening of true ideals, would that his prayers could touch and uplift every heart ! Are there words in the treasury of English devotion nobler or more direct than in this familiar prayer of his, which might well find an abiding place in the liturgy of our nation ?

Almighty Lord, of whose righteous will all things are, and were created ; who liftest the islands out of the deep, and preparest not in vain the habitable world ; thou hast gathered our people into a great nation, and sent them to sow beside all waters, and multiply sure dwellings on the earth. Deepen the root of our life in everlasting righteousness ; and let not the crown of our pride be as a fading flower. Make us equal to our high trusts ; reverent in the use of freedom, just in the exercise of power, generous in the protection of weakness. With all thy blessings bless thy servant Victoria, our Queen ; with all the members of the Royal House. Fill her heart and theirs with such loyalty to thee, that her people may be exalted by their loyalty to her. To our Legislators and Counsellors give insight and faithfulness, that our laws may clearly speak the right, and our Judges purely interpret it. Let it be known among us how thou hatest robbery for burnt offering ; that the gains of industry may be all upright, and the use of wealth considerate. May wisdom and knowledge be the stability of our times ; and our deepest trust be in thee, the Lord of nations and the King of kings.

Amen.

In silent memory we recall the living tones of a wonderful voice. With unspeakable thankfulness we remember that the heart out of which it spoke was ours, and that its affection remains with us, still to kindle us to nobler life, to bid us also aspire to that holier communion in which his life is now "hid with CHRIST in GOD."

IN MEMORIAM : JANUARY 11, 1900.

DR. MARTINEAU.

UNTO the earth
Whence sprang life's noblest men,
Give back her own :
Up to the heavens
In mystic silent flight
The soul has flown.

The mind has left
Its garnered treasures free
To bless mankind :
And nobler tasks
Not yet to mortals known
The soul will find.

Into the Light,
Sad hearts in dimness groping
He led on high,
Thro' heaven-born earth
And earth's grand phantasies
To Immortality.

H. EMILY RAWLINS.

AT THE DAWN OF A CENTURY.

XIII.

THE twentieth century—how much we all expect from it! The unexplored possibilities of a new age—what an appeal they make to our imagination and our trust! Our first necessity for confronting them is courage. We have been overborne of late with a sense of the immense complexity of modern life; its currents and influences move in a thousand ways beyond our reach; we shrink from the labour of mastering the details on which effective action must be based; we are laden with tasks which seem too great for our insight and our will. Such tasks can only be met successfully with strength and joy; despondency means weakness and weakness misery; and the roots of strength and joy—it is an old story—lie in faith and hope and love.

In the field of religion what do we look for, what do we want? Among our own churches, a quickened life; a more vivid sympathy with all fresh endeavour after things true and pure, lovely and of good report; a better understanding of each other's aims; more strenuousness against the spirit of the world alike in our prayer and our work. On the institutional side, that part of the century which most of us will live to see will hardly bring extensive change. Our relations to the other churches, and especially to the Church of England, will probably remain unaltered. The question of Disestablishment is postponed indefinitely; the hope of any kind of external federation among the churches is remoter still. All the more reason, then, that we should be faithful to our own trusts, and steadfastly maintain our own principles of truthfulness and freedom as the essential foundation of worship. But in doing so, have we not need of a greater elasticity; ought we not to give a warmer welcome to those who seek new modes of expression for the ancient pieties; do we not too much insist that liberty shall be carefully guarded by tradition?

This will become of more and more importance as the great intellectual movement, which has already produced such marked results, extends more and more widely. The churches that are founded on particular types of historical religion are necessarily exposed to the severest shocks. The labour of Biblical criticism must go on, but in due time its significance will be realised, and then its effect on religion (though not its interest for history) will be exhausted, and it will no longer be pursued with the passionate eagerness of the present day. On the Old Testament the battle has been won; there is a practical agreement on the leading results. One generation has sufficed in this country to grasp the issue for the religion of Israel; it will take at least three to attain the same position with respect to the origins of Christianity; and even when a common understanding has been reached about the facts, diversities of interpretation will still be inevitable. Meantime another great force will be at work. The field of science is not limited like that of Biblical criticism. The twentieth century will carry forward to new developments the discoveries and achievements of the nineteenth. We can hardly expect so great a rush of fresh ideas as our fathers witnessed fifty years ago, when the foundations of biology were being laid. But the methods of science will be applied in new fields, and they will be extended from nature to man.

The science of anthropology is at present only in its infancy; its founders have conceived its scope too narrowly; it will only fulfil its aim when it brings all human energies and activities within its view, and among them morals and religion must take the foremost place. As these modes of thought spread, there is likely to be more and more dissatisfaction with the historical theologies; yet the attitude of the best minds towards the universe, on the one side, and the noblest testimonies of man's faith and aspiration, on the other, can never cease to be essentially religious. Will it be possible to give to this spirit any organised expression? That will be the duty of the Church of the future, which must assimilate the new knowledge, and lay deep within it the foundations of faith.

Another task, more complicated, far-reaching, difficult, remains. It may be defined as the socialising of religion. We are coming to understand that religion is something more than the solitary relation of the soul and God. No man can be isolated from his brother men, and the church, which aspires to be the great instrument for realising the prayer "Thy kingdom come," can never be indifferent to the needs and duties of actual life. Politically, this is organised for us by the great democratic principles of our time. What will it be on the moral and religious side? In spite of grievous checks during the last decade, in face of a situation full of immediate peril, I cannot but believe that we shall return—it may be only through much tribulation—to a soberer and saner mood. The movement among the churches summed up in the phrase "back to Jesus" cannot do everything at once; and on its social side it can do little or nothing without the economic and political sciences. In the last century great aims have been formulated, great conceptions have been launched, great humanitarian impulses have swept through men's minds, great causes—education, peace, temperance, purity (and how many more)—have defined their objects, and taken the first steps towards their attainment. These will go forwards; they will learn their relations to one another as partial expressions of the fundamental idea of Jesus that social life on earth should be the beginning of the eternal education of mankind as sons of God. The nineteenth century has rediscovered the meaning of Christianity. It will be the duty of the twentieth to apply it.

Oxford. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.

XIV.

To write of the thoughts wherewith one enters the year 1901 is a very difficult task, and one which I should not attempt except under the pressure of a kind invitation from you. Nor is it easy, in these bewildering times, to pick out the questions which are really uppermost in one's mind. But I think the following four occur most frequently to me in respect of our interests as we stand on the threshold of the century:—

1. While Dr. Martineau was living among us, and still more when he was engaged in active teaching, there was a general feeling that the movement in which we are engaged had a sufficient intellectual support. Our ministry had the consciousness of a philosophical justification, and the teaching of our churches was thoughtfully approximate to the theology of Dr. Martineau. Of late I think these conditions have changed. It is far less easy to define the intellectual tendencies of our body than it was ten years ago. Does the new condition represent thoughtful and legitimate difference? or is it confusion of mind?

2. Old conceptions of God and His dealings with us have undoubtedly broken up. Is it true, however, that men have gained thereby a fuller idea of God and a deeper conviction that He deals with men?

3. The attack of science on religion is much less marked than it was. Does this mean that materialism has given way to a spiritual view of the universe? When scientific men spent so much energy in assailing the spiritual view they at least showed their sense of the importance of that view. Is the change, then, due to the fact that science has come over to our side, or is it that scientific men have merely transferred the interest they once showed in religion to practical problems of the bread-and-butter of life?

4. The effects of the war and the concurrent commercial prosperity on the morale of the nation? L. P. JACKS.

Birmingham.

XV.

YOU ask for some word "as to what we ought to care most about and to try for." I say, with no hesitation: The revival—one might say, the resurrection—of Home, Home life, Home influence, Home care. Political clubs, political associations of women, pleasure-seeking, and the peculiar arrangements by which parents are often dependent on their children, are fast killing Home life in the manufacturing districts of England. F. E. MILLSON.

Halifax.

XVI.

THE Burden of the Twentieth Century. Is there no prophet of the Eternal among us who can see and may declare it? Or is none ever wiser about the future than was he who answered the messengers of Edom twenty-five hundred years ago—"The morning comes and also the night"? Troubles end and troubles begin again, the darkest night ends in dawn, and the brightest day in darkness. Little profits the oracle to satisfy curiosity or quicken hope; yet it affords a firm foundation to such few as had rather know the worst than be deceived by smooth assurances. Could any one who loves his kind comprehend at once all the intolerable burden of woe which the new century is laden with, surely his heart were broken. How long, O Lord? how long? were his cry; when shall time end and the load of human misery be complete? But through all the intervening centuries rings the voice of the prophet of old and in each one of them has his oracle been approved. Weal and woe are the mingled lot of man; night treads upon the heels of morning, but morning returns after every night. Nay, there were no mornings did not night intervene. The glory were gone out of heaven did the sun glare for ever from the zenith and men would seek the twilight on the verge of the nether world as a sweet relief. The capacity for suffering is the price of higher life, animal's or man's, and we must suffer if we would live. Hail, then, new century, hundred summers, hundred frosts, hail to thee with thy burden which the slow years unload, and deal out good and evil to the sons of men! Through multiplied experiences our race is taught, and every century has its mission, till the reckoning of the years has ceased for us, and past and present and future are seen in the light of Eternity, and Man is made perfect in God.

Leeds. CHARLES HARGROVE.

XVII.

THE opening of a new century, while it calls to our remembrance the achievements and blessings of the past, irresistibly summons us to prepare for the making of the future. The making of the future! Yes, that is the duty assigned by God to man as he enters the twentieth century. The lessons of the past have been poorly understood if they have not taught us that upon the ideals men frame, the principles they hold, the faith they cherish, the life they live, the future of the world largely depends. In the moral and religious spheres the wheels of progress have moved more slowly towards the end of the century than some of us had dreamed would be the case twenty-five years ago. The triumph of truth and justice, of peace and love, is still "a far-off divine event"; but towards it the world has moved. To hasten, or, at least, to ensure the continuance of that movement, and, above all, to touch the life of man, here and now, with the truth and love which enlarge his ideals, quicken his thinking, ennoble his character, and deepen his reverence and trust—this is the high task which lies before the ethical and religious teacher. If we Unitarians are to take any strong and helpful part in this work we shall best equip ourselves, as it appears to me, not by hankering after an impracticable church polity, Catholic or otherwise; not by taking ourselves too seriously, and so becoming boastful or narrow; not by belittling ourselves or frittering ourselves away in small talk, and so losing all enthusiasm and largeness of outlook; but by settling down to the work that we are fitted to perform—the work that lies all around us waiting to be done—the work of ministering, as opportunity offers, to the varying needs of men, so that some few doubting, struggling, tempted souls may be guided to the springs whence flow the Divine truth and love which are for the inspiration of man's thought and life and for the healing of the nations. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

London.

XVIII.

THE Unitarians of the United States of America made an effort to bring together the representatives of Unitarianism and liberal thinking from all over the world. They succeeded to the full satisfaction of all interested in such movements. The spirit of unity was manifested in all their doings and sayings. The enthusiasm for our modern principles was most sincere, and we hope it will bring fruits abundantly in the future. The olden past met there and shook hands with present modern life. The names of forty-two eminent Unitarians were inscribed in gold, and the noble light of electricity made the faces of 5,000 men and women shine in full glory. As a grand and noble satisfaction for the long sufferings of the past, the first Unitarian Bishop, Francis David, was placed at the head of the whole. I brought the banner on which his name was inscribed home with me, and hope there will come a time when all Unitarians and liberal thinkers shall unite under this banner, which represents faithfulness to truth and enlightment, even unto death.

GEORGE BOROS.

Kolozsvár, Hungary.

XIX.

WHILE bidding farewell to the only century we have so far known, I want to ask my Welsh friends whether we cannot unite upon some scheme to celebrate the incoming of the new century? Older churches are making supreme efforts, aiming at funds of hundreds and thousands, and some even of a million! How I should rejoice to see a Welsh Unitarian Fund of £3,000. I could warrant its being put to only good use—the liquidation of our chapel debts receiving the first consideration. Details need not be added for the present. But to start, I would suggest that each church should take the matter unitedly, heartily, and try to make the effort a record one in its history. Let a minute-book be obtained where there is not one already, and let the name of each man, woman, and child go into it, together with the amount of his or her subscription. I will venture to say that in generations to come this will turn out to be the most interesting document connected with the church.

Aberdare, S. Wales. R. J. JONES.

XX.

THE new time will do Christian men and Christian churches the best possible service if it brings us to the wisdom of putting into our expressions of faith just the few great yet simple things that have come home to the heart of us, and that we do verily believe. What passes for belief among us too often lies loose on the surface of our minds, and has nothing whatever to do with the things we are surest about, the things we are living by and living for. It is these things, rather, that we want to set out in the open, and understand, and honour. What things? Such things as these, I take it, that in spite of all our mistakes and our too hasty assumptions of knowledge, the religious interpretation of the world and of our life proves to be the only right and true one; that we are in touch with reality when the awe of God falls upon us and we know that we are ever in His presence; that prayer is not aspiration merely, it is communion; that good is good by something other than human agreement, and something more than earthly consecration; that we are right in reading, as the Creator's will with us, the demands of the best we know, whether we learn it from without or it spring up within; that we dare to trust the All-good, even when the last darkness clouds our eyes; and that it is from the teacher of Nazareth that we have gained our grandest and holiest thought of God, and our wisest and most helpful thought of duty. These are the things which, as I think, the world does at least believe and trust in. We believe them, as we believe that fire will burn us and water will drown us. And what we chiefly need—may the new time bring it!—as to hear these things lifted up to honour is the heart-faith of good men everywhere.

Belfast. DOUGLAS WALMSLEY.

YORKSHIRE UNITARIANS AND THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

WE Yorkshire Unitarians are gladdened and encouraged by the numbers assembled, and the spiritual helpfulness of the meetings, at our New Century gathering at Leeds on New Year's Day. If the Forward Movement fulfils the promise of this beginning—and there is a resolute intention amongst us that it shall—the success of the Yorkshire Free Churches in this new epoch will dwarf into insignificance their measure of success in the past. The great difficulty of collecting the congregations of this county into one place can hardly be realised by a Londoner, or a Manchester or Birmingham man. The centre of gravity is in Leeds. A visit from Hull to Leeds costs four hours and eighty-seven pence; several churches are in as bad, some in much worse a plight; and many of these are small and poor. As secretary of the Forward Movement I was filled with misgiving, when I remembered how many would be kept away from our reunion by these permanent causes, how many by the urgent demands of business at the New Year, by family gatherings, or by the inclement season. But the churches answered nobly to our appeal. Thirty friends went with me from Hull, and I recognised representatives from every congregation which I know. Mill Hill Chapel and the Priestley Hall are large enough to make large gatherings look small; but they could not so affect the numbers who came together that day. More took part in the Communion service than I have seen at such a service before. The Conference was the greatest meeting of Unitarians which has ever been seen for many a day in Yorkshire.

The service of Consecration was conducted by Mr. Ellis and myself. In the presence of God, before whom the ages stand marshalled for ever, we men and women whose times are in His hand dedicated ourselves anew to His service. The Spirit of truth, of joy, of love, of patience in duty, involved us all. By sane, united, continuous effort may we fulfil the import of our prayer.

Mr. Hargrove's sermon was no word of easy cheer. We were not bidden to go forward with sanguine hopes. A stern encouragement was offered us; it is a grander thing, if so must be, to perish in the wilderness than to seek again the fleshpots and the bondage of Egypt. He showed us the pillar of cloud; of the pillar of fire he did not speak. To some strong souls, doubtless, such heartening is enough; but there are other, not unlovely spirits, in whose eyes the wilderness blossoms as the rose because God is with them there; for them the manna falls and the rock becomes a well. It seems hard to tell them, in eloquent words which will be heard, that the desert is sandy and long, and Moab and Ammon await beyond. It seems hard: perhaps it is salutary.

> Serene will be our days and bright,
> And happy will our nature be,
> When love is an unerring light
> And joy its own security.

And they a blissful course may hold
Even now, who, not unwisely bold,
Live in the spirit of this creed;
Yet seek thy firm support, according to their need.

Nothing could have been better found than Mr. Manning's Communion Address. He spoke about the most pathetic incident in history, so feelingly and simply that the spirit of Christ was revealed to us in a new freshness of beauty; and the world's need of it became a more poignant incentive. Mr. Ceredig Jones gave to the service a note of solemn joy.

The most notable thing of the Conference, next to the number of people present, was the fact that the resolutions were passed without dissent. These two circumstances are enough to disprove the charge of apathy, which was, indeed, disproved by the round of applause that greeted the word. But if not apathetic, our people are still far from realising the great demands which their faith makes upon all their powers, their brain and purse, as well as their heart. Perhaps I shall find this charge, too, disproved when I see the Treasurer; I hope he will tell me the stipend of the minister-at-large is already assured for a term of years, and the money for the March mission, with a generous margin, lies ready in the bank. For this, to the wealth of Yorkshire Unitarians, is a very little thing.

The report which I append, taken from the Leeds Mercury and the Yorkshire Post is faithful, and (if one allows for the usual disdain of clerical utterances, which affects the proportion) should convey a just impression of a very remarkable meeting. In the minds of many who took part in this gathering, it marks a new beginning, not merely in the calendar, but in the life of those who assembled.

E. W. LUMMIS.

WORK IN THE NEW CENTURY.

At the afternoon Conference, in the Priestley Hall, on the subject of the work of Unitarians in the Twentieth Century, the chair was occupied by Mr. GROSVENOR TALBOT, of Leeds (chairman of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union).

The CHAIRMAN alluded to the formation of the Union, and said they desired to take a still further step forward and infuse new life and energy into that institution, which was by no means worn out. A certain amount of work had been done, and an important amount of work in clearing the ground for any forward work which they desired. The greater part of the century which had just closed was of necessity a period of fierce controversy between Unitarianism and other forms of faith. They had to establish even their right to be called Christians, and they also had to destroy many doctrines which they believed to be absolutely contrary to the spirit of Christianity, and had to teach what their own doctrines were, so that people should know where Unitarians stood. That work they had endeavoured to do, so far as their means allowed them, and much of it had been accomplished. They believed that in their religion they ought to have perfect sincerity, and they did not like the idea that doctrines should be preached and taught which were not absolutely believed by the persons professing them. Controversies now were more subtle, but less stormy, and, therefore, they would not see in the future those controversial works done by their ministers, and even by their laymen, which they saw previously. But there was no reason, because the century closed with the lessening of controversy, why they should not think that there was a great work for them to do. He felt certain that progress would not be made by controversy, but it would have to be by the people who professed Christianity bringing it into their lives and hearts and conduct one towards another. If that was done, then they would be able to bring Christianity to the people, but not till then could they do anything. They wanted, if possible, to enlarge the borders of their teaching, they should like to make all their churches more efficient, they wanted that isolated churches should feel that they were bound to larger and more wealthy and prosperous congregations. They should like to feel that districts which knew no Unitarianism should have it brought to them, and for that purpose they wanted assistance in many ways. They desired to appoint a minister with no fixed place of work, who might be a connecting link between congregations, and work where he was most wanted. They could strengthen their congregations by appointing more ministers. Not that he deprecated the admirable work of laymen, but if they had more ministers their laymen could give their work elsewhere, and possibly open missions in various districts tentatively. Many people were Unitarians, but could not go to a Unitarian church because there was none within reach of them. He thought they ought to try to give them religious homes if they possibly could, and allow no part of the county to be so far from a Unitarian church or chapel that they could not get there occasionally. It was with the idea of doing something worthy of the old Unitarian cause that they were there to-day.

Sir JAMES KITSON, Bart, M.P., said that perhaps it was appropriate that, as chairman of the trustees of Mill-hill Chapel and schools, he should welcome those who had come from a distance, and say how glad they were to be encouraged in their efforts by their presence, and also how it would rejoice them if they could be of service to others at a distance who were not so favourably placed as they were in that central position of Leeds. They were very proud of Mill-hill Chapel, and of their position in the city, and he thought they could see that they had good reason to be, when they could bring such an array of names and examples worthy to be followed, spreading over the whole of the past century. Referring to the Forward Movement, he said that they wished to advance the Unitarian cause not for the sake of making people Unitarians, but for the sake of the truth which they believed they held, and which it was their duty to try to extend. He recalled that it was owing to the effect produced by the controversial lectures of the Rev. Charles Wicksteed that his father, who was then a member of the Established Church, was led to become a Unitarian, and that he (Sir James) had the happiness to be associated with the cause. He rejoiced that he was not bound to pronounce a creed. "I am not vain enough to imagine that the truth is my own," he said; "I am not foolish enough to imagine that I know the mystery of all these things." He admitted that on certain subjects his views had been changing from year to year, and said it would have been a terrible thing if fifty years ago he had declared that he believed to be absolutely true views which he now knew were merely founded on vain imaginings. "And so it is," he went on, "that as a Unitarian I am glad to be a member of the Church which does not bind me to a creed, but which binds me to the worship of Almighty God, with Jesus Christ as my teacher and my guide."

The CHAIRMAN read a letter received from Mr. H. J. Morton, Scarborough, expressing sympathy with the Forward Movement, and enclosing £20.

The Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES moved the following resolution:—

That in the opinion of this meeting it is desirable to appoint a minister at large, or a missionary agent, for the Yorkshire district.

He said a "minister at large" meant a minister who might have one small church under his jurisdiction, but who was engaged to spread the principles which were dear to them in districts where their views were not now represented. During the past century a great many towns had sprung up in different districts in Yorkshire, in which the Unitarian cause was not represented at all at the present time, and as instances he mentioned Airedale and Spen Valley. If they valued their faith it was their duty to bring it before the people of those districts, and do all in their power to establish permanent churches there. To support a minister at large would require from £300 to £350 a year, and he felt sure that if the matter were brought before the people they would have no financial difficulty whatever.

The resolution was seconded by the Rev. H. RAWLINGS, of York, supported by Mr. ARNOLD LUPTON, and unanimously adopted.

The Rev. J. E. MANNING (Sheffield) moved the next resolution as follows:—

We, the representatives of the Unitarian Churches of Yorkshire, desire to express our grateful acknowledgment of the great services done by the Yorkshire Unitarian Union during the last eighty-five years in upholding the truths and principles of Unitarian Christianity in Yorkshire. We wish to see its work extended, and its means of usefulness multiplied. We are of opinion that the opening of the new century affords a unique opportunity of making a united effort to bring the principles and objects of our faith closer to the minds and lives of people outside our communion. We therefore agree that a series of services be organised under the auspices of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, to be held in the month of March, 1901, in connection with all our churches throughout the county, and also, where practicable, in districts in which hitherto no services in connection with the Union have been held. And we hereby pledge ourselves to do all we can to carry out any well-considered scheme recommended by the Union with this end in view.

He remarked that one great object they had was to awaken the sympathy of their people, and, if possible, take away their apathy. If they were only earnest in their work, and would take up fresh work, he felt persuaded that there was nothing to prevent their cause going forward.

The Rev. E. W. LUMMIS (Hull) seconded, and the Revs. W. H. EASTLAKE (Idle) and W. MELLOR (Huddersfield) supported the resolution, which was agreed to.

The Rev. C. HARGROVE said there were three things which they wanted—first, the deepening of the spiritual life among themselves; second, that they should extend the light of the truth that they had amongst others, and especially win into active communion with them those throughout the country who really sympathised with their views; and, third, the bringing of their churches into closer communion. He moved that it be a recommendation to the committee to consider a plan for a Yorkshire Unitarian calendar or record, to be published monthly, and to which each church should subscribe for the number of copies that its members would be likely to take. As to the second point he said they did not wish to take people away from other churches, but where there were those who were in doubt or dissatisfied, Unitarians offered them a faith in which they believed they would find satisfaction.

The Rev. C. H. COOKE (Holbeck) seconded, and the resolution was adopted.

On the motion of the Rev. A. CHALMERS (Wakefield), seconded by Mr. D. WILSON (Hull), the friends at Mill-hill were thanked for their hospitality, and on the suggestion of the Chairman a vote of thanks was passed to the ministers who took part in the service.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

WE are entering the new century hopefully, and believing that opportunities of growth and development are ahead of us. We are never quite satisfied with the results of our efforts to strengthen and extend our congregational life—it would probably be a bad sign if we were; and yet we are encouraged by what has been achieved in the face of difficulties which are more or less inseparable from such a community as ours. During the past year we opened new churches at Urmston, Bradford, and Heaton Moor, and a very commodious and handsome new school at Gorton. Building operations are already so far advanced that it is perfectly safe to say that during this year new churches will be opened at Chorlton and Moss-side, and a new school at Blackley. This all indicates life and hope; certainly not decay and despair. Unfortunately, we now sadly miss a force and influence which were conspicuous in our Manchester Unitarianism up to a few years ago. Mr. James R. Beard has never recovered health and strength sufficient to enable him to take up once more the work in which he was so signally successful; and we are now more than ever in need of that inspiring example of unselfish and persistent work which characterised his leadership. We have good men and true amongst us; men whose counsel we highly value; but we have not got a leader, such as we had in Mr. Beard. He had the confidence of us all; he was full of enthusiasm and could magically convey his enthusiasm to others; and his leadership, though unassuming, was potent, for we were all willing to give our allegiance. It is no use denying the fact that thus far there seems to be no one amongst us quite able in all respects to pick up the reins of leadership which Mr. Beard once so dexterously held. We are doing our best under the circumstances; we are "still achieving, still pursuing"; but we are lacking in just this one man's genius (for it was genius) for engineering an Association which, like ours, is compounded of elements not altogether uniform, and which needs a commanding personality at its head. We all hope that Mr. Beard may yet be completely restored to health, and lead us on to further victories.

In my last letter I hinted that our Association was engaging in a special scheme of work for this winter. It asked all the incorporated churches how it could best help them to improve their conditions, and offered to arrange mission services and lectures where they were felt to meet the case. As a result of this, forty services were arranged for last November, seven in public halls and thirty-three in our own churches. Twelve of our ablest ministers, up and down the country, most generously accepted our invitation to come and help us in this work. Seventeen of the services were held on Sundays, and twenty-three on week-evenings. There was a total attendance of 5,820, which gives an average attendance of 190·5. Although all unnecessary expenditure was avoided there was no niggardliness in connection with the advertising, and the B. and F. Association sent us a bountiful supply of literature. Most gratifying and encouraging reports have been received from the churches concerned. We have not converted the community and induced it to come in and overflow our buildings; but in this we are not disappointed, for we were not foolish enough to expect it. There is no single instance in which it has not been felt that a great deal of good has been done. The organisation and effort within each church, requisite for the house to house visitation, by way of extending invitation to the services and distributing handbills and literature, have aroused a wonderful interest in most cases, and made both young and old feel that there is something which they can and ought to do in the cause of religion and truth. In nearly every case the congregations have been numerically larger since the special services, and strangers are coming in encouragingly. During February the Association is arranging for twenty-eight special services at six other of the district churches, of which fifteen will be on Sundays and thirteen on week-evenings, and all will be held in our own church buildings. The same system of house to house visitation is being adopted, and we are hoping for an equally good result to that achieved by the November effort.

Of course, we want more money. Nothing can be done without that. It largely fixes the limits of our work; and consequently there is little prospect of our opening up any new ground in the immediate future.

Since I last reported our ministerial changes, the Rev. John Harrison has settled at Middleton, and the Rev. Ambrose Bennett, M.A., has settled at Monton. We have lost the services of the Rev. P. M. Higginson, M.A., though we hope only for a time. He has gone abroad for the benefit of his health, and we are looking forward to his return with his strength restored, intent upon again settling in our midst, and renewing his labours on behalf of our common cause.

Six weeks ago the new School-church at Heaton Moor was formally opened, the Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., preaching the dedicatory sermon. A good congregation assembled in the afternoon, and a successful public meeting was held in the evening. It is a capital building for its purpose; and the adjoining plot of land has been acquired for the time when need may arise for extension of premises, when a new church can be erected, and the present building be used exclusively as a school.

Both Sale and Longsight are without ministers. These two churches have somehow or other "hung fire," and nobody knows exactly why. More eligible buildings it would be difficult to find; they are new and beautifully decorated, and are noted for their excellent music. They are situated in the midst of growing populations; earnest, enthusiastic workers are amongst their members, and yet their keenest supporters are bound to confess that their condition is dissappointing. The opportunity at each place seems to be unique. Perhaps at some early date just the right combination of circumstances may arise which can bring about a real and lasting prosperity.

The Domestic Mission at Renshaw-street is suffering a double loss. Mr. E. J. Russell, B.Sc., its able secretary, has removed South, and we can scarcely expect easily to find another with all his qualifications. He did an enormous amount of work about the Mission; nothing came amiss to him; and the attachment which the very little children had for him reminded one of the Pied Piper. Unfortunately for the Mission the Rev. S. H. Street, B.A., is also removing in April next, and taking up fresh work as resident minister at Great Hucklow and Bradwell. It will be a serious and difficult task adequately to fill the void thus created; and yet the splendid work capable of being done in the district of Renshaw-street ought to attract earnest workers who yearn to do something towards ameliorating the squalid conditions which are characteristic of the lives of so many of their less fortunate brethren.

I understand that the future of Strangeways Church is practically decided upon. It is being recognised by its members that it is in the wrong place; that the character of the neighbourhood has so radically changed as to render futile any effort to build up a congregation out of the population immediately surrounding it. There is a sanguine hope that if only a church could be erected in another part of Broughton, where the newer population is advancing with rapid strides, much greater good could be done, and the needs of a larger number of people could be met. Very handsome promises have already been made to a building fund, and it is expected that a considerable sum can be obtained for the present church. Anyhow, the spirit of enterprise is working like leaven throughout the congregation, and at any time we may hear that the Strangeways leaders have matured and launched a building scheme. They have stuck together remarkably well through thick and thin, and I am sure all the neighbouring churches will sympathise with them in their laudable effort, and wish them God-speed.

Oldham-road starts the new century free from debt. For years, indeed, ever since the present church was opened, the congregation has been burdened with a mortgage or some other sort of pecuniary obligation which made all their effort like "drawing nectar in a sieve." Recently, however, a very laudable spirit has been stirring the folk there, and before the end of the year they made a supreme effort by means of a subscription list and a bazaar, to clear off a final debt of £225, and their effort was crowned with success.

As usual there are other rumours in the air; and no doubt the new century will not be allowed to advance very far before other schemes of extension, &c., will be launched, for a very good feature about churches is that they are never satisfied, and the more they have the more they want.

It seems to me that our great need in the coming days is more cohesion between the churches, and a more unselfish working for their common advancement. A most serious lesson can be drawn in this connection from our past history; but as I have already encroached upon a considerable amount of your space, I will express my views on this subject in a special letter. Here, finally, let me say that we enter the Twentieth Century hopefully, and determined to enter upon its duties with higher aims and stronger resolves, feeling assured that the time must come when our principles will commend themselves to thoughtful men, and existing prejudices will be beaten down, and our churches everywhere will be better filled.

CHARLES ROPER.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Aberdare: Highland-place.—On Thursday week the Christmas treat and prize-giving took place. After tea the chair was taken by Mr. J. W. McEwen, and the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Pritchard Evans, of Duffryn Ffrwd. Two scholars who had not been absent throughout the year received special prizes. The Rev. E. R. Hughes, of Devonport, who was present, gave an encouraging address to his old friends, and a vote of thanks to Mrs. Evans was proposed by the Rev. J. J. George. Subsequently a beautiful bracelet was presented to Miss George in recognition of her gratuitous services as organist since the re-opening of the church.

Ainsworth.—The congregational party was held on Jan. 2, and the children's party on the following Saturday, the Rev. M. R. Scott presiding on both occasions.

Birmingham: Hurst-street Mission.—Special services were held morning, afternoon and evening on Sundays, Dec. 23, Dec. 30 and Jan. 6, the whole of the nine services being largely attended, the chapel in the majority of instances being quite filled. The treats to the poor have included a distribution of home comforts, &c., among the deserving poor, a Christmas breakfast and gift for destitute children, a dinner, gift, and entertainment for aged poor men and women, a supper and entertainment for distressed military veterans, and similar entertainments and gifts for the children of the Band of Hope, &c. In addition to this 600 of the poorest children of the city have during the last few days been clothed by the Mission staff under the auspices of the Police-aided Association for Clothing Destitute Children. The various meetings and social gatherings have embraced tea-parties, Christmas trees and entertainments for the Sunday-school scholars, the teachers, the members of the congregation, the Sunday morning adult class, the P.S.A., the Mothers' Meeting, &c. We learn with satisfaction that two appeals which have been issued by Mr. Clarke since October last—one for the extinction of the Mission debt, and the other for the special Christmas and winter distress fund—have resulted in the raising of a sum of upwards of £900.

Bolton: Bank-street.—On Sunday morning last the annual service of Recognition and Self-Dedication was held to mark the entrance upon membership of the congregation of all those who had joined during the year 1900, and to express particularly the desire of those who had attended the minister's preparation class to dedicate themselves to God's service. There was a large congregation; the devotional service was conducted by the assistant minister, the Rev. E. S. Hicks, B.A., and the sermon preached by the senior minister, the Rev. C. J. Street, M.A., LL.B., from the text 1 Chron. xxix. 5, "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" Reference was made to the losses sustained by the congregation during the year through death, removal, and other causes, the deathroll of the last four years having numbered 79. A cordial welcome was offered to all new-comers into the religious fellowship of the congregation. "A particularly tender greeting," said the preacher, "is due to the young people who have passed through the minister's preparation class, and are now enrolled for the first time on our list of members. For four years this valuable institution has been in existence, and without doubt it may be reckoned as one of the most influential and gratifying agencies in connection with the chapel. Personally I look back with the greatest satisfaction and happiness on the quiet work done in the class-room, autumn after autumn, when it has been my privilege to speak of the deepest things of the soul to the fresh young life of the congregation; and I believe that the hours of communion on sacred things thus spent will remain as a happy memory with the members of these classes as they certainly will with me. I count it among my greatest joys to have this annual opportunity of unfolding before inquiring and susceptible minds the grounds and principles of our faith; and when the young men and women who have been under my guidance in this way take the deliberate step of enrolling their names as members of our fellowship, my heart rejoices in the thought of the added strength to our cause which their avowed adhesion gives." During the past four years fifty-five young people have attended the classes and afterwards joined the congregation, besides twenty others who were already members, and many more who have not yet become members. It is a record for which to be thankful.

Cardiff.—A watch-night service was held here for the first time on New Year's Eve. At 7.30 a soirée was held in the schoolroom, and after an evening's entertainment those present, to the number of about 100, assembled in the church for devotional service. The minister (the Rev. J. Tyssul Davies, B.A.) delivered an eloquent sermon, impressing upon all the need in the coming year of greater love and good-fellowship. On Jan. 4 the Children's Christmas-tree and treat took place. Mrs. George Carslake Thompson, assisted by Mr. W. A. Moore, distributed the prizes.

Cirencester.—On New Year's Day the children of the Sunday-school, with teachers, parents, and choir, enjoyed their annual Christmas-tree, and in the course of the evening prizes for regular attendance were distributed.

Derby.—The Sunday-school Christmas party and prize distribution took place on Thursday week, the Rev. J. Birks, F.G.S., presiding, and the evening was much enjoyed.

Dukinfield.—The annual Christmas party was attended by 600 scholars and teachers. The Rev. H. S. Tayler presided. Special hymns were sung, and the scholars acquitted themselves creditably in the various pieces they had learned for the occasion. On the following evening the entertainment was repeated to a crowded audience, composed of the parents of the scholars and their friends. The annual congregational soirée was held three days later (Dec. 29), and, in addition to the minister's address, Ald. Jas. Kerfoot, J.P., and the Rev. A. C. Fox, B.A., of Glossop, delivered interesting speeches. On Saturday last the Old Chapel congregation gave their annual treat (regardless of sect or creed) to the aged of the township; 451 guests were invited, the oldest present was 92, the youngest guest 60 years of age. The total number of years was 31,405, making the average age 69½.

Hindley.—The winter's work began with a course of seven Sunday evening lectures on "Life Periods," by the minister, followed by a Christmas musical service on Dec. 23, and a lecture on "The Closing Century" on the 30th. The first Sunday of the new century will be long remembered by those participating in the impressive recognition service, which was conducted in the evening by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, of Manchester. Thirty-five young people of the Sunday-school, who had been for several weeks past attending a preparation class conducted by the minister, joined the congregation and received the right hand of fellowship from Mr. Steinthal. In the afternoon book prizes were given to seventy-eight scholars who had made good attendance during the year. The annual school party was held on Christmas Day. After tea in the school, a capital entertainment was given in the public hall, and even that was not large enough. On New Year's Day a conversazione and social evening was held, and on 5th inst. a play night in the school for the younger scholars was greatly enjoyed.

Kidderminster.—The Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans, who has completed ten years of service at the New Meeting, has addressed an earnest "New Year's greeting" to the members of his congregation, which is printed in the January Calendar. He urges that while he does not want any creed for their church beyond "the honoured, exalted, glorious name of Unitarian," theirs should be a covenant church, and for that purpose suggests the following: "We covenant with God and with each other to follow Jesus by loving God and serving our fellow-creatures." He thinks more ceremonial is needed to impress the minds of the young with the seriousness of the covenant, and announces a Confirmation (or Covenant) class which he intends to hold, and also hopes for a special Communion service on the evening before Good Friday.

Kingswood (near Birmingham).—The children of the Sunday-school have had their usual New Year's dinner, followed by an entertainment given by themselves. After evening service on Sunday the Communion service was held, and is to be repeated every other month throughout the year. The guild for "Mutual Improvement and Neighbourly Kindness" has began its meetings.

Liscard (Appointment).—The Rev. A. E. Parry, of Kirkcaldy, has accepted a unanimous invitation to the pulpit of the Memorial Church. On Dec. 26 the children of the Sunday-school gave a tea to eighty poor children from the neighbourhood, followed by an entertainment, which included a Christmas tree. Their own annual tea-party followed on New Year's Day.

Liverpool: Hope-street.—Mr. J. B. Morton Barnes, B.A. (Cantab), who has been prevented from entering the church by a change of religious opinions, has accepted an invitation to act as assistant to the Rev. R. A. Armstrong for nine months, devoting himself specially to the Sunday-school and various societies connected with Hope-street Church, and occasionally occupying the pulpit. In October Mr. Barnes hopes to enter Manchester College, Oxford, for the graduate course. After evening service last Sunday a presentation was made in the Church-hall to Mr. J. T. Bryson, who for over twenty-five years has rendered regular and conscientious voluntary service in the choir. The presentation was from the other members of the choir, on the occasion of Mr. Bryson's marriage, he and his bride both receiving gifts.

London: Deptford.—The Rev. A. J. Marchant desires to express his sincere thanks to those friends who so kindly responded to his Christmas appeal. With the exception of a contribution of 10s. from H. E. (who gave no address), all gifts have been personally acknowledged.

London: Essex Church.—A very impressive and touching service of consecration and welcome was held at Essex Church last Sunday morning. It opened with the singing of "Now thank we all our God," as the first united act of gratitude in the new century, and both lessons and prayers had close bearing on the special service of the day. In his sermon the Rev. Frank K. Freeston referred to the unique and solemn significance of the time, and pleaded for more unreserved speech on matters of religion, for more self-consecration to God and things divine, and especially for more definite recognition of the young in the real life of the congregation. He then gave the right hand of fellowship to seventeen new members of the church, most of whom had previously attended the minister's class, and invited them to sign the new Roll Book, which they did in the sight of all present. A specially-printed Consecration hymn was then sung, and about fifty stayed for the New Year Communion. It was felt by all to be a helpful and memorable occasion.

London: Highgate.—The Christmas festivities in connection with the Highgate Sunday-school were highly successful. A large number of the parents of the scholars joined the teachers in a soirée, at which the elder scholars gave a performance of Mr. Hawkes's play of Robin Hood. This was also given at the scholars' party and again on Monday last, when the Young People's Religious Union entertained nearly sixty very poor children. In addition to the play tea was provided and a lantern exhibition. The Church Committee having had Mr. Ion Pritchard's circular letter brought to their notice, suggesting that committees of churches may, with advantage, present the teachers in their schools with copies of the Helper, have gladly adopted the proposal, and fifteen copies were handed to the teachers on Sunday last, with the compliments of the Church Committee.

Loughborough.—The annual Sunday-school party was held last Saturday. The prizes were distributed by the Rev. W. Birks, and as part of the evening's entertainment Mr. Hawkes's play, Babes in the Wood, was given.

Moneyrea.—The congregation of Moneyrea have decided by a unanimous vote to apply for membership in the Association of Irish Nonsubscribing Presbyterians and other Free Christians. On Dec. 11 the Rev. Charles Peach delivered to an audience of 150 in the Sunday-school his lantern lecture on "The Holiday Camp at Great Hucklow." On Dec. 20 the Christmas party was held and attended by over 200. The distribution of prizes and toys, an exhibition of physical drill, and the production of Cinderella by members of the school formed a most enjoyable programme. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Joseph Anderson, Mr. W. Gibson, J.P., and the Rev. R. Lyttle. On Jan. 5 the annual meeting of the Temperance Guild brought together an audience that filled the schoolroom, when forty-nine adults signed the total abstinence pledge. It is gratifying to be able to report the increasing success of the Temperance cause at Moneyrea. The Sunday-school is being held through the winter this season, and the attendance is very satisfactory. There are thirty members in the Senior Bible-class.

Sheffield: Upperthorpe.—At the close of morning service, Dec. 23, Mr. W. Guest, on behalf of the ladies of the congregation, presented the minister with a handsome silk gown, and the Rev. John Ellis suitably responded. On Dec. 26 the Christmas social gathering in connection with the Literary and Social Union was held. On Dec. 27 scholars' party and prize distribution. The school has recently been reorganised, and the New Year opens with prospects of greater success. On Jan. 1 re-union of old teachers and scholars. On Jan. 3 the old people's tea. Following an old custom, the aged people of the neighbourhood were invited to a substantial repast. About 120 accepted. The children repeated their entertainment. The Rev. T. W. Holmes (Congregationalist) and the Rev. J. Ellis gave short addresses. As the old people dispersed a packet of tea was given to each one.

Taunton.—On Thursday week the annual Sunday-school entertainment and prize-giving took place, the proceeds of the entertainment going towards the piano fund. The prizes were distributed by Mr. F. H. Vaughan, of Manchester College, Oxford.

Tavistock.—On the last Sunday of the old year the Rev. J. Barron concluded a course of evening lectures with the title, "Round the Cradle of Christendom," the course being based on Mr. G. R. S. Mead's book, "Fragments of a Faith Forgotten." The lectures dealt with the background of early Christianity, primitive forms of doctrine, and the relation of Gnosticism to the development of thought.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk.

WINIFRED HOUSE,

Invalid Children's Convalescent Nursing Home,

Wray Crescent, Tollington Park, London, N.

For poor children suffering from debility or rickets, or recovering from hip or spinal disease, &c. Ages: Girls, 3 to 12 years; Boys, 3 to 10.

Applications for admission to be made to Miss M. PRITCHARD, 11, Highbury Crescent, London, N. Maintenance fees, 4s. weekly.

Subscriptions and Donations will be gratefully received by WM. M. BLYTH, Esq., Hon. Treasurer, or by either of the Hon. Secretaries. Subscribers are reminded that the year of the HOME commences on May 1st, so that the subscriptions for the tenth year, if not paid, are now due.

Hon. Secs. { MARIAN PRITCHARD, ROBERT HAMPSON.

YORKSHIRE UNITARIAN UNION CONFERENCE.

Will the lady who took away, by mistake, a wrong Umbrella, from the Schoolroom at Mill Hill during tea on January 1st, kindly return it to the Chapel Keeper, Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 13.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. DENDY AGATE, B.A. Evening, "The New Century.—II. The New Philanthropy."

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. 7 P.M., Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN. Morning, "The Quiet Hour." Evening, "Peter's Vision." Children's Class, 12 30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEX. GORDON, M.A.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON. Morning, "The Perfect Life." Evening, "Visions of the Future."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., 3 P.M., Children's Service, Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Penge, Childwick Hall, Beckenham-road, 7 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES, "The Place and Position of Jesus in Unitarianism."

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. FARRINGTON. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. CARLIER, and 7 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. J. TOYE, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. W. H. SHRUBSOLE, F.G.S.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., F. H. VAUGHAN, B.A.

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30, Rev. H. BODELL SMITH.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRADFORD, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. LIVENS.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. STREET

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. R. W. KITTLE.

DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKSPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.

EASTBOURNE, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HASTINGS, Free Christian Church, South Terrace (opposite Recreation Ground), 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. JOHN MCDOWELL.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "Unitarian Christianity and the Brotherhood of Man."

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.3 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Claremont, 21, Albion-place (facing Harbour), 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.

SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.

WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Jan. 13th, at 11.15 A.M., JOHN M. ROBERTSON, "The Nineteenth Century.—II. Philosophy and Science."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. J. B. BARNHILL, 26, Clovelly Mansions, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Letters, &c., to the Rev. HARRY S. PERRIS, M.A., should be addressed (not as in the "Year Book for 1901," but) to 61, St. Augustine's-road, Camden-square, London, N.W. Letters addressed "Little Portland-street Chapel" are not delivered.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

DEATHS.

MOORE—On the 6th Jan., at Estcourt, Weighton-road, Anerley, and of 16, Mincing-lane, London, Hermann Francis Moore, aged 38 years.

Schools, etc.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON
(FOR WOMEN),
YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET, W.

The LENT TERM begins on JANUARY 17.

A single Course of Lectures in any subject may be attended.

For Prospectus and all particulars apply to the PRINCIPAL.

BEAUFORT SCHOOL, WOODSTOCK AVENUE, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

The MISSES TUCKER.

NEXT TEEM begins on WEDNESDAY, January 16th.

CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE,
HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
AND BOARDING SCHOOL.

For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home.
Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term:

Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s.
Extras: Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s.
Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d.
Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra.
Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.

Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.

The NEXT TERM begins WEDNESDAY, January 16th.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

MISS JARVIS and MISS CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HINDHEAD.

The SPRING TERM begins on THURSDAY, January 17th.

References to parents of past and present pupils.

Prospectus on application to Miss MACRAE MOIR, Lingholt, Hindhead, Haslemere.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:
MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

Schools, etc.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

CANDIDATES for the SESSION 1901–1902 are reminded that their Applications, with Testimonials and Answers to Questions, must reach the Rev. Dendy Agate, The Parsonage, Dunham-road Chapel, Altrincham, not later than MONDAY, February 4th.

Forms of Application and of Questions to be answered may be had from either of the Hon. Secretaries,

DENDY AGATE
(Address as above).
EDWARD TALBOT,
37, Brown-street, Manchester.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE SCHOOL, GOWER STREET, W.C.

HEADMASTER—J. LEWIS PATON, Esq., M.A. (formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge).

LENT TERM commences JANUARY 14th.

The School is carried on in strict accordance with the principles laid down by the Founders of University College, and is organised as a first grade modern and classical school.

For prospectus, apply to the Office, Gower-street, W.C.

T. GREGORY FOSTER, B.A., Ph.D.,
Secretary.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Winter Season.—BOARD and RESIDENCE at OSMUNDA, Fir Vale-road, from 30s. weekly. Central, opposite Grand Hotel Gardens.

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. ANNE'S-ON-SEA.—The Misses PILCHER would be glad to hear of one or two ladies to BOARD with them.—Address, Derbe-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

LAKE DISTRICT, furnished House; 3 entertaining, 6 bed (2 double bedded) rooms, bath, w.c.—Address, INQUIRER Office.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS
WILL GIVE
TWO ADDRESSES
at COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY GREEN,
on SUNDAY, JANUARY 20TH, 1901.

Afternoon at 3.30, on "Patriotism, True and False," with references to Tolstoy's Trenchant Work on this subject.

Evening at 7, on "Many Roads Here, but one Home hereafter."

All welcome.

MANSFORD-STREET CHURCH and MISSION.

URGENT APPEAL.

The following amounts have been promised since the last Appeal:—

	£	s.	d.
Miss Edith Preston	5	0	0
Mr. J. Troup	5	5	0
Mr. C. F. Pearson	5	0	0
Miss M. C. Martineau	10	0	0
Miss S. H. Holland	2	0	0
Mrs. H. Rutt	10	0	0
Mr. G. Fleming Simons	5	0	0
Mr. David Martineau	5	5	0
The Mansford-street Congregation ...	10	0	0

The Committee desire to draw the attention of all friends of Missionary effort to the above promise from the congregation, as showing the great interest they take in the movement. Many of them were connected with Spicer-street (Buxton-street) for so many years under the care of Mr. Corkran.

It is essential that the £200 should be raised, and it is hoped that a liberal and speedy response will be made.

Donations or promises will be thankfully received by

Miss L. JONES,
Riverton, Hadley Wood, Barnet (Treas.)
or S. W. PRESTON,
7, Eldon-road, Hampstead (Hon. Sec.).

DAILY RE-ENGAGEMENT desired as GOVERNESS or SECRETARY. English and arithmetic (Cambridge Higher Local); good French, Latin, German, music, drawing. Excellent references. — Miss TALBOT, 38, Westbere-road, W. Hampstead, N.W.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE.
E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE HELPER, 1901.
A Handbook for Sunday-school Teachers and for Parents. Edited by W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Postage 4d.

With Frontispiece—"Alfred the Great," and many Illustrations of beautiful natural objects—crystals, moss, grasses, insects, &c.

Every Teacher should possess a copy.

YOUNG DAYS.
Volume for 1900. Edited by Rev. J. J. Wright.

Contains 192 pages of brightly-written Stories, Anecdotes and Verses, with over 100 Illustrations. A most attractive volume as a Prize or New Year's Present for young children.

Illustrated boards 1s. 6d., cloth gilt 2s., post free.

PRINCESS MAY AND HER WONDERFUL LAW.
A Fairy Play. By "Aunt Amy."

Published in neat Booklet form, suitable for presentation at the New Year. The cover is blocked in gold, with gilt edges, and tied with silk ribbon. Price 6d. net. Postage 1d.

PRAYERS for the USE of SUNDAY-SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.
A collection of suitable Prayers, printed in large type. Cloth, 6d. net. Postage 2d.

ADDRESSES TO CHILDREN.
For Use in Home and School.

This little book consists of Twenty-five Addresses which have appeared in the "Children's Column" of THE INQUIRER, contributed by Revs. John Byles, V. D. Davis, J. J. Wright, and E. P. Barrow; Miss Frances E. Cooke, Miss Gertrude Martineau, Mrs. Farrington, and others.

Price 8d. net. Postage 2d.

HALF HOURS WITH the PARABLES.
SECOND SERIES.

A book for the Sunday School and the Home. By the Rev. J. CROWTHER HIRST. Price 1s. net. Postage 3d. extra.

The Parables treated in this second volume are:—

The Mustard Seed.
The Hidden Treasure.
The Two Sons.
The Talents.
The Good Samaritan.
The Barren Fig Tree.
The Great Supper.
The Tower & the Warring King.
The Lost Coin.
The Unrighteous Steward.
The Rich Fool.
Unprofitable Servants.

NOW READY FOR JANUARY.

Price One Penny.

YOUNG DAYS.
Edited by J. J. WRIGHT.

CONTENTS:—

The Months. (Poetry.)
Joan's Strange Adventures in Gnome-land and Sylph-land.—Chap. I.
Feathery Weather. (Picture.)
How a Drummer-Boy won his glory.
The Dance of the Months. (Poetry.)
The Legend of the Christmas Rose.
A Russian Skating Song. (Picture)
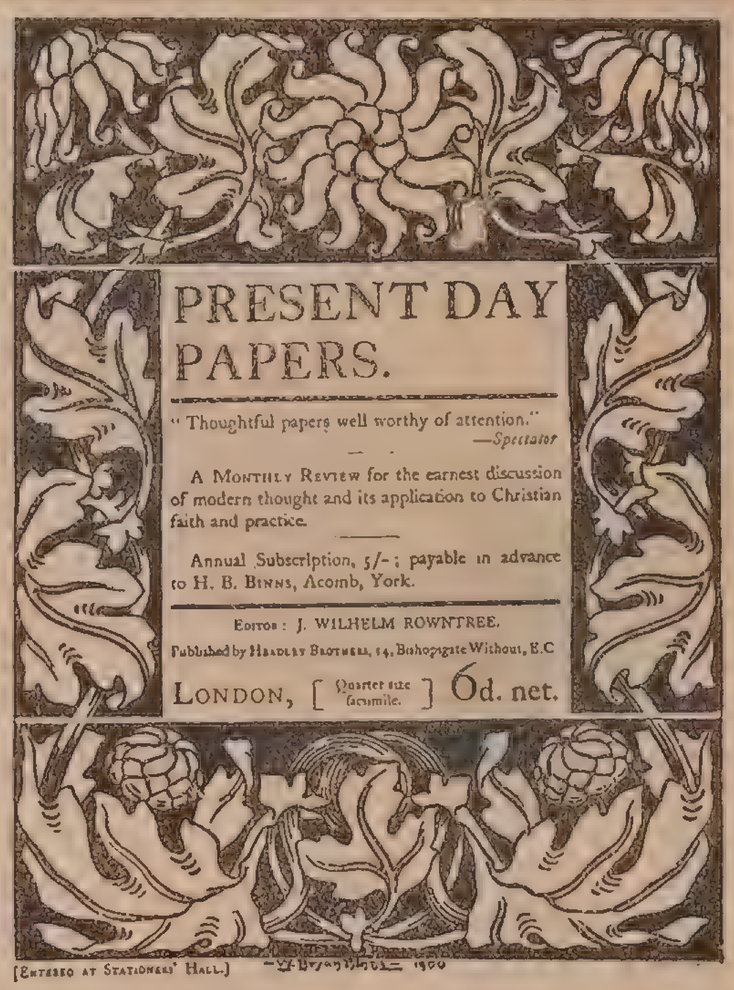
Tall, Handsome, and Brave, but——
The Christ-Child. Aunt Amy's Corner.
Guild Work.
Our Temperance Picture Gallery.—I. Lord Roberts.
The Fog Window-blind.
Turning the New Year Leaves.
Puzzles. Editor's Chat, &c.

Annual Subscription by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 4, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. Manchester Agents: H. RAWSON AND CO., 16, New Brown-street; JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate. Liverpool Agents: THE LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' CO., LTD., 70, Lord-street.



NEW YEAR BOOKLETS.
(By the Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.)

DAILY MEDITATIONS (Fourth Edition, revised), and NIGHT UNTO NIGHT (Second Thousand).

Leather, gilt, 1s. each; cloth, red-edged, 6d.

OF THE AUTHOR, WANDSWORTH; or PHILIP GREEN, ESSEX HALL, W.C.

Special Terms for Quantities.

Fearless, stimulating papers and reviews by able writers on the problems of religious and social thought.

PRESENT DAY PAPERS

for 1901 are expected to contain articles by J. A. Hobson, M.A., Canon Moore Ede, Edward Grubb, M.A., and others on Social Questions and Ideals. Articles have been promised on "The Work of the Spirit" and "The Fatherhood of God."

Write to HEADLEY BROS., enclosing stamped envelope, for Prospectus.

The Papers are published on the 15th of each month. The JANUARY Contents is:—

I.—Comments. The Editor.
II.—The Work of the Holy Spirit. May Kendall.
III.—Books for Bible Students. Prof. A. S. Peake.
IV.—Prof. Rogers' New Book on "Assyrian History." G. W. Thatcher, M.A.

7d., post free, from HEADLEY BROS., 14, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.

Reduced price, 1s. 3d. Eighth Edition.

UNIVERSALISM ASSERTED.—"A NOBLE book. . . . The very best compendium of the glorious truth of modern times."—Canon WILBERFORCE. From the Rev. T. ALLIN, Donnington, Ledbury.

WILL someone who has, and can spare, a copy of THE NEW WORLD for March, 1897, kindly write to the Rev. R. C. MOORE, Horwich, near Bolton?

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS
2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS
2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES
Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

NOW READY.

Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 1d.
POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1901.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK FOR 1901.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
JESUS OF NAZARETH: Lessons of his Life, Death, and Resurrection Learnt at Ober Ammergau. By CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
RELIGION IN LITERATURE AND RELIGION IN LIFE. Two Lectures by STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Cloth, 2s. net, post free.
A HANDBOOK for MINISTERS of RELIGION. Containing Services for Baptism, Dedication, Communion, Marriage, and Burial, with special Hymns and Readings. Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
SEVEN SERVICES FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP, with special Prayers and Thanksgivings. Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

THE CHRISTIAN FREEMAN
AND SUNDAY SCHOOL MONTHLY.

CONTENTS.

Stories and Anecdotes:—Walter's Vocation; the Skill of a Mouse; How Frank Won; the Head Nurse's Story.

Articles:—To Our Readers; the Guilds and Unions of the Unitarian and Free Christian Churches, by John Ellis; Review; Environment, by Frances E. Cooke; Children in the early part of the Nineteenth Century; John and Charles Wesley.

News of Our Schools:—Dundee; Holywood; Middlsborough.

Sunday-school Lessons, by E. M. Lawrence:—Thoughts for the New Year; Thy Kingdom Come; Strive; Sympathy.

Poetry:—The Coming Year; the New Year.

Wayside Gatherings.

Subscribers will note that the price of THE CHRISTIAN FREEMAN will in future be reduced to One Penny. Special reductions will be made to Schools taking a large number of copies, or to Churches wishing to use it as a Parish Magazine.

THE FOLLOWING ARE THE TERMS:—1 copy, post free, per annum, 1s. 6d.; 3 copies, 4s.; 6 copies, 7s.; 12 copies, 12s.; 50 copies, £2 2s.; 100 copies, £3 15s.

Orders for the New Year should be sent to Miss HAYWARD, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand.

Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to Miss LAWRENCE, and addressed to the Editor of The Christian Freeman, care of Miss HAYWARD.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 12, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

No. 3056. NEW SERIES, No. 160.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 33
POETRY :—
How Long, O Lord! 34
Not Knowing 38
The Pilgrim's Psalm 39
LITERATURE :—
Miss Barmby's Poems 35
Mrs. Gaskell and Knutsford 36
ARTICLES :—
International Ethics 36
Dr. Herford's Jubilee... 38
The Soul's Chronology 39
All Hail to the Dawning Century 41
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Association Sunday 37
The Boys' Brigade 37
The Coming Time 37
A Morning Service for the Young 38
OBITUARY :—
Ald. Walton, of Stockton 39
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 39
LEADER :—
Concentrate and Go Forward 40
MEETINGS :—
Lower Mossley-street School, Manchester ... 42
Notes from America 43
South-East Wales Unitarian Society ... 44
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
The Midlands 44
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 45
ADVERTISEMENTS 46

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD is to give two readings from "Eleanor" and her other works, in aid of the funds of the Passmore Edwards Settlement, on Monday, Jan. 21, at five P.M., and Tuesday, Jan. 22, at 8.30 P.M., at the Settlement, Tavistock-place, W.C. Tickets (afternoon reading, 10s. 6d.; evening reading, 5s.) may be obtained from the Warden, to whom immediate application should be made.

TO-MORROW (Sunday) the Unitarians of Birmingham are to hold the first of a series of gatherings for the purposes of thanksgiving and consecration at the opening of the new century. At each of their churches and missions there is to be in the evening a special service of thanksgiving, when addresses will be given on "Christianity in its Simplest Form." On Friday evening a united social meeting is to be held in the Town Hall, and on the following Sunday evening, Jan. 27, the churches and missions are to be closed, so that all may join in a united service in the Town Hall. The circular announcing these celebrations contains an address, in which the following passage occurs :—

> The new century dawning upon us offers our churches the grandest opportunity ever vouchsafed by God to the forerunners of a more glorious gospel. Never did a century open with a larger promise and potency of good. The thoughts and hearts of men are quick with a new vitality. The Materialism and Agnosticism which darkened all the sky only a few years ago have largely passed away. There are signs in our midst of a revived interest in the great deep things of religion. There is a task of noblest magnitude awaiting us, a way of clearest light before us, if only we had the courage, the generosity, and the devotion they require. To win a way for the powers of religion among those who have been troubled by many doubts, to show the entire reasonableness of Christian faith, to adapt the expression of spiritual realities to the latest announcements of human thought, to bring sunlight into darkened souls, and fertility into desert minds, to open men's ears to hear of a divine voice speaking in the march of events, and in the progress of ideas—all this makes a demand upon us which is at once the cause of rejoicing and despair: of rejoicing since the opportunity is so splendid; of despair since our powers are so feeble for the task. How better can we start upon the labour of the new century than by joining in an act of consecration in which we may win of heaven new life, deeper inspiration, and enlarged hope?

THE Twentieth Century Festival meetings to be held in London during Whitweek by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the Sunday School Association, and the International Council of Unitarians and other Liberal Religious Thinkers and Workers, promise to be of the utmost interest. The preliminary programme, already issued, shows that there will be four days of hard work and pleasure closely packed, and for Sunday-school workers Whit-Sunday as a fifth, or rather a first extra day, with visits to schools and churches in the morning, the united elder scholars' service at Essex Hall in the afternoon, and a special service for teachers and church-workers at Little Portland-street in the evening. Then Monday will be devoted to pleasure, and on Tuesday the four days' battle begins—at nine o'clock is the Sunday School Association breakfast at the King's Hall, Holborn (where the big bazaar was last year), followed by the annual meeting; in the afternoon, sectional meetings of various societies, and in the evening a united religious service for the two Associations and the International Council, at St. James' Hall. The three following days open at 9.30 with a devotional service at Essex Hall. On Wednesday morning is the annual meeting of the B. and F.U.A., and in the evening the conversazione at the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, Piccadilly. Each day there is to be merciful afternoon tea at Essex Hall, except on Friday, when the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor will give a reception to delegates at the Mansion House.

THE International Council, under the presidency of the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, is to hold its meetings on Thursday and Friday, the President's address and the report of the secretary, the Rev. C. W. Wendté, with other business falling on Thursday morning, and further business, when a number of papers by foreign representatives will be read, on Friday morning and afternoon. On Thursday evening a public meeting is to be held in St. Martin's Town Hall, Trafalgar-square. It will thus be seen how great are the attractions of the week, and how much reason there is for friends in all parts of the country to lay their plans so as to be able to come up, if possible, for the whole of Whit-week. Of the Hospitality Committee the chairman is the Rev. J. Harwood; treasurers, Miss E. M. Lawrence and Mr. Ion Pritchard; secretary, the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, to whom all communications should be addressed, at Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

THE Church of England has suffered a very great loss in the death of the Bishop of London, at the early age of fifty-seven, "dead from over-work." The country lost a distinguished historian and man of letters, when Dr. Creighton became a bishop, and yet even amid the constant stress of his London work, he remained an illuminating teacher, and to thoughtful people one of the most interesting and stimulating of public speakers. He was a man of brilliant personal gifts, of broad sympathies, which he never hesitated to express, and as a bishop his relations with Nonconformists were generous and of the most cordial kind. His loss will be keenly felt throughout London, and not merely by the members of his own Church. Mandell Creighton was a vigorous and shrewd north countryman. Born at Carlisle in 1843, he passed from Durham Grammar School to Oxford, where he had a career of great distinction, becoming fellow and tutor of Merton. Then in 1875 he accepted a college living in Northumberland, in a little country village near the coast, and while there published the first volume of his chief historical work, "The History of the Papacy during the Period of the Reformation." In 1884 he was appointed to the Dixie professorship of Ecclesiastical History at Cambridge, established by Emmanuel College, and two years later he attended the centenary celebrations at Harvard College, which is historically linked with Emmanuel. In that year Dr. Creighton founded the English Historical Review, and became its first editor. While at Cambridge he held also a canonry at Worcester Cathedral, and in 1891 was appointed Bishop of Peterborough. During the last four years he had been Bishop of London, and with great judgment was steering his Church through the troubled waters of the ritualist controversy. The Bishop died on Monday, at Fulham Palace, and on Thursday was buried in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral.

THE Burnley School Board is to be congratulated on having, at its first meeting on Monday, appointed Lady O'Hagan, of Townley Hall, as chairman for the next three years. Lady O'Hagan has long been actively engaged in educational work, and for several years has been a Progressive member of the Board. She is also a member of the Board of Guardians and of the Burnley Rural District Council. The Daily News referring with satisfaction to Lady O'Hagan's election, as a step towards the free admission of women to all public careers for which their characters and talents qualify them, pertinently asks on what principle women who might have sat in a metropolitan vestry are excluded from the new London Borough Councils?

In the School Board, in the inspectorate of factories, in sanitary supervision—wherever the reign of law and the necessities of the poor come into contact, it may be into collision—the lady official is in her peculiarly appropriate place.

MR. J. H. LEIGH's reading of The Merchant of Venice in the Steinway Hall last Saturday afternoon, generously given in aid of the funds of the London Domestic Mission, was fortunately not marred by the very unpropitious state of the weather. There would have been a considerably larger audience, if it had not been for the heavy fog, which in the earlier part of the day seriously disarranged all traffic, but there was a very good attendance, and the reading was greatly enjoyed. The Daily Chronicle referred to the reading as follows:—

Mr. Leigh has all the qualifications for bringing out the more reflective as well as the lighter passages of Shakespeare. His voice is clear and perfectly under control, and by slight changes of manner he succeeds in individualising the principal characters. On Saturday there was no mistaking the utterances of Shylock, Bassanio, and Antonio respectively when, in the first of the three sections in which the play was arranged, they discussed the terms of the "merry bond."

In the delivery of the bitter speeches of the Jew Mr. Leigh was specially successful. The "reading" was throughout marked by thought and force, and the concentration of light upon his face was materially helpful to Mr. Leigh in the exposition of subtle points of the text.

The incidental music, specially selected and arranged for the reading, was rendered by Mr. Alfred Airey on the pianoforte. The whole of the receipts, amounting to over £31, without making any deduction for expenses, Mr. Leigh gives to the Domestic Mission Society, and we understand that he has also most kindly offered to give a dramatic performance for the same good object at no very distant date. We may take this opportunity of reminding our readers that the Domestic Mission Society is very seriously in want of additional support.

IN the New Year's number of the Abolitionist, the journal of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection, Miss Frances Power Cobbe writes a "Retrospect" of the twenty-five years which will have passed on the 25th of the present month, since the presentation of the memorial to the Committee of the R.S.P.C.A. in Jermyn-street, which opened the Anti-vivisection campaign in London. From the first Miss Cobbe has been ardently devoted to the cause, and taking now what she feels may well be her last New Year's glance over the field, she says:—

I seem to see that not only our Anti-vivisection party and this English nation, but all the nations of Christendom are coming shortly to a parting of the ways. Either the old reverence for Right as the eternal, immutable Right, independent of expediency, will continue and grow deeper, and our honour for Justice and our love of Mercy will widen and expand till they include in their scope all our brother-men on earth and the brutes below them; and then, if this be so, comes the dawn of the true Kingdom of God;—or, on the other hand, those great moral conceptions are to be dismissed henceforth as merely the "hereditary set of our brains," due to the chance conditions of our forefathers; and deserving of no more reliance than the "convictions of a monkey's mind";—to be set aside the moment they interfere with our only real interests, Bodily Health, Length of Life, Riches and Pleasure. In this latter case it will by no means be only Cruelty to the lower animals which will be given full sway, but Cruelty likewise to all weak and defenceless human beings, to the sickly, the feeble-minded, the deformed, the aged, the hopelessly diseased.

In this matter Miss Cobbe feels and the British Union maintains that there can be no compromise, and no asking for half-measures, but that the practice of Vivisection ought to be absolutely prohibited.

FOR nine years Mr. William Edward Turner, formerly of Liverpool and now of Colwyn Bay, has edited a new series of the British Friend, in which work he now has the co-operation of Mr. Edward Grubb. At the beginning of a tenth volume Mr. Turner writes on "The Outlook," with courage and good hope for the cause of enlightened thought and spiritual religion to which he is devoted. The purpose of the British Friend he states again, in words used when he first undertook the work, to be "to present, as effectively as we may be able, the essential principles of Quakerism, believing them to be the most genuine expression of the spirit and teaching of our Lord Jesus Christ that the modern world has known." And he adds:—

We do not forget that truth is many-sided, and that modes of expression change with the progress of enlightened thought. Our faith in the eternal verities of the Christianity of Jesus is but deepened the more we seek to uncover the inwardness of the divine truths which fell from His sacred lips, as preserved in the records of the Evangelists. The Spirit of Truth may yet have visions to disclose, and the century on which we are about to enter may present many subjects for reverent inquiry, which the Christian culture of the day must face. Should these arise we desire to meet them with courage, in reliance on His Spirit who is the Light of all the ages, and whose truth will but shine brighter and clearer as men advance into the likeness of Christ, and imbibe in fuller measure the mind that was in Him. May our section of the Church be faithful to its mission, and face its duty in the coming years as a people reliant on their God, who is Himself the centre and crown of all truth that the human mind can ever grasp.

And further as to the attitude to be maintained by the Society of Friends, Mr. Turner quotes the following from an American contemporary:—

We cannot stop the work of investigation. It will go on whether we like it or not, and the conclusions of research can only be answered by a deeper and more faithful research. But nothing which is of God can fail; all that He has given us is safe and will abide. It is our business to make Him known, to declare a religion which builds on the eternal verities, which begins and ends in something spiritual and permanent. . . . Those who believe in God, and that He has spoken in His Son, and who are setting forth an overcoming spiritual religion, are winning wherever they appear. That is the wing of the Lord's army to which we belong, and it is there we stand. We are not discouraged, we are not afraid, we are not weak in faith, and we believe that in quiet and confidence we shall not only possess our own souls, but that we shall help others to solve the problems of their age.

HOW LONG, O LORD!

WHEN will the war be over,
When will the conflict cease!
When o'er the world will hover
The squadrons of white-winged Peace!

When will the sword be sleeping,
When will the strife be done!
When shall we cease our weeping
For father, for husband, for son!

Say! is the storm abating,
Is there a star above?
Is our unchristian hating
Turning to Christian love?

Christmas has gone, with its story,
Gone with its angel's song!
Say! shall the New Year's glory
Be stained with the old year's wrong?

Whether the wrong be others';
Whether we bear the blame;
Britons and Boers are brothers,
And War is a crime and a shame!

When we are done with cheering
O'er slaughter and ghastly death;
When we are tired of hearing
The falseness of Rumour's breath;

Perchance we may judge more duly
The right and the wrong of our cause:
Perhaps we may read more truly
The trend of eternal laws!

Perchance when the rifle's rattle
Is hushed 'neath the vault of blue,
A break in the smoke of battle
May let heaven's light shine through.

Then under its radiance tender
The dead may awake to life;
And bathed in its holy splendour,
The Nations may cease their strife.

H. W. HAWKES.

You are not simply a reservoir into which so much truth, goodness, greatness is to be poured, there to remain for ever. You are a channel through which God is transmitting His life and love to other men. That you are, or you are nothing. —J. F. Dutton.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—H. B.; G. V. C.; H. E. D.; E. D. P. E.; E. I. F.; H. B. G.; E. R. H.; R. T. H.; W. L.; E. M.; F. T. M.; H. C. M.; C. E. P.; J. R.

LITERATURE.

MISS BARMBY'S POEMS.*

VOLUMES of verse flow ceaselessly from the press, and the critic almost knows beforehand what he will have to say about them. A glance will show him into which of two or three classes they fall and will suggest to his impatience the proper formula under which they may be dismissed, or to his tenderness the kindest words in which he may convey to the author and his admiring friends the failure of the work on which they had built their hopes.

But the reviewer who opens the little volume before us with such reflections as we have indicated will be startled and arrested by the passion and power of the first lines upon which his eye falls, and when he has read a few pages he will see that his task is not to deal kindly with another failure, but to convince a naturally incredulous public that "a poet has been among them."

Has been, alas! For Miss Beatrice Barmby ended her short life before she had reached the maturity of her powers, before she had written anything which she herself had conclusively determined to be ripe for publication. All the more amazing is it that her work should be of a quality which so great an authority as Mr. York Powell can compare on the one hand with the early heroic work of Ibsen, and on the other hand with one of the best known and noblest of the poems of William Morris, and in neither case to the disadvantage of the youthful poetess.

Miss Barmby was the daughter of Goodwin Barmby, whose name and personality are familiar to our older readers. Though she lived an entirely retired life, the strong and vitalising quality of her intellect and a certain elf-like humour and play of gentle fancy had made her a light and strength to a comparatively wide circle of friends; but while they all loved and admired her, not one had any conception of how great a poetess she was; for though she had a full measure of poetic inspiration, she had nothing of the craving for recognition, nothing of the importunity of genius that so generally characterises great and small poets, but from which the great probably escape oftener than the small. She was content to wait her time, "pruning well her words," and taking a quiet joy in learning to command her tools. It is her early death that has at once robbed us of the full measure of her achievement, and revealed to us how great that achievement already was.

The drama of Gísli Súrsson is, however, so mature and finished a production that it is difficult to imagine that the hand of its author would have introduced any but the slightest modifications before giving it to the public. We shall probably not be far wrong in regarding it as the first and only poem that Miss Barmby had provisionally prepared for publication. Mr. York Powell, in his fine preface, has dwelt upon the skill with which the dramatic moments of the tragic story are seized and upon the power of the characterisation. Let a single passage stand as a specimen of the detailed execution. Gísli, outlawed for his act of vengeance on a treacherous murderer, has appealed to his prosperous and selfish brother, Thorkel (the ultimate cause of all the mischief), to stand by him, and Thorkel, unaware that vengeance for his own share in the ancient crime is close upon his track, refuses to make common cause with his brother, and accompanies his refusal with an insulting offer of gold. Gísli retires all but broken-hearted, and Gest the Wise approaches Thorkel.

GEST: Are you a cragsman, master?
THORKEL: Ay.
What then?
GEST: It was a tale I called to mind.
You know our west frith cliffs are lined with birds,
Set like blown snow on ridges. I knew once
Two brothers who went nesting in the mist.
Sudden the one whooped loud: the other turns,
And sees his brother staggering on the verge,
With one arm stretched for aid, or so it seemed.
The whole cliff-face was slipping to the sea.
Then thinks he, "If I reach out, snatch his hand,
We are lost both, and I've a wife at home!"
So moves no whit; when, lo! the giddy air,
And the cleft mist, and the up-rising sea!
'Twas his own foothold crumbled, the poor fool,
And the stretched arm was only stretched in aid.

Other passages of tragic power and of deep insight crowd upon the mind; but it is in the motive of the play, as a whole, that its power resides. Gísli held himself so strong

He'd stand alone, there was no need for Gods
To sway his equal soul or frame the world;
The world was co-existent with himself,
Nor fate nor hell could unmake what he made,—
Himself: and in his silence he would stoop
To care for others' frailties as a God,
In that large scorn which men call kindliness,
But at last he woke
And found God's heel upon him.

But to the last he remains noble, and draws out the nobility of those around him. If it be the function of tragedy "to purify the emotions by pity and terror," here we have, indeed, a tragedy that fulfils its function.

On such work the critic may pronounce his judgment if he will, but it is he, not it, that will stand or fall by the sentence.

The poems on Icelandic themes and the translations from the Icelandic are of varied quality. In them we see Miss Barmby trying every variety of experiment. Here we come upon a poem ("Lord Raven Odelsson," or "Eyvind Skáldaspillir") which might be slipped between the leaves of an edition of Browning with a fair chance of being singled out for popularity as a characteristic utterance of the great master; and there we light upon a reminiscence of Longfellow's style of dealing with Scandinavian antiquity ("Sturla in Exile"); but everywhere there is the flash of original genius, and from time to time the attainment of originality of style as well as directness of vision. As examples of Miss Barmby's varying moods and notes we may take the contrast between the great men who insult the captive poet and the object of their scorn,

Time and scene have fall'n to lee;
King and queen and knights of name;
Half a line in history
Serves to pay their debt to fame.

But the poet-captive still,
From the stained black-lettered page,
Casts a charm o'er vale and hill,
Clashing fight and tempest's rage.

Or take the conclusion of the poem on "The Burning of Flugumýr." The band of enemies that has fallen upon Gizur of Hawkdale, at the bridal feast of his son, know full well as they set fire to his house that If Gizur outlive the flames, we shall rue it many a year.

And when they have

Thrust their spears 'twixt rafter and door, through smouldering heap and wall, they ride off with their "work done," but

They had not ridden a rood or twain, all over the bitter heath,
When a man came out from between the walls where else was naught but death.

. . . .

"There shall never be men in Iceland more, from the Heaths to the Silent Sea,
But they shall remember the deed that's done and the vengeance that yet shall be!"

Or again in the "Lost Vengeance," the hero cherishes his purpose in the presence of mighty odds,

The strength of the land was at his call,
But fate and I were more strong than all.
So link by link I made tight the chain,
For the kindred dead and the old love slain,
Till just as my plan was well-nigh tried,
And my arm was ready to smite—he died.

. . . .

I had loved him lying unarmed at my feet,
My sword at his throat—such an hour, so sweet!
But now I love not, I hate not, I!
I stand as a blot on the world, and cry
For justice, justice and equity,
Since God has stolen my vengeance from me!

Everywhere there is the same insight into the heathen heart of Scandinavia and the same noble presentation of it.

Amongst the translations "The Waking of Angantýr" is, perhaps, the most arresting.

Mr. York Powell has contributed a preface together with brief headings and notes indicating the sources of the translations and elucidating the references in the other poems.

Miss Barmby, though unknown in England, was well known in Iceland alike to poet and peasant; but she had never been there in the body; and there stands as the motto to this book a broken sonnet in the quatrains of which she tells her yearnings for the "Home of snow and lava and spring flowers."

The terzine were never written by her, but a loving hand has supplied them and made them tell how she

Has passed away unsatisfied!
And never now her eager feet may tread
Those wild ways haunted by her heroes dead."

Manibus date lilia plenis.

P. H. W.

* Gísli Súrsson: a Drama. Ballads and Poems of the old Norse days; and some Translations. By Beatrice Helen Barmby, with a preface by F. York Powell. Constable and Co. 1900. 3s. 6d. net.

MRS. GASKELL AND KNUTSFORD.*

THIS is a book pleasantly illustrated, interestingly written, and well printed. Mr. Payne has been minister at this quaint old Knutsford chapel during the last ten years, and he has been most assiduous in his search for anything that might throw light upon Mrs. Gaskell's life and work. It is evident from a perusal of this little book that he is a devoted admirer of Mrs. Gaskell's stories; and yet we are glad to see that he does not, like so many of his reviewers, run to death the theory that most, if not all, her scenes and characters had a real existence in the old days at Knutsford.

There is not much biography in the book; but that is not the author's fault. Mrs. Gaskell expressed a wish that no biography of hers should be written, and her daughters therefore refrain from furnishing the information that so many bibliographers would like to have. It is a chatty book. It gives us snapshots of picturesque Knutsford, with its bellmen and rhymsters, before the railway ran through it; and it briefly describes that country town as it is to-day, with its annual crowning of the May Queen and its guerdon of mighty limes and elms and oaks. A history of Brook-street Chapel is given in epitome, and is illustrated by a dainty pen-and-ink sketch of the picturesque building. Mr. Payne acts as the reader's guide, and takes him in a genial, friendly way, not only round Knutsford itself, but also for some distance into the surrounding beautiful country, describing everything of interest as he passes it; here giving a quotation from one of Mrs. Gaskell's books, which seems to sufficiently identify the house or garden or stream you are looking at, and there repeating a legend which attaches to some family or other, and which may have stirred the imagination of the authoress in the invention of some of her effective plots. He passes in review what most of her critics and admirers have said concerning her connection with Knutsford, and, without ostentation or dogmatism, he courteously points out the probable errors and the too hasty conclusions that are drawn. And, finally, the brief chapter about Mrs. Gaskell's husband, the Rev. William Gaskell, for sixty years minister of Cross-street Chapel, Manchester, will be very acceptable to members of our Free Churches who had the privilege of knowing him personally.

In a book of 116 pages, dealing with such a subject, everything has necessarily to be put briefly; but the parts are fairly balanced, and Mr. Payne well earns the gratitude of all who have a loving memory of Mrs. Gaskell's delightful and healthful stories, for bringing together into a nutshell so much interesting information about her and her characters, and for introducing us to so many possible pilgrimages into some of the most beautiful pastoral scenery in England, where, under the shade of magnificent foliage and amidst the songs of birds, we may more fully realise that tenderness of heart and keen womanly sympathy that led her to weave together such abundant pathos and humour, and illustrate so faithfully and affectionately the trials and experiences of common human life.

CHARLES ROPER.

* "Mrs. Gaskell and Knutsford." By the Rev. George A. Payne. 3s. net. (Clarkson and Griffiths, Manchester.)

INTERNATIONAL ETHICS.

WE have become accustomed to think and speak of the century just closed as a period of great material, moral, and spiritual progress. This estimate on the part of contemporary thinkers and writers has been so universal as to have become accepted in our minds without perhaps much conscious criticism of its claims to our credence. It has, therefore, been to many of us a terrible shock to find ourselves at the close of this great age of progress in the presence of a development of barbarous ideas, purposes, and acts, which we hoped had been left behind, or at least been relegated to the races of mankind yet in existence, who were still under the influence of, or just emerging from a condition of savagery.

The question as to whether the optimists have been hopelessly wrong, or whether the moral, material, and spiritual progress has actually been made during the last hundred years which has been claimed, is one I am not competent to answer, and it could not be discussed within the necessary limits of this article. My purpose is simply to draw attention to the startling contrast between the standards of moral judgment, which are commonly adopted amongst us with regard to the conduct of individuals towards each other, and with regard to the conduct and aims of nations towards each other.

It may be granted that there has been a decided advance in the standard of morality incumbent upon an individual if he would earn and keep the good opinion of his neighbours. It is possible that the amount and extent of this advance has been exaggerated, but I think very few will deny that there has been an advance. The striking lesson of the closing years of the century is, that there seems to have been no such corresponding advance with regard to the duties of nations towards each other, and their mutual obligations to, and claims upon each other.

It was not so during the whole of the century. No one can read the literature of the years which followed the passing of Free Trade, and the movement towards democratic ideals which took place in 1848, without being made aware of the high purposes and ideals of most of the leading statesmen and publicists of the time. It is difficult to trace the first signs of decadence from the high position generally taken of the duties and responsibility of nations by so many writers during the period following the Crimean War. Mr. Henry Sidgwick, in his interesting book on "Practical Ethics," traces the idea that the conduct of a State or a Nation must not be judged by the same standard as that by which individual conduct is appraised to German statesmen and writers, and notably to the influence of Prince Bismarck. Professor Sidgwick quotes one writer, Chancellor Rumelin, as follows:—

> The State is self-sufficient. Self-regard is its appointed duty . . . egoism—if you like to call this egoism—is the supreme principle of all politics. The maintenance of the State justifies every sacrifice, and is superior to every moral rule.

This doctrine is, as Professor Sidgwick points out, by no means a new one, and has been generally associated with the name of the mediæval statesman, Machiavelli, but its deliberate defence by high authorities in the latter end of the nineteenth century has come as a surprise to many who have looked upon Machiavellianism as only worthy to be associated with a Borgia and his poison cups. It is not in Germany only, however, that the same thesis has been maintained. In our own country the tone of a prevailing portion of public opinion on the subject of the relations of our own nation to others proceeds upon the assumption that the moral law which we all recognise as binding upon individuals is not in existence as between nations.

It is, for instance, assumed that to induce another nation to trade with you it is justifiable to take forcible possession of territory to which you have no claim, to threaten and to carry into operation stringent measures causing serious loss and damage to both life and property—a course of conduct which, if adopted by one individual to another, would meet with the severest condemnation. Again, it is assumed that, in order to provide employment for what is called the "surplus" population, denied the free access to the productive powers of nature in their own country, it is justifiable, nay commendable, to seize land in the occupation and enjoyment of other nations, and to dispossess its inhabitants, peaceably if possible, if not—well, the fittest must survive, for is it not so written in the second book of Darwin?

Again, it is treated as an axiom requiring no defence, that some races of mankind, notably the Anglo-Saxon, know very much better what is good for the rest of the world than they do themselves; and, therefore, to assume and to hold the functions and powers of Government for their benefit and that of the governing race is so self-evidently a right and proper course to pursue, and so productive in moral and material blessings to the governed, as to justify almost any means used to gain such power. Not only are these positions tacitly assumed, they are also plainly stated and argued. A few instances met with in the course of the writer's reading will suffice among many others.

Archbishop Magee said in 1894:—

> The State was not an individual. It was a trustee for a great many individuals. It had to preserve the rights, the lives, and the properties of those who were entrusted to its charge, and they could not make a greater mistake than to suppose, that the relations of a State to other States . . . were simply those of one individual to another.

Mr. Frederick Greenwood, writing in Cosmopolis in 1898, says:—

> Nations may rightly do things that send individuals to jail, or hang them on scaffolds.

A writer in the Fortnightly Review for August, 1898, referring to Lord Clive, said:—

> Clive met treachery with treachery. It was not moral, but it was in strict accordance with sound sense.

The Daily Press of the last eighteen months will supply innumerable instances of the same class of argument, but it is, perhaps, best to avoid in this inquiry the particular instances of the moment.

It would seem a comparatively easy task to show how fallacious the attempted distinction is between individuals and nations in regard to the moral law, were it not that on all hands the distinction is accepted as an incontrovertible fact.

Plato's teaching on this subject is clear enough :—

A State arises, as I conceive, out of the needs of mankind. When these helpers and partners are gathered together the body of inhabitants is termed a State. The States are as the men are, they grow out of human character.

To quote only one authority more, William Godwin, writing just a hundred years ago, says :—

Society (or the nation) is nothing more than an aggregation of individuals. Its claims and its duties must be the aggregate of their claims and duties.

It may be asked with advantage at what stage in the aggregation of individuals, from a firm to a company, from a company to a corporation, from a corporation to a Parliament, the moral law changes; and that which was wrong when committed by aggregations expressed by one numeral become right when committed by many.

During the last few years we seem to have travelled a long distance away from the influence of the great statesman who declared, "That which is morally wrong cannot be politically right," and who declaimed in a stirring passage :—

It is certain that a new law of nations is gradually taking hold of the mind and coming to sway the practice of the world. The greatest triumphs of our time—a triumph in a region loftier than that of electricity and steam—will be the enthronement of this idea of Public Right as the governing idea of European policy, as the common and precious inheritance of all lands, but superior to the passing opinion of any. The foremost among the nations will be that one which, by its conduct, shall gradually engender in the minds of others a fixed belief that it is just.

"Oh for the touch of a vanished hand, and the sound of a voice that is still!" The greatest need for the new century seems to me to be a reawakening of that finer sense of the duties and obligations of national life to which Mr. Gladstone so continually appealed, not always, it is true, with success, but never without considerable effect. Such finer sense must recognise that the same moral law which is acknowledged to be binding upon individuals must also be binding upon collected individuals acting together, and that when that moral law is infringed retribution will inevitably follow sooner or later.

I have said nothing so far of the higher obligations which THE INQUIRER exists to remind its readers of from week to week. To speak of Christian ideals and aspirations in connection with national rivalries, racial predominance, the expansion of empire at the expense of humanity, the subjugation of huge masses of mankind to an alien yoke, and the gradual assumption by the stronger of the surface of the earth hitherto held by the weaker, is to render still darker the picture which is becoming so familiar to readers of the Daily Press.

Is it, then, true that Christianity is an unworkable theory? Are its foundation doctrines of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man a beautiful dream fit only for the mythical age?

These are questions which we have to answer to-day, and if we believe, as I am sure every reader of THE INQUIRER does believe, that this theory and these doctrines of the relation between God and Man express the highest ideals which have yet been revealed to or won by humanity, if we believe that they contain within them the promise and potentiality of the solution of all our social and national evils, it becomes each one of us to cast aside all false modesty and cowardly acquiescence in the blatant shouts of the opponents of our faith, and take every lawful opportunity of declaring our conviction that only in the practice of the highest moral ideas, in the light of the teaching of Jesus, lies the possibility of progress, moral, spiritual, yes, and even material, alike for individuals and nations.

RICHARD ROBINSON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

"ASSOCIATION SUNDAY."

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me a corner of your valuable paper very cordially to thank the congregations and ministers who so generously and readily responded to the appeal to take a collection in aid of the missionary work of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The list of collections for 1900 has now been completed, and I am glad to say that it is the longest list and the largest amount received since the establishment of these annual collections. The sum of £572 18s. 7d. was received from 192 congregations. There were twenty-one congregations who made collections in 1899 who were unable, owing to the pressure of other claims, to make collections in 1900; but, on the other hand, thirty congregations who did not contribute anything in 1899 made collections in 1900, amounting in all to £103 19s. 2d.

The money received will prove very helpful to the Committee in carrying on their work; and, above all, the sympathy and support which these collections imply will encourage the Committee in their efforts to extend the knowledge of Unitarian Christianity at home and abroad.

OSWALD NETTLEFOLD, Treasurer.
Essex Hall, Jan. 15.

BOYS' BRIGADES.

SIR,—In THE INQUIRER of Jan. 12 appears a letter from Miss F. Hill to which I should like to reply.

Firstly, it is well to mention that workers in our Unitarian and other Free Christian Churches cannot conduct companies of the "Boys' Life Brigade," as this is an organisation which has for its object the "advancement of Christ's Kingdom," &c., exactly as in the Boys' Brigade.

Dr. Paton, who founded the Life Brigade, took an interest in the "B. O. B." when it was first started, and I received a letter from him in which he brought the new Brigade before our notice, and suggested that we should introduce the methods of that society into the "B. O. B." This we have done, obtaining valuable information and help from the "Manual of the Boys' Life Brigade," and I should strongly advise any teachers who are interested in the training of young lads to obtain this manual (price 1s.) from the secretary of the society.

The teaching of the methods of "life-saving" is a splendid thing; but what we uphold is that it will prove to be of much greater interest to boys, and be more systematically taught if the boys first belong to such a brigade company as has been sketched in these columns, and have learned the discipline, obedience, and self-respect which are undoubtedly taught thereby.

As to the "military spirit" in such societies as the "B.O.B.," among many officers of Brigades for boys whom I have known, none have disagreed with me in this: that the drill selected for the purpose in hand from the military books does not foster the war spirit. The boys who come to us enjoy (like other boys) the esprit de corps and drill of soldiers, and some of them have a desire to join the army. But they learn what discipline means, and what its best use is to them in life; they know that there are many battles to fight against wrong in this world, and they count it an honour to belong to an "army" whose purpose is "the advancement of pure and upright living"; and in a few months it is found that there is no increase in the war spirit, and, indeed, those who had the desire to join the army have lost this desire. This is not a theory, I would say, but a statement of fact which has been proven by men actively engaged in the work. And the increasing success of the Boys' Brigade in helping young lads, sometimes poor and uncared for, to become self-respecting, trustworthy men is, I believe, eminent testimony of the fact.

I would add that since the recent articles on the subject appeared in these columns, I have received a letter from the hon. secretary of the Sunday School Association by which the Committee of that Association convey their hearty approval and good wishes for the success of the movement.

JOHN C. BALLANTYNE.
47, Gorst-road, Wandsworth Common, S.W., Jan. 16.

THE COMING TIME.

SIR,—So deep a note of sadness seems to pervade nearly all the expressions in your last two numbers, of our leaders with respect to the century that is to be, that I cannot restrain a youthful word of optimism.

We are told to compare the sentiment of England to-day with that of fifty years ago, when, for instance, the Great Exhibition in Hyde Park dazzled the world with its prophecies of goodwill among men. That was a pageant which sprang from the good heart of a Prince. Again, at the end of the century, a Prince startled the nations by a summons to lay aside the sword and shield. There have always been good princes as well as bad; there have always been good leaders and will be again—Garrisons, Mazzinis, Gladstones—yes, and in humanity's inexhaustibleness, may be even Christs. But what has never been in the history of the world until now is whole nations of reading and writing men and women having the destinies of the earth to decide. To-day, if we would change the fate of nations, we have not to knock at the gates of palaces, but to make endless pilgrimage down the grey streets where rows of dingy doors barricade the homes of the common people. All short cuts to the World's salvation are denied us, and we are at last face to face with one of those dark but pregnant ages of the self-education of a race. Our British democracy—as well as others—is beginning dimly to feel the loosened collar, what wonder if its rule at first is scarce less brutal than the retreating ages of aristocratic sway. But amongst them are patriots and saints no whit less staunch than those of past times, and there is open to them all the knowledge, all the wisdom, all the poetry of our national inheritance. The forces of God are with us, and we stand on the threshold of a far greater era than this earth has yet brought to birth. Surely this century dawns on our present gloom, not with the grey light of invincible faith alone, but with the first distant flush of a golden hope for the long-promised day when men shall all know the Lord "from the least of them unto the greatest." JOSEPH H. WICKSTEED.

Padiham, Lancs., Jan. 14.

A MORNING SERVICE FOR THE YOUNG.

SIR,—Referring to Mr. Gow's kindly criticism of the above which appeared in your last issue, a point is raised therein of more than personal interest.

It is true the service gives no quotation from the "letter" of the utterances of Jesus, or of the Bible, but can that be held to exclude from it the presence of their spirit? Is not the spirit the chief and the all in all?

Because the Act for the Abolition of Slavery was not couched in the phrases of Magna Charta, was it less an outcome of "development," and an instance of "historical continuity"?

Each rose takes fresh form of shape and petals, and, allowing for development through change of outward circumstance, the varying kinds may eventually display different colours, yet their blossoms are still all roses, and their pedigree goes back to the one common root.

The omissions referred to were due solely to my adherence and loyalty to the spirit of the teaching of the Bible, and of Jesus as that teaching defined itself to me. The additions not usual hitherto in children's services owed their existence to the same cause. Every Unitarian makes such omissions and additions; the difference is not in kind, but in degree.

ERNEST BETHAM.

REFERRING to our note of last week as to the Act of 1751 and the beginning of the next century, Mr. P. E. Vizard writes:—

Your correspondent refers to a sentence in the "Tables to find Easter Day," prefixed to all Prayer-books, which form a schedule to the Act of 1751, regulating the Calendar, and, as such, have the force and effect of an Act of Parliament. But note the words. After provision has been made for finding Easter up to 1799, the direction proceeds as follows:—"For the next century, that is from the year 1800 till the year 1899 inclusive," then so and so. This surely does not "decree" that the new or twentieth century shall begin with 1900. All it means is that having made provision for certain reckonings up to a certain date (1799) for the next 100 years, the following provision is made.

Mr. Vizard is no doubt right that the wording of the clause does not amount to a "decree," but surely it implies that in the view of the framers, an actual century would begin at the time they name.

DR. HERFORD'S JUBILEE.

IN our New Year's number we referred to Dr. Brooke Herford's jubilee of service in the ministry, and are glad now to be allowed to publish the following letter addressed to him by the members of the London Unitarian Ministers' Meeting, and Dr. Herford's acknowledgment.

LONDON MINISTERS' MEETING.

To the Rev. Brooke Herford, D.D.

Jan. 1, 1901.

DEAR DR. HERFORD,—Will you permit your London brethren to offer you a cordial greeting on the opening of the jubilee year of your ministry?

The half-century in which you have been called to labour has been a memorable one in the history of religion, as in the world at large, and we rejoice with you in the long-continued endowment of mental and bodily vigour which has, through successive decades, enabled you to do so much in the cause of Christ.

We rejoice that it has been your singular privilege to minister in the two great branches of the English-speaking race with equal success, and, whether in the midst of the operatives of Lancashire and Yorkshire, the commercial life of Manchester and Chicago, or the cultured circles of Boston and London, your influence for good has, by God's blessing, been made abundantly manifest.

We do not forget that your increasing interest in the welfare of other congregations than your own, and your warm-hearted affection for your fellow-ministers, have not only strengthened the churches at large, but have given individuals consolation and inspiration to many a tried and struggling brother, while there are not a few who, having been led by your kindly hand into the ministry, look up to you as in a special sense a channel of apostolical consecration.

Ever busy with voice and pen, you have sent forth many a word of "Courage and Cheer," sowing the good seed far and wide, so that your name is known, honoured, and beloved, from India in the East to California in the West.

Doubtless you have received, and will still receive, abundant testimony from all sorts and conditions of men respecting the sacred fruits of these long years of love and service. Be assured that the harvest is more plenteous than you can ever know in its fulness, and that you are cherished in deeper affection than can be expressed in words. And while to think on these things is an added inspiration to us of this meeting, which owes so much to your initiation, we trust that their recollection will be a source of comfort in your present time of rest, and will shed an abiding benediction on the evening of your days.

Permit us, also, in this hour of thanksgiving and jubilee, to mention with deep respect and sympathy her who, through so many years of faithful and successful toil, has laboured with you in the Gospel; and tenderly to commend you both in humble prayer to Him who is the Source of all strength, and the Giver of all joy.

On behalf of all the brethren,

FRANK K. FREESTON, President.

Bournemouth, Jan. 3, 1901.

MY DEAR MR. FREESTON,—I cannot make any answer at all adequate to that beautiful letter you have sent me from my brethren in our London district, but I feel it very much, and so does Mrs. Herford.

I dare not, indeed, take it as any deserved record of work, but it does tell what I have longed to do, and have held in my heart, along with all the dear friends and fellow-labourers for whom you write.

With kindest regards and thanks to all, and to yourself especially for your part, Ever yours faithfully,

BROOKE HERFORD.

NOT KNOWING.

"Not knowing the things that shall befall me there."—Acts xx. 22.

I KNOW not what will befall me: God hangs
a mist o'er my eyes;
And thus, each step of my onward path,
He makes new scenes arise,
And every joy He sends to me comes like a sweet surprise.

I see not a step before me, as I tread on another year;
But I've left the past in God's keeping—the future His mercy shall clear,
And what looks dark in the distance may brighten as I draw near.

For perhaps the dreaded future is less bitter than I think;
The Lord may sweeten the waters before
I stoop to drink;
Or, if Marah must be Marah, He will stand beside its brink.

It may be He keeps waiting, for the coming of my feet,
Some gift of such rare blessedness, some joy so strangely sweet,
That my lips shall only tremble with the thanks they cannot speak.

O restful, blissful ignorance! 'tis blessèd not to know;
It keeps me still in those mighty arms
which will not let me go,
And lulls my weariness to rest on the bosom that loves me so.

So I go on not knowing—I would not if I might;
I would rather walk in the dark with God
than go alone in the light;
I would rather walk with Him by faith than walk alone by sight.

My heart shrinks back from trials which the future may disclose,
Yet I never had a sorrow but what the dear Lord chose;
So I send the coming tears back with the whispered word, "He knows."

MARY GARDINER BRAINARD.

(In the new edition of Horder's "Treasury of American Sacred Song.")

THE Rev. C. A. Greaves, of Canterbury, reminds us that yesterday our Queen attained to the age of her grandfather, George III., at the time of his death. He was born June 4, 1738, and died Jan. 29, 1820, at the age of eighty-one years and thirty-four weeks. She was born May 24, 1819. How much more beautiful and rich in beneficence is her old age! Though touched by many sorrows, personal to herself, and in heartfelt sympathy with her people, still keenly alive to the great interests of the time, may her life long be granted to us, a fountain of honour in a far truer than any courtly sense, making always for the good of her people!

OBITUARY.

ALD. WALTON, OF STOCKTON.

A LIFE of much public usefulness closed on the 16th inst. by the death of Alderman Thomas Walton, of Stockton-on-Tees, in his eightieth year. Born in the neighbourhood of Huddersfield, Mr. Walton settled as a sawyer in Stockton in 1841, and for nearly fifty years carried on a successful business as a timber merchant. During the ministry of the late Rev. Robert Spears he became a member of the Unitarian congregation, and in politics was an ardent Liberal. For many years he was a member of the Town Council, and in 1895 served as mayor. He held other offices of public trust, and was an old Freemason. His loss will be keenly felt by the Stockton congregation.

THE SOUL'S CHRONOLOGY.

THE soul's chronology, if we may use the metaphor, is based on observation of our spiritual sunrises :—

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

That an empire was founded or a prophet born may be of sufficient importance to decide the world's calendar, but for the soul such dates are of no consequence, it numbers its days by their fulness: its epochs celebrate deliverance from sin, or further revelations of God; its Golden Circles are formed by the meeting of love's arcs in the heavens of God's peace; great thoughts announce the completion of its eras, and its "centuries" are the developments of mighty and holy emotions.

We need to dwell upon these points of departure, milestones of progress in our higher life; to number those days in order that our hearts may recognise not only the progress made, but the guidance wherewith we have been guided. We need to look back to the days of our ignorance—early days, may we not call them?—and then to recall the illuminating flash, the flash that knew no time. We should gaze with reverence upon the "day" of our soul life when we really bowed our head before God, and arose consecrated to a service of which before we had known nothing. Every experience of the soul is a "day" for us to number—tumultuous or calm, covering years or only seconds of earth-life, it matters not—treasure it as a memory, as a source of gratitude, as a guarantee of more such "days" to come.

As the new year of earth life, dawning on men's eyes, fills their minds with new plans and determinations, as the counting up of the years already past creates anxiety to spend the remainder to the best advantage, so, to carry on the parable, must the soul, surveying its holy days, numbering them with joy, gain heart of wisdom and deepen ever its experience of God and God's love.

ARTHUR HARVIE.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

THERE is a picture which, perhaps, you may have seen in the windows of some print shops. If you see it again, do stop and look at it. It is meant to represent Jesus standing by a door, with a lighted lantern in his left hand, and with his right hand he is knocking at the door and listening for an answer from inside to say "Come in." Look at his face and see how much he longs to hear those words. But the door is tightly shut, and you can see how long it is since it was opened, for the latch and hinges are rusty, and weeds and a tangle of thorns and briars have grown up over and around it, which make it now almost impossible to open. Is that why the face of Jesus looks so sad, and grieved, and longing? I think it is. Underneath the picture are the words, "Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

The street door is the door of the soul; the picture is a symbol or parable. If the door were opened the light would pour in from the lantern which Jesus carries; but the door is shut, and so the soul is dark.

Just so does God knock at our door. He waits for us to listen. Do we hear?

Sometimes we do. We are tempted, and we know it is His voice that tells our inmost heart not to yield.

Paul said, "See that ye refuse not him that speaketh." If we neglect and do not attend to His voice, what are we doing? We are letting the weeds and briars cross the door where God knocks and waits to enter. He does not force the door; he waits till we open it. We must yield willingly. But if we do not open the door when first he knocks the weeds grow fast, and the hinges grow rusty, and it will be harder to open the next time; a great effort will be wanted to get it open.

A boy does wrong, and he is afraid to own it. Afraid? Of what? Of being punished, or of having earned a scolding? Then he is a coward, if he tries to shirk what he has earned. So he tells a lie, to hide it; or he tries to make out that someone else is to blame. He heard the knock at the door; he knew he was wrong; but he did not open; he tried not to listen. And as the door was shut he could not see what we see in the picture—the sad and grieved and anxious face of Jesus waiting for us to open. And as the door was shut it was dark inside—the light was shut out, and so he did not fully see how wrong he was. If the only light which we have to see with is dim, we can only see dimly. "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness."

What does the boy hear now outside the door, besides the gentle knock? He would like to go and see, but if he listens to the voice and opens the door, he will have to confess that he did wrong and then told a lie about it. No, he will not open the door. The sound he hears is of the thorns and brambles blowing more and more across the door, and making it more and more difficult to open it. Presently the door will be so overgrown and blocked up that it will not open at all, till some great strong effort is made to open it, and till he asks for help to push it open. Then, perhaps, with wounds and pain it will be opened, and the light will stream in, and he will see how wrong he was.

So the picture is a parable. Listen for the knock, and run at once to open. Clear away the weeds, cut down the briars and thorns and keep the entrance open; the whole place will then be full of light, and no evil thing will be able to stay there.

And there is one more thing which the parable shows us, and that we read in the face of Jesus in the picture. His face is full of sadness and of longing. Children, the sadness is brought by his finding that door shut and overgrown; the longing is for the answer from within which shows that we are willing to open it. Is not this a reflection of what God feels? Do we ever remember that our sin is a grief to God; and that He, as our Father, longs for us to answer to His voice when He speaks to us?

Let us carry that thought with us, and "see that we refuse not Him that speaketh." GERTRUDE MARTINEAU.

THE PILGRIM'S PSALM.

FRIEND and Father of mankind,
While the ages onward roll,
Still aspires the immortal mind,—
Goes on pilgrimage the Soul.

Times and seasons thou hast none,—
Hear our hymn at break of day;
Speak with us at set of sun
As thy pilgrims kneel to pray.

Go before, the pilgrim's Guide,
Lead us on with mystic gleams;
Walk with us at eventide;
Visit us in nightly dreams.

With the promised land in sight,
Lo, we lift our suppliant hands;
Cloud by day and Fire by night!
Guide us o'er the desert sands.

Fire by night and Cloud by day!
Lead thy saints from age to age,
While they wend upon their way
In this mortal pilgrimage.

Guide us to thy holy hill,
As through wildering ways we roam
Onward, upward, heavenward still,
Pilgrims unto God our Home.

ROBERT WILSON.

A FRIEND from Boston, U.S.A., writes: "We have had an impressive out-of-door service to usher in the new century. The weather favoured us. Thousands of people packed the side-walks and part of the common near the State House, at a quarter to twelve. A choir of a hundred voices sang from the balcony of the State House—

Be Thou, O God, exalted high.

Edward Everett Hale read, so that the crowd could hear, 'Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations,' and so on through the Psalm. The choir sang again, and then came the Lord's Prayer, clear and reverent on the midnight air, Dr. Hale's voice never failing; then we sang "America." The service was most impressive, and is a memory worth having."

WHAT is wise? To listen quietly each hour to the voice within, for it is divine. To pray to God, and to let the loving thought of Him be in each act. To serve God by serving and loving all the world.—H. W. Dresser.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are:—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows:—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, JANUARY 19, 1901.

CONCENTRATE, AND GO FORWARD.

YES, both! Gather up your whole strength, show that you have strength and care to use it. That is the word for our Free Churches, as we stand now at the beginning of the new time. There are signs in more than one part of the country that our people feel the significance and urgency of the "new occasion," which must teach new duty. It is true that the leaders of our National Conference as yet have made no sign publicly, and have issued no appeal, and whatever tentative suggestions of a common Twentieth Century Fund were made, met with no sufficient response; but in more than one province concerted efforts are being made to mark the dawn of the new century by a fresh awakening, more strenuous efforts in the joy of a living faith, more determined and self-sacrificing service.

Last week we published a full account of what is being done by the Yorkshire Unitarian Union. The opening service of consecration was heart-stirring and uplifting, but the test is yet to come. Are the people giving as they can? Are they determined, at some cost, at personal sacrifice that will be felt, and gladly felt in a true and noble cause, to go forward? Surely faith will remove their mountains, and they will at least secure the added strength of service in the ministry, which will infuse new courage and energy into the feeble members, open the way for extended efforts and quicken the whole body with new life!

At the same time we heard from the Manchester district of what has been done through special services in many of the churches there, and what is still to be done in the coming weeks, while a similar effort is to be made by the East Cheshire Union. May the result in every instance be, not merely to waken fresh interest in the controversial aspects of Unitarian theology, but to deepen the religious life of the churches, to baptise with a new spirit of devotion and unselfish service, that the Gospel may be preached indeed, and hungry hearts be satisfied—that the churches may realise as never before the joy of a true ministry, and in every quarter of the field people may come gladly to join in fellowship with those who are glad in the service of GOD and a true brotherhood.

This week our correspondent from the Midlands, whose modesty, to our regret, insists on veiling itself under a single initial, sends us an interesting account of the condition of the churches in that district, and adds some suggestive thoughts. Since his letter reached us we have received an announcement of celebrations to be held in Birmingham on Jan. 20, 25, and 27, when the Unitarians of that city are to unite in services of dedication and thanksgiving, that all members of their churches and missions may be drawn into friendly co-operation for the work that lies before them.

It is hoped that the result will be a drawing together in closer fellowship of hearts that are already committed to the great enterprise, and an accession of earnestness and power, not only in our congregations, but also in their impact on the teeming life around them.

Is it too much to hope that, as a consequence, our friends in the Midlands will take seriously to heart what GEORGE DAWSON once called the "petty cash account" of their Association? Birmingham supports most generously its own special Missions to the Poor; but can the same be said of its care for church fellowship throughout the district, for the support and encouragement of those who serve in difficult outposts, for the extension to neglected quarters of the privileges it enjoys? Our correspondent makes one suggestion, which, if carried out, would mean a genuine advance in unity of purpose and fellow-feeling, and capacity for work; but, perhaps, the Midland Association is silently determining on greater things, which after these united meetings will become apparent.

These to which we have referred are among the chief centres of the life of our churches, to which, from past experience, we rightly look for the greatest achievements, and an inspiring leadership. London also, as we know, has been astir, and secured last year its great opportunity in the Church Building Fund, and the subsidiary Fund which is setting free crippled energies in churches already in the field; while in other parts of the country there is the same desire to be doing better work.

And so we say, Concentrate, and go Forward!

The aim should not be doubtful, nor the spirit in which the advance is to be made. Dr. DRUMMOND declared it in the first of the contributions which we have received from a number of our friends, "At the Dawn of a Century." There is, as he said, a Divine Life to be incorporated within our life, "a fountain of eternal blessedness and peace springing up within, and turning to finest issues the earthly nature which otherwise no culture could redeem from sterility." There is the ideal of Divine Sonship, which through CHRIST has become a living force among men, through faith and admiration and love to be given an entrance into our mind, as a kindling power of life, "nurtured there through the sympathy of souls that have been touched by the same heavenly fire." Thus our ideal must be "the Life of CHRIST within the heart, creating a holy and beneficent brotherhood, content to bear the cross, and conquer the world by love."

In every effort, therefore, to strengthen our churches and go forward, the great aim must be religion, in the CHRIST-like spirit, for the nurture of the true life of the children of GOD. We are to make Homes of the Spirit in the only way that is possible to us, in loyalty to truth, therefore with the clear teaching of our Unitarianism and our reverent interpretation of the mind of CHRIST, but always for the one purpose of the nurture of that true life, that living souls may be brought into communion with the FATHER, and His will may be done on earth as it is in heaven.

This we are to do, where we have already Houses of Prayer, and companies of brethren gathered, but with renewed consecration and more complete devotion in unselfish service; and we are to do it, to the utmost of our strength, wherever the call comes to us to help our brothers' need, to go out into desolate places, to build fresh houses, where the hungry may be gathered in, and a true ministry may be established.

We cannot escape the call. It is not of our choice that we are witnesses to truth in a manner that gives us a separate place of service in the world; and we must make our own contribution to the spiritual uplifting, the cleansing and ennobling of our common life, the healing of its wounds, the comforting of its sorrows, in every way that opens to us, for the hastening of the Kingdom of GOD.

To what more glorious service could we be called? Into what happier fellowship could we be invited? Our Free Churches have a great opportunity, if only we will be faithful to their high trust. But the demand is not for any light or idle thing. It will be answered only by brave and devoted men and women, who will give abundantly of their substance and of their strength, because they have first given themselves to GOD, and ask to be used in His service.

ALL HAIL TO THE DAWNING CENTURY!*

BY THE REV. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

I STOOD at one end of a long corridor. At the end at which I stood it was brightly lighted, but the light grew dim toward the far end. At my end there were many figures moving and all was life and energy. At the far end I dimly discerned what looked like tombs, and there was a great stillness. Tapestries hung from the walls. One of the first tapestries at the far end represented Wellington on the crest of the hill at Waterloo. Then there were others showing riots and bloodshed in such towns as Bristol, Nottingham, and Derby. About half-way along the gallery was a tapestry showing the tragedies of the Mutiny, at Lucknow and Cawnpore. Further along and nearer me was represented Gladstone addressing the people of Midlothian—and then, nearer still, Gladstone pointing across the seas to the massacres in Armenia; and at the very end were pictured the burning farms of South Africa, and young Englishmen lying wounded and dying on the veldt.

The corridor was the nineteenth century. Away at the other end, at the beginning, hung heavy curtains, and beyond them, I understood, was the corridor of the eighteenth century; and others again there were beyond that, seventeenth, sixteenth, and I know not how many more. But now I turned and stepped forward and passed through the curtains that separated the nineteenth century from the twentieth. And what did I see? The light was dim and I could not stretch my vision far. I could hear the clash of steel and the rattle of rifles close around me, but of the beyond I could see and hear nothing. The corridor was empty, hollow were the echoes, no furniture was there, no tapestries woven along the walls. It all had yet to be made. And then I perceived that it was too vast to be called a corridor, and that a great throng had come with me through that curtained doorway—statesmen, writers, preachers, soldiers, merchants, crowd upon crowd of working men, women, children countless for their multitude. And I knew that we—that they and I—had to determine what the twentieth century should be and to make it. And a passionate prayer went up from my soul to God that His men and women might have understanding and grace and conscience to furnish well this great empty, echoing chamber, and to hang its walls with tapestries of peace and knowledge and beauty and wise human ministries.

I strained my eyes towards the further end of this hall at the entrance of which I stood. I strove to discern the folds of the curtains there. Now it seemed to me that all was dark, that they hung heavy and unillumined. Now there seemed to shimmer through them a soft and rosy light, a light as of sweet and beautiful promise for the centuries to come.

All prophecy is vain. We long—ah! how passionately some of us are longing—to see what the dawning century has in store. We have overmastering desire for good—good for the Church, for our country, for the world. But many of us have also most heavy fear of evil. There are signs and portents that seem very dark. But we cannot tell; we cannot read that as yet unwritten scroll, scroll of the records of the twentieth Christian century. We cannot prophesy. All prophecy is vain.

Yes, all prophecy is vain, if by prophecy you mean mere prediction. But there is a deeper and larger meaning to that ancient word. The prophet of old was one who linked together in an indissoluble bond the conduct of men and the reward meted out of God. He said that if Israel did well, Jehovah would protect Israel; that if Israel did ill, Jehovah would punish Israel. Often the rewards or chastisements he predicted did not come literally true; for he adventured from the principle, which is the impregnable stronghold of this greater prophecy, to the particular fulfilment, which is matter of inference only; and one may easily go wrong in particular inference. But in principle he was right; and the story of Israel, like the story of every nation that ever dwelt on the earth, is the working out in history of the tremendous, the awful, the glorious fact of the moral government of God. Righteousness only exalteth a nation. Selfishness, violence, luxury, these alone bring it to shame.

Now there is no getting over the fact that the summing-up of the nineteenth century is a huge disappointment to most men of understanding and of conscience. Let me recall its opening hopes in the words of one who is fast taking rank as a good and wise teacher in our midst:—

At the dawn of the century that is gone, old men dreamed dreams and young men saw visions, and the dreams and visions were bright and beautiful. The might and majesty of a people had been manifested in France, and, in spite of a temporary lapse into military despotism, the lesson had gone home to millions of men over the face of Europe, and liberty, equality, fraternity passed from vague aspirations into hopeful ideals of present policy. The new age of reason was swiftly dispelling the superstitious clouds with which kings and priests and aristocracies had kept from the people the knowledge of their rights and their power. A few decades would suffice to transform the ancient order and establish peace, prosperity and happiness among men. The dream of such men as Wordsworth, Shelley, Godwin, Owen, was not so extravagant as it now appears. The new doctrine of Free Trade which was to bind nations by a common bond of palpable self-interest, harmonised with the loftier feelings of cosmopolitan humanity that filled men like Kant, Rousseau, Goethe, and was the distinctive badge of free thought in politics. The barriers of nations seemed visibly melting away, an age of militarism was giving way before the new industrialism in which the marvels of mechanical invention, and of the newborn sciences, opened visions of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice. A peaceful educated proletariate should everywhere arise and, handling the keys of knowledge, enter upon their kingdom; reason and justice would recognise the equal rights of all men to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and truly national or international co-operation would distribute political power and economic resources so as to realise the equality of all men.*

Such were the golden hopes a hundred years ago. And the first half-century saw much to justify these hopes. A thirty years' peace fostered industry and invention. The awful crash of war came then in the fifties; but again in the sixties and the seventies came much noble and progressive legislation making for the happiness of the people. And it seemed as if men looking back from 1900 would discern—in England at least, and amongst the Anglo-Saxon race—a real and large advance in all that goes to make the kingdom of God on earth.

But now has come the close; and with the opening of the twentieth century we are forced to recognise that silently and surely certain great and sinister forces of evil have been growing into power and now threaten the very foundations of civilisation and religion. These are luxury and greed in the daily habits of men, and the colossal power of money—of the great material interests welded together in unscrupulous alliance—in the affairs of government and political management. So that the new hopes of the new century are faltering hopes, hopes overcast by a great and dark shadow; and if we have faith for the future—as I for one still have—it must be founded in the conviction that certain great and noble virtues of our race will yet come once more to the front, will refuse to be overwhelmed, will lay hold of our civilisation yet in this twentieth century and compel it to the ways of righteousness and of true and enduring national greatness.

Those great and noble virtues, which I believe still to lie close to the base of English character, are a real reverence for truth, a real love of good, a real passion for justice.

You will have observed that an enterprising periodical has gathered from a large number of distinguished men their several opinions as to what is the greatest need of the twentieth century. There is a considerable consensus of authority in assertion of the need of simpler lives and more unselfish motives. But there is one answer that stands out conspicuous for brilliancy and truth. It comes from one from whose words and actions I have often profoundly differed; but I do homage to the genius and the strength of his reply. Asked what is the greatest need of the twentieth century, Mr. Keir Hardie gives his answer in a single word, a single syllable. That word, that syllable, is "Men."

"Men!" Yes, God knows that is the need of our time, the need of the impending time. On the supply of men depend the issues of this dawning century—whether when it dies, the greatness of England shall be no more, the leadership of the human race be passed to some worthier stock, or whether still everywhere the oppressed, the struggling, striving nationalties shall look to England as the heart and centre of human freedom, the foundation of righteousness, the upholder of truth and justice between the hemispheres and continents.

"Men!" Yes, men. And let me add "and women." Those two words would have made Keir Hardie's the complete, the perfect answer to that momentous question set to him to solve.

Yes, Men and Women.

What do we mean? Are there not plenty? Are not our cities swarming with men and women? Are not they spreading over every quarter of the globe till some surmise that a few generations hence there will lack earth-space for them all? Men and women our want! Why, how they teem in their myriads and millions.

Ah! but it is not quantity, but quality; nor the number, but the nature of the Men and Women of which we think.

* A sermon preached in Hope-street Church, Liverpool, on Sunday evening, Jan. 6, 1901.

* J. A. Hobson, in the New Age, Jan. 3, 1901.

For what is a man after the fashion which Keir Hardie meant when he said, "The greatest need of the coming time is Men"?

A Man: first, he is a being differing from any other on this earth in that he has a free mind, a power of reason that can grip great problems, see through many a bewilderment, lay hold of the factors of truth amid the wilderness of falsehood, and knit them together in propositions, in principles, in laws of the reason for the guidance of himself and of his comrades. The true man does not take his opinions, but he makes them. It is nothing to him whether the crowd shouts this way or that. It is nothing to him that this doctrine is praised, that that is blamed. He knows that the crowd is often wrong, that it may swing round to-morrow. He knows that the true doctrine is often blamed, the false doctrine assiduously praised. He seeks facts, orders them according to the laws of thought, builds up conclusions carefully, dispassionately, allows no sweep of popular passion to blur his intellectual perceptions. Such men are rare. But the man who thus keeps his mind in freedom and in intellectual activity, is, so far, such a man as Keir Hardie had in mind when he said, "The primal need of our new century is men."

And, secondly, a man—a man worthy to be called a man—has will. He takes his own aim, pursues his own course, knows difficulty only as a thing that is to be overcome, discouragement only as a foe that is to be disregarded, failure, disappointment, only as challenges to a fresh attempt. He decides the thing he desires to achieve, and he goes for it steadfastly, with even pulse, clear eye, and steady step, though men smile or sneer or scorn or scold or scourge. So far, his purpose, the thing he wills, may be worthy or unworthy, mean or noble, selfish or chivalric, to make a fortune or to bless a city, to wrest to himself great power or to do a service to his nation, to hear his name spoken by the lips of thousands or to redeem the souls of sinners. But the characteristic is that he brings will to bear on it, and advances towards it by the unswerving pressure and force of will. Such power of mind and will had that rough democrat in view when he said, "What we need in this new-born time is men."

What we need is Men—men of free mind and steadfast will. Yes; but one more qualification goes to the man who is a Man such as our epoch needs. Not only free mind and steadfast will, but mind and will consecrated to the highest ends. Then is the man equipped indeed, and whatever be his rank and place, lowly and small though seem his sphere, he is a Man, a Son of God, a Maker and Shaper of his time. There must beat in him great and noble passions, such passions as cleanse and sanctify the soul, passion for truth, passion for justice, passion for progress, passion for freedom. The cobbler at his bench, the sailor before the mast, if there burn in him passions such as these, is a greater man than the scheming statesman who plans for his own advancement, or the general who wins battles in an unworthy cause. What we need is Men, and it is these that are the Men; and there is no youth now entering on the untrodden way of this new century but, if he brace himself and make resolve, may be of the band of Men who are of this fashion, and who make the times in which they live.

What we need is Men. So said Keir Hardie, and I add a conjunction and a noun: What we want is Men and Women.

The true Woman also may have all these high qualities of the nobler manhood. The time is past when we could think that the march of reason and the building up of thought was not for women. They, too, have power of mind which they may train, if they will, to the formation of independent opinion, the structure of personal conviction, the seizure of new forms and aspects of living truth. But there is something more for them—a responsibility which rests on them even more heavily, if possible, than on the men. For it is part of the subtle influence of sex on sex that the trend and drift of the character of any age depends even more upon the women than on the men. Where the women think lightly of idleness and selfishness, where the women give currency to conventional standards of right and wrong, where the women care little about truth or justice or freedom, above all where the women care little about purity in men, there but few men will rise to the stature of the noblest manhood; the majority will conform to the standard which the women set. But where the women cherish a great and high ideal, there the men will be awakened and aroused. For if a man love a woman in whom glows this lofty loyalty to truth and right, be she mother, sister, betrothed, or wife, or friend, that ideal passion passes from her to him, cleansing all the chambers of his soul, and setting before his spiritual vision the high calling of a son of God. Women often think that there is hardly anything that they can do. They are careless of the great and holy trust of womanhood. Yet not only have they, like men, opportunities of direct and invaluable service, but to them is given a power of influencing character, of setting up ideals, of impregnating with high purposes, which few men possess. And if we are to name but one, it would be at least as true to say, "What the age wants is women," as this which the sturdy democrat has said, "What the twentieth century needs is men."

And so, All hail! thou dawning century with thy unsolved mystery of 30,000 days. What shalt thou bring forth? What grace and glory, what virtue and high fame? What wrongs and woes, what shame and bitter tears of penitence? We cannot tell. We can only pray "God give thee Men and Women." God give thee soldiers brave and loyal, not to wield the sword, but by pen and speech, by toil and deed, to serve and save. God give thee statesmen wise and good, patriots with that higher patriotism which cares most that the nation shall be just and true. God give thee poets who shall sing to thee pure ideals. God give thee preachers who shall rouse the conscience, seers who shall tell of God, prophets who shall make His word of fire burn in the hearts of men. God give thee merchants honourable, diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. God give thee patient loyal workers with the hands, who shall do honest work, shaping honourably the wood and the stone and the metal and the cotton and the wool to their ordered purposes. God give thee Men of free and strong intelligence, of unswerving will, of consecrated purpose. God give thee Women who shall make homes beautiful, who shall speak for truth, for justice and for purity, and instil into the growing minds and opening hearts of the children and the youths reverence to God and principles and purposes which shall make for the coming of His kingdom of peace and love.

So when our children's children draw near to the curtains that hang at the far end of this long corridor into which our feet have passed, may they look back and see that love has gone far to conquer hate, that service has displaced greed, that temperance has conquered luxury, that peace has won her victory over the violence of war. And setting their hands to draw aside those hanging folds, may they gaze into another century on beyond, which shall be filled with the spirit of Christ and the light of the love of God!

LOWER MOSLEY-STREET SCHOOLS, MANCHESTER.

J. H. REYNOLDS' JUBILEE.

ON Saturday, Jan. 12, a most interesting meeting was held at the Lower Mosley-street Schools, Manchester, for the purpose of presenting an address to Mr. John Henry Reynolds on the celebration of his fifty years' connection with the schools, and also to present to Mrs. Reynolds an oil painting of her husband and a replica of the same to the schools.

Among many old friends present were the Rev. S. A. Steinthal (in the chair), Colonel Pilcher, the Rev. E. P. and Mrs. Barrow, Mr. S. B. Worthington, Mr. and Mrs. R. Wade, the Rev. C. Roper, Mr. A. Nixon, Mr. N. Dumville, and Mr. T. Ashcroft.

Letters of regret were received from many friends unable to be present, and among some read were those from the Misses Gaskell, the Rev. J. Drummond, the Rev. W. H. Drummond, Messrs. C. E. Schwann, M.P., George Smith, R. D. Darbishire, Ald. Hoy, and Mr. Harry Rawson.

The CHAIRMAN, in his opening remarks, said it gave him the greatest pleasure to preside at that representative meeting. He spoke of the long services of Mr. Reynolds in the schools and the great work he had done and was still doing, not only for the schools, but for the whole of the citizens of Manchester, and said that the letters of Alderman Hoy and Mr. Harry Rawson testified to the greatness of the aims of Mr. Reynolds.

Mr. S. B. WORTHINGTON said that sixty-five years ago he taught in the old school in the cellar off Mosley-street, and of all the ceremonies he had taken part in none gave him greater pleasure than this. The members of the school and its friends were doing great honour to themselves and the schools, in taking this step to honour Mr. Reynolds, who with his untiring energy had given the whole devotion of his life to his work. He was honoured, not only in their midst in Manchester, but all over the country, and no meeting of persons interested in Technical Education in this country was completely representative if Mr. Reynolds was not present.

Colonel PILCHER, in making the presentation to Mr. Reynolds, said to him it was a great privilege to act as the mouthpiece of the members and friends of the school on that auspicious and almost unique occasion, for he entered the schools as a teacher at almost the same time that Mr. Reynolds entered as a scholar and had the opportunity of watching the development of the abilities of Mr. Reynolds. It was no light thing for a man of forty years of age to change the whole tenour of his life and to build up a successful career, yet Mr. Reynolds had done this, for he was in his fortieth year when appointed to the secretaryship of the Mechanics Institution; and when later on the Manchester Corporation took over the institution and gave it the title of Technical School Mr. Reynolds was appointed director, and every one knew to what a successful issue the work of that institution had been brought. It gave him the great pleasure to present the address which was read as follows:—

Dear Mr. Reynolds,—

Your friends of the Lower Mosley-street Schools gladly avail themselves of the fiftieth anniversary of your entering the schools on the first Sunday in January, 1851, to express to you their joy that you celebrate the day not only still connected with the school, but with a rich record of self-devoted and successful service rendered to all the branches of the school and to unnumbered members of its classes as well as the great city in which it has been a beneficial institution.

They cannot recount the many ways in which you have since you were a scholar in the day and Sunday-school repaid the good influences you received there by earnest consecration to the promotion of all that you deemed the noblest purposes of the school which you have loved so warmly, but they gratefully recognise how the achievements of your riper years have shed reflected honour on the training place of your younger days.

The portrait which will hang upon the school walls amid memorials of those whom you have loved and revered as your own teachers and fellow-workers will be an encouragement to others to tread in your footsteps, and a proof to them that faithful services such as you have given ever win respect, gratitude and love.

With earnest prayer that you may for many years be spared to see the fruits of your labour and rejoice in the respect and love of your friends.—We are, &c.

Miss HERFORD, in a few well-chosen kindly words, presented the portrait to Mrs. Reynolds.

Mr. REYNOLDS, who was received with loud applause, and the singing of "Auld Lang Syne," said he began to feel after all the kind words that had been said that he belonged to the past century. He felt that there were very many men and women who had been in the school far more worthy of such memories to-day. Although he had not always agreed with his colleagues, he assured them his differences had always been in the truest possible sincerity. He called the Lower Mosley-street schools the School of Freedom, and whatever he was to-day he owed the whole of his success to the ideas and examples put before him in the old school. It had been a true Alma Mater to him. Other duties had for twenty-three years claimed the greater part of his time and he had not given that service that he formerly did. How much he could do in the few years left to him he could not say, but what he could do he would most willingly. He felt that the Schools were honouring not only himself, but his whole family, and on their behalf he thanked them most heartily.

Mr. A. E. STEINTHAL, in accepting the portrait on behalf of the schools, said it was a memorial to all those present and to come, of long and faithful services.

Rev. E. P. Barrow, Messrs. A. Nixon, T. C. Abbott, R. Burrows, S. Ashcroft, R. Wade and H. Hyde, also took part in the proceedings.

NOTES FROM AMERICA.

WITHIN the past few weeks several events have occurred on this side which may interest Unitarian readers in England.

First of all, we have dedicated four new church buildings—one in Los Angeles, California, two in the South, and one in Ottawa, the capital of Canada. Of this last some of you have heard. It is a neat and well-devised stone structure, occupying one of the finest sites in the city. The Ottawa Unitarian Society is only about two years old. But under the vigorous leadership of the Rev. Albert Walkley, who was sent there by the American Unitarian Association, it has had a most gratifying growth. Generous aid in building its house of worship has been received from churches and individuals in the States, and especially from the Women's Alliance, an organisation that is always lending a hand to good enterprises. A donation of £100, also, was received from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. This gift was especially prized, and did more than perhaps any other to strengthen and encourage the brave young society.

A recent event of considerable interest has been the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the first Unitarian service held on the Pacific coast of America. Up to fifty-two years ago that whole coast, where now are great and populous States of English-speaking people, was occupied solely by Red Indians and a few Spaniards. But in 1848 gold was discovered in California. The result was an immense rush of gold-seekers to the new region in 1849-50. The immigrants came for the most part by sea, and the port at which they landed was San Francisco, then a region of bare sand-hills. But in an incredibly short time a town sprang up. Late in 1850, just fifty years ago, a Unitarian minister from New England appeared upon the scene. Soon arrangements were made for him to preach in a rude little hall. After the service twenty-five men remained to provide means for the continuation of worship regularly, and to take measures for the establishment of a Unitarian church. In a few weeks "The First Unitarian Society of San Francisco" was organised. Already the town had a population of many thousands, sheltered in tents and buildings of the crudest structure. But perhaps a more strange conglomeration of humanity was never seen. It was a city of men without families, without women or children, without the gentle and civilising influences that belong to home. It was a community of men alone, drawn from every part of the world by the wild chase for gold, with no background of history or family ties, with no attachments to the soil, with no cohesion, with no common purpose except material gain. How could a church take root in such a soil? And yet it did, and vigorous root. San Francisco has now become a great and wealthy city, with commercial houses doing business with all parts of the world, with palatial residences and parks and art, with a well-organised and most complete educational system, including schools of science, technical and professional schools, and two large universities among the best equipped and most amply endowed in America. Her religious growth has kept pace with her commercial and educational development. We have now in the city and its suburbs five Unitarian churches, and on the Pacific Coast thirty. Our first church in San Francisco has had a distinguished and influential career. To its pulpit in 1860 came the brilliant Thomas Starr King who, in his too short ministry of four years, made the Unitarian name known and respected from British Columbia to Mexico. His ministry covered the trying time of the American war for the Union, and it is believed that his energy and eloquence were more effective than any other single cause in preventing the State of California from seceding from the Union and joining the Southern Confederacy. When he died the whole State mourned his loss. A fine statue to his memory stands in the Golden Gate Park in San Francisco, placed there by the city. His church was fortunate in choosing as his successor the Rev. Horatio Stebbins, a man of great dignity and ability, who preserved for his pulpit the prestige which Mr. King had gained for it, and throughout his long ministry of thirty-four years (until his resignation two years ago) was perhaps the most influential clergyman in California. It was to this pulpit that the Rev. Stopford W. Brooke, son of your honoured Stopford A. Brooke, of London, was called last year, after serving the church six months with marked acceptance. The regret was general and most sincere that he did not accept the call.

I began to tell of the recent celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of Unitarian work in San Francisco. Naturally the most notable meeting was held in the First Church; but the other Unitarian churches of the city and vicinity, and, indeed, most of our leading churches on the coast, observed the day, so that the occasion was one of widespread and general interest.

I wonder if you have had reports on your side of a very significant meeting recently held in New York. It was an interdenominational "Conference of Religion" of two days' duration. The denominations most active in it were the Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Unitarians; but ten other denominations were represented, including the Jews. It followed somewhat in the path of the Parliament of Religions which attracted so much attention in connection with the World's Exposition in Chicago in 1893. The attendance was large, the spirit was most earnest. We have probably never before in this country had a great religious gathering of any kind from which the sectarian spirit was so wholly absent, and in which orthodox and liberals worked together so fraternally and heartily.

The motto of the Conference was: "Religions are many, Religion is one. Religion unites those whom theology divides." The aim was to see what the different religious bodies have in common, and what they can do together. Surely this is something new in the world. The Conference adjourned to meet in one of the interior cities of the State in a year, and again in New York in two years.

Thus it is hoped that the good work which has been so auspiciously begun will go on.

It will not be out of place if, in closing, I turn from America to England and India long enough (now that the terrible Indian famine is passing away) to express my very sincere and earnest gratitude to the English Unitarians whose generosity flowed for so many months into the Brahmo Somaj Famine Fund, and made that fund such a marked and gratifying success. Numerous and ample reports and letters have come to Mr. Pritchard and others in England, many of which have been printed, showing the deep gratitude of the Indian people for the aid extended to them in their distress, and the large amount of suffering that has been relieved by the Fund. Extended reports and letters have also come to me from private sources, which, if I could lay them before your readers, would make every donor to the Fund increasingly grateful that he had a part, however humble, in this work of true Christian brotherhood. As the one who, with some trembling, ventured to take the initiative in appealing through THE INQUIRER and the Christian Life for the creation of such a Famine Fund, I want personally to thank all givers, from Miss Durning-Smith whose generous cheque for £500 was received almost by return mail after the appeal went out, down to the children in so many homes, who with unselfish hearts sent their penny savings.

J. T. SUNDERLAND.

Toronto, Dec. 29.

SOUTH-EAST WALES UNITARIAN SOCIETY.

THE quarterly meeting was held at the General Baptist Chapel, Nottage, on Monday, Jan. 14, Mr. G. CARSLAKE THOMPSON, of Cardiff, in the chair.

The General Committee met in the afternoon at 3.15. Reports were received from different churches, which indicated that the various activities in connection with the Church life of the district were efficiently carried on, in spite of the fact that several congregations are at the present time without settled ministers.

The question of a Twentieth Century Fund, which has been initiated for the purpose mainly of assisting in liquidating debts on chapels in Wales, was considered. It would greatly rejoice the hearts of workers to see a Welsh Unitarian Fund of £3,000. Those who know of the great work that waits to be done in South Wales will warrant that such a fund would only be put to good uses, the liquidating of chapel debts receiving first consideration. It was resolved that "this Society heartily commends the Twentieth Century Fund to the churches, and asks them to open a subscription list forthwith." With the hearty co-operation of all Welsh Unitarians, the movement cannot fail to be a great success.

At 5 o'clock the delegates and friends sat down to tea, kindly provided in the school-room by the Nottage friends.

The Ministers' Union met in the chapel at 6 o'clock, the Rev. R. J. JONES, M.A., occupying the chair. The subject under consideration was "The Basis of Membership for our Churches." An interesting and profitable discussion followed, to which all the ministers contributed.

At 7.30 a public meeting, preceded by a devotional service conducted by the Rev. DAVID EVANS (Congregational), was held in the chapel, the Rev. W. J. PHILLIPS in the chair. The subject was "A Few Words of Encouragement to the Congregation in View of our Responsibilities and Duties in the Twentieth Century." The following ministers addressed the meeting, in speeches of about ten minutes each:—The Revs. D. J. Williams, David Rees, W. Tudor Jones, David Evans, T. J. Jenkins, J. T. Davies, and R. J. Jones. The addresses were listened to with rapt attention, and hymn and benediction brought an inspiring meeting to a close.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

THE MIDLANDS.

OUR religion sits lightly upon us. We want rousing to greater activity, and nothing short of persecution will have the desired effect.

The fires of July, 1791, went out; the rioters were brought to trial. Priestley, the chief object of their fury, left England never to return; and, eighty years afterwards, a statue of him was set up in the centre of Birmingham. Some feared that mischief would be done to it, but their fears were groundless, and it stands unharmed to this day. Is another riot needed? Are fresh persecutors to arise to draw us together and show that our religion is a living thing?

Less than a hundred years ago it was a penal offence to deny the doctrine of the Trinity, and every avowed Unitarian was an offender against the law of the land. The law has been repealed, and deniers of the doctrine are plentiful, and may be found among the members of all churches and of none; but the number of those who ally themselves openly with one of our churches is not greatly increased.

We pride ourselves, and justly too, upon our freedom of thought and action, and we follow after Truth wherever she may lead us. Acting on these principles some of our friends refuse to take the Unitarian name for their churches, though they will accept it for the individual members, and they are supported in this by the emphatic declaration of the late Dr. Martineau on the subject. The result is that the building used for worship is called by any name except Unitarian, and is very often only known by the name of the street in which it is placed. And this is done in the name of freedom, and with the desire to jealously guard against any semblance of sectarianism or being bound by a creed.

Attempts have been made at various times to coin a name for our churches which shall be undogmatic, but, so far, the attempts have been in vain. Are we to change our name in the new century, and what is it to be?

One of our principal churches in Birmingham boldly places the word Unitarian in letters of gold on the board in front of the building: another of such churches steadily refuses to use the word at all. Others, again, retain the old word Presbyterian, which is apt to be confounded with the orthodox churches who use that name. Though the word Unitarian was originally dogmatic in meaning as opposed to Trinitarian, it has come to have a wider significance, and I cannot see why it should not be universally used by our body so long as the trust deeds of our chapels are perfectly open. We are known by the name and should not be ashamed or afraid to use it, even though its exact meaning may be too narrow to accurately express our real position in the religious world.

The simplicity and rationalism of our views as well as their unpopularity are in themselves sources of weakness. Having no creed necessary to salvation we cannot make the same appeal to the fears of the people as other churches make. We preach the gospel, but attach no pains or penalties to non-belief in a creed. We believe in the usefulness for good of a church and its institutions, but attendance at the services is not looked upon as a necessity.

We draw our congregations not only from our own people, but also from those belonging to other sects or no sect, and I fear that too little trouble is taken to make such persons welcome at our services. We expect the people to come and come again, and the congregation, so to speak, to keep itself together. This is impossible, and if we want success we must set about our work with at least the same amount of energy and determination that we should use if we meant to succeed in a commercial undertaking.

Are we going to drop theology from our religion in the new century, or rather, are we going to mix with it all kinds of theology? There is a mistiness in the theological atmosphere, and we seem to be relapsing into a state of comfortable compromise or indifference. In one of our churches in this district the congregation sing at Christmas time about the "mystery of Bethlehem" and "the child all power possessing"; and when a new place of worship was opened in Birmingham by the Unitarians a few years ago, we were told by one of the congregation that they did not profess nor did they deny the doctrine of the Trinity. Are we going to wipe out the past and hide in oblivion all that our forefathers suffered for the truth and for the faith we are supposed to hold dear?

To fill our churches are we to sacrifice our principles? We were told by the Roman Catholic candidate during the recent School Board contest in Birmingham, that "as his hearers knew, a Unitarian was not a Christian," and this, I suppose, because we do not accept the orthodox view of Christ. When attention is called in such a public manner to the light in which we are regarded from a religious point of view by a wealthy and influential church, it should remind us that we must be prepared to hold our own when the necessity arises, even though it may be distasteful to us to have to do so. As I remarked in a former letter, "not that we have in any way changed our theological position, but the tendency is to make the most of the religion which is common to all the churches of Christendom." "Religion above theology is now our motto," as one of our leading ministers once said. With this I agree; and when theology is banished from all the churches of the land ours will go with it, but not till then. Unitarianism has made great strides during the nineteenth century, and the sketch of its history, lately appearing in THE INQUIRER, shows this very clearly; but the writer agrees that our churches "must be true to their own truth," and that "as Unitarians we are as deeply convinced as ever of the need of witness to truth." Let us not forget also that many have come to us from other churches, often at great personal sacrifice and at the cost of breaking old friendships; and that they have abandoned the creeds with which they were formerly bound, to breathe in the freer air we enjoy and adopt the simple faith we hold dear.

As to our endeavours in the new century, there is work enough to do to maintain the churches already existing in a state of efficiency. Two are now without ministers, Wolverhampton and Small Heath, and in the case of some others a change must take place before long. But what I should like to see is a strengthening of the feeling of unity among the different churches in the district, the feeling that they have a common cause and that all are working towards the same object. There is nothing like a little self-sacrifice to impress such a feeling upon us, and I would suggest that every member of every congregation in the Midland district shall celebrate the opening of the twentieth century by enrolling himself as a subscriber of a shilling a year to the funds of the Midland Christian Union. A substantial sum might thus be added yearly to the funds, the subscribers would be members of the union and have a voice in its management and would take an interest in its concerns. I have made a similar suggestion within the last few months, and I make it again in the hope that something practical may come of it.

The very important question of giving to our young people some definite Unitarian teaching and a knowledge of our history must not be lost sight of. If they are not grounded in these things in their youth, how are they to hold their own against the attacks of those who differ from us when they grow up to years of discretion? A few lectures every year by the minister, with references to the books in the chapel library, might help in this direction. To my mind there are few things more important than missionary work to strengthen our churches, whether done by the minister himself or a layman or a missionary appointed for this special work. Merely seeing the minister on a Sunday is not enough. We want to shake him by the hand, to chat with him, to have his sympathy in our concerns, to feel that he is our friend, and these things must be done on the week-day as well as on Sunday. And, of course, we must do all we can to help our minister if we look to him to help us.

We should not forget that our congregations are founded on a popular basis and on a footing of equality for all. We are not like the Methodists, for instance. The President of the Conference, in his New Year's address to the members of the Methodist Church, reminds them that they are distinguished from mere adherents as they have accepted the responsibilities involved in church membership; that they form a series of inner circles, in which social and spiritual fellowship is the ruling principle; they also bear the financial burdens of the church, and take the lead in its spiritual enterprise. He then reminds them of the vast numbers of people who gather round the church without forming it. Then he urges Methodists to make the inner circle of life and fellowship in all their churches so attractive that the members of the congregations will long to enter into it.

We Unitarians have no such distinctions as these, no inner circles nor outer ones, but merely one circle into which all who sympathise with us are invited to enter and take their share in matters affecting the welfare of the congregation as a whole. Nor are we held in bondage as the Roman Catholics are, and liable to be called to account by a pastoral letter such as that issued last month by Cardinal Vaughan and the English Roman Catholic Bishops, in which they deplore the existence of the Liberal Catholics, being those who substitute the principle of private judgment for that of obedience to religious authority. The writers of the letter consider that "indiscriminate reading was perhaps the most insidious form under which the poison of rationalism and unbelief was injected into the soul." "To read without necessity matter calculated to create doubt or to sap faith was a sin against religion and the First Commandment," they say. If this state of things exists to any great extent it ought to inspire us with fresh hope for the spread of our principles.

As to our outlook for the future, we must move with the times as we have done in the past. We cannot stand still. We have made great progress in the years gone by, not so much in the increase of our numbers as towards the realisation of our ideal of undogmatic religious fellowship.

In closing this letter I cannot do better than quote that deeply religious book "The Handbook of Rational Piety":—"It matters everything to every man that he should be devotedly faithful to that which is divinest to his own soul. Not only will the power over our hearts of any form of religion we may profess be lessened, but the moral strength of our characters will be enfeebled, if, having real convictions, we hold them timidly and apologetically, and do not treat them as pearls of so great a price that it is well to go and sell all that we have to possess their glory. Thoroughness of devotion to our own highest thoughts will alone sustain the noblest life of our souls."

With these few thoughts and suggestions, gathered together at the call of the Editor, let us here in the Midlands go forth with fresh hope into the new century that opens before us. H.

THE National Simultaneous Mission of the Evangelical Free Churches is to open in London on Monday, Jan. 28, with a noon service in the Guildhall, at which the Lord Mayor is to be present, and Dr. Parker is to preach. The Mayors of all the new London boroughs are also being invited. The Mission, so far as London is concerned, is to close on Feb. 4, and in country it is to be held from Feb. 16 to 26. The Mission, which is a great united twentieth century effort, is, as the Christian World says, a "campaign against religious indifference outside the Churches and smug self-satisfaction within them." The February number of the Free Church Chronicle is to be published next week, and will be a special Mission number.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Belfast: All Souls'.—On Sunday evening the Rev. W. H. Drummond preached a sermon on "Lessons from the Life and Work of Professor Huxley." The biography, he said, came appropriately at the end of a century, summing up the meaning and content of a great intellectual movement. Having spoken of Huxley's relations to other great men of science, and of his attitude towards criticism and truth, Mr. Drummond concluded that Huxley's work helped religion far more than it had hindered it. His influence had been that of the wind and fire. He had consumed and he had purified. He had helped men to think clearly and to be honest in their thinking, and had compelled them to face facts.

Belfast: First Church.—Aunt Amy's little play was the chief item of entertainment at the Sunday-school party of the First Church, Belfast, on Monday, the 14th inst. Some thirty small people took part in the performance, and bright faces, pretty dresses, and well-trained memories made the evening a happy one for all concerned. The teachers of the school are very grateful to Aunt Amy for her charming little play.

Bradford.—The Bradford Weekly Telegraph, of Jan. 12, gave a good illustration of the front of Chapel-lane Chapel, and a portrait of the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, at the same time devoting more than two columns to an account of the "First Nonconformist Chapel" of Bradford. The original chapel was built in 1717 or the following year, the Nonconformist congregation having previously met at Chapel Green, Little Horton. The present fine building was opened in 1869.

Brighton.—The Free Christian Church Sunday School held its annual Christmas treat on Friday, Jan. 11. The Rev. Herbert M. Livens distributed the prizes. A pleasant evening was brought to a close by a magic lantern entertainment.

Bristol: Lewin's Mead.—On Sunday evening, the Rev. A. N. Blatchford gave his annual address of retrospect, "The Dead Year: its Memories and Lessons," in which he spoke eloquently of what they owed to such men as Blackmore and Sullivan, to Mrs. Gladstone and Mary Kingsley, and above all to Ruskin and Martineau. The address is fully given in the Western Daily Press of Jan. 14.

Byker.—On Wednesday, Jan. 2, a very successful congregational soirée took place in the Byker Unitarian Church. After tea a public meeting was held, presided over by the Rev. Frank Walters, who, in an interesting speech, referred to the commencement of the work at Byker, and to the close relationship existing between the Byker Church and his own. Councillor Elliott, of Gateshead, also delivered a stirring address. Mr. G. G. Laidler, who has taken great interest in the congregation, since its formation urged that a strong effort should be made to obtain a suitable and permanent home, and promised a substantial contribution towards the building. Mr. T. Paxton, who has recently accepted the charge of Unity Church, South Shields; Mr. F. C. Slater, secretary of the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Association; and Mr. J. Glending, lay-worker at Byker, were the other speakers, and there was also vocal and instrumental music.

Capelybryn.—On Wednesday, Jan. 2, the annual Sunday-school party was held, tea being followed by a miscellaneous entertainment by the children and their friends, the Rev. J. Davies presiding. Prizes for regular attendance at school were given during the evening.

Carlisle.—The School Board election was to have taken place on the 21st inst. The Rev. Chas. Travers, backed by a very powerful organisation, was running as an Independent candidate; his chief "plank" being disapproval of the Board's acceptance of the Higher Elementary School Minute. His return by a large majority was generally admitted as being absolutely certain, and after sixteen candidates had been nominated for the eleven seats, a conference was held, which resulted in Mr. Travers taking the seat of a Roman Catholic canon. This is the gain of a seat from the Denominationalists.

Dewsbury.—Unity Church, which has been closed for the past three months, was re-opened on Sunday week, when the Rev. J. Morgan Whiteman entered on his ministry, preaching in the morning on "The Legacy of a rich Century," and in the evening on "A Fresh Start." On the following Saturday evening a tea-meeting was held to welcome Mr. and Mrs. Whiteman.

East London Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The fourth meeting this session was held at Walthamstow on Saturday, 12th inst. The Rev. H. Woods Perris presided, and Mr. Frank Talbot, of Highgate, read an excellent paper on "The Higher Criticism of the Bible and its Possibilities in Sunday-school Teaching." There were over thirty teachers and friends present, several of whom joined in the discussion after the reading of the paper.

Gateshead.—On Thursday, 10th inst., a lantern lecture on "Dr. James Martineau" was given at Unity Church by the Rev. Arthur Harvie; the slides, which were lent by the Rev. F. K. Freeston, were most instructive, and were greatly appreciated. On Sunday, in connection with the first anniversary of Dr. Martineau's death, a special memorial service was held. The hymns, prayers, responses, and readings used in the service were all from the hand of the late revered teacher, and an excellent portrait of Dr. Martineau was given to each worshipper. The Rev. A. Harvie preached upon the religious belief of Martineau as set forth in his essay, entitled "Five Points of Christian Faith," setting forth what he called "granite oundations" of Christianity—(1) Faith in the moral perceptions of man; (2) faith in the moral perfection of God; (3) faith in our highest desires and affections as divine; (4) faith in Christ as the revealer of God's moral perfection; and (5) faith in human immortality. The sixty years which separate us from the writing of that essay have not made less certain those bases of Christian faith. Copies of the essay were given to all present.

Guildford.—Answering questions of the editor of the Surrey Times to clergymen of the county as to the special social and personal lesson of the dawning century, the Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland replied: (i) The dictate of our imperial responsibilities, that our supremacy must be not merely imperial, but moral and spiritual; that our patriotism must be religious. We must hold religion a citizenship and our citizenship a religion. (ii) In the words of Thales, "know thyself," and of Epictetus, "for all other delights give this that you are conscious that you obey God."

Horwich.—On New Year's Eve a watch-night service was held, when the Rev. R. C. Moore spoke a few words appropriate to the occasion. About sixty persons attended. Mr. Moore has been elected to fill a vacancy on the School Board, and on taking his seat on Monday, 7th inst., received a hearty welcome from the vice-chairman of the Board, the Rev. T. Storey Bates, curate of St. Catherine's, who presided, and the other members of the Board. Last Sunday evening the six Nonconformist ministers in the town, who meet in a monthly fraternity, arranged for an exchange of pulpits. Mr. Moore exchanged with the Rev. W. M. Kelley, of the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Chorley New-road, who preached in the Unitarian Chapel with much acceptance. Following upon the exchange, a united Communion Service was held in the Lee Congregational Chapel, in which all the ministers took part. There was a large attendance, and the service was both helpful and impressive.

Kendal.—On Sunday, Jan. 6, the first of a new series of fortnightly lectures was given by the Rev. H. V. Mills, after the usual evening service, the subject being "The Beginnings of Life on the Earth: or, the Divine Way of Creation." The lecture was illustrated by lantern views, the hymns sung being also thrown on the screen.

London: Bermondsey.—A Band of Hope tea and social meeting was held on New Year's Day, and after the Secretary (Mr. A. W. Harris) had reviewed the past year's work, fourteen medals for attendance and good conduct were distributed by Mr. Harold Titford, the Sunday-school superintendent. On Jan. 8 an address was given by Mr. Cordrey, of U.K.B.H.U., and at the same time the names of fourteen candidates for membership were received. On the 15th inst. the Rev. Frederic Allen addressed the meeting, and five more names were given in. Mr. E. Howard is manifesting the same generous interest in this as the other branches of the church work.

London: Deptford.—Last Sunday the first annual service in connection with the "M. A. Pearce" Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars (which holds its meetings in the chapel) was held, when Bro. the Rev. A. J. Marchant, chaplain of the Lodge, gave an eloquent discourse, based on the words, "Abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good." Bro. C. D. Parkinson, District Chief Templar, and W. H. Pearce, District Superintendent of the Juvenile Temples, assisted in the service, at which upwards of 130 adults were present.

London: Stamford-street.—The anniversary meeting of the Band of Hope and Mercy was held on Monday last, when a good number of members, parents, and friends were present. The President, the Rev. Frederic Allen presided. Concerted melodies were rendered by a choir of eighteen children, and songs or recitations by other friends. During the evening the Chairman, after welcoming the parents and others present, eloquently put before them the importance of both the Temperance and "Mercy" work among the young. The Secretary (Mr. A. W. Harris) gave a summary of the work during 1900, reporting many interesting and successful meetings which had been held, operations being continued through the entire year. Acknowledgment was made of willing personal help and financial support from various friends. The closing and special event of the evening was the distribution, by Mrs. Frederic Allen, of medals and prizes to members who had distinguished themselves by regular and punctual attendance and good conduct. Twenty-three handsome volumes were awarded, thirteen having been generously provided by Mr. A. H. Biggs, and ten by the President, and a medal was presented with each.

Norwich.—The congregation of the Octagon Chapel has celebrated the opening of the twentieth century by adding twenty new subscribing members to its list.

Nottingham: High Pavement Chapel.—Jan. 13, being the first Sunday after the anniversary of the death of the late Dr. Martineau, the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas preached at the morning service a memorial sermon which touched all hearts and seemed to bring those present to that "communion of saints" to which that great prophet of truth was so often calling his devoted listeners.

Preston.—The annual party of the Percy-street Sunday-school took place on Monday, followed by an entertainment, at which, in the regretted absence of Councillor J. J. Rawsthorn through illness, the Rev. N. Anderton presided. The various reports which were read were very encouraging, and showed satisfactory progress during the year. The Chairman spoke of the splendid work that was being done by the faithful band of teachers and workers in the school. The beautifying of the lower schoolroom by a number of volunteers who had freely given their time and labour was instanced as an indication of the spirit in which the work was being carried on. He was gratified to note also that in addition to raising money for the Extension and Renovation Fund, the school had done its part in subscribing to the Twentieth Century Fund and other worthy objects. Mr. Newell, as superintendent, emphasised the need for close and sympathetic co-operation between chapel and school. The school had begun to pass its elder scholars into the chapel through the minister's preparation class, and the congregation should feel its responsibility in all that pertained to the welfare and progress of its child—the Sunday-school. The entertainment which followed included action songs, recitations, dialogues, solos, and musical drill. During an interval the prizes for good attendance were distributed by Mrs. Hayhurst.

Shrewsbury.—The Sunday-school New Year's party was held Jan. 10, when nearly seventy scholars and teachers had tea together. The Rev. J. C. Street presided over the evening meeting, when an interesting programme was gone through. The rewards for the year were given to twenty-three scholars for punctual attendance.

Stalybridge.—In the recent School Board election, the Rev. W. Harrison held a good place along with two other Progressives, coming in after three clergymen and before three Churchmen and a Labour candidate.

Stockport.—On Sunday last a series of five Sunday evening services, under the title of "Music and Religion," was brought to a successful conclusion. On each evening there had been the ordinary service, with the addition of two sacred songs, with specially chosen touching words, sung by some leading lady vocalist in the neighbourhood, together with music on stringed instruments. Instead of the ordinary sermon, the Rev. B. C. Constable told "a short Bible story" (without text) in modern language, "in which music played a part." The stories were: "From Outcast Babe to Deliverer and Lawgiver" (Moses), "From the Manger to the Cross" (Christmas subject), "From Shepherd Boy to King" (David), "The Wanderer's Return" (Prodigal Son), and "From Zealous Persecutor to Martyred Saint" (Paul). In each case illustrative music was sung during short pauses in the story. The series has proved that people can be gathered together in larger numbers by devotional religious services, whose avowed object is "to deepen and quicken the better life through the medium of sacred music and religion."

Todmorden.—On Saturday last the Todmorden Sunday School Union, consisting of almost all of the Nonconformist schools of the town, held its annual meeting in the Unitarian Sunday-school. In the afternoon service was held in the church, the preacher being Principal Gordon. There was a good attendance, and the whole of the service was most impressive. The preacher delivered an eloquent sermon from the text: "And he went on his way rejoicing," in which he put forward a plea for entering upon the new century with joy and faith. After a tea a well-attended meeting was held in the school-room, under the presidency of the Rev. J. A. Smith (Congregationalist). The report was read by the Secretary, also a Congregationalist. A paper on "The Sunday-school of the Twentieth Century" was read by a member of the Methodist Free Church, and a discussion followed, opened by a Baptist and a Primitive Methodist. A pleasant spectacle of unity in diversity was afforded, and a hearty meeting much enjoyed. The President of the Union a year ago was a Unitarian, the President for the ensuing year is a Baptist.

Walsall.—On Sunday week the Rev. Peter Dean preached at the evening service on "The New Century: Our Greatest Dangers and Greatest Wants," the chief dangers being Covetousness, Militarism, and a Yellow Press, and concluding that in Religion was the only safety, and the great need was Righteousness. The service is fully given in the local Free Press.

Walthamstow.—The Sunday-school New Year's tea-party took place on Thursday, 10th inst., when nearly ninety children were present. After the tea an entertainment was given, at which a large number of the parents were present. Mr. Hawkes's play of Cinderella was performed by seven of the children as part of the entertainment. The Rev. T. E. M. Edwards very kindly attended and gave a short address, and subsequently distributed several prizes in the shape of books for good attendance, &c. Each child, with the exception of the very young ones, received a small booklet published by the Sunday School Association.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE

THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

BIRTHS.

DONALD—On the 10th Jan., at 62, Fairfield-road, Newcastle-on-Tyne, to J. Duncan and Rose Donald, a daughter.

ELLIS—On the 7th Jan., in Guernsey, to Leon and Kathleen Ellis (née Rowland), a son.

MARSHALL—On the 14th Jan., the wife of W. L. W. Marshall, of Oak House, Huddersfield, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

BEARD—RAWLINS—On the 16th Jan., at St. Agnes Church, Ullet-road, Liverpool, by the Rev. C. C. Eleum, M.A., Vicar of the Parish, assisted by the Rev. T. W. M. Lund, M.A., Chaplain of St. Mary's Church for the Blind, Liverpool, Gilbert, son of James R. Beard, J.P. of Manchester, to Hilda Margaret, third daughter of Henry C. Rawlins, of Grove Park, Liverpool.

DEATHS.

BLYTH—On the 12th Jan., at Winburg, Orange River Colony, of enteric fever, William Ellis Tolmé Blyth, 34th (Middlesex) Imperial Yeomanry, second surviving son of Edmund Kell Blyth, of 6, Rosslyn-hill, Hampstead, aged 28.

WILKINSON—On the 16th Jan., at 1, Compton-road, Highbury, Harriet Wilkinson, fourth daughter of the late Wm. Wilkinson, of Coleman-street, in her 82nd year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 20.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN. Morning, "Serving God." Evening, Lantern Service, "The Parable of the Prodigal Son." Monday, 8.15 P.M., Recitals, by Miss ELLA BRIDGE.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON. Evening, "The New Century.—III. The New Theology."

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. 7 P.M., Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN. Morning, "Facing Evil." Evening, "Paul before Agrippa." Children's Class, 12 30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEX. GORDON, M.A.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON. Morning, "To him that hath shall be given," &c. Evening, "The Rationalist's Ideal."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Penge, Childwick Hall, Beckenham-road, 7 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, "The Larger Hope" versus "An Endless Hell."

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES, and 6.30 P.M.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. FARRINGTON. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. CARLIER, 3.30 P.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRADFORD, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. LIVENS.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. STREET

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. P. W. AMES, F.S.A.

DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKSPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.

EASTBOURNE, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HASTINGS, Free Christian Church, South Terrace (opposite Recreation Ground), 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. HERMANN THOMAS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "Europe and China: a Chapter in International Morals."

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Claremont, 21, Albion-place (facing Harbour), 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.

SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.

WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Jan. 20th, at 11.15 A.M., JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "The Nineteenth Century.—III. Sociology and Economics."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. J. B. BARNHILL, 26, Clovelly Mansions, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Letters, &c., to the Rev. HARRY S. PERRIS, M.A., should be addressed (not as in the "Year Book for 1901," but) to 61, St. Augustine's-road, Camden-square, London, N.W. Letters addressed "Little Portland-street Chapel" are not delivered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—The Rev. JOSEPH POLLARD has removed to 12, Albert-place, Ballymena, co. Antrim, Ireland.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—The Rev. J. MORGAN WHITEMAN from 3, Sybil-road, Liverpool, to 30, Victoria-crescent, Dewsbury.

UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON.

A LECTURE in connection with the Literary Society will be given in the Schoolroom on THURSDAY NEXT, JANUARY 24th, by the Rev. WILFRED HARRIS, M.A. (of Bolton), on "A Critique of the Book of Creation." Chair to be taken at 8 o'clock. Friends invited.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

DR. DANIEL JONES' TRUST.

The Trustees offer to Ministers who have shown themselves efficient in active service, and desire to devote a year to further study, one or two Bursaries, tenable for one year at the College.

For further particulars apply to—

Rev. H. E. DOWSON, Gee Cross, Hyde;
A. H. WORTHINGTON, 1, St. James'-square, Manchester. } Secs.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological Knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological Doctrines.

PRINCIPAL:
Rev. J. DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.LITT.

SESSION 1901–1902.

CANDIDATES for ADMISSION are requested to forward their Applications and Testimonials without delay to the Secretaries.

The Trustees offer for competition External Exhibitions, open to Students for the Ministry, tenable for the ordinary Undergraduate period at any approved British or Irish University.

The Trustees also offer Exhibitions, tenable at the College, for Students for the Ministry.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, or to

Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, Gee Cross, Hyde; or
A. H. WORTHINGTON, 1, St. James'-square, Manchester. } Secs.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

DAILY RE-ENGAGEMENT desired as GOVERNESS or SECRETARY. English and arithmetic (Cambridge Higher Local); good French, Latin, German, music, drawing. Excellent references. — Miss TALBOT, 38, Westbere-road, W. Hampstead, N.W.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,

SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

THE HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

(Founded by Miss J. F. GRUNER, May, 1897).

The SPRING TERM begins on WEDNESDAY, January 23rd, 1901, the School being carried on at the HINDHEAD HALL as heretofore. Boarders are received by the Misses GRUNER at Moorcroft, Hindhead, Haslemere, from whom prospectuses and further information may be obtained.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, HINDHEAD.

The SPRING TERM begins on THURSDAY, January 17th.

References to parents of past and present pupils.

Prospectus on application to Miss MACRAE MOIR, Lingholt, Hindhead, Haslemere.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL:
MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

CANDIDATES for the SESSION 1901–1902 are reminded that their Applications, with Testimonials and Answers to Questions, must reach the Rev. Dendy Agate, The Parsonage, Dunham-road Chapel, Altrincham, not later than MONDAY, February 4th.

Forms of Application and of Questions to be answered may be had from either of the Hon. Secretaries,

DENDY AGATE
(Address as above).
EDWARD TALBOT,
37, Brown-street, Manchester.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, CHESHIRE.

HEAD MASTER, GUY LEWIS, M.A., Oxford.

ASSISTANT MASTERS—Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and Manchester College, Oxford, and H. L. JONES, B.A., Merton College, Oxford.

Visiting Masters for Music, Science, Drawing, Gymnastics, and Manual Instruction.

There are a few Vacancies on the Foundation. For Prospectus and particulars, apply to the Clerk, Mr. E. W. MARSHALL, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

Schools, etc.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

MISS JARVIS and MISS CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor road, S.W.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Winter Season.—BOARD and RESIDENCE at OSMUNDA, Fir Vale-road, from 30s. weekly. Central, opposite Grand Hotel Gardens.

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. ANNE'S-ON-SEA.—The Misses PILCHER would be glad to hear of one or two ladies to BOARD with them.—Address, Derbe-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59 Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

NOW READY.

Tuck, gilt edges, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 1d.
POCKET ALMANAC FOR 1901.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
ESSEX HALL YEAR BOOK FOR 1901.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
JESUS OF NAZARETH: Lessons of his Life, Death, and Resurrection Learnt at Ober Ammergau. By CHAS. HARGROVE, M.A.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
RELIGION IN LITERATURE AND RELIGION IN LIFE. Two Lectures by STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., LL.D.

Cloth, 2s. net, post free.
A HANDBOOK for MINISTERS of RELIGION. Containing Services for Baptism, Dedication, Communion, Marriage, and Burial, with special Hymns and Readings. Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Cloth, 1s. net; by post, 1s. 2d.
SEVEN SERVICES FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP, with special Prayers and Thanksgivings. Compiled by W. COPELAND BOWIE.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

THE CRISIS. A Quarterly Review.

Devoted to the cause of Progress, and the National Honour and Welfare, and the saving principles of Liberty, Equity, and Fraternity.

Contents of No. 1, JANUARY, 1901.

Pax Britannica.
Forewood.
Events in Boer History.
Salisbury Government.
The Colonies to the Front.
Alcohol and Crime.
Liberty and Equality as a part of Christianity.
Notes.

Price SIXPENCE, by post 7½d.

London: WATTS and Co., 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS

WILL GIVE

TWO ADDRESSES

at COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY GREEN,
on SUNDAY, JANUARY 20TH, 1901.

Afternoon at 3.30, on "Patriotism, True and False," with references to Tolstoy's Trenchant Work on this subject.

Evening at 7, on "Many Roads Here, but one Home hereafter."

All welcome.

The Bible in the Nineteenth Century.

A COURSE OF LECTURES by
PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
(of Manchester College, Oxford),
at BOLTON, LEEDS, and LIVERPOOL.

I. Changed Views of the Law.
II. Changed Views of Prophecy.
III. The Gospels and the Origin of Christianity.
IV. The Gospel Question: (1), The Synoptics.
V. The Gospel Question: (2), The Fourth Gospel.
VI. The Bible and the Church.

BOLTON: Spinners' Hall, St. George's-road.
Tuesdays, January 29th, February 5th, 12th, 19th, 26th, March 5th, at 7.30 P.M.

LEEDS: Philosophical Hall.
Wednesdays, January 30th, February 6th, 13th, 20th, 27th, March 6th, at 8.0 P.M.

LIVERPOOL: Royal Institution, Colquitt-street.
Thursdays, January 31st, February 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th, March 7th, at 8.30 P.M.

Admission Free. A copy of the Syllabus will be sent on application to the Rev. C. J. STREET, Maythorn, Heaton, Bolton; the Rev. C. HARGROVE, 10, De Grey-terrace, Leeds; or C. W. JONES, Esq., 39, Drury Buildings, Liverpool.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 19, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

No. 3057. NEW SERIES, No. 161.] LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 49
LITERATURE :—
The Hexateuch.—I. 51
Pioneers 52
ARTICLES :—
Emerson and Religion 52
Vere Foster 54
The Work of the Spirit 55
A Minister's Ideal 60
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 55
LEADER :—
A Queen, A Woman Beloved 56
MEETINGS :—
Manchester College, Oxford 58
CORRESPONDENCE :—
For Fuller Life 59
The Unjust Steward 59
Channing House School 59
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
The East Cheshire Christian Union... ... 60
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 62
ADVERTISEMENTS 63

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

"THE Queen died peacefully at half-past six." That simple message from Osborne, on Tuesday evening, brought the news of which a week ago no shadow of fear had crossed our mind. Throughout the country, and far beyond our shores the Prince of Wales's message to the Lord Mayor was read with profoundest sorrow, and a sympathy in which was more than sorrow:—"My beloved Mother, the Queen, has just passed away, surrounded by her children and grandchildren."

FOR the Heir to the Throne it is not permitted to remain within that sacred quietness and privacy, which belong naturally to the first days of mourning. On Wednesday the King came to London, and at St. James's Palace took the oath, and received the allegiance of his Council, as Edward VII. Speaking with deep emotion, he said that as King he had resolved to use that name, feeling that his father's name, which he also bore, and who was deservedly known as Albert the Good, should stand alone. He pledged himself to be a Constitutional Sovereign, in the strictest sense of the term, and to devote the whole of his strength during the remainder of his life to the arduous duties, which were his by inheritance, and to the good of his people.

WHILE the melancholy pageants of Royalty proceed, it has been permitted to many faithful friends and retainers to enter the peaceful chamber of death, and to look once more upon the venerable face of their beloved Queen. "How calm and happy she was looking," said one of these, "like a person in a beautiful sleep." Through a thin white veil of finest silk the features were clearly seen, and the face looked wonderfully young, bearing not a trace of suffering, only the marks of heavenly peace. The hands were folded on her breast, on which lay also a golden cross. On the white silken coverlet snowdrops and lilies of the valley were strewn, and there were palms and other flowers in the room. The final resting place will doubtless be the Mausoleum at Frogmore, which the Queen built for Prince Albert and herself.

THE Rev. Stopford Brooke resumed his Browning lectures at University College on Thursday week, and expressed his great regret at having been obliged to interrupt the first course before Christmas. On the first Sunday in February Mr. Brooke is to preach at Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Hampstead, and on the three following Sundays at Little Portland-street Chapel.

ON Monday and Tuesday Mrs. Humphry Ward gave the readings from "Eleanor" and other of her books at the Passmore Edwards Institute, Tavistock-place, which we announced last week, in aid of the funds of the Institute, and we are glad to hear that a substantial sum was the result. On Tuesday evening, at the commencement of the reading, Mrs. Ward said that they were met under the shadow of the national mourning, and she had doubted whether they ought to go on with the reading. But they had met for no unworthy or personal object, nor for anything inconsistent with the sorrow felt by the whole nation. She then read Tennyson's verses of dedication to the Queen, beginning, "Revered, beloved," and after a description from "Helbeck" of a Westmoreland wood in daffodil time, rendered two of the most dramatic scenes from "Eleanor" and "Sir George Tressady." In a brief interval some charming views of the old castle and the wooded hills near Orvieto and the broad valley of the Paglia, described in "Eleanor," were shown. At the conclusion Mrs. Ward spoke of the needs of the Institute, which grow with the growing work, both for more funds and for personal help, and appealed especially to any who might be willing to give an hour or two's regular help every week.

ON Wednesday evening Professor Percy Gardner, of Oxford, began a course of eight Jowett lectures at the Passmore Edwards Institute, Tavistock-place, on "A Historic View of the New Testament." The lectures are to be given every Wednesday evening at 8.30 until the course is completed. The first lecture dealt with "Historic Method and Christian Documents." Next week the subject is "Revelation and its Embodiments."

THE recently-formed Surrey Branch of the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection held a meeting on Monday evening at the All Saints' Institute, South Lambeth, to protest against the continuance of the practice of vivisection at the Brown Institute, in Wandsworth-road. The meeting, over which Canon Allen Edwards presided, was well attended, and addresses were given by Dr. Wall, from the medical side; Mr. Gerald Maberley, who stated the legal position in regard to the trust; Miss Fowler, who made a powerful appeal on the grounds of pity, justice, and humanity; the Revs. Osmer L. Cole and Arthur Mursell, Mrs. Despard, and others. A resolution was unanimously adopted, demanding that the Institute shall be used exclusively for the purpose originally intended, as a sanatorium for animals. Thomas Brown, whose will is dated Dec. 14, 1846, left over £20,000 to the University of London, for the foundation of an Animal Sanatory Institute, in which the diseases and wounds of animals should be studied and cured, and the testator's desire is expressly stated "that kindness to animals committed to his charge (the Superintendent's) shall be a general principle of the Institution." Under such a trust it seems astounding that vivisection should be permitted, even though the Superintendent should plead (as has been done) that the victims have not been "committed to his charge," but have been bought for the special purpose of experiment! More than twenty years ago the late Richard Hutton, in the Senate of the University, strenuously opposed the introduction of the practice of vivisection into the Institute; and the late G. R. Jesse made a gallant, but unsuccessful, fight to secure its abolition. The British Union is now determined to make another attempt. An article, reprinted from the Abolitionist of March 15, 1900, stating the whole case, may be had on application to the Secretary of the British Union, 20, The Triangle, Bristol.

MUCH has been written, and of the greatest interest, concerning the late Bishop of London. The memoir in the Times gave a delightful picture of the life at Embleton Vicarage, in Northumberland, where Mr. Creighton was for nine years before his appointment to the Cambridge professorship. His brilliant career at Oxford might naturally have led to his remaining there as a College don; but discerning friends urged him, when the time came, to accept the country living, and with the happiest results. To not a few, the writer says, Embleton Vicarage enshrines some of the brightest and most inspiring memories of their lives:—

What joyous walks and expeditions there were in a land teeming with historic associations, which none knew better than Mr.

Creighton how to evoke, in an air saturated with the tonic alike of moor and sea, what nights and suppers of the gods to follow! How rollicking was the fun when fun was to the fore—for no one was more ready than the vicar desipere in loco, and he must have invented the verb "to frivol" for himself—how lofty the gravity when wise counsel was needed or serious topics were broached! These two moods were perhaps the real key to Mr. Creighton's many-sided character. Some saw only the frivolous side; few, perhaps, were admitted to the innermost sanctuary of the serious side. Mr. Creighton was no poet in the lyrical sense, though his devotion to Dante shows that, had he possessed the lyrical gift, he would have chosen high and serious themes. But his temperament was at once intensely artistic and finely historic. He loved the seemly shows of life, its pageants and its ceremonies, not from personal vanity, but from a keen sense of historic order and continuity. On the other hand, he could enter freely into the spirit of the new age, to borrow a figure from Matthew Arnold's fine poem, and was not unwilling to take a half-frivolous, half-ironical part in its boisterous and heedless revels. Still, to those who knew him best he was as the poet who cried

> Ah, so the silence was!
> So was the hush!

and the riddle of his double mood, which puzzled many and almost scandalised some, is best read in the lines which follow:—

> The world but feels the present's spell,
> The poet feels the past as well.

In that sense he was every inch a poet.

Though he often talked lightly, we are told, he always took life seriously, and there was at the root of his nature a deeply religious element. "His rare gifts, his intellectual grasp and sincerity, his wide knowledge, his shrewd judgment of men and affairs, his varied sensibilities and sympathies, the unfailing tenderness and wisdom of his intimate counsel, his fascinating talk, his personal magnetism which never failed him in his intercourse with the lowliest or the highest, the youngest or the oldest," would have secured his eminence in any calling, but he had deliberately chosen his career as a Churchman, and therein he found the most complete scope for the exercise of his many gifts.

"He tried to write history truly," was the epitaph which the late Bishop of London once said that he would choose for himself, if he could be sure that nothing else would be added; and though he did not hesitate when the call to London came to him, it was with the utmost regret that he then relinquished his last hope of completing his great historical work on the Papacy. As a bishop, Dr. Creighton had influence of the best kind over his clergy, and certainly he understood them. The Daily News, in a special memoir, quotes some amusing sayings of his on this subject:—

> The clergy? Oh, the dear clergy. I think England the most extraordinary country in the world, and its clergy the most extraordinary people in it. The clergy averagely do an immense amount of work, but they really are the most self-centred, undisciplined, and difficult people I ever came across.
>
> . . . . .
>
> Oh, yes, I am very fond of them, that is one of the functions of a Bishop, to love his clergy; but with your true British spirit, each man thinks that the entire organisation of the diocese is centred round his particular parish; each thinks that his own particular trouble or grievance must be settled by the Bishop, so as to put him to as little inconvenience as possible, that his particular line of service ceremonial is the only one the Catholic Church has ever used, that he "knows something about Canon Law," whereas hardly anyone knows what Canon Law is, and that the Bishop exists solely for the purpose of preaching in his church.

On the other hand, the Bishop had the truest appreciation of unaffected piety. To a representative of the Daily News he once said:—

> A man's preaching power on Sundays is greatly estimated by his working power in the week. An artisan once said to me, when I remarked that his vicar was not a great preacher, "No, sir; but when our parson says God is good there's a smile on his face makes us believe it, even though he mayn't be a good preacher.

The fourth volume of Present Day Papers, edited by J. Wilhelm Rowntree, begins with the January number, the greater part of which consists of a striking essay on "The Work of the Spirit," by May Kendall, from which we have quoted one of the most helpful passages in another column. The Editor, setting at the head of his first page Whittier's lines—

> And all the windows of my heart
> I open to the day—

begins an introductory article by referring to Mazzini's essay in 1835 on "Faith and the Future," and its republication in 1850, when he asked "Why, then, has reaction triumphed?" In reply Mazzini wrote:—

> The cause is in the gradual substitution of the worship of material interests for the adoration of holy ideas. . . . It is in our having forgotten God; forgotten His law of love, of sacrifice, and of moral progress, and the solemn tradition of humanity, for a theory of well-being . . . it is in our indifference to truths of an order superior to this world which alone are able to transform it . . . in the stupid presumption on the part of each people that they are capable of solving the political, social, and economical problem alone; in their forgetfulness of the great truth that the cause of the peoples is one.

How applicable these words of Mazzini's are to the present moment the editor sorrowfully feels, but proceeds to show where faith still has its strong-hold. The first article of the promised series, on "Our Social Ideal," by Henry B. Binns, is held over until next month, but Professor A. S. Peake contributes an interesting paper on "Books for Bible Students."

From Unity and the Minister, Calcutta, of Dec. 23, we extract the following:—"The authorities of the Calcutta University Institute deserve the best thanks of the public, especially of the student community, for having published from the columns of the University Magazine the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams' 'Notes on Paradise Lost,' and the 'Origins of Elizabethan Literature.' We have gone through its pages with much interest. At a time when cramming is the order of the day, and a natural growth of the intellectual powers of our young men is retarded or stinted, the pamphlet before us is to be doubly welcomed. It stands in contrast to the many note-books and books of annotation that come out from the Press for coaching young men for University Examinations. . . . The brochure before us tries to lead youthful minds to the level from which the immortal Milton wrote his epic. The object of the book is to unfold before youthful minds the heart and soul of the poet, and help them to behold the beauty, the sublimity, the morality and the spirituality of the unique man. . . . The cultivation of memory and the committing by heart notes is the be-all and end-all of a student's life. We believe it is time for the Calcutta University to reconsider the steps it has taken. We hope the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams' Notes will give a new indication as to the course that should be followed. The author has done a service by describing the peculiar environments of Milton's life, which gave him inspiration to write his immortal work. Some of the descriptions were transcriptions of external conditions of his time. The two chapters on the 'Origins of Elizabethan Literature' repay perusal. We are specially thankful to the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams for the Notes, which may serve as models of the kind. The author, we are glad to see, is not only a preacher of no mean order, but is a scholar and a good teacher, who is well able to help our young men in their studies."

The Bengalee, a Calcutta daily paper, under date Jan. 1, makes the following references to the services conducted by Mr. Fletcher Williams in that city:—

> At these services, held in the Albert Hall, the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams preached on Sunday morning an impressive and suggestive sermon on "Unfinished Things." The congregation, which gathers every Sunday morning, is notable in its constituent elements, consisting as it does of representatives of all the learned professions—a large number of college professors, doctors and men of science, barristers, vakils, and senior students, belonging to the Hindoo, Brahmo, Mahommedan, and Christian communities. It is to be regretted that Mr. Fletcher Williams's stay in Calcutta is but temporary.

In an article in the same issue of the Bengalee on "The Twentieth Century," the writer draws a somewhat dark picture of the state of things in England and in India at the opening of the new era, and then proceeds:—

> It was in this state of mind, agitated as it was by these thoughts, that I went to hear Mr. Fletcher Williams's discourse at the Albert Hall, on "Unfinished Things," on Sunday morning. Mr. Fletcher Williams is a thinker of singular depth and originality; and I do him but the barest justice when I say that his listeners came away at the close of the lecture in a better and an inspired frame of mind.

It is the motive and the aim that alone can consecrate anything we do, and the doing of God's will is always splendid work, though it be but washing dishes or clearing a street. The smallest road-side pool has its water from heaven, and its gleam from the sun, and can hold the stars in its bosom as well as the great ocean. So the humblest duty is a bit of God's will and shines with heavenly radiance. This ought to be an inspiration to those who live in lowly places and can do only common task work. Do it all well and as God's will, and no great man's brilliant deeds will shine more brightly than your little things in God's sight.—J. R. Miller.

LITERATURE.

THE HEXATEUCH.*

I.

Parallels to the Subject Matter.

SOMETIME in the reign of Valens (A.D. 364-378) Eutropius composed a summary of Roman history extending from the foundation of the city to the year 364 of our era. The history was very brief. The account of Ancus Martius, for instance, was contained in the words: "After him Ancus Martius, a son of Numa's daughter, became emperor. He fought against the Latins. He added the Mons Aventinus and the Janiculum to the city. He built a town at Hostia [l. Ostium] on the sea-shore, sixteen miles distant from Rome. In the twenty-fourth year of his reign he died a natural death." The little handbook enjoyed great popularity, and in the eighth century it was studied by Adelperga, the daughter of Desiderius, the King of Lombardy, dethroned by Charlemagne. This lady, however, complained to one Paulus Diaconus that the history was too meagre, and that it contained no references to sacred history, or, later on, to the affairs of the Church; and about 763, or soon after, the scholar thus appealed to supplemented it, for her benefit, by incorporating extracts from Jerome, Orosius, and others, and putting in references to contemporary events in sacred and other history. He also carried the whole narration down to the time of Justinian. In the section on Ancus Martius, for instance, he added the statement that Josiah was the contemporary king of the Hebrews, and that Epidamnus was founded during his reign. The original Eutropius continued to circulate, but the combined history of Eutropius and Paulus secured a certain popularity of its own, and at some period, impossible to determine exactly, one Landolfus Sagax again enlarged the history from sources similar to those on which his predecessors had drawn, and continued it to the year 806. Landolfus was sometimes content to take passages from Orosius, or elsewhere, exactly as he found them, without observing that the grammatical construction was dependent on some omitted words, and did not harmonise with the text into which he fitted his extract, and subsequent copyists or editors carefully eliminated the blunders which resulted from this carelessness. In this, its final state, the Historia Miscella opened the first volume of Muratori's great collection Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, published in 1723.

In our own time the want of a new edition of Muratori has made itself felt, and has been undertaken by a number of editors under the general direction of the great scholar and poet Carducci; and on a certain memorable day when the present reviewer returned from a few days' absence from home he found awaiting him two book packets, one of them containing the first instalment of the new edition of the Scriptores, and the other the long-expected Hexateuch, edited by Mr. Carpenter and his colleague. There was something positively dramatic in the coincidence. In the Historia Miscella we see a process, every step of which we can check, going on under our very eyes, which in many respects offers a startling analogy to the history which scholars have laboriously reconstructed to account for the present state of the text of the Hexateuch. Muratori was content to print Landolfus Sagax in his final form (just as we usually print the Hexateuch), but the demands of our own age are more exacting. The new editors are required to give us exact indications of the composition of the Historia Miscella. This they effect by various devices of typography. The section on Ancus Martius, for instance, runs:—

Post hunc Ancus Marcius, Numae ex filia nepos, suscepit imperium: quo etiam tempore Josias regnabat apud Hebraeos. Contra Latinos dimicavit "et vicit; omnes finitimos et potentes tunc Tusciae duodecim populos innumeris concidisse conflictibus." Aventinum montem civitati adiecit et Janiculum. Apud Hostiam civitatem supra mare sexto decimo miliario ab urbe Roma condidit. Vicesimo quarto anno "iam" imperii morbo periit. Hoc tamen regnante Epidamnus est condita, quae postea Dyracium est nominata.

The passages in italics constitute the original narrative of Eutropius; the Roman lettering the additions of Paulus Diaconus; and the Roman in inverted commas those of Landolfus. Elaborate footnotes, marginal references and diacritical signs complete to the minutest detail, the history of the text as well as the subsequent modifications of scribes and editors which brought the composite text of Landolfus into harmony with the requirements of grammar. In the above extract, for instance, previous editions substituted concidens for concidisse, which latter stands in the MS. of Landolfus followed by the new editors; the fact being that the construction in Orosius, from whom Landolfus is here borrowing, depends on a verb which is not included in the extract.

Landolfus himself, in his brief introduction, indicates the three strata out of which his book is composed, though without any such details as we have given above; and the question arises whether, if the sources and the successive reductions of the work were no longer accessible, critical sagacity would have been adequate to the task of separating out the three strands of the history. No positive answer can be given to a hypothetical question of this nature, but there are cases in which a very definite answer has been practically given to closely analogous questions.

In the seventeenth century Archbishop Usher discovered a MS. in which the Anglo-Saxon scholar Junius thought he recognised the poem of Caedmon described in a well-known and fascinating passage of Bede's history. The poem was printed as Caedmon's about 1650, but the grounds on which the identification rested were quite unsatisfactory, and in 1875 Sievers declared his conviction, as the result of a careful examination, that the poem as we now possess it was of composite origin, and that certain portions of it were originally written not in Anglo-Saxon at all, but in the continental language known as Old Saxon. Now in 1894 three fragments of an Old Saxon poem hitherto unknown were discovered on blank spaces in a MS. in the Heidelberg library. One of these turned out to be the Old Saxon original of one of the very passages in the Caedmonic poem, which Sievers had specified. The other two passages, having nothing to correspond to them in the Anglo-Saxon poem, do not come under consideration, but the one coincidence was in itself enough to constitute a complete vindication of the critical method that had enabled Sievers to predict it.

It is, then, not impossible under favourable circumstances to analyse a composite document into its constituent parts. Another instance equally striking and far more complete is furnished by the literature that clusters round St. Francis of Assisi. Previous to the labours of M. Paul Sabatier we had been in possession of several nearly contemporary lives of St. Francis and of other compilations of a late date, such as the Speculum Vitæ of 1509 and the Conformities. Now Sabatier was convinced on independent grounds that the early biography known as the "Legend of the Three Companions" was defective in the form in which we now have it, and he also thought that the later compilations contained valuable and ancient material otherwise unknown to us. Unlike his precursors therefore, who had put aside the whole of these late compilations as historically worthless, he carefully separated out the portions which seemed to him to bear the impress of antiquity and authenticity, and arranged them under 118 paragraphs. He was disposed to think, in spite of some difficulties, that they were connected with the lost portion of the "Legend of the Three Companions," but was not prepared to regard this conjecture as absolute or definitive. In the course of researches undertaken in the hopes of finding confirmation of this idea he was as one who "seeking silver finds gold," for he discovered a complete MS. of undoubted authenticity of a hitherto unknown biography twenty years earlier than that of the "Three Companions." This biography consisted of 124 chapters, 116 of which were identical with paragraphs already included in the 118 rescued from the late compilations. Thus out of Sabatier's 118 conjectures all save two were confirmed by his discovery, and of the 124 paragraphs of the lost biography all save eight had been already recovered by him. It should be added that two Franciscan friars believe that they have since discovered the lost portion of the "Legend of the Three Companions" in an Italian version, which they have published, restoring the Latin text with its aid; and Sabatier accepts their conclusions. Finally, we must note that Brother Leo, the author of the recovered biography, was himself one of the Three Companions, so that a large portion of the later biography coincides with the earlier. Thus Sabatier's confident ascription of the individual fragments to an early source was absolutely justified, and his hesitating identification of that source turns out to have a sufficient element of truth to justify it, together with a sufficient element of error to warrant his hesitation in insisting on it. A more brilliant justification of critical method it would be difficult to imagine.

It is hardly necessary to do more than

* "The Hexateuch, according to the Revised Version, arranged in its constituent documents by Members of the Society of Historical Theology, Oxford." Edited with Introduction, Notes, Marginal References, and Synoptical Tables, by J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A.Lond., and G. Harford Battersby, M.A.Oxon. In two volumes. Longmans, Green, and Co., London, New York, and Bombay. 1900. 36s. net.

hint at the constant examples of the reverse synthetic process which every age affords. Harmonies of the Gospels, popular narratives of the life of Christ in scriptural language, or the recently issued "Concordantia Quatuor Legendarum de S. P. Francisco Assisiensi idest quatuor narrationes seu legendae ad unicam reductae nulla re omissa nulla repetita" (Assisii, 1900) will serve as examples.

Professor Carpenter himself, whose breadth of treatment and wide range of illustration constitute one of the most noteworthy features of his work, has cited many other striking examples of analogous phenomena; so that with all this material before us it is no longer possible to dismiss the hypothesis of a composite origin and a long history of successive combinations and redactions of the Hexateuch as fanciful or impossible on d priori grounds, nor to condemn as rash an attempt to retrace the path analytically and climb back to the original documents out of which it was compiled.

To the work itself we shall turn in a second and concluding article.

Philip H. Wicksteed.

PIONEERS.*

Now that beyond all controversy we have entered upon that twentieth century which a few eccentric people chose to imagine and enjoy a year ago, we are likely to see plenty of books dealing with the thinkers and workers of the century that has departed. Many of them will be more costly and more pretentious than this volume of Mr. Balmforth's; some, perhaps, may be more original. But we shall hardly find among them any that are more exactly what they claim to be, any that more adequately conform to the author's intention. From a brief preface we learn that these essays, with one exception, have already appeared in the Co-operative News. The readers of that paper are to be congratulated. If this volume is a fair sample of its contents, it is a paper which many who have not joined a co-operative society would like to look at. We have here sketches of writers and reformers of various thought and of various significance and worth; William Cobbett and Richard Cobden, John Stuart Mill and William Morris, Lord Shaftesbury and Thomas Carlyle, Robert Owen and John Ruskin, and several others as different from these as these are from each other, are here described, and an attempt is made not only to summarise the teaching of each one, but to give it something like its proper place in the story of the century's progress. I will not say that it is the work of a catholic mind, for that expression is ambiguous and doubtful; it will be safer to say that it is the work of one who knows a great man when he sees him—of one, also, who can fairly well distinguish the great movements of a century from those that have only passing interest. In a "Press notice" of some previous book by Mr. Balmforth, we find the expression that in style he "recalls Matthew Arnold." That may be. But there is not a page in the present volume concerning which such a comparison would not be absurd. The peculiar facility and grace of Matthew Arnold are just as much lacking as his occasional arrogance and his manifest delight in his own gift of exquisite expression. Mr. Balmforth never feels himself superior to the men whom he criticises, never condescends in order to make himself a brother to the reader. He writes as a thinking man for thinking men, tells a plain story without spoiling it, is never extravagant and never dull. The effect of his book is to bring back old memories and readings of past days to those who are old enough to have known something of the men and the movements here described; and to send younger readers on an errand of inquiry concerning the books and the men of whom they have been but too briefly informed. As something has been said of the style of the book a brief illustration, no better and no worse than could be taken from almost any chapter in the book, may here be given:—

> So passed away one of the most single-minded reformers of the nineteenth century. No man is infallible. Certainly Robert Owen was not. We now know that his great and fundamental doctrine—the doctrine that man's character is formed by outward circumstances—is only half a truth, though a very important half—a half which we are recognising and acting upon more and more in all our educational schemes and institutions. . . . We know also that the world will never be converted to socialism by isolated socialistic communities. Men cannot cut themselves aloof from all the advantages of civilisation; they cannot go into the desert and start the world afresh, and, in such rude beginnings, compete with all the refinements, the organisations, the institutions, the learning, the wealth which civilisation affords. . . . But for all his mistakes Robert Owen stands out as one of the most earnest and self-sacrificing social reformers of the nineteenth century. The founder of infant schools in England; the pioneer of that vast co-operative movement which now spreads like a network over the length and breadth of the land; the advocate of those Factory Acts which have lightened the toil of millions of human beings, the persistent and pertinacious agitator who, by his invincible logic, demonstrated the justice of, and the necessity for, what is now termed a "living wage"; the large-minded philanthropist who pleaded for that "equality of opportunity" which most social reformers now regard as an indispensable condition of effectual social improvement—in all this we recognise the passionate devotion, the generous self-sacrifice, and the unswerving loyalty of one who strove to make the life of the people purer, sweeter, and brighter by his having lived and worked amongst them.

Those who invest a half-crown in this book will get in return some profitable half-hours with great men and among important movements; they will learn something of the intellectual and moral forces that distinguished the nineteenth century, and receive occasional hints for their own guidance in the century whose opening they are privileged to see, and to whose progress they may possibly contribute.

J. Ruddle.

* "Some Social and Political Pioneers of the Nineteenth Century." By Ramsden Balmforth. Swan Sonnenschein. 2s. 6d.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
In Tins
And Packets.
JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Tins 1lb.
And 3lbs.
JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Packets 1lb.
And ½lb.
JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Sold by Grocers.
Expert Oilmen.

EMERSON AND RELIGION.

By Professor James B. Thayer.*

Emerson was born here in Boston, out of the midst of the two most liberal religious bodies of the time. His father was the minister of the First Church, and a Unitarian; and his mother, the daughter of an Episcopalian, John Haskins, who had been a leading member of King's Chapel. He was, indeed, one of the stricter sort of these people, and one of the protesters against those changes in the service of that Church, and in the mode of ordaining their clergymen, which were adopted in the ninth decade of the last century; and he was of the opinion, so we are told, that, while "there were many ways to heaven, the Episcopal Church was the turnpike road." On his death his small grandson, Emerson, aged eleven, wrote a little regulation poem about him, beginning,

> See the calm exit of the aged saint,
> Without a murmur and without complaint, &c.

and running smoothly along through a dozen lines.

Born on May 25, 1803, Emerson was a little past his majority when the American Unitarian Association was organised on May 25, in 1825. He had graduated at Harvard four years earlier; and then, after teaching school for a year or two, as he had done before during college vacations, he had begun the study of theology, at first by himself and afterwards at the Harvard Divinity School. He was just entering that School at the time, seventy-five years ago, which we are now celebrating. Even before this his mind had been busy with those great inquiries and speculations which in a very few years were to require a larger room than he could find even in the freest pulpit of that period. "I was at that very time," he tells some of his pupils in after-life, in referring to his school-teaching days, "already writing every night in my chamber my first thoughts on morals and the beautiful laws of compensation and of individual genius, which to observe and illustrate have given sweetness to many years of my life."

In March, 1829, he was ordained as minister of the Second Church in Boston. It was in September, 1832, three years and a half later, that he resigned this place, never again to be settled over a parish. He still preached occasionally for some years; but forty or fifty years ago I heard him say one Sunday morning, in Theodore Parker's desk at the Music Hall, that it was long since he had occupied such a place, and that he had left the pulpit because it was impossible to remain on account of the many opinions imputed to a man who stood there which he himself did not hold.

I will not speak further of the mere facts of Emerson's life, except barely to mention his first marriage and the early death of his wife, all within the first two years of his short ministry, his retirement to Concord, his second marriage, and that great career as a lecturer and a writer, beginning soon after he left the pulpit, and lasting almost up to his death, in April, 1882.

What he had hoped from his profession, and what he was giving to it, may be seen by what he wrote after he had chosen it, but while he was still teaching school: "My trust is that my profession shall be my regeneration of mind, manners, inward and outward estate—or, rather, my starting point; for I have hoped to put on eloquence as a robe, and by goodness and zeal and the awfulness of virtue to press and prevail over the false judgments, the rebel passions, and corrupt habits of men." Again a little later, in April, 1824: "I am beginning my professional studies. In a month I shall be legally a man, and I deliberately dedicate my time, my talents, and my hopes to the Church." His theological education, interrupted by illness, amounted to little; and, as we have seen, his one settlement as a minister was short. It must have seemed to him, when he left the pulpit, that these high hopes, and these vows that I have read, had come to naught. But we can see, as we look back, that, in reality, they have been and are still being nobly accomplished, although in a sense and after a fashion very different, indeed, from what he proposed. In those wonderful outpourings that came from him in the next half-century, he did, indeed, "put on eloquence as a robe, and by goodness and zeal and the awfulness of virtue prevail," as he will long continue to prevail, "over the false judgments of men." Although he left the pulpit early, he never left the function of the prophet and the religious teacher. With him it came true, as he said, that, "if one would be a good minister, he must leave the ministry." But, leaving the ministry, he has done the office of the Church better than the Church itself. He has largely regenerated the Church, and is still regenerating it.

* From an address at the seventy-fifth anniversary of the American Unitarian Association at Boston, May, 1900.

How has this come about? He sought deeply, all his life, for the true and permanent sources of inspiration. He conceived of man as a manifestation of the spiritual power that is everywhere present in the universe, creating, shaping, governing, blessing all, and ready, as ready to-day as in the time of Jesus or of Moses and the prophets to pour itself through each and all, if only the heart is open. He was forever seeking to put himself in the simplest and directest relation with God, the Soul of all, and forever listening for the oracle. See the simplicity of his early methods! "Many of our actions, many of mine," he wrote in the summer of 1832, "are done to solicit the soul. . . . I would be a vehicle of that divine principle that lurks within, and of which life has afforded only glimpses enough to assure me of its being. We know little of its laws; but we have observed that a north wind, clear, cold, with its scattered fleet of drifting clouds, braced the body, and seemed to reflect a similar abyss of spiritual heaven between clouds in our minds; or a brisk conversation moved this mighty deep; or a word in a book was made an omen of by the mind, and surcharged with meaning; or a cloudy, lonely walk, striking the electric chain wherewith we are darkly bound. And, having this experience, we strive to avail ourselves of it, and propitiate the divine inmate to speak to us out of the clouds and darkness." This was written during the summer that he was pondering the giving up of his place at the Second Church.

Five years before, we find him, at Concord, at a time when he was "preaching half of every Sunday," using, in a letter to his aunt, Miss Mary Emerson, the remarkable expression that "the object of our intellectual existence on earth" seems to be "the learning of language." In answer to her request he had sent her down, at Waterford, in Maine, Hume's Essays and Miss Baillie's plays. He wonders what she wants with Miss Baillie, and thereupon suggests the answer to his own question, in a high, half-humorous strain, from which we get a little bit of autobiography. "The instructor in a school," he says, "is pleased to see the children play tricks with figures on a slate, and is glad if they are learning arithmetic by puzzles and in sport; and our governor consents that the apparent object of our intellectual existence on earth, the learning of language, should be accomplished by calculation or by fancy. Anyhow there is a person, of very insignificant pretensions, assuredly, but who believes he has sometimes owed the best of his poor thought to this unhonorable expedient of bringing phrases to the rack. The profit is much as the hangman's, who, doing his office skilfully, sometimes stands legatee to the very respectable sufferer. I would not trouble you with what I know you consider degrading particulars, but that they may go further than more showy facts to teach what stuff we are made of." And then, apparently, he proceeds to give some of these "degrading particulars"; but they are omitted in the printed letter.

In such passages as these, in his youth one sees the intimation of the thoughts and the methods of his whole life—very simple methods, illustrated at this time in a homely way, but the beginnings of what resulted in that splendid contribution to human thought and human inspiration which he afterwards lived to make; for these were not the mere fancies and dreams of youth, soon to be forgotten as he grew absorbed in the routine of life. Here was one who sought after and treasured these heavenly intimations as the most real and most important things in the world, who gathered them assiduously all his life long; one who, regarding all that he saw in Nature and all that he could gather of human learning and human utterance as so much hint and expression of greater spiritual things behind, made it the main business of his life to study this "language" of which he had spoken, these omens and signs of spiritual truth, and to utter the high matters that he learned, in words that should communicate it to others with an absolute truth, and with whatever of exactness, force, and weight might be possible to human speech, and might consist with the difficult nature of what he sought to say—with its fleeting, elusive, delicate, and almost incommunicable charm. His success was wonderful. Few, indeed, in any nation are the masters of language that can be compared with Emerson's.

As to religion, specifically, perhaps Emerson's most explicit utterances are found in his Divinity School Address, in 1838. After he had delivered it, he was ridiculed or sharply condemned by some of the leaders of our denomination. Some of them, indeed, spoke well of him personally for being honest enough, if such were his views, to keep out of the pulpit. On most of them its lofty truth and poetry were thrown away.

In that address he stated his doctrine of God, of man, the great inspired child and sharer of the life of God, and of the origin of the religious sentiment. But the oracles of this sentiment are an intuition, he said. They cannot be received at second-hand. "Jesus, the only soul in history who has appreciated the worth of man," has been obscured by degrading misconceptions and a degrading homage. The Church dwells with noxious exaggeration about the person of Jesus. The soul knows no persons. "By his holy thoughts Jesus serves us, and only thus." Men talk of revelation as something given long ago, as if God were dead. True Christianity is a faith like Christ's in the infinitude of man. Man's soul is wiser than the whole world. In the soul, redemption is to be sought. Of religion he has said elsewhere: It "is a new statement every day." "It is the condition of religion to require religion for its exposition." "Prophet and apostle can only be rightly understood by prophet and apostle."

Such are Emerson's utterances, some of them high and difficult, on the main topics of religion; and men said: This is taking away all that the Church venerates. Jesus is gone, and we know not where they have laid him. Miracles are gone. The Bible is gone. God Himself is gone. All the faith and learning of our ancestors, of all the centuries of Christian history, are gone.

No, no; nothing is gone. What has happened is that man himself is made a sacred thing, and Nature, also, sacred. The focus is changed; and all things take their place in a new order. Churches and church history and church organisation and creeds and opinions may still have their place and their interest; but these are no longer sacred, and they sink out of sight and grow trivial and offensive, if they are thrust forward into the place which belongs only to the Soul which unites and inspires us all.

Unitarians—that is the name we go by. I have often grieved that we should bear a name that seemed to separate us from others, when, in reality, we ourselves agree with all the churches, in all that they themselves most value. If we are to hold that name, let us hold it as Emerson did, and as he expressed it when he called certain elect ones the "Unitarians of the united world"—united, as he would say, by the common soul that streams through all. For such is the figure, that of a perpetual flow, that is forever running through Emerson's thoughts, and forever reappearing in his words. "Thou," he says, as he looks upon the little river at Concord, and thinks of that other flood that

> . . . pulsing flits
> Through thee, as thou through Concord Plain,—
>
> Thou in thy narrow banks art pent:
> The stream I love unbounded goes
> Through flood and sea and firmament;
> Through light, through life, it forward flows.
>
> I see the inundation sweet,
> I hear the spending of the stream
> Through years, through men, through nature fleet,
> Through love and thought, through power and dream.
>
> . . . .

So forth and brighter fares my stream,—
Who drink it shall not thirst again;
No darkness stains its equal gleam,
And ages drop in it like rain.

And now, at the end of the century which his great words and his character and life have adorned, as they have

Burned in noble hearts, proverb and prophecy, our denomination is eager to include him within its fold and to do him honour. Well it may be! And it has a right to claim him, for he never lets us.

He has stirred and spiritualised the current religion of our time, and given it wings. He has set the clergy in all denominations, as I have heard it described by one who has had occasion to listen to an uncommon number and variety of preachers,—he has set the clergy of all denominations to "preaching Emerson." That phrase is, rather, shortly descriptive of a fact and a situation than entirely just to certain great and holy men; but it does describe a fact. It was a great preacher of the Episcopal Church, only the year before he was made Bishop of Massachusetts, who said in an essay on "Orthodoxy," which Dr. Crothers has lately quoted, what I will presently quote again. It is the influence of Emerson, more than that of any man or all men together, which has made it possible to have such an utterance from such a source. "It is not conceivable now," said Phillips Brooks, "that any council, however ecumenically constituted, should so pronounce on truth that its decrees should have any weight with thinking men save what might seem legitimately to belong to the wisdom of the persons who composed the council. Personal judgment is on the throne, and will remain there,—personal judgment enlightened by all the wisdom, past or present, which it can summon to its aid, but forming finally its own conclusions, and then standing by them in the sight of God, whether it stands in a great company or stands alone." That was publicly said to a club by Brooks in 1890, and it did not keep him from his Bishop's chair. A great advance, indeed! And consider, let me add, in passing, what a sermon that was which Dr. McGiffert preached last Sunday in Plymouth Church in Brooklyn.

But, after all, not yet has Emerson come to his own. For him it is no reward to become popular; and merely to have men say over again the things that he has said, is like having them say again the great utterances of Jesus. Anybody can do that; everybody does it; Christendom has been doing it for near a score of centuries. But the prophet does not come into his true heritage except as he provokes the men of religion, through a faith and a courage like his own, and a like reliance upon the inexhaustible and ever-present Source of all life and inspiration, to rise to the height where they also, like him, may speak the very word of God, "as one having authority, and not as the scribes."

To CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c., received from the following:—T. B.; C.; G. C. C. (Golaghat); R. K. D.; R. J. J.; E. W. L.; H. N.; S. C. R.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

VERE FOSTER.

"SELL whatsoever thou hast and give to the poor." Truly a hard saying. Too hard for the young man who had great possessions. How much more popular and comfortable a doctrine even for the benevolent—"Get all thou canst and leave it to the poor!" And yet occasionally the precept which made the young man turn sorrowfully away has been obeyed.

At the bidding of the Church men have made the great renunciation. A vivid realisation of the "treasure in heaven" has helped them. When at the bidding of no Church, and stimulated by no future reward, one, to whom any future existence is more a vague perhaps than a triumphant certainty, does this, it is the greater marvel. And when he has passed away, and is beyond the laudation which here he never sought, when the vague perhaps, whatever else it may be, is surely "rest in God and love" for him, then it is well that of those who knew and loved him one should try to state the manner of man he was.

Vere Foster gave his wealth, and he renounced what some would value more—the promise of a distinguished career in the diplomatic service. I suppose few men ever began such a career under brighter auspices. Connected with some of the most powerful families in England, related to Lord Palmerston, whose private secretary he became, he also had the great advantage of the ripe experience of his father, Sir Augustus Foster, a tried diplomatist, who had been Minister to the United States, to Sweden, to Denmark (where, in 1819, at Copenhagen, Vere Foster was born), and to Sardinia. To these advantages must be added the training of Eton and Christchurch, some years of experience at the Foreign Office, and engagement in some diplomatic missions.

The motive which could induce a young man to deliberately renounce these prospects must have been a very strong one; the call to such a renunciation must have been a very potent call. It was a potent yet a feeble cry, the subdued sad plaint of starving multitudes.

He heard it on his first visit to Ireland. It touched the young man's heart, and altered his career. "Sell all thou hast and give it to the poor." The offer of another appointment was declined. He decided to abandon diplomacy and toil for the stricken country. One object swayed him now:—to give his all. The most obvious remedy for the starving peasantry was emigration, and at this he worked, inducing and assisting all he could to try the New World. But the emigrants were subject to brutal treatment. They were defrauded of their allowance of food, insulted, kicked, and beaten. To remedy this he determined to investigate it for himself. He took his passage as a steerage passenger on an emigrant ship. He dared to remonstrate against the brutality of the sailors and officers of the ship, and thus obtained their ill-will. When engaged in writing a protest to the captain, he was struck in the face by the first mate and knocked down; but threats and the foulest abuse only made him the more determined. He sent an account of his experiences to his relative, Lord Hobart. It was published as a Parliamentary paper, and, together with his evidence before a Committee of the House of Commons, was instrumental in causing the passage of the Emigration Acts.

Last year I found this action attributed by a well-known London newspaper to another man. I sent a cutting from it to Mr. Foster, and with his reply he sent me a copy of the Parliamentary paper containing the letter to Lord Hobart.

Having thus secured a more humane treatment of emigrants, he devoted himself to the work with renewed energy. From 1850 to 1857, and from 1880 to 1884 were the most active periods of this work. What he spent during the first period I have no means of ascertaining, but a report of the work done in '80 to '84 he gave to me.

The contributions from a number of subscribers—dukes, Cabinet Ministers, merchants—amount to £2,251; the balance paid by Mr. Foster is £26,948 14s. By this outlay the passage of 20,251 young women was assisted.

Education had, if not the first, the second place in Mr. Foster's regard. He did not like to think that the bare-footed Irish children should have to tread on mud floors sodden by the leakage from thatched roofs, so with characteristic energy he set about flooring and roofing the schools at his own expense. In this sacred cause he tramped all over Ireland, making careful notes of the condition of school buildings, and improving some two thousand of them.

Then there were the copy-books, and the drawing-books.

Poverty-stricken Irish schools could not afford good copy-books, so Mr. Foster began to manufacture them, stipulating that they should be sold at as cheap a rate as the inferior articles, and paying the difference. Those copy-books were the result of careful study on sound scientific principles in which Lord Palmerston, a martinet in writing, assisted. They were rapidly taken up, with the result that the Irish children began to forge ahead, and England and the Colonies demanded them too.

When I came to know Mr. Foster his emigration work had dwindled to occasional cases; but he was very busy with the National Competitions for writing and drawing, started by him in 1870, and for which, up to 1893, nearly three thousand pounds had been spent in prizes. The labour involved was very heavy at times in judging, arranging, and classifying so many specimens. At these seasons the upper room in Belfast which made his home, was encumbered by hosts of copy-books and drawing-books. The affairs of the Belfast Royal Hospital also took up much of his time. He was not only a very generous benefactor to the institution, but he inspired others to give and collect for it. On "Hospital Saturday" he was everywhere—directing, cheering, and tiring himself out.

A Belfast newspaper, which records his death on Dec. 21, contains a school report, read at a distribution of prizes, with this sentence in it:—"Even older people do not very often work for mere work's sake without some hope of reward." Not very often; yet the reward of this man would be difficult to name. He had resigned brilliant prospects, had given away a very ample fortune, had toiled hard for others. What is his reward? Rest? The aged frame needed it; not the dauntless, action-loving soul.

Give him the glory of going on, and still to be.

C. E. P.

THE WORK OF THE SPIRIT.*

The Holy Spirit is the witness to the soul of the Fatherhood of God.

NOTHING is more beautiful or hopeful than the Divine ministry to mediocrity, till it is mediocrity no longer, but high spiritual distinction. This burden of mediocrity is so common, yet so painful, that we who bend beneath it need all the comfort we can get. It is all the harder to bear, day after day and year after year, because it enlists no sympathy on our behalf, and probably no one knows that we are bearing anything. If we complain, we are called querulous, and told to reflect upon our blessings, since no one sees that there is anything to complain about—since it is not physically, only mentally, only emotionally, that we must suffer and forego. So we brood over the sting in silence, till, if we have no spiritual outlook, hope and love die in our hearts. There is no impressive tragedy in our lives; and if there were, we suspect that we should not reap a rich harvest of sympathy. We are not people who inspire intense devotion. We are not really first with anyone, or if we are, it is only by accident, because no better person chanced to be forthcoming! We read and think of personalities as unforgetable as roses: we know that we are common asters, with no haunting fragrance, no exquisite colouring—which no one prizes above all other flowers. Or perhaps it is worse, we are mere weeds in the garden.

We are neither beautiful nor gifted. If we had been one, we could have dispensed with the other! There is nothing for us but to be good—ah, what an anti-climax! But, alas, we find that even morally, we are dull and ineffective! Our temptations are not of the grand heroic type, they are poor, sordid temptations, which we would be ashamed to write down, and are more than half ashamed to pray about. Mean ambitions, mean jealousies, mean suspicions, mean desires! How can the Divine Spirit transfigure a life like this?

. . . . . .

But how often we see it done! There is many a face one has marked near the beginning of the journey, dull, apathetic, and unlovely, yet before the end is reached those looking on it see it as the face of Stephen. And sometimes there are lives that seem quite commonplace from the outside, which God's grace has been slowly fashioning from within — till one day there comes a sudden stupendous crisis, and the man who bore his burden of mediocrity so patiently and quietly, because God was with him, almost unconsciously, in the sheer spirit of faithfulness, performs an act of heroism that makes the whole world wonder. But the angels do not wonder. They know that for a long while he had been greater than many people who conquer cities, for he had conquered his repining, sullen soul, and learned to follow Christ in common ways, and made the bread of peasants and their earthen cup his sacrament.

THE Twentieth Century Meetings of Birmingham Unitarians announced for Friday and Sunday next are postponed till further notice owing to the Queen's death.

---

* From an Essay by May Kendall in Present Day Papers for January. Headley Brothers, 14, Bishopsgate Without, E.C. 6d. net.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

DURING these last days we have all been thinking very sorrowfully of our Queen, or, at least, very sorrowfully that she is taken from us and her long reign is over. For herself we can only be thankful that a beautiful and noble life of eighty-one years is peacefully ended, and she is called to rest and to enter into that new life, to which so many whom she loved had gone before her.

The reign of Queen Victoria has been the longest in English history, and very wonderful in the progress of knowledge and in much good of many kinds accomplished for the people. This was what the Queen cared most about. She had a great and tender heart, and was always anxious to use her Royal power to encourage those who were working for the common good.

I expect many of you know the beautiful story of her girlhood, before she became Queen, but I should like to tell it over again.

When you are in London you can go and see Kensington Palace, where the little Princess was born, on May 24, 1819, that is, nearly eighty-two years ago. She was a granddaughter of the King, George III., and when in the next year he died, her uncle George IV. became King, and after him another uncle William IV. The Princess Victoria was very happy in having a wise and good mother. Her father died when she was a baby, so that her mother, the Duchess of Kent, who was a German Princess, had all the care of her bringing up. The little girl had no idea that she might some day be Queen of England, but her mother of course knew, and was very careful that she should not be spoilt, but should be well taught, so as to be fit for that high place, if it should come to her. So she grew up, healthy in mind and body, accomplished and thoroughly well taught, beyond the learning common to young girls at that time, simple and earnest, affectionate and generous in disposition. When she was in her teens, and her uncle William, whom she would succeed, was King, her mother saw that the time was come for Victoria to be told what was before her. So one day her governess put a genealogy of the Royal House in the pages of the history book she was reading, and was near at hand when the Princess found it. "I see," said the child quietly, "I am nearer the Throne than I thought"—and then after a pause, "Now many a child would boast, but they don't know the difficulty. There is much splendour, but there is more responsibility." And then she put her hand in that of her governess and said: "I will be good." Simple, childish words—but how true to them the Queen was through all her long life! And when a few years later she was called to the Throne, there was the same simple earnestness in her manner and the same desire to do her duty.

It was soon after two o'clock in the morning of June 20, 1837, that the King, William IV., died at Windsor. The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Lord Chamberlain at once posted to London, and arrived at the Kensington Palace about 5 o'clock. As they reached the gates the sun broke from behind clouds, and the old red-brick palace was flooded with light. But it was some time before they could rouse the porter and gain admittance. Then they were told that the Princess Victoria was quietly asleep and could not be disturbed; but when they said that they came on business of State to the Queen, they could not be refused; and very soon the young girl of eighteen came down to them, in a dressing-gown, and with her fair hair falling over her shoulders, to be told that she was Queen. "I felt no exultation, but something like fear," she said in a letter a few days later; but then and afterwards it was with quiet dignity and earnest conscientiousness that the young Queen accepted her position. At eleven o'clock that same morning she had to meet the Privy Council for the first time to receive the allegiance of all the great men of the State, among whom were the Duke of Wellington, Lord Melbourne, her first Prime Minister, and Sir Robert Peel. Everyone was struck by the beautiful grace and the firmness with which she went through her difficult duty and read her first speech. They felt at once that she was worthy to come to the Throne, and would more than fulfil the highest hopes which had centred in her young life; and now as we look back with great thankfulness on the more than sixty years of her long reign, we know that we are happy indeed to have grown up in a country where Victoria was Queen.

WE are glad to welcome the first number of a new series of the Welsh "Inquirer," Yr Ymofynydd, a magazine of twenty-four pages, issued as the monthly organ of the South Wales Unitarian Association, and edited by the Revs. D. Evans, of Cribyn, and T. A. Thomas, of Llandyssul. "Liberty, Truth, Love" stand (we are told), in what to us are mystic characters, as motto on the new cover, which is designed by a daughter of Mr. Gwenogfryn Evans, of Oxford, and represents a pilgrim of truth at the foot of a rugged upward path, over which appears the risen sun. This first number contains two greetings in English from Revs. Dr. Vance Smith, and W. Copeland Bowie, and another, which we wish we could read, from the venerable Rev. Thomas Thomas, of Green Park. In addition to the Editor's opening address, there is an article "On the Threshold," by our friend and correspondent, the Rev. R. J. Jones, of Aberdare, while the Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans writes on "The Union of the Scottish Churches," and the Rev. W. Tudor Jones on "Wanted—Heretics." These and the rest of the magazine are all in Welsh, and we have looked over the pages with interest and longing. Such a magazine should be of great service in the Principality, and is worthy of the support of well-wishers of the Welsh Unitarians, even though they cannot read the language. The price of Yr Ymofynydd is 2d. monthly, or an annual subscription of 2s. 6d., which includes postage. Another hundred subscribers are needed, we understand, to secure the stability of the undertaking, and loyal friends are invited to subscribe, either for themselves or for the distribution of the magazine in Wales. Subscriptions may be forwarded to the Rev. T. A. Thomas, Cerdin Villa, Llandyssul, South Wales.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, JANUARY 26, 1901.

A QUEEN, A WOMAN BELOVED.

PEACEFULLY the burden of many years, of many cares and sorrows, has been laid down, and the long life of our QUEEN is ended. In all history there has been no such QUEEN as ours, with so wide a dominion, and with such power "broad based upon her people's will"; nor has any other Sovereign so touched the imagination and the affections of her people in many lands with the noblest influences of personal character and true human sympathies.

"Educated in England under the tender and enlightened care of a most affectionate mother, I have learnt from my infancy to respect and love the constitution of my native country. . . . I shall steadily protect the rights and promote to the utmost of my power the happiness and welfare of all classes of my subjects." So spoke the girl QUEEN of eighteen, when she first addressed her Council, and after more than sixty years we know how fully she redeemed that pledge.

As her own Poet Laureate, who spoke so beautifully of her, took his office as seer and singer of pure and lofty truth, as a sacred trust to be fulfilled with a complete and worthy devotion, so she her QUEEN-hood; and it is impossible for us to estimate how great a part of the benefits of her reign, which make the Victorian era, in spite of many shadows, the brightest that England has ever known, must be directly attributed to her. Certain it is that TENNYSON'S noble lines, written half-a-century ago, with lofty aspiration, have received ample fulfilment in all that rested within the QUEEN'S power, and now more than ever we can say of her,

She wrought her people lasting good;

Her Court was pure; her life serene;
God gave her peace; her land reposed;
A thousand claims of reverence closed
In her as Mother, Wife, and Queen.

And if the hope of peace was more than once sadly broken, and the closing year of her life was most unhappily darkened by a terrible war, we know that it was always against the QUEEN'S will, and that the whole influence of her life made strenuously for peace.

For the first twenty-four years of her reign the QUEEN had the support of her mother's sympathy, and the debt which this country owes to the Duchess of KENT ought never to be forgotten. To this was added for nearly the whole of the same period, the strong support of her husband, Prince ALBERT, who not only gave to her for twenty-one years the supreme happiness of her life, but confirmed her in all noble purposes and generous sympathies. What he was the people only came to know fully after the PRINCE'S death, but now as we look back upon the QUEEN'S reign our thankfulness for his life also is vividly renewed.

Dr. NORMAN MACLEOD gives a touching account of his first visit to Balmoral in the spring of 1862, after Prince ALBERT'S death. He was already a trusted friend, and had several times preached in Crathie Church, when the Royal party was at the Castle. But on that sad occasion he felt it a most trying ordeal, yet was thankful afterwards that both in public and in private he had been able to speak to the QUEEN what was right. Of a private interview he says in his journal :—

After dinner I was summoned unexpectedly to the Queen's room. She was alone. She met me, and with an unutterably sad expression, which filled my eyes with tears, at once began to speak about the Prince. It is impossible for me to recall distinctly the sequence or substance of that long conversation. She spoke of his excellences, his love, his cheerfulness, how he was everything to her; how all now on earth seemed dead to her. She said she never shut her eyes to trials, but liked to look them in the face; how she would never shrink from duty, but that all was at present done mechanically; that her highest ideas of purity and love were obtained from him, and that God could not be displeased with her love. But there was nothing morbid in her grief. I spoke freely to her about all I felt regarding him—the love of the nation and their sympathy, and took every opportunity of bringing before her the reality of God's love and sympathy, her noble calling as a Queen, the value of her life to the nation, the blessedness of prayer.

And he adds :—

The more I learn about the Prince Consort, the more I agree with what the Queen said—that he really did not seem to comprehend a selfish character, or what selfishness was.

It was early in 1861 that the QUEEN lost her mother, and in December Prince ALBERT also died. His noblest monument is perhaps in TENNYSON'S lines of dedication of the "Idylls of the King" :—

Indeed he seems to me
Scarce other than my king's ideal knight,
"Who reverenced his conscience as his king,
Whose glory was, redressing human wrong;
Who spake no slander, no, nor listened to it;
Who loved one only, and who clave to her—"

. . . .

We know him now; all narrow jealousies
Are silent; and we see him as he moved,
How modest, kindly, all-accomplished, wise,
With what sublime repression of himself,
And in what limits, and how tenderly;
Not swaying to this faction or to that;
Not making his high place the lawless perch
Of winged ambitions, nor a vantage ground
For pleasure; but through all this tract of years
Wearing the white flower of a blameless life,
Before a thousand peering littlenesses,
In that fierce light which beats upon a throne,
And blackens every blot: for where is he,
Who dares foreshadow for an only son
A lovelier life, a more unstained, than his?
Or how should England, dreaming of his sons,
Hope more for these than some inheritance
Of such a life, a heart, a mind as thine,
Thou noble father of her Kings to be,
Laborious for her people and her poor—
Voice in the rich dawn of an ampler day—
Far-sighted summoner of war and waste
To fruitful strifes and rivalries of peace—
Sweet nature gilded by the gracious gleam
Of letters, dear to Science, dear to Art,
Dear to thy land and ours, a Prince indeed,
Beyond all titles, and a household name,
Hereafter, through all times, Albert the Good.

And as we now recall these familiar lines, do we not find in them much that can be said with equal truth of the QUEEN?

On the fiftieth anniversary of her wedding her children gave to the QUEEN a Prayer-book, with the following inscription written by TENNYSON :—

Remembering him who waits thee far away,
And with thee, Mother, taught us first to pray,
Accept on this your golden bridal day
The Book of Prayer.

And the QUEEN wrote to TENNYSON, on the same day, Feb. 10, 1890 :—

How kind it is of you to have written those beautiful lines, and to have sent the telegram for this ever dear day, which I will never allow to be considered a sad day. The reflected light of the sun which has set still remains! It is full of pathos, but also full of joyful gratitude, and he, who has left me nearly thirty years ago, surely blesses me still!

With what steadfast spirit the QUEEN bore her sorrows we may see in another of her letters to TENNYSON, after the death of the Duke of ALBANY:—

I truly value your very kind words. My sorrows are many and great! Almost all I needed most to lean on—and who helped and comforted—are taken from me! But though all happiness is at an end for me in this world, I am ready to fight on, praying that I may be supported in bearing my heavy cross.

. . . . .

I am well, and while I live shall devote myself to the good of my dear country, which has on all occasions of sorrow or joy, but especially the former, shown such sympathy with me!

Such letters of private friendship bring us very near to the QUEEN; but the same true feeling breathed in her public messages and letters to the whole people, as on the occasion of her first Jubilee, and after the death of the Duke of CLARENCE, and not least in the brief message after the Jubilee of 1897:—"From my heart I thank my beloved people. May GOD bless them."

Now that she is taken from us that message seems to speak to us once more, and with a new depth of feeling. We may be happy in the thought that the QUEEN knew how profound was the loyal affection in which she was held by her people.

We have not attempted here any sketch of the QUEEN'S reign, or any retrospect of the great movements and achievements of the Victorian Era. This has been abundantly and admirably done in the Daily papers, and beyond this, all that has been so recently written concerning the past century has dealt very largely with the same subject. We have wished rather to dwell upon the thought of what the QUEEN has been and is to her people, for the pure and ennobling influence of her life cannot be taken away from us. The Mother's heart is what we prize above all else, royal, indeed, and illustrious in the highest station, occupied with vast public concerns, and yet beating true to the humblest of her people.

The first opportunity for the full expression of the universal sorrow came to the Daily papers on Wednesday, and from these we have gathered the following tributes:—

The Times.

OUR beloved Queen, full of years and of honour, has passed to her rest. There are no words to express the general grief, the universal sense of national and personal bereavement, awakened by the event which it is our melancholy duty to chronicle to-day. For nearly sixty-four years Queen Victoria has watched, at first with conscientious diffidence, later with ever-maturing experience, but always with the sympathetic insight of a sensitive yet finely-balanced nature, over every development of national policy and destiny. Through that long period she has commanded the esteem of those who direct the affairs of the world, and has won the affection and the confidence of the vast majority, whose judgment must be formed upon general and external indications of character. Only a rare combination of sweetness and strength, only a subtle blending of the highest qualities of head and heart, can achieve that double success.

. . . . .

If we have had orderly evolution where other nations have gone through devastating internal conflicts, if the Monarchy held its own while new buttresses were being built for its support, and if it now stands not only broad-based upon the people's will, but strong in the affections of kindred nations over sea, we owe these results, to a degree which it is hardly possible to over-estimate, to the womanly sweetness, the gentle sagacity, the utter disinterestedness, and the unassailable rectitude of the Queen.

The Standard.

IT is hard to think of the Throne apart from the living presence of the Lady who enriched the Crown with attributes more precious and undying than any of the traditional incidents of Sovereign State. She leaves it consecrated by the memories which, to the remotest periods of English history, will cling to her name. We are still, perhaps, too near the time when she moved amongst us to measure fully all that we owe to her virtue and her wisdom. But we know enough to be assured that history will assign to her a pre-eminent place in the long line of British Monarchs. Nor would her people care in this hour of sorrow to look beyond the plain promptings of their hearts. We would fain think of her, before the tomb claims the dust of one so dearly loved, with that absorbing sense of loss which men feel when the mother who watched over their infancy has been called away. The thoughts of many millions through the wide dominions that acknowledged her gracious sway will turn to the bier on which rest for awhile the remains of a great and noble Queen. They will not ask themselves why they should reverence the dead. She stands in no need of any set epitaph. Her life was the secret of that incomparable hold which, even in the grave, she will still have upon the affections of her people. Her character was an open book, in which the simplest could read at will. We all understood her, and, understanding, repaid Queenly devotion with responsive trust. Had she been guided through her sixty-three years of rule by a purely intellectual conviction of duty, she would, no doubt, have earned the gratitude and respect of the nation. But it was because she took counsel with her heart: because with her the Voice of Conscience was but the impulse of a keenly sensitive and sympathetic nature, that she held her singular place in the thoughts of all mankind. High and low, learned and unlearned, we were all attached to the Queen by the firmest ties of simple confidence and devotion.

The Daily News.

IT seems like conventional eulogy to say that of all British Sovereigns the Queen was most beloved. But it is indeed the simple and literal truth. Her Majesty had the gift of attracting and retaining the most ardent and enthusiastic loyalty of men and women who had never seen her face. She held by common consent the highest position among sovereigns. She had seen all the rulers of the earth who were alive at her accession pass away and their places filled by others. From eighteen to eighty-one she presided over an Empire which was constantly increasing in wealth, dignity, and extent. She saw, like Nestor, many generations of men. She associated and corresponded with a whole succession of Potentates, herself not least, but honoured of them all. She came in her old age to be the arbiter of European Royalty, the illustrious personage upon whom other Monarchs relied for wise counsel, the ripe fruit of long and varied experience. No such place has been held by an hereditary Sovereign since hereditary sovereignty began. For it depended on no formal hegemony, but from strength of character, and length of days. Until she was suddenly struck down by the illness which has saddened the hearts and perplexed the minds of all her subjects, Time had dealt very lightly with the Queen. It had somewhat bowed her form, and her hair had passed from silvery grey to snowy white. She lost the power of active movement and her eyesight was impaired. But her mind was as vigorous and her courage as indomitable as they had been in the pride of her youth and the prime of her womanhood.

The Daily Chronicle.

MORE than eighty years have passed, and the little Princess who became a Queen at eighteen, and ruled by love and justice as no tyrant or conqueror ever ruled by fear, has sunk into her last sleep amid the hush of a world who loved and honoured her. What a monument our dead Queen has raised to her memory! How little is all that we can say of her, or do for her, or raise in sumptuous magnificence to perpetuate her name, when compared with the record of that uncorrupted life and work! It is a record which should strike us at this moment as infinitely tender and pathetic. This was a Queen whom we loved and never feared. The wild unruly heart of the nation was always tamed and controlled by her. She led her people by a silken cord, as Una led her Lion, whithersoever she would. To-day is her day, and not a day of pride and boasting—not a day for the counting of her subjects as the sands on the seashore and the measuring of her Empire by its tale of continents and islands. . . . Let us think of her this morning by her highest title, not by crown and sceptre, not by purple robe and jewelled diadem, but by her own magnificent and splendid ideal of Womanhood. This it is which touches the heart's core of a proud imperial race: they have lost their "Mother, Wife, and Queen."

The Daily Telegraph.

As far back as those who live can cast their thoughts, to the dawn of childish recollection, the imagination of the Lady of the Throne, she who was knitted closer to all that was truest and deepest in the spirit of her people than any ruler since Alfred, had already glided like a legend, an ideal, a gracious vision and pure influence, into all our sense of England, into all our awakening to the heritage and destiny of Empire. It was bound up with all that was thrilling in the high annals of this small, sea-beaten, and immortal land, with all that was brave and right in our resolve to be worthy of the great that were of yore; with all the inspiration to which the love and pride of England could raise our dream of the future. The life of the Queen seemed the inmost part of the life of the Empire. With the passing and the coming of the generations, her name had been the most familiar of the household words. Her Majesty alone was the visible, perpetual symbol of her Realm, and the companion of the nation's journey through all the marvellous process of extended years, which made her nearer yet and dearer still.

The Manchester Guardian.

It has long been the firm belief of everybody in this country, and we think it must have been the belief of everybody outside it who takes an interest in its life, that the Queen was a woman honest, kind, and loyal in all her acts and thoughts; that during a long life she set herself to see clearly what her duty was and to do it faithfully; that in everything which the public takes the right to see of what, were it not that of a reigning sovereign, would be called her private life she was what English men and women would most wish the most prominent of all Englishwomen in the eyes of the world to be; that she worked hard; and that she did not merely work hard at the routine tasks of limited monarchy but was rich in happy discoveries and uses of occasions on which a rightly struck note of human sympathy might help—as did her famous message to the widow of Lincoln—to soften the mutual relations of great peoples, or, like her several recent messages to the people of this country, to raise and keep her own relations with her own countrymen high above the mere official relations of the ruler and the ruled. It was a career too truly honourable and useful to be daubed now with the perfunctory eulogies which attribute almost divine perfections to every sovereign newly dead. The ordinary phraseology of courtly panegyric, so often lavished on the worthless or the commonplace, seems too deeply tainted by that abuse to be worthily applied to the wise, kind, and brave lady who now is dead. It is only by the plain and reticent word which seeks to give its net expression, and no more or less, to the nation's unprecedentedly keen and genuine feeling of loss that one can do anything but a wrong to a character so simple and genuine in its common sense, its good feeling, and the strength and steadiness of its impulse to do what it felt to be right.

The Leeds Mercury.

It was the ambition of Queen Victoria to live and to rule in the hearts of her people. She has unquestionably attained that ambition, and as certainly posterity will willingly accord her the very foremost place among those whose lives enrich and ennoble our national story. The historians will doubtless differ over the great events of the Victorian Era. They may differ as to the part the Queen has played in connection with them. As to this they will have more intimate knowledge than we possess at the present time. But the story of the Queen's life in all her domestic relations and in her relations with her people will have a fascination for those who come after us, even to remotest generations, as long as the men and women of our race are capable of appreciating what is pure and lovely and of good report. It is an intensely fascinating story to-day, but distance will intensify the enchantment. Whatever may be the character of her children's children who may sit upon the Throne she has ceased to fill, they cannot detract from the nobility and the greatness of her matchless career.

The Liverpool Daily Post.

By universal admission on the testimony of the greatest experts Queen Victoria was the best-informed and most practised of living statesmen. She practised her statesmanship with constantly corrective and improving effect. She did all this while scrupulously and without reserve fulfilling the requirements of an unwritten constitution which has come to mean Democracy and Ministerial responsibility. That she might be better understood, alike as a woman and as a Queen, she caused to be published the lightest and sunniest details of her family life and the most full and intelligent account of those years of her Queenship during which her husband was acting as her confidential secretary, always holding all the threads of policy, always faithfully serving his wife, and always behaving with the utmost honour and at the same time with the most auxiliary friendship towards her Ministers. These books will always live as the records of the public and private conduct of a Monarch who dwelt secure in the warm affections of her people, and who will at once take a supreme place in history, and grow and grow as a perfect constitutional exemplar while time endures. Happy are we British also in that the Queen's noble and unsullied public character was linked with a womanliness as pure, as sweet, as true, as considerate, as fruitful in apt kindness, as ever in any place, high or low, taught fellow-women by example how to illustrate all the excellences by which a woman can bless the world.

VICTORIA.

Great and Beloved! Throned not by human chance,
But by that overmastering love that springs
From a wide nation's chosen reverence,
Our prayers are with thee; and our stricken hearts
Look down the vista of the golden years
Crowned by thy purity and perfect good,
Reading in all the everlasting will,
The blessed purpose and the Hand of God.

E. Teschemacher.

It is impossible to estimate the worth of one man absolutely consecrated to a noble aim. Twelve men under the leadership of another, once changed the aspect of the world, and twelve men equally consecrated to an equally noble aim, might do the same thing again at any time. Such education would bring no sudden dawning of the golden epoch; but it would lead to growing improvements in social conditions, as it deepened and ennobled the significance of personal life.—E. H. Griggs.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting was held as usual in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on Thursday, Jan. 17, the President, Mr. William Colfox, in the chair.

The Report of the Committee made reference to the death of Professor Max Müller, who had been one of the Visitors of the College, also to the death of the Rev. John Wright and other supporters of the College. A summary of receipts and expenditure for the past three years showed a considerable increase of expenditure, due to the larger number of students. A balance of £52 on the total of £3,607 for the past year was explained as delusive, since owing to changes in investments more than a year's income was included, and it was pointed out that at the present rate of expenditure a considerable increase in the annual subscriptions was needed to keep the college out of debt. The report referred with satisfaction to the happy results of the common residence of the students, and stated that at the beginning of the present year the residence would become a private Hall licensed by the University authorities for the residence of Undergraduates, with Mr. Addis as Master. Among the gifts to the college recorded were a large number of valuable books from the library of Dr. Martineau, presented by his family, and an excellent copy, by Miss Nevinson, of Leonardo da Vinci's "Last Supper," the gift of Mrs. Bramley, made at the desire, and in memory, of her late husband, Mr. Herbert Bramley, of Sheffield. The picture has been placed over the Communion table in the chapel. The New Century Fund, consisting of twelve donations of £100, had paid off all deficits on the previous year's accounts. The report concluded with a reference to the number of students at present in the College, a great advance on previous years, and to the satisfactory character of the work accomplished, and once more commended the College "to the loyal support of the trustees and of all friends of its principles, and of the ministry whom it trains for the free and devoted service of God and man."

The Treasurer pointed out that the finances were not so favourable as they seemed to be, for there were five quarters' income in the year. It was a serious thing that the subscription list was growing less, amounting to only £1,000 a-year, when £1,500 was actually wanted.

The President moved the adoption of the report, and emphasised its salient points. He referred to the statue of Dr Martineau in the library, and said he thought it was in a bad light and should be removed to some better position. The increase in the number of students was satisfactory; but he saw by the Year-book that there were still thirty vacant pulpits in the country, and forty others having supplies.

The Rev. C. Hargrove seconded. He said the New Century Fund was a gratifying item. The amount itself was not large; but the readiness with which it was subscribed should be encouraging to the trustees. The Unitarian laity never failed to support any good work such as theirs. He was glad of the success which attended the housing of all the students under one roof. There were at the present time most satisfactory relations existing between the teaching staff and the students who all seemed proud of their college.

The Rev. S. A. Steinthal said that if the plan of residence proved a success he should greatly rejoice; but he pointed out that it was at present premature to make any definite declaration with regard to it.

Mr. A. H. WORTHINGTON stated that the licensing of the residence for students did not bring the college into any official connection with the University.

Professor J. E. CARPENTER announced that Mansfield College had followed suit by establishing a residence for its students also.

The following were appointed officers for the ensuing year:—Mr. W. Colfox, President; Messrs. D. Ainsworth, R. Arlosh, H. Rawson, Vice-presidents; the Rev. H. E. Dowson and Mr. A. H. Worthington, Secretaries; and Mr. C. W. Jones, Treasurer. Committee and Auditors were also elected.

A vote of thanks to the President for his occupancy of the chair was moved by Mr. C. W. Jones and seconded by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, and the proceedings terminated.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

FOR FULLER LIFE.

SIR,—Will you allow me, as one who has more sympathy with Unitarianism than any other "ism," to give expression to a few of the thoughts uppermost in my mind? At this time of year, probably more than at any other, we dwell on ideals. We think regretfully of what might have been in the past, and then turn full of hope and resolution towards the future. We resolve to live more Christ-like lives individually; and then a yearning for fellowship comes over us, and we long to work hand in hand with others in the furthering of some good cause. One of the "causes" that lies near my heart is Unitarianism. We think with gratitude of all we owe to its truth-loving spirit, to the courage with which it has borne persecution, of the noble acts of self-devotion performed by men and women bearing its name, and we are uplifted and helped by the beautiful simplicity of its creed. It teaches toleration, and it is well, for there is still the bigotry of "isms" to be fought against—a bigotry of which even Unitarianism is not wholly free. Would that in our search after truth we were not so constantly being deluded into believing that a half-way "ism" was our final goal! But this very tolerance, such an excellent thing in itself, is fraught with danger, especially at this time, when the moderate spirit which is permeating our social life is drifting into indifferentism, or, in its desire to see peace, seeks to reconcile the irreconcilable. It affects the whole of our life, intellectual, moral, and social. In our very desire to be fair to all sides, we lose the enthusiasm which comes from seeing a part transfigured in our imagination into the whole of the truth. Error can never be preferable to Truth, nor narrow-mindedness to breadth of view; but let us see to it that our toleration does not degenerate into indifferentism. We need that vital spark of Truth which lurks within an inspired error to animate our souls, that enthusiasm of single-minded purpose which will fan into one large flame the scattered lights of our minds. Breadth and enthusiasm—it is for more of this I plead. Let us cleave to what is best in the spirit of toleration, and beware of all that degrades it. Let us seek to fully develop our minds and intellects, but beware of becoming the slaves of a "dry intellectualism." The reproach of coldness is often cast at Unitarianism, and, I fear, with a certain amount of justice. Personally, I know many who, attracted by its creed, would gladly enter its pale, but are repelled by a certain chilling atmosphere. Can we not throw more of the true spirit of devotion into our services? Are we not too Puritanic and too much afraid of what appeals to our senses and emotions? Ardent lover as I am of much that belongs to Unitarianism, I cannot help feeling strongly that we need more warmth, colour, and beauty in our services, and more genial, kindly fellowship in our churches. As Christians we should seek to understand and carry out more fully Christ's message of Love to all men, in all grades of society. We need more of his living, impelling spirit, more fervour, more spirituality, more generous-hearted impulse, and perhaps a less judicial and intellectual weighing and considering.

Let us try and make our Unitarianism more of a perfect whole, remembering, as Matthew Arnold tells us,

That you think clear, feel deep, bear fruit well,
The Friend of Man desires.

E. MAHLER.

THE UNJUST STEWARD.

SIR,—In a book on the "Parables,"* recently published by the Sunday School Association, I was surprised to see that the writer distinctly, and without the slightest hesitation, ascribes the parable of the Unjust Steward to Jesus. There is not a hint to the effect that there has ever been a doubt as to its authorship. It is evident then that, in spite of what has been advanced by critics against it, Mr. Hirst honestly believes it is entitled to rank as one of the genuine sayings of Jesus. Every man has a natural right to form and express his own opinion. But, in a book issued for the instruction of growing lads and girls, would it not have been well to mention in a foot-note that scholars, refusing to accept it as a genuine utterance, assign it to a late period? In a case like this, the suppression of the truth is dangerous. The readers of the book will not be always children. In a year or two's time their minds will have grown, and in the shop or the factory they may hear this very parable discussed, and its morality attacked—as a specimen of New Testament teaching! At such a time they will look in vain to this book for the special guidance they need.

Mr. Hirst prudently limits his comments to what is contained in Luke xvi. 1-8, and is silent about verses 9-13, perhaps because this latter section contains debatable matter. The "Story" that is told at the close is most irrelevant, and looks as if it had somehow got placed here by mistake. It would come more appropriately after the parable of the man who had not on the wedding garment.

We are told that the parable was given by Jesus to his disciples to illustrate the words: "The sons of this world are for their own generation wiser than the sons of light." What a fall! Can he who gave us the Sermon on the Mount have afterwards deteriorated so much mentally and morally as to be capable of the authorship of this parable? Can this picture of deceit and roguery have come from him? Had his mind become so barren, such a bleak waste, that he could think of no better simile for the illustration of his text? This is the more remarkable, because elsewhere his word-pictures are so simple and felicitous.

But what is the worth of the parable as showing the superior wisdom of the the "sons of this world"? Its scope is limited to the vicious and the criminal class. It might be appreciated by those who prey upon society, those who by craft, deceit, and treachery live upon their fellow men. But the larger proportion of the "sons of this world" are honourable men, and they show their "wisdom," not by cheating, but by their intelligence, industry, perseverance, integrity, and enterprise. Many of them are more thoroughly in earnest about their business than the "sons of light" are about religion. Inasmuch as a convict is not a fair type of the human race, so this parable is a libel on the non-religious community.

There is one point which Mr. Hirst gracefully avoids by neglecting the context. In the verse immediately succeeding the parable Jesus is represented as saying to his disciples: "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." If it be objected that these words are outside the parable, I reply that the idea itself forms the essential element of the parable and is not to be dismissed by a little adroit legerdemain. The interpretation of this Ebionite utterance I take to be this: the possession of wealth is sinful; use your wealth (and other people's too, if necessary) in deeds of charity; so that they, who are now benefited by your generosity, may hereafter secure you a welcome in the mansions of heaven. This is certainly making charity (in the sense of almsgiving) cover a multitude of sins.

A few years ago a very wealthy man in the North left nearly all his property to a certain religious society. Amongst those who knew well what an ungodly life he had lived, it was sarcastically remarked that his bequest was the biggest deal in Fire Insurance that had been made for a long time. But after all there was nothing unchristian in the man's way of settling matters if this parable was really uttered by Jesus. If Jesus did utter it, then our estimate of his moral character must be lowered considerably. F. T. REED.

Moreton Hampstead.

* "Half Hours with the Parables." Second Series. By J. Crowther Hirst.

CHANNING HOUSE SCHOOL.

SIR,—May I trespass upon your valuable space and call the attention of your readers to a good work that is being carried on quite quietly but none the less effectively and which stands most urgently in need of generous support. I allude to the Channing House School Half-Fee Presentation Fund.

The object of this Fund is to give what in effect is a scholarship tenable for two years of the value of £15 15s. per annum. equal to one half of the school fees, to those daughters of our ministers who would otherwise be unable to obtain such an extension of their education.

It is unnecessary for me to refer to the small stipends received by many of our ministers and their consequent inability to give their daughters the amount of education they most earnestly desire. To show that the Fund meets a real want I might mention that since it was started, upwards of forty of our ministers have availed themselves of its help, and at the present time the Committee have before them more applications than they can entertain solely from want of funds.

Several of our friends subscribe sufficient for one scholarship annually, but it is not necessary that all should do this. Three subscriptions of five guineas, five of three guineas or fifteen of one guinea each, will of course effect the same result—indeed, any subscription of whatever amount will be thankfully received and acknowledged by me as treasurer to the Fund.

F. J. NETTLEFOLD.

Streatham Grove, Norwood, S.E.
Jan. 19.

A MINISTER'S IDEAL.

AT a meeting of the Ministers' Institute in Boston last autumn Dr. Samuel A. Eliot, President of the American Unitarian Association, gave an address from the conclusion of which, published in the Christian Register, we are glad to reproduce some passages here :—

Fellow-workers, let us bear our witness to the joy of a true ministry, to its abounding privilege, to its inestimable rewards. "There is," said Phillips Brooks, "no career that can compare with it for a moment in the rich and satisfying relation into which it brings a man with his fellow-men. Let us rejoice together that, in a world where there are many good and happy things for man to do, God has given us the best and happiest, in that he has called us to bear witness to His truth."

How many and how various are our delights! Ours is the joy of plain living and high thinking, of simplicity of daily habit, of healthy regularity, of reasonable comfort, free usually from the restrictions and privations of dire poverty, and always from the encumbrances of luxury. Ours is the joy of regular and persistent intellectual exercise, the satisfaction of productive labour. It may indeed be objected that the immediate results of our labour are intangible and perhaps imperceptible; that manual labour produces things that can be seen and felt, while the fruit of intellectual labour is often remote, eluding measurement and even observation. But it is equally obvious that mental labour is more enjoyable than manual labour in the process, and the essence of joy is more in the doing than in the results of doing. A dawdling, trifling minister may miss this joy; but it is a part of the satisfaction of the robust worker.

Ours is the joy of intellectual fellowship. Surely, one of the supreme pleasures of life is in frequent contact with well-stored minds in large variety, and in the stimulus of quickening intellectual conflicts. Our is the privilege of deeper fellowships—no friendships so real and true as those that are based on spiritual affinities, no sympathies so satisfying as those founded on mutual services. We meet people, as a rule, on their best side. We deal naturally with their truest natures. We have unequalled opportunity for tying men to us in bonds of affectionate goodwill. Ours is the joy of disinterested service. What truer satisfaction can there be than in the ability to serve one's fellow-men? That furnishes a solid foundation of contentment—a contentment which is discoverable, indeed, by every child of man, but which is most accessible to the minister of the gospel of brotherly love.

Ours may be—it is not always so—the joy of a good reputation, the possession of a good name among one's neighbours and acquaintances. I do not mean fame, but that quiet, local reputation for purity, integrity, and sincerity which is often the halo on the brow of an old and faithful pastor, and the crowning satisfaction of a serviceable life. Ours may be the privilege of an enduring influence. A good minister builds his life into the most indestructible of all human institutions—a church. Few men have such opportunity of perpetual fruitfulness. The seed he sows comes to harvest in generation after generation of them that serve the Lord.

. . . .

Over against the assumed infallibilities of the misguided majorities, it is our joy to set the naturalness of our simple faith; over-against the great, pressing tide of materialism, it is our privilege confidently to vindicate the truth that "the things which are not seen are eternal."

And ours, finally, is the peculiar joy of a cheerful religion—a faith which is allied with, and not at war with, our fundamental instincts of honour and justice. Ours is the cheerful religion which is in harmony with the beauty of the visible universe, with the sweetness of domestic affections, and with our ideas of love and neighbourliness. Ours is a faith which bids us know that this marvellous life is not a vision that fades, a bubble that bursts, but a perpetual opportunity, an everlasting trust. Our religious philosophy justifies our Christian optimism. We have no cause, no time to listen to the voices that whisper of a golden age behind us. Our castles of hope shine ever along new horizons. Our good obtained is only tidings of a better. Our faith justifies us in illimitable expectation. Never before us, in all the history of mankind, did the right-minded, self-forgetting manly minister have such a power for good as he has to-day. The potential kingdom of God is even now in our midst. In earnest faith, with unchilled resolution, let us pledge ourselves anew to our high calling, eager for service, and determined that through us and those we shall inspire men may have life, and have it more abundantly.

A WELL-ATTENDED meeting of the committee of the National Conference took place at the Memorial Hall, Manchester, last week, when reports from the Superannuation, the Young People's Organisation, and the Ministerial Sub-Committees, were discussed. The next meeting will be held at Oxford in April, and subsequent meetings are fixed for the afternoon of Tuesday, May 28, in connection with the International Gathering.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

THE EAST CHESHIRE CHRISTIAN UNION.

A MEETING was held on Feb. 22, 1859, at the house of the Rev. John Gordon, Dukinfield, Henry Bayley, Esq., in the chair, at which were present members of the congregations of Dukinfield (Old Chapel), Dukinfield (Astley-street), Gee Cross, Mossley, and Mottram. It was unanimously resolved :—

That it is expedient to form a Missionary Association in the district in and about East Cheshire.

That the congregations of Dukinfield (Old Chapel), Dukinfield (Astley-street), Gee Cross, Mossley, Mottram, Oldham, Gorton, Stockport, Macclesfield (King Edward-street), Macclesfield (Parsonage-street), Congleton, Styal, Dean-row, and Knutsford be invited to unite in the above association.

The principle on which the association was founded was clearly enunciated in the two following resolutions :—

I. That this association shall be composed of Christian churches in the district in and about East Cheshire, which do not require subscription to any articles of theological belief.

II. That the object of this association shall be to afford mutual assistance to the churches comprising it, either in carrying on their own services, or in conducting missionary operations; such assistance being given in consistency with the perfect independence of each separate church.

Of the congregations invited to join the new "East Cheshire Missionary Association," as it was first called, Dukinfield (Old Chapel), Dukinfield (Astley-street), Hyde Chapel (Gee Cross), Mossley, Mottram, Styal, Dean-row, Knutsford, Congleton, and Macclesfield (Parsonage-street) accepted the invitation, and there were also included Flowery Field and Heyrod. The name was subsequently changed into that of "The East Cheshire Christian Union for Missionary Purposes."

The earliest object of the Association was rather to preserve and revive existing congregations than to break new ground. Increased interest in missionary operations was, however, a marked result among the congregations which had a settled ministry, and a much more satisfactory supply was secured for the congregations without such a ministry. The work was done by the ministers and lay preachers on the roll, with the assistance of the students of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board, to whom all missionary work round Manchester is much indebted. After the foundation of the association three Staffordshire congregations, at Newcastle, Longton and Red-street, were admitted to it, being at the time isolated from all other help and sympathy. Two of these, Newcastle and Longton, with intervals, long remained connected with the Union, but ultimately the difficulty of effectively conducting missionary operations at such distant centres, and other circumstances, led to the connection being severed by the Union with regret. Flowery Field and Mottram were the seats of the chief missionary activity during the early years of the Union, the former congregation being closely associated with the cotton-mills of Messrs. Ashton, who were generous supporters of the missionary work there, the latter being a congregation of Christian Brethren, the name still borne by them. Owing to the munificence of the late Mr. Thomas Ashton, the Flowery Field congregation moved out of the school in which it had previously worshipped into a beautiful new church, while a fine new school has also been built by Mr. Ashton. On entering the new church and securing by an effort from a bazaar, subsequently repeated, an endowment now raised to nearly £100 a year, the church became self-supporting. Mottram is still in receipt of grants from the East Cheshire Christian Union; and it is remarkable for the fidelity of the many members who, leaving that small village on the hills, have joined kindred congregations elsewhere, and been a source of strength to their efforts. Mottram men had much to do with the foundation of the two flourishing churches at Glossop and Denton.

An early addition to the work of the Union was the opening of the mission at Stalybridge, the Sunday-school founded there being an off-shoot from the powerful school at Dukinfield. Associated in the first instance with Mottram under a joint ministry, the Stalybridge congregation soon had a minister of its own, with the assistance of the Union, and has now for many years been, like Flowery Field, an independent congregation with a new church and school, for which they were largely indebted to the Leech family. Of the older congregations, those which have received assistance, in addition to those mentioned, have been Congleton; King Edward-street, Macclesfield; and Parsonage-street, Macclesfield. The congregation at Congleton has had great difficulties to contend with in the commercial depression that has been so prevalent in this old and somewhat decaying town. Owing to this there has been a constant migration to more flourishing centres of the most active young men; and this congregation has suffered much from this cause. But at the same time, there have always been in it men of influence who have faithfully adhered to its cause, and who have won for it respect throughout the town, often displayed by the attendance of leading citizens at its public gatherings. It inherits a long tradition of honourable service to the community; and it is satisfactory to know that in spite of all discouragements it is now, in the new chapel built some time ago, fuller of life and zeal than for many years. Such congregations, with their past history and their future possibilities, are worthy of assistance; and it is one of the functions of the East Cheshire Christian Union to give them a helping hand. Parsonage-street, Macclesfield, founded by the late Mr. Samuel Greg, and the seat of his inspiring lay ministry, was for years supplied by the Union, until an amalgamation took place between its congregation and that of King Edward-street, when that ancient congregation was revived by the infusion of the new members, bringing with them a more democratic spirit into the management of its affairs. The united congregations are in receipt of assistance from the Union. Another of the old Presbyterian chapels which has joined the Union since its commencement is that at Nantwich; and, although demanding no financial assistance, it has from time to time been supplied by the Union. For a considerable period it was in very low water; but here, again, has been witnessed a fine revival. The congregation, like that at King Edward-street, Macclesfield, reorganised on a more democratic basis, has entered on a new life: a new school has been built, the centre of much activity week-nights as well as on Sundays. In this, once more, is great encouragement in the work of keeping alive the old congregations with a sacred past, such as that bequeathed to the Nantwich Chapel by Dr. Priestley.

Of the more definite missionary work of the Union in establishing new congregations, the most important and successful efforts, since the establishment of the congregations at Flowery Field and Stalybridge, have been those at Glossop, Denton, and Ashton.

The Union, in these cases, has been much indebted to the generous and timely help of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The Jubilee Fund of the latter enabled the Union to hold the courses of lectures and initial services which gave birth to the Glossop and Denton movements. But both had unusual advantages, in generous help from Mr. Edmund Potter and his family and Captain Partington in the former case, and from Mrs. Russell Scott and her family in the latter case. The first school-chapel at Glossop was built by Mr. Potter, and the beautiful church subsequently erected owed much to the munificent assistance of Captain Partington. Worshipping in it, the Glossop congregation has now become, like Flowery Field and Stalybridge, self-supporting. At Denton to the new church there was soon added by Mrs. Scott the splendid Russell Scott Memorial Schools and the fine People's Hall, making altogether such a block of buildings as can hardly be found elsewhere in connection with a new missionary church. Here, as at Flowery Field and Glossop, the only danger has been that where so much has been done for a congregation it may lose its independence of spirit. But in all these cases the necessity has been realised by the people of making efforts for themselves. Either the old support has been withdrawn on which they relied, or new needs have arisen, as at Denton, from the appointment of a second minister; and in consequence larger contributions have been raised by the congregations. This is a sign of true health and vigour.

Of all the missionary work of the Union in recent years that at Ashton has been the most encouraging and successful. It was commenced by a course of lectures, largely attended, in a public hall, followed by Sunday evening services, and has never looked back. The energy and enthusiasm of minister and people have been remarkable from first to last; and they have already obtained land of their own and an iron church, and are raising funds for the erection of a chapel.

Another mission station, first commenced some years ago as a Sunday-school, is that at Boston Mills School, Hyde. More recently Sunday evening services have been held there, supplied by the Union. The Buxton congregation has in the later times joined the Union, as a self-supporting church.

Of the older independent congregations on whom the support of the Union mainly rests, it must be recorded that the character has changed in the latter portion of the nineteenth century. The old Presbyterian aristocrat is passing away from them. He has, in the past, added much influence to the old chapels, and provided them with large financial resources. He has been a man of culture and refinement, in the forefront of progress, rising to the highest positions in the community to which he belonged.

The loss of men like that has been greatly felt. They hardly exist now in the churches in which they occupied so important a place. They have disappeared, indeed, very often from the very communities in the midst of which their churches stood. Their removal has left these everywhere much more democratic institutions, depending not on the few but on the many; managed not by the few but by the many. This is healthy, and full of promise for the future. But, at the same time, it is much to be lamented that the churches are losing in many cases the younger generations of these old families, even while they remain in their neighbourhood. Social influences, or indifference, often lead to their practical withdrawal. Education in the great public schools, and in the ancient universities, detaches young men from their early religious associations, and they slip away from them. There is no greater need of our church life in our older congregations than to make every endeavour to retain the best of their rising youth, and it is much to be desired that ministers should set themselves with renewed earnestness to this most important work. There are many who look to the new Willaston School as a powerful agency in this matter, and who therein wish it "God-speed."

As to the general outlook at the opening of the new century in the work of the churches in the Union, while there is ground for satisfaction, there is also much need for renewed religious life in them. The closing quarter of the nineteenth century has been remarkable, no doubt, for congregational activity of a very practical kind. It has been a time of school-building, of chapel-building, and of bazaars in support of these efforts. At Gee Cross, Dukinfield, Stockport, and Knutsford fine new schools have been built and paid for, in addition to all the buildings in connection with the new congregations. A great deal of life and energy has been shown in these churches. But the inner life and worship of the churches, and faithful religious work in the Sunday schools, are more important things than any buildings or bazaars. The personal devotion of the members of our churches in worship and in work, and in the religion of the heart and life, is the thing in which a revival is most needed in the new century, in the older churches, and among the old families that attend them, no less than others. By the missionary efforts of the Union the working men and women are being brought in in larger numbers; our hold on the people grows with prospects that are hopeful. But it is equally needful to keep burning brightly the lamp of religion pure and undefiled in the simplicity of Christ in our older chapels. And we especially want to see in these more zeal and self-devotion for the missionary work of the Union, inspired by a deeper religious earnestness and a truer love for the advancement of the cause of "truth, liberty, and religion."

H. ENFIELD DOWSON.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Billingshurst.—The week evening services, which have been held in the Mission Church at Wisboro Green, about three miles and a-half from Billingshurst, have been so encouraging that the Rev. George Lansdowne, at the request of the people in the neighbourhood, has, since the beginning of the year, conducted Sunday afternoon services. There is quite a little band of boys and girls who attend the singing practices on Tuesdays, and who sing most lustily at the services on Thursdays and Sundays. The journey so often to Wisboro over a hilly road is no light task, taken in conjunction with the ordinary church work at Billingshurst, but the conditions at Wisboro warrant a special effort. On Wednesday, Jan. 16, through the kindness of Messrs. Charman and Pain, and other friends from Horsham, an entertainment was given in Billingshurst on behalf of Wisboro Mission Church. The entertainment was highly enjoyable, but on account of the usual local prejudice which country ministers so often have to experience, and the fact of the night being wet, there were few present besides our own people.

Boston (Appointment).—The Rev. W. Stoddart, B.A., of London, has accepted the pulpit of Spain-lane Chapel. Mr. Stoddart has preached several Sunday evenings to large and interested congregations. The chapel was re-opened in October, 1899, after having been closed for over seven years. Since the re-opening the services, by the help of the Central Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers' Union, have been carried on by supplies, whose services have been greatly appreciated, and it is most gratifying that it is now possible to appoint a resident minister. It is proposed shortly to hold a public recognition service.

Burton.—The second annual tea and entertainment of the Unitarian Society took place in the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 16, and was largely attended. The chair was taken by the Rev. J. Birks, of Derby, who was supported by the Rev. W. Birks and other friends. On the following Sunday the service was conducted by Miss Gittins, of Leicester, whose address was much appreciated.

Chester.—On Jan. 9 the annual scholars' tea and prize-giving took place. After an entertainment, which was much enjoyed, the prizes were distributed by Major Bryan Johnson. The Social Union meetings were re-opened successfully on the 16th inst., an interesting musical programme being provided. In connection with the Sunday-school a scholars' quarterly service has been inaugurated, and a wood-carving class started for the elder scholars.

Colyton (Appointment).—The Rev. F. T. Reed, of Moretonhampstead, has accepted a unanimous invitation to the pulpit of St. George's Chapel.

Deal.—A successful lantern-lecture on the "Ober Ammergau Passion Play" was given on Tuesday evening, by the Rev. S. Burrows, of Dover, the attendance being the largest this season. The local papers gave an account of the Rev. T. Shakespeare's sermon for the new century on "The Reconciliation of Science and Religion."

Halstead.—The annual tea and meeting of the congregation was held on Friday evening, Jan. 18. There was a good attendance. The Rev. T. E. M. Edwards presided, and gave a short address. The financial statement read by the secretary, Mr. J. Taylor, showed a balance in hand of about £6. The subscribers number about fifteen, but it is hoped that an increase will be made to the roll during the present year. The new committee was elected and various arrangements were made for the further development of the work. At present services are conducted fortnightly by ministers provided by the Provincial Assembly, which has charge of the congregation. A service for the Young People will be conducted on alternate Sunday evenings by Mrs. Kemp, a Quaker lady, who takes great interest in the services. A special feature of the Halstead congregation is an efficient orchestral band, which leads the singing, and plays selections from the works of the best musical composers. The service on Sunday last was concluded by the Rev. F. Summers, when fifty adults were present.

Horsham.—On Tuesday week a very pleasant gathering of the Sunday-school teachers, scholars, and friends was held in the Worthing-road Schoolroom. The prizes were distributed by Miss Marian Pritchard, who gave an address to the scholars, five of whom had made every possible attendance, early, and therefore received special rewards. Miss Pritchard's charming little drama, The Princess May, was then performed by some of the boys and girls attending the school and their friends. A comprehensive vote of thanks, following a distribution of gifts and refreshments, brought the proceedings to a close. With the opening of the new century it is pleasant to record the addition of six new names to the roll of membership. It is hoped during the spring to arrange for week evening lectures, to follow a very interesting one on "The Provincial Assembly and its Churches," given by the Rev. Frank Freeston a short time ago.

Horwich.—On Saturday evening last Mr. C. E. Barr gave a lantern lecture which he divided into two parts, the first being "Half an Hour with the Microscope," and the second "Types of British Scenery." In the interval between the two, as also throughout the second half, songs and duets were rendered by Mrs. Mottram of Stockport, Miss Adam of Southport, and Mr. W. Chesworth. Wretched weather prevailed, yet an audience assembled which quite filled the schoolroom. On Sunday afternoon the annual prize distribution took place, Mr. Barr kindly undertaking the duty, when thirty-one children received books, some of which they had been encouraged to choose for themselves. In the evening, after the ordinary service, which was more largely attended than usual, an Organ Recital was given by Mrs. Fuller, the hon. organist, and Miss Adam gave two solos. Never before has the chapel been so full of people of all shades of belief.

Maidstone.—The Kent Messenger and Maidstone Telegraph, of Jan. 16, contained an account of the Earle-street Chapel and the early history of the congregation, followed by a description of a recent service conducted by the Rev. S. S. Brettell.

North Cheshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The quarterly meeting of the Union was held at Dukinfield on Saturday last. About 110 persons were present. Prior to tea, an important committee meeting was held, at which a scheme of twelve months' reading was recommended to the schools. After tea the President (the Rev. T. R. Elliott) occupied the chair, and a discussion took place on "Christian Endeavour in our Sunday Schools," opened by the Rev. H. S. Tayler.

Stockton.—The Rev. W. H. Lambelle, who, during the past five years, has had charge of the Stockton Unitarian Church, in conjunction with the Middlesborough Unitarian Church, has recently severed his connection with Stockton, and will in future devote his attention entirely to Middlesborough. Several members of the congregation of the Stockton Church promoted a testimonial to Mr. and Mrs. Lambelle, and the gifts were presented on Friday, Jan. 18, at a social gathering held at Tate's Café. After supper the chair was taken by Mr. George Nicholson, when Mr. George Stainton, on behalf of the subscribers, presented a purse of gold to Mr. Lambelle, and Miss Rose handed a silver cruet to Mrs. Lambelle.

Trowbridge.—The Wiltshire Times, of Jan. 19, in a descriptive article, with reminiscences of the past century in Trowbridge, gave illustrations of the parish church and Conigre Chapel, and some notes on the history of the congregation.

It will be seen from an advertisement in another column that the course of six lectures on "The Bible in the Nineteenth Century," by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, which was given at Essex Hall before Christmas, is to be repeated at Bolton, Leeds, and Liverpool, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings respectively, beginning next week, on Jan. 29, 30, and 31.

The Right Hon. Leonard H. Courtney, the President for the current year of the Social and Political Education League, will deliver his Presidential Address in the Botanical Theatre of University College, Gower-street, W.C., on Friday, Feb. 8, at 8.30 P.M. His subject will be "The Making and Reading of Newspapers." The Right Hon. Sir M. E. Grant Duff (the retiring President) will preside. Cards of invitation may be obtained on application to the hon. sec., Mr. C. E. Hecht, 3, Essex-court, Temple, E.C.

The annual meeting of the Liberal Protestant Church, Brussels, took place Sunday, Jan. 20. The attendance was good and the tone very cordial. The members of the church were pleasantly surprised to learn from the treasurer's report that there was no deficiency in the accounts of the year; there is in fact a small balance to carry over. This unexpected result is especially due to the generous response our last appeal received from our English friends, to whom hearty thanks were voted. Will they kindly accept this expression of the sincere gratitude of the Brussels congregation?

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—[All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review].

Who's Who. 5s. (A. and C. Black).

The Englishwoman's Year Book. Edited by Emily Janes. 2s. 6d. (A. and C. Black.)

Life and Letters of Phillips Brooks. By A. V. G. Allen. 2 Vols. 30s. (Macmillan and Co.)

Cassell's Illustrated History of England. Part I. 6d. (Cassell and Co.)

The Fatal Opulence of Bishops. By Hubert Handley, M.A. 5s. (A. and C. Black.)

The Boy and the Angel. By the Rev. J. Byles. New Edition. 3s. 6d. (Fisher Unwin.)

Mother, Baby and Nursery. By Genevieve Tucker, M.D. 1s. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Ascent Through Christ. By E. Griffiths-Jones, B.A. 3s. 6d. (Hodder and Stoughton.)

Thoughts on Rome. By Conway Scott. (McCaw, Stevenson, and Orr, Linenhall Press, Belfast.)

English Historical Review, Review of Reviews, Mind.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Letters, &c., to the Rev. HARRY S. PERRIS, M.A., should be addressed (not as in the "Year Book for 1901," but) to 61, St. Augustine's-road, Camden-square, London, N.W. Letters addressed "Little Portland-street Chapel" are not delivered.

MARRIAGES.

BRYSON—PERRY—On the 12th Jan., at Hope-street Church, by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, Joseph T. Bryson, of Waterloo, to Annie, only daughter of Thomas Perry, of 125, Bedford-street, Liverpool.

EDWARDS—BLATCH—At the Free Church, Richmond, Surrey, on the 15th Jan., Alice, eldest daughter of the late William Henry Blatch, of Basingstoke, to George Henry, eldest and only surviving son of John Edwards, of The Peldon, Sheen-road, Richmond.

DEATHS.

COLLINS—On the 21st Jan., at his residence, 35, Cotham-road, Bristol, Robert Downing Collins, youngest son of the late John Collins, of Horton, Ilminster, aged 79 years.

HUDSON—On the 22nd Jan., at 4A, York-road Birkdale, Mary, widow of the late Charles Hudson, of Stockport, in her 78th year. No flowers by special request.

WHITFIELD—On the 21st Jan., at 4, Holly-road, Edgbaston, Hannah Maria Whitfield, in her 81st year.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, January 27.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN. Morning, "Alike to All." Evening, Musical Service, Gounod's "Meditations."

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. FRANK K. FREESTON, "In Memoriam: Queen Victoria," and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, "The New Democracy."

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS, and 6.30 P.M.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, and 7 P.M.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN. Morning, "In Memoriam."

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON. Morning, "An Empire's Grief." Evening, "The Waste and Saving of God."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Penge, Childwick Hall, Beckenham-road, 7 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS, "Some Literary Pioneers of the Unitarian Movement."

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. FARRINGTON. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. W. H. SHRUBSOLE, F.G.S.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Mr. J. C. PAIN, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. W. LEE, B.A.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. JOHN MCDOWELL.

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRADFORD, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. LIVENS.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. J. W. BROWN.

DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKSPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.

EASTBOURNE, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HASTINGS, Free Christian Church, South Terrace, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. GARDNER PRESTON.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. JENKYN THOMAS.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., "The End of the World," Mr. MORTON BARNES, and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "The Bible and some of its Difficulties."

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Claremont, 21, Albion-place (facing Harbour), 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. LESLIE SMITH, B.A.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.

SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.

WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—Jan. 27th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Haeckel's Enigma of Existence."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Jan. 27th, at 11.15 A.M., Prof. EARL BARNES, "Asceticism."

PULPIT SUPPLY.— The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. J. B. BARNHILL, 26, Clovelly Mansions, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.

UNITARIAN CHURCH, DARLINGTON.—PULPIT VACANT.—Address, Mr. J. MAWSON, 59, Cobden-street, Darlington.

Society for the Abolition of Vivisection

Offices: 62, Strand, London.

The object of this Society is a Law for the Total Abolition of Vivisection, or putting animals to death under any scientific pretext whatever.

Addresses on Vivisection (particulars of which will be gladly supplied by the Secretary) have been arranged for at the following centres: — Leeds, February 3rd; Hyde, February 10th; Hanley, February 24th, and Bolton, March 24th.

Members who have not yet sent in their subscriptions for the current year will greatly oblige by forwarding them to the Secretary at an early date.

E. M. WRIGHT, Secretary.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY

ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE. E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and

Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.

Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

WANTED, by a young lady, re-engagement as USEFUL COMPANION to lady or in a family. Thoroughly domesticated and musical. Salary from £20 to £25. References given.—Address, H. B., INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand.

Reckitt's PARIS Blue.

The Best is the Cheapest.

Schools, etc.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE,
OXFORD.

DR. DANIEL JONES' TRUST.

The Trustees offer to Ministers who have shown themselves efficient in active service, and desire to devote a year to further study, one or two Bursaries, tenable for one year at the College.

For further particulars apply to—

Rev. H. E. DOWSON, Gee Cross, Hyde ;
A. H. WORTHINGTON, 1, St. James'-square, Manchester. } Secs.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE,
OXFORD.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological Knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological Doctrines.

PRINCIPAL :
Rev. J. DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.LITT.

SESSION 1901–1902.

CANDIDATES for ADMISSION are requested to forward their Applications and Testimonials without delay to the Secretaries.

The Trustees offer for competition External Exhibitions, open to Students for the Ministry, tenable for the ordinary Undergraduate period at any approved British or Irish University.

The Trustees also offer Exhibitions, tenable at the College, for Students for the Ministry.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, or to

Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, Gee Cross, Hyde ; or
A. H. WORTHINGTON, 1, St. James'-square, Manchester. } Secs.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

MISS JARVIS and MISS CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

THE WARREN, KNUTSFORD.

PRINCIPAL :
MRS. W. CARRINGTON WHITELEGGE.

Excellent individual TUITION and Home Care for the daughters of cultivated parents who would appreciate unusual advantages for Music and Languages.

TO LET, two or three unfurnished ROOMS in quiet house. Bath (h. and c.). No children. North London.—Apply, C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOURNEMOUTH —Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE ; close to sea ; sheltered among the Pines ; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,
Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.
Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording
ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.
The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.
Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.
Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.
77 & 101,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.
Telegrams : "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at HOPE-STREET CHURCH HALL on FRIDAY, 1st February, at 8 P.M., the Rev. L. DE BEAUMONT KLEIN, D.Sc. (President), in the Chair.

The Annual Collections will be held simultaneously on Sunday, March 17th, 1901.

R. ROBINSON, Treasurer.
B. P. BURROUGHS, Secretary.

WINIFRED HOUSE,
Invalid Children's Convalescent Nursing Home,
Wray Crescent, Tollington Park, London, N.

For poor children suffering from debility or rickets, or recovering from hip or spinal disease, &c. Ages : Girls, 3 to 12 years ; Boys, 3 to 10.

Applications for admission to be made to Miss M. PRITCHARD, 11, Highbury Crescent, London, N. Maintenance fees, 4s. weekly.

Subscriptions and Donations will be gratefully received by WM. M. BLYTH, Esq., Hon. Treasurer, or by either of the Hon. Secretaries. Subscribers are reminded that the year of the HOME commences on May 1st, so that the subscriptions for the tenth year, if not paid, are now due.

Hon. Secs. { MARIAN PRITCHARD, ROBERT HAMPSON.

DAILY RE-ENGAGEMENT desired as GOVERNESS or SECRETARY. English and arithmetic (Cambridge Higher Local) ; good French, Latin, German, music, drawing. Excellent references. — Miss TALBOT, 38, Westbere-road, W. Hampstead, N.W.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

THE CRISIS. A Quarterly Review.

Devoted to the cause of Progress, and the National Honour and Welfare, and the saving principles of Liberty, Equity, and Fraternity.

Contents of No. 1, JANUARY, 1901.

Pax Britannica.
Forewood.
Events in Boer History.
Salisbury Government.
The Colonies to the Front.
Alcohol and Crime.
Liberty and Equality as a part of Christianity.
Notes.

Price SIXPENCE, by post 7½d.

London : WATTS and Co., 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Just published, price 2d., by post 2½d.

THE DREAD ALTERNATIVE:

"COME TO JESUS" —

OR : ————— ! By A PROTESTANT DISSENTER.

London : WATTS and Co., 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address : Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

The Bible in the Nineteenth Century.

A COURSE OF LECTURES by
PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
(of Manchester College, Oxford),
at BOLTON, LEEDS, and LIVERPOOL.

I. Changed Views of the Law.
II. Changed Views of Prophecy.
III. The Gospels and the Origin of Christianity.
IV. The Gospel Question : (1), The Synoptics.
V. The Gospel Question : (2), The Fourth Gospel.
VI. The Bible and the Church.

BOLTON : Spinners' Hall, St. George's-road.
Tuesdays, January 29th, February 5th, 12th, 19th, 26th, March 5th, at 7.30 P.M.

LEEDS : Philosophical Hall.
Wednesdays, January 30th, February 6th, 13th, 20th, 27th, March 6th, at 8 0 P.M.

LIVERPOOL : Royal Institution, Colquitt-street.
Thursdays, January 31st, February 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th, March 7th, at 8.30 P.M.

Admission Free. A copy of the Syllabus will be sent on application to the Rev. C. J. STREET, Maythorn, Heaton, Bolton ; the Rev. C. HARGROVE, 10, De Grey-terrace, Leeds ; or C. W. JONES, Esq., 39, Drury Buildings, Liverpool.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

The ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING will be held at the MEMORIAL HALL, MANCHESTER, on WEDNESDAY, January 30th, 1901, at Four P.M., HARRY RAWSON, Esq. (a Vice-President), in the Chair.

The attendance of Subscribers of the College is earnestly invited.

Owing to the absence of the President, James R. Beard, Esq., the usual Public Meeting and Soirée is postponed to later in the year.

DENDY AGATE, EDWARD TALBOT, } Hon. Secs.

Manchester, January 23rd, 1901.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY. at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale). JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, January 26, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3058. NEW SERIES, No. 162.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 65
LITERATURE :—
The Hexateuch.—II. 67
Short Notices 68
Publications Received... 69
POETRY :—
The New Century 69
Memorial Verses 70
Victoria 77
MEETINGS :—
Unitarian Home Missionary College ... 69
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Southend Home 70
A Correction 70
OBITUARY :—
Mr. R. W. Duncan 71
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 71
LEADER :—
Memorial Services 72
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
Liverpool District 77
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 78
ADVERTISEMENTS 78

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

AMONG the many tributes to the memory of our Queen, some of the worthiest were in the speeches of the leaders in both Houses of Parliament on Friday of last week in moving an Address to the King. Lord Salisbury dwelt with much feeling on the greatness of her influence, who though a constitutional monarch with restricted powers, "reigned by sheer force of character, by the loveableness of her disposition, over the hearts of her subjects, and exercised an influence in moulding their character and destiny which she could not have done more if she had had the most despotic power." We quote from The Times :—

She has been a great instance of government by example, by esteem, by love; and it will never be forgotten how much she has done for the elevation of her people, not by the exercise of any prerogative, not by the giving of any commands, but by the simple recognition and contemplation of the brilliant qualities which she has exhibited in her exalted position.

The Earl of Kimberley also, in seconding the Address, agreed that though the position of a constitutional Sovereign might not be one of great direct power, the Queen had shown that it might be one of far-reaching and most beneficent influence.

IN the House of Commons, Mr. Balfour on a similar motion made a speech of restrained but noble eloquence. He also spoke of the effect of a Constitutional Sovereign as produced not by any great isolated action but by the slow, constant, cumulative results of a great ideal and a great example. And in that respect Queen Victoria was the greatest of all Constitutional monarchs.

The simple dignity, befitting a Monarch of this realm, in that she could never fail, because it arose from her inherent sense of the fitness of things. It was no trapping put on for office, and therefore it was that this dignity, the Queenly dignity, only served to throw into stronger relief and into a brighter light those admirable virtues of the wife, the mother, and the woman with which she was so richly endowed. Those kindly graces, those admirable qualities, have endeared her to every class in the community, and are known to all.

. . . .

It is easy to chronicle the growth of Empire, the progress of trade, the triumphs of war, all the events that make history interesting or exciting; but who is there that will dare to weigh in the balance the effect which such an example continued over sixty-three years has produced on the highest life of the people? It is a great life, and had a fortunate, and, let me say, in my judgment a happy ending. The Queen had her reward in the undying affection and the immemorial recollection of all her subjects, wheresoever their lot might be cast. This has not always been the fate of her ancestors. It has not been the fate of some of the greatest among them. It has been their less happy destiny to outlive, as it were, their fame, to see their people's love grow cold, to find new generations growing up around them who know them not, and problems awaiting solution with which they feel themselves incapable to deal. Their sun, once so bright, has set amid darkening clouds, with the muttering of distant storms about to break. Such was not the destiny of Queen Victoria. She passed away with her children and her children's children, the third generation, around her, beloved and cherished of all.

THE universal sympathy shown with this country at the death of our Queen has been the highest tribute to her worth. One of the most touching examples was that of the Boer prisoners at St. Helena, while the heartfelt expressions of sorrow which have reached us from the United States have been very deeply appreciated. Of what we have felt towards the German Emperor, in the sincere affection and sorrow which he has manifested, the Bishop of Winchester spoke in his sermon in Whippingham Church on Sunday :—

In the details of those closing days, as those who know could tell, were marked the very characteristics which had been stamped indelibly upon her life—the genuine power of simple thought, of character, of family love, of deep and wide domestic happiness and motherliness and guiding care. In the knowledge and sight of such an ending to such a life we are touched with the depth and grandeur of these pure domestic feelings and virtues of which we sometimes think too little, but which in such moments as these we acknowledge to be "the very lifeblood of families and of nations." To ensure that nothing should be lacking to the completeness of those closing hours, and that nothing should narrow even on her dying bed the range and touch of the Queen's world-wide interest and influence and love, England saw, in a vivid object-lesson which has touched her to the core, the great ruler of the German peoples simply taking his quiet place as the grandson of our Queen, and thereby cementing by the force of a sentiment which is keener and further reaching than any force on earth the undying friendship of the two great kindred branches of our race. To him, on this day, his own birthday, all England, even in her sorrow, is paying the ungrudging tribute of a glad, because a grateful, homage.

THIS week's Christian World Pulpit, an enlarged memorial number, is filled with sermons on the Queen, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Winchester, the Dean of Westminster, Canon Scott Holland, Canon Gore, Dr. Donald Macleod, Dr. Clifford, Dr. Joseph Parker, Mr. Hugh Price Hughes, and others.

THE officials of the Sunday School Union, of which Mr. George Cadbury is President, and which includes among its Vice-Presidents Lord Aberdeen, Archdeacon Sinclair, Dean Farrar, Dr. Clifford, and Mr. Hugh Price Hughes, have made a proposal for simultaneous children's services on Sunday afternoon in memory of the Queen. The proposal, which is made in the following terms, will, we doubt not, be met by a very general and widespread response, and we may hope that in our own schools throughout the country such services will be held :—

The gracious and loving interest ever taken by our Queen in the children and in all that affected the child-life of the nation leads us to suggest that memorial services should be held by Sunday-schools throughout Great Britain and the Colonies on the afternoon of Sunday, Feb. 3, at the hour of three o'clock.

These services, if conducted in the various churches and places of worship, could be thrown open to the young people of the district. Thus, at the same hour, the children in all parts of the Empire would be able to render their tribute to the good Queen's memory and pray for the King, whilst a fitting opportunity would be afforded for indelibly impressing upon their minds the noble and beauteous lessons yielded by the life and character of the great mother of our nation.

THE simultaneous mission of the Evangelical Free Churches has been carried on with great vigour in all parts of London during the present week, and is reported, so far as the numbers attending are concerned, to be a great success. What the result will be in the quickening of genuine religious life only time can show, if, indeed, such results can ever be seen or chronicled. The actual work of the mission opened on Monday, when Dr. Parker preached a characteristic sermon in the Guildhall, in presence of the Lord Mayor and other civic dignitaries. A large amount of systematic house-to-house visiting has prepared the way for the mission, and has contributed largely to the promising result. It is interesting to note that in many places inquiry rooms are opened where the mission is being held, and it is reported that the names of converts will be registered and sent on to the denominations with which they desire to be connected. If any should prove to be members of the Church of England, the names are to be sent to their own clergy,

---

DR. H. E. RYLE, son of the late Bishop of Liverpool, and President of Queen's College, Cambridge, was consecrated Bishop of Exeter on Friday, Jan. 25, in Westminster Abbey. The preacher was Canon Armitage Robinson, who prefaced his sermon with touching words concerning the Queen, who had signed the mandate for Dr. Ryle's consecration, while his oath of allegiance had to be taken to King Edward VII. In the course of the sermon he dealt with the relations of the Church to Nonconformists, commending a "cautious friendliness" towards those "whose earnest labours in the cause of Christ are a noble challenge" to the zeal of churchmen. Referring to these remarks, the Guardian wrote:—

Dr. Robinson is right to remind us that we ought neither to ignore nor to acquiesce in the fact that a Bishop on entering his diocese sometimes finds that "half the baptised souls within it do not recognise his rule," and that "societies of baptised men and women exist to whom the Bishop is nought"; nor was he mistaken when he said that "the thoughts of men are everywhere turning to unity." We are glad to see that the question has been raised by one who has so strong a sense of the unity of the Church as Dr. Robinson has shown. Grave mischief may arise if there is any attempt to hurry on a premature solution of the problem, or to compromise essential principles. From a calm appreciation of the facts, an earnest desire to find some method of securing greater unity, and a resolve to live in charity with those who still differ from the teaching of the Church on points of importance, we do not anticipate anything but good.

MR. W. D. HOWELLS, chatting in the Editor's easy chair, in this mouth's Harper, pays a very high tribute to Lucy Foster in Mrs. Humphry Ward's "Eleanor," but professes his inability to believe in the completeness of Eleanor's final renunciation. He does not think it possible that Eleanor could really have given up Manisty to Lucy, as it is represented, because love "is such a divinely honest and selfish thing." In which judgment he shows that Mrs. Ward has a truer insight than her critic. Lucy Foster Mr. Howells regards as embodying "the highest tribute yet paid by outland literature and American girlhood," though he thinks that her type of Puritan character is more at home in Massachusetts than in Vermont.

She is surprisingly divined, and the truth of the conception is not impugned by the fact that the severity of the ideal which she lives up to is something that was truer of the New England life in the generation before this. If it is not still in the New England life, it is in the New England air, and is what people there breathe in, if it is not what they breathe out. Such a girl as Lucy Foster is still potential if not still actual in New England.

At the same time, while bearing witness to the beauty and fidelity of the character, Mr. Howells finds its chief interest on the universal side, and in its suggestion that Lucy Foster is of English source as well as American.

Through such as she, and through all that is just and pure and high in English nature, we are willing still to be of one allegiance with the English, though we find it so hard to join in the dream of Lord Rosebery.

LONDON has lost two prominent Broad Churchmen. The Rev. Brooke Lambert, vicar of Greenwich, died on Friday, Jan. 25, and the Rev. H. R. Haweis, vicar of St. James's, Marylebone, on Tuesday, Jan. 29. Mr. Lambert was born in 1834, and graduated from Brasenose College, Oxford. Having held various appointments in Whitechapel and in the country, in 1880 he received the Crown living of Greenwich from Mr. Gladstone, and was specially devoted to social work. In 1871 he published "Sermons on Pauperism," and in 1883 "Sermons on the Lord's Prayer." Mr. Haweis was born at Egham in 1838, the son of a Canon of Winchester. Though crippled from childhood, he led a life of the greatest activity, as a popular and fashionable preacher, a public lecturer, a musician, a journalist and art critic. A Cambridge graduate he travelled in Italy, and took part in the war of liberation under Garibaldi. In 1861 he was ordained, and in 1866 entered on his work in Marylebone. Among his best known books are "Music and Morals" and "Arrows in the Air." In 1885 he gave the Lowell lectures at Boston, Mass. He attended the Chicago Parliament of Religions in 1893 as Anglican delegate, and two years later made a lecturing and preaching tour round the world. As a Churchman he was among the broadest of the broad. Some of his ideas as to the Church of the Twentieth Century we quoted from the Daily News of Jan. 5. How a man holding such views could remain in the Church of England was a constant wonder to us, to whom Mr. Stopford Brooke's seemed the only possible course; but, in spite of the Prayer Book and the Act of Uniformity, he held, like Dean Stanley, that his position was tenable and untouched by any shade of dishonour.

MR. FREDERIC W. H. MYERS, who died at Rome on Jan. 17, has been latterly most prominently before the public as the secretary of the Society for Psychical Research, founded in 1882, under the presidency of the late Professor Sidgwick, and for years before the formation of the society had been eagerly devoted to the study of the subtler phenomena of consciousness, but he was at the same time a man of letters of fine gifts. Born at Keswick in 1843 (in the same year as the late Bishop of London), Mr. Myers was educated at Cheltenham and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which in 1865 he became a fellow. Subsequently he was appointed an Inspector of Schools, and on his marriage in 1880 made his home at Cambridge. His best known book is, perhaps, the volume on "Wordsworth" in the English Men of Letters Series, but he also published two volumes of "Essays Classical and Modern," and his little volume of poems, including "Saint Paul," which was first separately published, has found many warmly appreciative readers, In the familiar metre of "Saint Paul" are also the verses on "Friendship and Hope" included in the volume, which conclude as follows:—

Children of God! and each as he is straying
Lights on his fellow with a soft surprise,
Harkens, perchance, the whisper of his praying,
Catches the human answer of his eyes.

Then having met they speak and they remember
All are one family, their sire is one,
Cheers them with June and slays them with December,
Portions to each the shadows and the sun.

Therefore His children hold to one another,
Speak of a hope and tarry till the end,
Strong in the bond of sister and of brother,
Safe in the fellowship of friend and friend.

At the time of his death Mr. Myers was President of the Society for Psychical Research, and, as we learn from the Athenæum, was engaged on a work on "Human Personality: its Survival of Bodily death," which it is hoped may be far enough advanced for publication.

VERDI, the famous Italian composer who died at Milan on Sunday, at the age of eighty-seven, was the son of a humble innkeeper in a village of Lombardy. He had many struggles before his fame as an operatic composer was fully established in the fifties, by the success of such works as Rigoletto and Il Trovatore. In the days of Austrian oppression popular melodies and patriotic sentiment in his operas met with an eager response among the audiences, and he became a suspected character. Born in the same year as Wagner, his operas furnish a striking contrast to those of the great German composer; but quite late in life Verdi showed capacity for development, and his Othello and Falstaff, the latter produced when he was eighty years of age, are much finer works of art than his earlier popular operas.

MINISTERS' STIPEND AUGMENTATION FUND.—At a special meeting of the committee of management, held at Liverpool, on Wednesday, Jan. 23, Mr. Frank Taylor, of Bolton, in the chair, the following resolution was passed:—

That the members of the committee of management of the Ministers' Stipend Augmentation Fund desire to give expression to their sense of the loss they have sustained by the death of their secretary, the late James Lamport Thornely, Esq.

They would place on record their appreciation not only of his personal character and ability, but also of the interest he has taken in the services he has rendered to the Fund, first, as assistant secretary, and afterwards as secretary, to which position he was appointed in 1898, on the death of his esteemed father, the late James Thornely, Esq.

They would further express their regret that for the first time since the establishment of the Ministers' Stipend Augmentation Fund in 1856 the honoured name of Thornely will cease to have an official connection with it, and that thus another link is broken which has connected the present managers with the gentlemen who have preceded them.

Mr. B. P. Burroughs was then appointed secretary to the Fund.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

LITERATURE.

THE HEXATEUCH.*

II.

IN a previous article we have given abundant evidence that the task to which Professor Carpenter and Mr. Harford-Battersby have addressed themselves finds numerous analogues in the problems of modern scholarship. Each case presents its own peculiarities, and therefore none of the suggested analogies are complete; but they are amply sufficient to show that the proposed analytical process is a legitimate one if it can be satisfactorily carried out. Now the remarkable work to which this article is devoted is the last and by far the most complete of a long series of efforts to solve the problem of the composition of the Hexateuch. Scattered hints were ttered by various scholars in earlier centuries, and the continuous history of the criticism of the Pentateuch goes back through 150 years. Step by step scholars have advanced; endless methods have been attempted; criticism has sometimes been carried far on a false path by the genius and enthusiasm of some great explorer, before it has discovered its error and retraced its steps; but even such mistakes have not failed to make their direct as well as their indirect contributions to the main advance, and the chief results have been rendered ever more and more secure. Every kind of unsuspected confirmation has flowed in, and as historical and archæological methods, and, above all, the comparative study of history and of religion have advanced, speculation has gradually passed into assurance, and the details have been filled in, so that now there is scarcely room for divergence except on minor points. The works with which it will naturally occur to English readers to compare the volumes before us are Kuenen's "Hexateuch" of 1885, and Addis' "The Documents of the Hexateuch" of 1892 and 1898. It resembles the former in the fulness of its analytical detail, but takes account of the work of half a generation of scholars which has since been devoted to elaborating details and carrying analysis still further; and it resembles the latter in containing the text of the books themselves analytically separated and arranged, but it carries the analysis so much further as to give it a wholly independent value and significance. A comparison of these three books, however, will convince the reader that he is not giving himself up to mere arbitrary speculation. It will show how relatively unimportant the matters of controversy still open are in comparison with the matters on which all are agreed.

The authors combine, with singular skill, a summary history of the criticism of the Hexateuch with an exposition of the positive grounds on which the latest conclusions rest. The story is told in the first 180 pages of the first volume. In the Hexateuch, as we have it, divergent or contradictory stories jostle one another; laws and regulations implying totally different states of civilisation and levels of culture are intermingled, and the confusion of religious ideas is no less marked than that of institutions or historic statements. And when we attempt to place the Hexateuch, as a whole, in its relations to the general history of Israel the confusion becomes worse confounded. But as we read the pages of Mr. Carpenter's Introduction the different elements of the Hexateuch quietly and securely disengage themselves and severally acquire consistency; their mutual relations almost insensibly assert themselves, and they settle into their places in the historical development of Israel. There are no surprises, no dramatic moments; all seems to go spontaneously and inevitably; each recorded observation suggests the next inquiry, and half anticipates its result; and when we reach the conclusion of the story we have witnessed the different groups of history and of law, first asserting their individuality, then revealing to us the springs in the national life out of which they rose, and finally flowing together as the reverence for antiquity, and authority becomes confirmed, and an uncritical and distant age loses its sense for the special significance of the characteristics of each stream of tradition, till the whole is finally recognised as the "Law of Moses," but not till Moses himself has been dead for a thousand years. In this Introduction the general student of history or of civilisation will find exactly what he wants. Mr. Carpenter is an expert, and has all the command of detail which will earn the respectful attention and the grateful acknowledgment of his fellow experts. But he deals with his subject on broad lines, and bases his appeal upon general principles, which it requires no expert knowledge to understand and to test, and he gives the reader the opportunity at every step of looking into the details and testing the statements on which his conclusions rest, should he wish to do so. He has attained Lucian's ideal for the historian, "to be understood by the many and admired by the few."

No attempt to give a summary either of processes or of results will be expected; but the frankly uninformed reader may get some rough conception of the general meaning of the whole inquiry by reading (1) the second creation story in Genesis ii. 4, sqq.; (2) the story of the sacrifice of Isaac in Genesis xxii.; (3) Deuteronomy vi. and xii.; and (4) Genesis i., together with any sections of Leviticus upon which his eye first chances to fall. Nos. (1) and (2) represent the two strands of the earliest group of documents; (3) represents the second, and (4) the third. The three great blocks from which these specimen stones are hewn represent the culture and religion of Israel respectively in the eighth (or ninth) century B.C., in the seventh century and in the fifth. The researches of 150 years, summarised, systematised, and carried forward in the volumes before us, have demonstrated on many converging lines of inquiry the approximate dates, the internal structure, the mutual relations, and the connections with the history and literature of Israel of these three main constituents of the Hexateuch. It is utterly impossible to convey in a few words the effect upon the imagination produced by such an achievement of scholarship as the final analysis of the Hexateuch represents. To the most uninstructed reader the Hexateuch is full of human interest, but to the instructed reader the whole life history of a nation records and reflects itself there. The history of the book is the history of national life and religion; and the history of its recovery is the history of modern methods of research and investigation. It is a history, too, of genius and industry lavished for generation after generation upon an apparently insignificant problem, at first under the idea that nothing can be of small account that concerns the Word of God, gradually emerging into the consciousness that the Word of God which is being studied is not graven upon stones or written upon paper, but traced in the history and on the heart of man, and that the results achieved are far other in their significance than the results that were sought. The success achieved does not enable the student to grasp the very light of life, yet the path has broadened as he trod it; and though he has found no clue to the lost Paradise, yet as he contemplates in the softened light the great prospect upon which he gazes, "behold it is very good."

Those who have some acquaintance with the details of the subject will be interested to know that the critical position of the editors is on the whole somewhat more advanced than that of Mr. Addis; that they accept the view that J. and E. were united into the composite JE. before the time of the Deuteronomist; that the views of the late Professor Kosters with regard to the post-exilian period are accepted so far as they relate to the great covenant under Ezra and the promulgation of the Law; that is to say, it is held (and this to our thinking is the great advance upon Kuenen) that the covenant accepted by the people in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah was based upon the Deuteronomic code with some premonitory anticipations only of the great Levitical code which was presently to be promulgated; and finally that Professor Kuenen's trenchant and fascinating hypothesis that the covenant book of Exodus xxi.-xxiii. was originally represented not as Sinaitic legislation at all, but as given on the fields of Moab, is (to our regret) rejected as needlessly bold.

As for details there are few indeed who would have any right to venture upon criticism. The reader will be as thankful to the editors for the limitations they have imposed upon themselves as for their fulness on essentials. But there must necessarily be differences of judgment as to the relative stress which should be laid on the contributions of various scholars to the development of critical theory or the different lines and items of evidence that have to be marshalled. In every case it is probable that what strike us as curious omissions have been deliberately adopted by the editors. We would instance the fact that the crucial passage (Jeremiah vii. 22) is mentioned incidentally in connection with a summary history of the growth of criticism, but does not take its place at all (unless, indeed, as is quite possible, we missed it on a first reading, and have not searched with sufficient diligence, for it subsequently) in the positive exposition of the evidence; and further that the great Dutch translation and commentary on the Old Testament by Kuenen,

---

* "The Hexateuch, according to the Revised Version arranged in its constituent documents by members of the Society of Historical Theology, Oxford." Edited with Introduction, Notes, Marginal References and Synoptical Tables, by J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. Lond., and G. Harford-Battersby, M.A. Oxon. In two vols. Longmans, Green and Co., London, New York, and Bombay. 36s. net.

Hooykaas, Kosters, and Oort, which is just being completed, is not amongst the selected authorities cited from time to time as favouring this or that alternative in cases of doubt. As for lapses, positively the only one which a careful reading has revealed to us is a contrast between p. 121, where it is regarded as possible or even probable that P. assumed the acquaintance of his reader with Moses, and did not give any formal account of him before introducing him into the history, and the far more satisfactory statement on p. 137 that the "Mosaic sections of P. do not appear to have lost much, though there must have been some introduction of Moses himself before Exodus vi. 2." The remaining portion of Vol. I. is occupied by a number of carefully compiled word lists indicating the characteristics of the different writers, and extremely elaborate and ingenious arrangements of the laws. The amount of work which must have been put into this part of the book is truly appalling, but one may trust that it is now done once for all.

The second volume is occupied with the texts, arranged on a principle which combines economy of space with perfect clearness. The main documents are separated out quite distinctly from each other, and it is only secondary additions that are indicated by differences of type. Every single word which is regarded as characteristic of any writer, every time that it occurs, is emphasised by a note referring to the word list in which all its occurrences are noted. Parallel passages are also indicated, and an important commentary runs through the whole in the footnotes.

It is highly interesting to compare passages of this work with the corresponding passages in the great Dutch Bible already referred to. Professor Carpenter and his colleagues are primarily concerned with the analysis, and therefore with the characteristics of the vocabulary and style, whereas Dr. Oort and his colleagues (alas that we must say, his late colleagues!) are primarily translators and commentators to whom the analysis is one out of many means to an end. Numerous and interesting divergences of treatment are the result, but the student will be more impressed by the similarities than by the divergences, alike of method, content and result, though naturally there are differences in all these matters in the two works. Let us take for comparison the vexed question of the Sinaitic legislation. Our readers, if they do not possess Professor Carpenter's Hexateuch, will have easy access to it, and, moreover, the treatment is too minute for it to be possible to do justice to it in a summary; but we will give for comparison with it the more trenchant and, to our mind, satisfactory treatment in the Dutch Bible. Dr. Oort, then, follows Kuenen in supposing that the First Code (Exodus xx. 22 to xxiii. 23), which may be called the first edition of Deuteronomy, was originally represented as proclaimed by Moses at Kedesh Barnea, or in the fields of Moab (a hypothesis which, as we have seen, Professor Carpenter rejects). In the second place, he restores what he regards as the original order of the narrative in Exodus xix., xx., by transposing xx. 18-21 and xx. 1-17. (Both Oort and Carpenter regard this passage as having received numerous editorial additions and alterations, though they are not at one as to details.) The main contradictions in xix., xx. thus fall away; but we have to explain the apparently wanton misplacement of the verses xx. 18-21 which has produced the present confusion. To understand this we have only to bear in mind that the Deuteronomist regarded his work as an expansion of the legislation of Moab in accordance with the requirements of his own age, and consequently when the older narratives were combined with the Deuteronomist the First Code was superseded. But the scrupulosity of the editor, happily, prevented him from simply dropping it out. Accordingly he threw it into the Sinaitic period, and the transference of verses 18-21 served, however clumsily, to effect the junction of the Ten Words with the First Code, and at the same time to graduate them in order of dignity by making the Ten Words a direct proclamation to his people by Yahveh in person, and the First Code a communication mediated by Moses.

In conclusion, we can but express a natural feeling of gratification that so important a work should have been produced by a group of English scholars. If our first impression of the accuracy and adequacy of its detail stands the test of use, it must long continue to be the standard of reference both in England and on the Continent; and indeed one is tempted to hope that it may perhaps be the final form in which this special line of research is embodied, and may be the basis not so much of other works of its kind as of new lines of investigation. The possibility of such a new departure is more than hinted at in chap. xv. of the first volume, where Professor Cheyne indicates the relation of archæology to literary criticism. The chapter is somewhat oracular, and differs from the rest of the work in announcing results rather than revealing processes; and, moreover, it interrupts the progress of the discourse so oddly that no great acumen would be needed to detect the "composite origin" of the Introduction as a whole, were the direct indications of the process lost. But its learning and suggestiveness are so striking that it would have been a great loss to have sacrificed it for the sake of mere symmetry.

It will be a pleasure to readers of THE INQUIRER to be able to connect, however remotely, this really great monument of industry and learning with the name of John James Tayler. The conception of the works rose out of the meetings of the Oxford "Society of Historical Theology," which is itself the apotheosis of the old "Taylerian Society," founded long ago in honour of Mr. Tayler. Mr. Carpenter himself, and the late Mr. Russell Martineau and Professor Cheyne were amongst its early members, and Professors Kuenen and Tiele took part in some of its first discussions; so that to many of us the Society of "Historical Theology" has itself a history full of fascinating associations; and we who rocked its cradle have a sort of remote sense of proprietorship in this product of its maturity. Floreat.

PHILIP H. WICKSTEED.

SHORT NOTICES.

A New Study of the Sonnets of Shakespeare, by Parke Godwin, is a belated volume. Before the appearance of Mr. Sidney Lee's "Life of Shakespeare," it might have been regarded as a contribution to a vexed subject, but it is now out of date. Since the brilliant study in that book of the Elizabethan Sonnet in general and of Shakespeare's Sonnets in particular, it is almost exasperating to find Mr. Godwin reviving the dull guess that "Mr. W. H." of Thorpe's dedication is "Master William (Shakespeare) Himself," and constructing another fantastic legend on supposed autobiographical confessions. Long ago it was maintained by leading Shakespeareans such as Dyce and Delius and Henry Morley, that to seek historical fact in an Elizabethan Sonnet was to follow the "Will o' the Wisp"; and one would have thought the mass of evidence lately adduced by Mr. Lee amounted to demonstration. At any rate, something much more convincing than Mr. Godwin's pages will be required to make us retreat from the position so ably fortified by Mr. Lee. We shall not be far wrong if we conclude that Shakespeare's Sonnets, or such as may be safely attributed to him, are, as Mr. Godwin himself sees, early productions, contemporaneous with the "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece," and wanting, in the great majority of cases, as again Mr. Godwin recognises, not only in genius and originality, but in anything higher than the power of a flowing and graceful diction. Perhaps half-a-dozen of them give signs of the future poet. Shakespeare evidently did not consider them worth publishing; and very soon he discarded and ridiculed this form of literature as befitting only gallantry or effeminacy and a source of merriment to robust wits like those of Mercutio and Benedick. But Mr. Godwin takes every sonnet seriously—as if they had been not by a fellow-spirit of Sidney and Drayton, but by a Milton or a Wordsworth. At the same time there are not a few passages in the book which are suggestive, and Mr. Godwin's careful paraphrases of the sonnets are occasionally helpful. (G. P. Putnam's Sons, The Knickerbocker Press, 1900). E. I. F.

Who's Who for 1901 incorporates for the first time "Men and Women of the Time," and is in consequence considerably enlarged in the main biographical portion of the work. Less than a thousand pages of last year's issue have grown to 1,153 in the present volume, giving short biographies of all people (except Royalty), who in the editor's opinion have won sufficient public distinction in any branch of life to be recorded. A few foreigners of special eminence are also included. There must be considerably more than 10,000 names recorded, and yet every one who uses the dictionary will find names missing which in his opinion ought to be there, while many of those included will seem to occupy a very undue amount of space. This is inevitable in any such work. The steady growth of the biographical portion is no doubt the only reason which has led to a curtailment of the preliminary section of the work. Valuable lists of public officials, &c., are still given, but Army and Navy lists formerly given are omitted; so is the list of Peers, while the House of Commons remains. We miss also lists of University officials, the chief Freemasons, and the Presidents of other religious bodies than the Church of England and the Roman Catholic Church. But one has only to procure Whitaker in addition to Who's Who to be thoroughly well supplied. (A. and C. Black. 5s. net.)

The Englishwoman's Year Book and Directory for 1901, edited by Miss Emily

Janes, secretary of the National Union of Women Workers, is now issued in the same form as Who's Who, and is a very complete and valuable handbook for all those who are interested in women's work. The first section deals with education, ranging from the University to the Kindergarten, then come sections dealing with employments and professions open to women—medicine, science, literature, art. Section IX. deals with pastimes and social life, section X. with public work. Sections on Philanthropy, Temperance, Homes and Charitable Institutions and Religious Work follow, and there is a valuable record of the progress of the Women's movement during the past century, and also a fuller chronicle of last year. Both men and women not fully informed as to the immense amount and variety of work now done by women, and in increasing measure open to them and calling for fresh recruits, should study this book. (A. and C. Black. 2s. 6d. net.)

Herbert Fry's Royal Guide to the London Charities, edited by John Lane, shows in alphabetical order their name, date of foundation, address, objects, &c., and is thus a most useful handbook, the more so because of its classified index, showing under each heading what charities there are of each kind. The Preface to this thirty-seventh annual edition refers to the great bequests of the late Professor Hughes and to Mrs. Gladstone's devoted charitable work, concluding with a reminder that even charitable bequests have to pay 10 per cent. death dues, so that life-time gifts are more to be commended. (Chatto and Windus. 1s. 6d.)

We have received the first two volumes of a new pocket edition of the Waverley Novels, in good legible type, pleasant to handle, and bound in limp red cloth. The issue of the twenty-five volumes is to be completed during the present year, each volume containing the author's Introduction and Notes. The text has been carefully collated with Scott's annotated press-copy. Dr. John Brown's delightful Horae Subsecivae, in three volumes, have also been issued in the same series, of which all friends of Rab will be glad to hear. (A. and C. Black. Each volume 2s. net.)

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—[All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review].

Truth and Reality. By John Smyth. 4s. (T. and T. Clark.)

Sermons and Impressions. Brought from America. By C. Hargrove. 6d. (Philip Green.)

Our Reasonable Service: Four Sermons on Acts of Worship. By C. Hargrove, M.A. 6d. (Philip Green.)

The Temperance Problem and Social Reforms. By J. Rowntree and A. Sherwell. (Cheap edition.) 6d. (Hodder and Stoughton.)

The Mind of the Century. Reprinted from the "Daily Chronicle." 2s. (Fisher Unwin.)

Monthly Review, Cornhill, Young Days, Harper's, Good Words, Sunday Magazine, Nineteenth Century, Sunday Strand, Strand, Wide World, Captain.

THE NEW CENTURY.

THE Century is dead! Long live the Century!
Crown him with Hope! Robe him with Prophecy!
And put into his baby hand the sceptre
Of "Power through Knowledge." Let his throne be built
On the deep piers of Science, and his flag
Flaunt the proud blazon of Eternal Law.
Earth gives him sorry welcome. All the East
Is one red flame—Storm, War, and Pestilence
Make the air turbid and unwholesome. Floods
Sweep through the land. The shores are dark with wreckage.
O pitiless heavens! O gloom-shadowed Earth!
Are these forecastings, omens, auguries?
Or but the mists of morning? Yea, I think
Ye are not as ye shall be. The strong sun
Shall edge your sackcloth with a fringe of gold,
And melt the web to silver filigree.
There shall be storms, volcanoes, and fierce wars,
And tragic epochs; and great souls shall rise
And fill the vales with echoes of great deeds.
There shall be sorrow, as of old hath been,
And must be; eyes that burn with unshed tears,
Green mounded graves, and hearts that seem to break.
But there shall no soul perish in its woe!
And as the enlarging Century unrolls
His folded banner, day by day revealing
More of its mighty blazon, hearts shall beat
With warmer pulses, loftier thoughts shall dawn
On the rapt souls of sages, poets, seers;
And filtering down in ever-broadening circles,
Through word and deed and subtle sympathy,
Down to the very root-holds of the race,
Shall lift the huge weight of Humanity
With all its burdens just one little step Forward in its immeasurable career.
There shall be sorrow, yea, but also joy.
The sweet spring buds shall shake their tresses out
And laugh in the warm sunshine year by year.
The roses of the summer shall be red
And fragrant, and the autumn berries bright;
And happy souls shall see but angel wings
Where light clouds cross the sun, and in the air
Hear joy-bells only. What has Man to do
With grief, save as a momentary shadow?
He is bound for heaven, and God shall bring him there;
God who hath made him, and whose name is Love.
O thou of little faith, whose spirit fears
To face the future, think what Love must mean
Behind Almightiness. The vilest sinner
Cannot escape it. The poor tortured waif
Is growing to the stature of an angel.
"Ah, why so long this sad and sorrowful life?"
The seed lies struggling in the grimy earth
A few short days, then bursts into the sunshine,
And all its life is bathed in beauty. Take
The symbol and be glad, O suffering soul.
It is eternal Law that every Finite
Grows to its best; hence all are first imperfect.
Hence the long history of Humanity,
Budding a leaf here and a small shoot there,
All rich with prophecy, all witnesses
To that vast, seething, still unordered Force
Marshalling century by century
Its world-wide Classes, Orders, Families,
Into the complex perfect symmetry
Yet unattained.
The new-born Century
Is breast-and-brain-full of potential promise,
And eager as a hound with loosened leash
He spurns the land, splits the sea-surfs, and drives
His foaming chariot full at the gates of Heaven.
The things that shall be are his talisman,
These fire his eye and nerve his hand, and guide him
Through rage and storm and blistering heat, to where
The large-planned Destiny decrees. And when
His fiery course is finished he shall bring
An unstained record to the throne of God.
Welcome, young Conqueror! Take an old man's blessing
And drop it here and there about the land,
That what it has of virtue may bring peace
To struggling souls.

F. T. MOTT.

Birstal Hill, Leicester, January, 1901.

UNITARIAN HOME MISSIONARY COLLEGE.

THE annual business meeting was held at the Memorial Hall, Manchester, Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 30, Alderman H. Rawson, J.P., in the chair, in the unavoidable absence of the President, Mr. J. R. Beard, J.P.

At the commencement of the proceedings Mr. RAWSON said the first step was to pass a resolution expressing grief at the death of the Queen. There never was a monarch in this or any other country whose death was so much deplored. She had faithfully discharged her political duties, and shown her willingness to respect the limits of the Constitution. A mighty responsibility falls into the hands of the new King, and they had every reason to believe that he would do justice to it. He had helped the promotion of science, art, and philanthropy, and proved himself possessed of good-feeling, courtesy and great tact. The resolution was as follows:—

That this meeting records its heartfelt sorrow in the loss which the nation has sustained by the death of Her late Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, whose nobility of character and devoted discharge of the duties of her high office have made her reign a blessing to her people. This meeting further expresses its respectful sympathy with His Majesty King Edward VII. and the Royal Family in their bereavement, and assures His Majesty of its loyalty and attachment to his Throne and Person.

Principal GORDON seconded. He said the influence of the Queen's simplicity, and straightforwardness, and genuine readiness to do her duty extended to the circle of the wide world. Those who knew her best were impressed with her absolute truthfulness. She had a total lack of personal vanity. Only our children's children would know what she had been to us as a great Queen. As for the new King, since his serious illness his career had been almost as unique as that of the Queen. He had given support to the Queen's policy, and had been animated by her spirit of breadth and nobility. He, the speaker, believed that the succession had passed into the hands of a worthy man.

The resolution was carried by all standing.

The Report was next read by the Secretary.

The Report begins with an expression of regret that the health of the President has made it impossible for him to attend the annual meeting, and with a hope that "the coming year may see him restored to a substantial measure of health and strength."

During the session 1899-1900 there were fourteen students on the roll of the college. Certificates had been granted to the outgoing students, Messrs. J. H. Rossington, B.A., and Alfred Davison, the former having been elected a Hibbert scholar. The visitors, in their report on the examinations, gave very satisfactory evidence as to the quality of the students' work. Honours had been gained by the undergraduate students at Owens College.

During the past year the committee have had under prolonged consideration the question of the provision of further instruction for students in preaching and pastoral work, and they are indebted to the principal and tutor for a very full statement on the subject. Arrangements have now been made with the Rev. Joseph Wood, of Birmingham, for the delivery to the theological students, during the current term, of a course of eight lectures on "The Preacher." The lectures will be delivered each Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock, commencing on Jan. 23, and will be followed by tutorial instruction. The lectures (but not the tutorial instruction) will be open to ministers of the district, whose attendance is cordially invited.

The marked benefit which has resulted from the instruction in voice production, given by Mr. Acton to the theological students, has determined the committee to extend this to the art students also.

The Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A., has been appointed to represent the College on the Committee of the National Conference.

There has been a decrease in subscriptions for the year of £23 14s. 8d.; but donations and legacies have amounted to £1,177 16s. 6d. "In concluding their report, the Committee desire to record their sense of the importance of the work which the College has hitherto performed, and their conviction that, with adequate support, their work will grow in value during future years."

The CHAIRMAN moved its adoption, laying emphasis upon its salient points. He was glad to find in it an expression of their admiration for and sympathy with Mr. James R. Beard, who in past years had been a source of inspiration to them all, his unbounded courage and enterprise making him an unique leader. He also drew attention to Miss Sharpe's continued generosity in providing an annual prize.

Mr. W. LONG seconded, and it was unanimously adopted.

Thanks were most heartily accorded to the visitors, the Revs. P. Moore and J. E. Odgers; to the Gaskell examiners, the Rev. A. W. Fox and Mr. A. E. Steinthal; to the honorary oculist, Dr. Emrys Jones, and honorary medical officer, Dr. Larmuth, and to Dr. Buckley, for past services rendered.

Mr. James R. Beard was re-elected president and treasurer, Mr. George Hadfield deputy-treasurer, and the Rev. D. Agate and Mr. E. Talbot secretaries.

A vote of thanks to Mr. Rawson for presiding brought the meeting to a close.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

SOUTHEND HOME.

SIR,—Will you permit me, through the medium of your columns, to advise the friends and others interested in the above, that by a resolution recently adopted by the Committee of the London Sunday School Society, it was decided to reserve the use of the Home during the two months, July 15 to Sept. 15, for the use of our elder scholars, class A.

Only those, therefore, coming under the following definition will be eligible for admission to the Home during the period referred to.

Class A., elder scholars above thirteen years of age, to be accompanied, if possible, by a teacher.

R. EWART CRANE. Local Hon. Sec.,
22, Heygate-avenue, Southend-on-Sea, Jan. 24.

A CORRECTION.

SIR,—The language attributed to me in your report of the recent annual meeting of the Trustees of Manchester College is, I regret to say, seriously (but of course unintentionally) misleading, and I trust that you will permit me to correct it. As matter of private interest to the Trustees I mentioned that some of the students of Mansfield College had been living together in the old St. Giles's vicarage under the usual conditions of non-collegiate students in licensed lodgings, but this statement was something very different from the implications of your reporter's phrase, as Mansfield College has neither "followed suit," nor "established a residence" for its students. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.
Manchester College, Oxford, Jan. 28.

THE London University, under its new charter, is to grant degrees in Theology, and the Senate at a recent meeting completed the selection of the Board of Theological Studies. The Board, as in the case of other faculties, consists of a certain number of "recognised teachers," not less than three-fourths of the whole, while the Senate may nominate "other persons" as the remaining members. In the present instance the Board includes as "recognised teachers" members of the staff of King's, Cheshunt, and New Colleges, Professors Adeney and Bennett, belonging to the last named, while the Senate's special appointments include Dr. Adler (the Chief Rabbi), Canon Armitage Robinson, and, as we are specially glad to see, the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed.

MEMORIAL VERSES.

SORROWING for our Queen, how much we wish that Tennyson, her own Laureate, were still with us, to give the noblest expression not to our grief alone, but to the aspiration which must spring from it. The present holder of that office has taught us not to expect any soul-stirring verse from him, and we are therefore not disappointed by the astonishing lines which he has published. Punch has found worthier utterance for heartfelt sorrow, not only in Mr. Sambourne's cartoon, but in the verses on the Queen, of which we will quote the first and last:—

The tears we disallow to lesser ill
Here is no shame for English eyes to shed;
Because the noblest heart of all is still—
Because the Queen lies dead.

O great of heart! in whom the world has known
Wisdom with woman's sweetness reconciled;
Who held her Kingdom's honour, as her own,
Still fair and undefiled!

Best shall they keep that stainless memory bright
Who count their heritage a holy debt,
Who walk with fearless soul the way of light
In which her feet were set.

And in that faith, ere yet our tears are dry,
Or poignant grief has spent its sudden sting,
To Him she serves we lift our hearts and cry,
"God save her son, the King!"

Of other memorial verses the Spectator has published some of the best. To that journal Mr. E. S. Tylee contributed verses entitled "Nunc Dimittis," which conclude:—

The daughter of a hundred Kings,
And yet a true Republican,
She left all care of meaner things,
To serve and to ennoble man.
So let our cunning artists rear
What pompous cenotaph they will,
The hearts that hold her memory dear
Are her eternal dwelling still.

And of Mr. A. C. Benson's verses "To Our Mother," we will quote the first two and the last.

O pure and true, O faithful heart,
Dear mother of our myriad race,
The Father claims thee,—His thou art—
Far hence, in some serener place,
To taste, in that diviner air,
The love that thou hast garnered there.

O crown of love, to live and bear
Life's highest sorrows, deepest, best!
The griefs that might have sown despair
Bloomed fruitful in thy patient breast;
And now thou goest, robed in light,
From love in faith, to love in sight.

. . . .

Peace, come away! Thou sleep'st beside
The rugged immemorial sea,
Where year by year thy navies glide,
And dream of ancient victory;—
And thou—thou farest forth to prove
The last, best victory of Love.

In the Guardian are a few lines by M. M. N., which conclude as follows:—

Rest, rest, thou weary soul,
Freed from thy sceptre's sheen;
Where sin and suffering meet their goal,
God heals a sorrow-laden soul,
Though England mourns a Queen.

The Times on Jan. 23 published some verses of curiously unequal worth, two of which, however, give striking expression to the sorrow of India and Australia :—

Afar, where Summers burn and glow,
The subject Peoples of our race
Shall see their stricken Master go
With tears upon his face.

The Nation, at her dying, born,
Shall weep beneath the Southern Cross,
And with her Mother-Country mourn
Irreparable loss.

And finally to the February number of the Nineteenth Century and After Sir Theodore Martin contributes a sonnet on "Victoria the Good," from which the following lines are taken :—

She is not dead! Though summoned to the skies,
Still in our hearts she lives, and there will reign;
Still the dear memory will the power retain
To teach us where our foremost duty lies,
Truth, justice, honour, simple worth to prize,
And what our best have been to be again.

OBITUARY.

MR. R. W. DUNCAN.

We regret to record the death of Mr. Robert William Duncan, of Southampton, which took place on Sunday, Jan. 20, at the ripe age of seventy-six. For forty years he was in the employment of Messrs. Phippard and Company of this town, by whom he was much respected. Since the erection of the present Church of the Saviour he had been a trustee, and for some years warden. His character was remarkable for a combination of talent, kindness, and modesty. He rarely spoke at public meetings, but when he did, everyone was struck by the point and moderation of his remarks. He had a singular faculty for finding a way out of an argumentative tangle, and always made his fellow-debaters feel more kindly towards each other. The register of attendance of officers on Sundays show him to have been almost continuously in his place for years past, both in the mornings and evenings. He loved our worship, and on his death-bed noted the chiming of the bells and talked of church. His faith was distinctly and vitally Christian, and his joy would overflow when an especially Christian sermon was preached. A memorial service was held in the Church of the Saviour on Jan. 24, and a representative attendance of friends and strangers testified to his worth. E. C. B.

The congregation of Upper Chapel, Sheffield, have issued a Souvenir of the Bicentennial, celebrated on Oct. 18 of last year, consisting of a pamphlet, which contains a picture of their chapel, an account of the steps taken to celebrate the event, and a revised report of the proceedings. The pamphlet may be had from Mr. G. C. Snaith, Bookseller, Barker Pool, Sheffield. 6½d. post free.

To Correspondents.—Letters, &c., received from the following :—A. B.; C. D. B.; G. B. (Kolozsvár); M. G.; A. H.; E. C. J.; M. J.; J. A. K.; G. L.; J. K. M.; R. R.; J. T.; H. W.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

In years to come numbers of people in England will go back in thought to the week we have just passed through, and will tell their children what a memorable and wonderful time it was. When the little ones ask what made it so, they will be told that one great sorrow moved not only the English nation, but also all the peoples of the civilised world, for the loss of the great Queen who so suddenly passed away from earth.

Perhaps some of the boys and girls who read this column for the children have seen the crowds of sad and silent people waiting patiently in the city streets, hoping against hope for better news while the Queen was still living; and have we not all heard how, from far-away countries, messages have flashed along the wires, bringing words of deep sympathy to England from nations who have put on one side their rivalries and enmities in tender reverence for the Queen when they heard the end had come? And why? Not because she was the ruler of a mighty empire, but because she was good and duty-loving. The power of character has touched the world, and a great thrill has passed through the hearts of multitudes who have never seen our Queen, because the noble, loving, faithful life of one who was the mother of her people is over.

We have all been hearing during this past week some of the stories of the little Princess Victoria's girlhood; how though of German descent she was English born, and spent with her mother, in her English home, such a simple childhood that ever afterwards she loved home life and beautiful country scenes and simple pleasures. We like to know that her pet name at home was "Drina," and that by her German kindred she was called (because she was born in May) "the little May-flower"; that she had tiny wooden dolls to play with—not great expensive wax ones—and a donkey to ride on, and dogs to be kind to. She had many lessons that were hard to learn, and was taught that she could never be happy when idle; and she found out very early that true happiness is to be found in helping and loving other people.

Do you know this story which tells us how one day the little Royal maiden rode on her donkey to a bazaar to buy presents for her cousins far away in Germany? She had spent all her money, when she suddenly remembered one cousin more, and saw a box, costing half-a-crown, just the right thing! She longed for it; and without delay it was added to her purchases.

"No," said her wise governess, "you see the Princess has not got the money; and, of course, she cannot buy the box." Thus we see how our little Princess learned lessons of honesty, self-denial, and self-government; and she cared all the more for the precious box because she had to wait till it was right to have it. By seven o'clock in the morning, the day after she received her next allowance, she set forth on her donkey to claim and pay for it. Let us remember how our Queen when she was young learned to rule herself, and to think, first, what is right? not what do I want to do?

In the "Children's Column" last week we read how when the Princess heard she would one day be Queen of England she put her little hand into that of her governess who had told her so, and said "I see, I am nearer the Throne than I thought. Many a child would boast, but they don't know the difficulty. There is much splendour, but there is more responsibility. I will be good."

Only a few years afterwards, on the death of the old King, her uncle, the young Princess, still a girl, was proclaimed Queen of England; and, according to an ancient custom, appeared at a window of St. James's Palace to be presented to her people. It was seen as she stood there that her tears were falling fast. She was feeling that God had called her to great responsibilities and that great duties lay before her to be done; and though, on all sides, her subjects were rejoicing, tears came more readily than smiles. For, doubtless, she was thinking again the thought of her childhood "they don't know the difficulty," and doubtless, too, she was praying for heavenly strength and help to make her good.

And now here is another lesson from our great Queen's life. From the first she set her will on doing what was right, on neglecting no duties, however trifling they might seem; and so it came to pass that to do right grew easy and natural to her; and because she never failed to listen to the guiding voice that speaks within us all, she grew ever nobler and truer.

When first Queen Victoria came to the Throne, more than sixty years ago, she found people in her Court who were leading wicked lives, giving way readily to temptations and making light of the evil ways and habits that were old customs in the Court life. The brave young Queen set her face against all wrong-doing. She would have no evil-doers about her, and thus she sent forth an influence for good among her people.

What other memories shall we hold dear about our Queen? Think how tender-hearted and loving she was; how she felt for the sorrows of her people, and by her words and deeds was always ready to show her pity and give her help. Think, too, how again and again, beyond the boundaries of her own Empire, she has sent out friendly greetings and messages of sympathy to those in sorrow, which have helped to spread goodwill on earth.

One day some of her little grandchildren were playing in her room and began to dispute about their game. "Ah, children," said the dear Queen, who was always a lover of peace, "do not quarrel; there are too many quarrels in this world."

It was by the grace and help of God that our noble Queen became what she was—so brave, so true to the right, and so loving; but remember, children, those four little words spoken by her in her childhood—"I will be good"; for therein we learn the secret of her life.

Frances E. Cooke.

A child learning to read sees blind black scratches and dots on a white background, and wonders at the stupid senseless things; but the grown man sees neither scratches nor dots. He does not see the letters at all. They have become transparent and he sees through them to the things which they indicate. So when we have learnt to read material things—the symbols of the soul-life—we shall see through them to the things which they indicate.—Edward Carpenter.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 2, 1901.

MEMORIAL SERVICES.

THE present week closes with a solemn pageant. The obsequies of our great QUEEN must impress the imagination of her whole people, and, in a remoter sense, of the whole civilised world. We hear the thunder of the guns from the great battle-ships as, on Friday, the Royal Yacht bears its silent burden across the straits; and after the night watch, comes the sad journey and the progress across London witnessed by dense crowds of her people, silent, but of one heart in reverence and love for the QUEEN who is no more; and then the funeral service at her own Windsor, while throughout the country at the same hour services of commemoration are being held.

What is her part in these great observances? It is not she, who was our QUEEN, who is thus borne in solemn state from place to place. That is but the former vesture of her royalty and of her tender humanity, which with all due honour and reverent affection is being laid to rest. For her the great change was completed in the quiet evening hour on Tuesday week; then the new day dawned for her, and the venerable QUEEN arose to enter into that which had been so long prepared for her lowly faith and her great love; and now if she has part, as indeed she has, in what is done in these later days, it is as a silent presence in the hearts of those who love her here, to lift them up into a new reverence and strength of faith, to lead them to the deeper insight to which death is no more, to speak for them the supreme words of comfort and undying hope and love. And surely most of all it is in the heart of her son, as he rides in that solemn train, that she is present, to bid him be strong and brave, and to know what it is to rule in the hearts of the people. But with the people also she is present wherever there is heartfelt sorrow and reverence and honour for her goodness.

In these closing scenes the national sorrow reaches its climax, and the deepest emotions, which may be fruitful of nobler life, will be stirred. But throughout the days that have passed since the news of our great bereavement was made known, there has been an outpouring of sorrow, in depth and sincerity, and the greatness of its scope, without parallel in history. We can attempt no record of all that has been said, and of all the services of reverent commemoration. The Cathedral of St. Paul's has been thronged from day to day, and thousands have been turned away, of those who desired to take part in the morning and evening prayer. On Sunday throughout the land, in the great cathedrals and in all places of worship, from the stately churches to the humblest house of prayer, memorial services were held, and the one sorrow, the one reverence and gratitude and love found utterance. As a single example of many wise and brave words that were spoken, we will quote here from the afternoon sermon at St. Paul's, where the preacher was Canon SCOTT HOLLAND. He had dwelt, as so many preachers have done, on the QUEEN'S devotion to duty, and the power of her essential goodness and her quick sympathies to attract the love of her subjects. And then he continued :—

> So she fulfilled her high task. And into the doing of it she brought the full force of those settled and simple pieties which belonged, with the force almost of nature, to an older generation than ours. This natural piety was profoundly reinforced by the personal, subjective spirituality, so characteristic of Teutonic religion, with which the influence of the Consort to whom she was so deeply devoted, penetrated her life. Such a sentiment did not easily adapt itself to the dominant methods or forms of our own worship in the Church of England: and it found itself more congenially at home in the simpler rites north of the Tweed. But it always was felt to be her spontaneous motive; and it enabled her to touch her people to the depths as nothing but religion can ever do.
>
> . . . .
>
> If we would survive and play our part, as our fathers before us, back on the strong and eternal realities we must set our souls. For work, earnest, strenuous, weighty is before us—work of which we cannot foresee the nature or the issue. We stand at the dividing of the ways, and in an hour of moral crisis, when the fate of England and the destiny of her Empire tremble in the balance of Divine judgment. Far along the widening frontiers lie the millions of dark natives to whom her name has been a shield against all that would exploit them for the white man's wealth, or deny them their full growth and liberty.
>
> Here at home, at the heart of our Power, lie the millions of weak and burdened English poor, to whom her name had ever been a pledge that, at least, they were remembered, and cared for.
>
> Towards all these she has set us our responsibilities, and they will make their demands more and more urgently felt in the years now upon us. I know not how we could dare to face them at this hour when on every side there is an impoverishment of force, a shrinkage of resource, a lowering of tone and energy and gift, if we had not faith in that which can never shrink, or slacken, or fail—faith in that God to Whom she, whom we lay to rest, committed herself in the simplicity of her girlhood—faith in the Everlasting Father, "Who fainteth not, neither is weary."

And to this we will now add a number of passages taken from sermons preached on Sunday in our own churches. It must be understood that in all the churches memorial services were held, and what we here reproduce are only a few representative utterances, selected from much else that was equally well said.

THE REV. R. A. ARMSTRONG, AT HOPE-STREET CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

WHAT, on the whole, are the effects which Queen Victoria has wrought in the land and in the nation where she held her sway? Apart from her, the Victorian age has been great. It has rivalled, nay, perhaps surpassed, the Augustan age of Rome and the Elizabethan age of England in the genius and the greatness of the men it has produced in every sphere of human activity, alike in the fields of splendid enterprise, of magnificent discovery, and of lofty ministry by literature and art. The Victorian age, covering two-thirds of the nineteenth century, stands for ever great and memorable, even apart from the noble lady who has conferred on it its name. Nevertheless, she has wrought on it powerfully and well. What is it that she has done? What are the marks indelible of her brain-craft and her heart-craft? It seems to me that the beneficent effects of her great personality lie mainly in three directions.

By the development she gave to the principles of constitutional government she greatly extended the boundaries of English freedom. By the stainless purity of her own example she brought a wholesome purification into many layers of English society. By her capacity, her industry and her character she raised to a higher point than it had ever reached before in England the consideration in which women at large were held.

The Example of her Purity.

On that it is difficult to speak. She herself declared to a trusted Scottish preacher that it was from her husband that she learned most perfectly what love and purity meant. And assuredly the world has never seen anything more pure and sweet than the love of those two during their too brief alliance, and the gentle domesticity of their home. If we lift the veil from the English Court in the days of her immediate predecessors, and then enter the drawing-rooms and boudoirs of Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle during the married life of Albert and Victoria, we shall be amazed at the moral revolution. The rot that was setting in in English society was stayed at its source. The purest and sweetest domesticity revealed itself at the very apex of the social pyramid. The young Prince tended his wife like a woman. The young wife had no pleasure save in the love of her husband and her children. Stories of the nursery and the schoolroom that might come from any middle-class home penetrated all ranks from the Royal Palace. The glamour was stripped from gilded vice. The moral confusion inevitable when the language of loyalty is applied to the unworthy, and the sentiment of loyalty is demanded for Princes destitute of high and noble virtues, was done away. The sentiment of loyalty and the sentiments of affection and respect were at last conjoined; and as the years rolled by, the affection and respect deepened into love and reverence. The manners of the Court were purged, the manners of society purified, and new and priceless influence for good penetrated through the circles round about the Throne. We owe it in an incalculable measure to the Queen and her devoted Consort that England has taken on a new respect for social purity, that vice has to a large extent been stripped of the mask of fashionable respectability, and that a wave of redeeming love and pity has gone out from the best heart of England to those who are the victims of the base passions of men, such as the world has not known before.

When Prince Albert died and that vast sorrow took possession of the widowed heart, which for well-nigh forty years has held our sovereign lady in comparative retirement from social functions, the loss became manifest all too quickly. A potent restraint was removed; and that "smart" society, which has been one of the most dire curses of our time, was evolved with deplorable rapidity. It must be one of the most earnest of our prayers in this new time that the sweet and gentle Queen Consort, who now stands beside the new-made King, may have strength and grace and courage to renew that olden influence for good; so that of her also it may be recorded by some right loyal poet of the new time that "her Court was pure," and from the palaces in which she rules the example of domestic love and social cleanness may descend on every circle of society in this English land.

Exalting the Position of Women.

Standing at the head of the English nation, the acknowledged compeer of the wisest and the greatest, Victoria thus became in her own person the irrefutable argument of those who demanded for women a regard, a consideration, an opportunity, a scope from which hitherto they had been shut out. And the women who in her time have infused themselves with blessed result into the higher life of our country have in her their involuntary patroness. And the fame of her abides to rebuke all men who would vaunt the superiority of their sex and hold women bound within the circles of the kitchen, the nursery, and the dining-room. And the pricelessness of the demonstration she had made of womanly character and capacity lies most of all in this, that her masculine understanding, her virile force of will, trenched not at all on the softer and more tender attributes of womanhood; and she has displayed on the most conspicuous stage in all the world the union in one mind and heart of the gentleness and compassion of the woman with the capacity and forcefulness hitherto supposed to be the peculiar attribute of the man. And so she has done a mighty stroke for that mutual respect and equal companionship of men and women, on which depends so much of the happiness, the purity, the progress, and the highest welfare of the world.

THE REV. CHARLES HARGROVE, AT MILL HILL CHAPEL, LEEDS.

It is almost impossible to form a sober and correct estimate of the worth of our contemporaries. The prejudices both of hate and love trouble our observations, the very nearness of the object prevents a just comparison of him with those more distant from our times. Yet we cannot, and should not, certainly we never shall refrain from summing up the character and achievements of the great who have just left us, and we shall seek however vainly to assign to them each his or her place in the roll of fame.

So at the risk of being quoted some day as a warning against the folly of hasty judgment, I venture to assert of our late beloved Queen: that she was, first, the greatest of living women, and that will probably be admitted by all. Secondly, the greatest personage in all the world—greater than any absolute sovereign, for she was possessed of wider dominions and more real power, power founded in the devoted loyalty of the hundred of millions subject to her sceptre; as the French chronicler wrote of Lancastrian kings, that "they can undertake no enterprise of note without consent of their Parliaments, therefore are they stronger and better served" (quoted by Green, c. vi. s. 3). Assuredly our Queen was stronger and better served than any monarch of her time. Thirdly, I venture to assert that she was the greatest female sovereign of whom history bears record—greater than the mythical Semiramis who was merely a conqueror, greater than Cleopatra who won the devotion of the world's masters and lost herself and them, greater than Catherine of Russia who was as bad a woman as she was able, greater even than our own Elizabeth whose vices and pettinesses of character are as notorious as her excellencies. I go further—the statement is rash yet not, I think, absurd—that Queen Victoria will take her place in time as the greatest woman in all history—not greatest in intellect, or in sanctity, or in heroism, or in any one special respect, but occupying a greater space in the general survey of the history of England and the world than any other woman will do.

We cannot emulate her greatness, we were mad to aspire to her position, we can apply to our own use the lessons of her life and can follow the example of faithful discharge of duty which she set us.

1. As a woman ruling over men, and winning of them such regard as no such sovereign has enjoyed. She was of "the weaker sex," but there was nothing weak about her sixty years' administration of an empire. She has shown us all what a woman is capable of, and her reign should teach women to respect themselves and men to respect women, more sincerely and perfectly than they do now.

2. As a woman of business with immense responsibilities, meeting them all in all times with firmness and quietness. If we may trust the report of those who knew her best she made less fuss about the cares of an empire than many women do about those of a household, than many men do about the petty concerns of a chapel or a shop.

3. As one who had boundless opportunities for the self-indulgence to which we are all inclined, who might have gratified every human desire, might have surrounded herself with pomp and splendour, might have lived in luxury and gaiety, might have accumulated wealth and feasted on flattery, but was all her life a good and true woman, simple in her tastes and almost austere in her habits.

Women of England, look to this Woman, whom all men revered. There is no equality of the sexes, there is no superiority or inferiority when the reign of brute force is passed. There is difference, and each has its own merits, its own share of life's glory.

Men of England, look to your erst sovereign Mistress. In her see what a woman can be, and learn to honour and love those who are sisters of Queen Victoria, our mothers, wives, sisters, daughters, friends, who should not only be dear to us but honoured as any among men.

THE REV. HENRY GOW, AT THE GREAT MEETING, LEICESTER.

We have heard much of our Queen's wisdom and tact and ability from those who knew her best. Great statesmen have borne witness to the rightness of her judgment, the grasp of her thought, and to the value which they placed upon her opinions. These are qualities which we who are outside the inner circle cannot speak of with authority, although we readily believe what we are told. That which has touched so deeply the hearts of her people, that which we felt in her without the necessity of any witness from statesmen and courtiers, was her human sympathy, her stern sense of duty, her goodness and her love. It is impossible to say how a nation finds out the possession of these qualities in its rulers, but it does find out. Somehow the truth comes through. Virtue cannot be hid, nor carelessness, nor wrong-doing.

There was never a ruler in our history who was more admired or devotedly served in the first part of her reign than Queen Elizabeth: loyalty to her became a kind of cult; everything she did was praised and praised by poets who knew how to make praise beautiful. Her reign was glorious to a degree greater in some ways than that of Queen Victoria: it is almost more illustrious through great writers, through heroic adventures and discoveries, through epoch-making victories and escapes from disaster than that which has just closed. If great achievements done in her name and great power gained under her rule could make a monarch loved, then there is no ruler who should have been more loved than Elizabeth. But she died a lonely, embittered, cynical old woman, having outlived her people's love, mourned for outwardly of course, but with little sincere mourning of the heart. She was clever, queenly, imperious, to the last; but the true deep unselfish worth of character, the sympathy, the untiring faithfulness to duty which alone can hold the reverence and affection of a people, these were not felt to be the essential part of all her life. How different has it been with the great Queen who has just been taken from us!

Men speak of the enthusiastic admiration and loyalty which, as a young girl, she roused in the hearts of all when she took the oath on her accession. The dignity, the sweet grace, the humility of girlhood, called to so awful a responsibility, feeling it all, bearing herself nobly through it all, filled men with high hopes and earnest devotion. It was most natural that such hopes and loyalty should be called forth, but how often in history are such hopes disappointed, and such loyalty chilled as years pass by? It has not been so with her. The admiration and affection with which our fathers welcomed her as their young and untried Queen are nothing to the admiration and affection with which we say farewell. For sixty-three years she has made England and the world understand ever more clearly what she was: year by year the love for her had grown and deepened. She made herself one with her people, and now that she has gone her people feel as if part of their own life had gone with her.

Never for a moment has there been the thought that our Sovereign was growing old, and that a change might be a good thing for the nation. We prayed "God save the Queen" with all our hearts; we knew that her death, when it came, must bring with it a sense of loss and sadness. And yet we did not know, many of us, how much we cared, how much her life stood for in our thoughts, how much the Queen meant to us. It is not that we need be or ought to be afraid of the future. It is exaggeration and false reverence to talk as if we were bereft of leaders in losing her. We are a free people, with the power and the duty laid upon us to rule ourselves. We have our leaders of all parties still, with the wise traditions of the strong common-sense and underlying earnestness and piety of a great nation behind them. We can look forward also with hope to his rule who succeeds our Queen upon the Throne. But this fact that we are not dependent on our Sovereign for justice, and prosperity, and peace, as is the case in an absolute monarchy, makes the universal sense of loss and grief more striking. It is not due to fear; it is not selfish; our property, our lives, our homes are not endangered by a change of rulers: our policy is not affected; our Government is not overturned. It is the mourning of love and of intimate relationship, not the mourning of dismay. The nation feels as one family united in a common sorrow, mourning, as it were, the loss of a mother. Everywhere throughout the vast empire of which she was the head men and women gather to-day, with sorrow in their hearts, to thank God for her life, and to do honour to her memory. It is an unexampled spectacle of the influence of a great, good ruler. May this common grief bring us nearer together; may this common sympathy give us more sympathy with one another, and enable us to walk more worthily of the blessings which God has given.

THE REV. L. DE BEAUMONT KLEIN, AT ULLET-ROAD CHURCH, LIVERPOOL.

"I WAS great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem; also my wisdom remained with me."—[Eccles. ii. 9]. Of how many, among the great ones of the earth, can so much be said with perfect truth? Do we not know, perhaps by bitter experience, how that pride is apt to degrade our better instincts into false notions and conventional deeds?

But our text supplies an explanation of Queen Victoria's attitude. After the words "I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem," the preacher adds "also my wisdom remained with me." This is probably the greatest thing that can be said of one raised to the vertiginous height of an earthly throne. For by wisdom, the sacred writer does not evidently mean ordinary human cleverness and ability; he does not simply mean the tact which enables us to avoid trouble and to surmount ordinary difficulties. He distinctly speaks, as the context shows, of a wisdom which enables him to see things in their true proportions and to value them at their real worth. And this alone is true human wisdom.

With all her greatness, with all her dignity and influence, Queen Victoria's wisdom "remained" with her. She knew that no station, however exalted, can take the place of those personal qualities which make us what we really are. Her supreme wisdom has been to see that a true woman makes a more perfect queen. Thus, instead of seeking the aggrandisement of her sovereign position by artificial principles and worldly methods, she sought it with sublime simplicity in the fulfilment of her primary mission as a wife and a mother.

As a wife, she accepted the highest and purest ideals of the married state; as a mother, she gave herself up to the truest and tenderest duties of motherhood. While remaining ever, in perfect dignity, the Queen, she always knew how to be Victoria, the woman, the wife, and the mother. Under the Queen's regal ornaments, it never was difficult to discern the true wife and the loving mother.

And when the sad time of her widowhood came, she still stood forth as the wife, bereaved but unchanged in her faithfulness to the bond which had brought to her the best of human happiness which this world has to give, even to Kings and Queens. Happy, indeed, when they know it! Queen Victoria knew it, for "her wisdom had remained with her."

Thus she has added to the many forms of influence which she possessed, the most precious and enduring of them all, the influence of her example. All of us are not called to sovereign power, but we are all called to exercise some measure of social influence. Shall we allow a false pride, a false theory of life to spoil our natural qualities, or, like Queen Victoria, shall we not rather allow those qualities, consolidated into the beauty of the Christian character, to influence our social acts, and to shape the course of our public duties? Shall love of power destroy within us the power of love, in the discharge of those home duties by which all that is best in our Humanity is developed and ripened? May wisdom remain with us as it did with the tender wife, the loving mother, and the noble Queen for whom we all mourn to-day!

And now she is seen no more, but it is the singular property of the virtues which have endeared her to her subjects to make her an Empress still, the Sovereign of an Empire which time, which dissolves most things, will only render more secure for all succeeding generations. She reigns in our hearts, and she will continue to reign in the hearts of our descendants, as one in whom greatness and goodness found glorious harmony. Whatever may be the anxieties and vicissitudes and trials of this great nation in times present and in times to come, Englishmen, to whatever party they may belong, will instinctively turn to the life of Queen Victoria for a practical illustration of the sacred doctrine that "Righteousness exalteth a Nation."

THE REV. H. W. PERRIS, AT FOREST GATE.

THE old order was gone; God would fulfil His purpose in other ways. Excalibur had no virtue left, when the hour of Arthur's passing came; and was not poetry still truth? The widening thought of mankind was the great force to be reckoned with now; and every wave of sympathy that broke upon England's shore had a deep undertone of warning. The nations were "members one of another"; the brutal surgery of darker days must no longer be resorted to—the weakest had their inextinguishable claims, and the greatest paid the penalty of contempt for them. We have come to the parting of the ways; the cruel sword which pierced the heart of the nation, as well as that of its Queen, must be sheathed, and diviner forces evoked to heal the awful wounds which violence had left. The thoughts of many hearts were being revealed; our people were beginning to see that the Cross casts its shadow over the proudest throne, that she who had been doomed to wear a Crown of Sorrow was the breathing type of the common lot, for crime and folly are still rampant, and greatness does but enlarge the scale of human suffering, and illustrate the mightier sweep of irrevocable moral law. So, might tears and heart-break avail to heal our deadly hurt, and release us from the bondage of admitted wrong!

For mightier far
Than strength of nerve and sinew, or the sway
Of magic potent over sun and star,
Is love, though oft to agony distrest,
And though his favourite seat be feeble Woman's breast.

THE REV. W. G. TARRANT, AT WANDSWORTH.

GRANT that there are springs of national energy deeper than human wisdom can fathom, admit that there is that in every manly, intelligent race that asks chiefly to be let alone to do its own work and earn and enjoy its own rewards, nevertheless it is something to have rulers sagacious enough not to thwart the currents that make for fortune; it is much to have those who aid by all their power in the right direction.

Such a ruler was our Queen. She moved among the lovers of culture, herself a cultured woman, a woman of keen interest in affairs, and of broad human sympathies. Her husband, Prince Albert, rose to the full height of his opportunities during the little more than twenty years they dwelt together, and helped to lead the nation's aspirations for enlightenment and peaceful development. Her home was such that out of her large family none have discredited its wise discipline, while—to speak only of the dead—two of her children, Alice and Leopold, were distinguished by strong religious instincts none the less real because guided by a sincere use, and a fearless use, of high intellectual powers. It cannot be in vain when such a household is built up in the centre of national life, observed of all observers. The influences that stream thence through the Court, and far and wide through all classes of the people, are not less valuable because they cannot be put into statistical tables. The statute book does indeed record the nation's determination during the Queen's reign, and in accord with her own desire, to take one step after another in the direction of a worthier and fuller life. But vain, or at least largely so, are the hopes of moralists and philanthropists, and the statesmen who seek to mould the national character as well as to control its revenues, if there should be, as it were, in the nation's very heart, a power so potent as a monarch's influence making for evil instead of good. What we and all God-fearing people should most dread and deplore in the new reign would be anything like a recurrence to the ways and sentiments to the Courts that preceded Queen Victoria.

. . . .

Queen Victoria lived out her destiny to the full. We could have wished that the sorrows of this last lamentable and protracted war had not come upon her in the end of her years. But we must not let even so dark a cloud as this hide from us the vision of the glory of her reign, a glory as of a long and bounteous summer's day, now come to its close. We cannot mourn in such a case without feelings of gratitude that take away the poignancy from our grief. She passes to her rest, beloved and honoured, commended to Love Eternal by the love of her people.

THE REV. J. E. MANNING, AT UPPER CHAPEL, SHEFFIELD.

THE Queen was, indeed, "a mother in Israel," and all her people, from highest to lowest, felt her death keenly as the sundering of close ties of affectionate attachment. But the loss was felt by other nations as well as her own subjects. All the great nations felt that by her death there had passed away a power of wisdom and righteousness that made for the world's peace and the good understanding among nations. The world knew that so far as her influence could be exerted, it would always be on the side of "peace and good will," and when her history comes to be written it will be found that in many an acute crisis her temperate judgment has prevented catastrophe, where a monarch more imperious and self-willed might have hastened it. From the day of her accession to the day of her death only one purpose ruled her life—to be a good Queen. She had many difficult crises to pass through, many domestic sorrows to bear, but throughout them all she showed the same devout faith in God, the same confidence in her people, the same unaffected reliance in the purity of her motives. Of her personal virtues as exhibited in her home life and in her Court it was impossible to speak too highly. The purity of her Court was like the length of her reign, unparalleled in the history of England. The touch of impurity she abhorred, and she would tolerate no one on whom it rested. She had no Puritanic severity; and did not dream of frowning down any innocent enjoyment. She had a wholesome delight in all beautiful things and virtuous pleasures. But vice found in her a determined enemy. She was the noblest example of personal and domestic virtue in the annals of English monarchs. Then her home life, how peaceful, sweet, and tender. Her Royal Family had always been singularly happy and united, without the burning jealousies not uncommon in Royal families. They were united in a common love of their mother. She was kind and sympathetic to those in misfortune and to the poor. In great calamities she was always among the first to send messages of condolence, and she never missed an opportunity to show practical sympathy when it was most needed. Her biography was a record of goodness, sweetness, purity; of wise judgment and singleness of aim; of simple faith in God and heart-felt humility in His presence. Her religion was to do justly and love mercy. In her exalted position she exhibited the graces and virtues of a pure and loving heart. The secret of her influence lay in the strength and beauty of her character. The "good Queen" passed away full of years, of honours, but the treasure she prized most was the love of her faithful people. And that they gave with all their heart.

THE REV. JOSEPH WOOD, AT THE OLD MEETING CHURCH, BIRMINGHAM.

ALL sectional differences are silent, all party cries are hushed before the sense of what humanity has lost in the death of our revered Queen. No human being who has known anything of her gracious character but mourns her decease. But to us Englishmen the loss is immeasurable. For she was not only our symbol of unity, but by her rare gifts of head and heart, she cemented the various parties of the State into one fair, firm league of loyality to the Throne. No one can measure from what horrors of revolution and disaster she saved the country by re-inspiring the old virtue of personal loyalty to a worthy ruler. At her accession the Throne seemed tottering to its fall. Only a few years ago The Times wrote of one of her predecessors that no one in the British Isles could be found to shed a tear on his grave. How different to-day, when all the world grieves with a grievous lamentation over the taking away of Victoria. She re-established the Throne, not simply broad-based upon the people's will, as it had always been, but now deeply-rooted in the people's affections. During the nineteenth century "thrones and dominions" have passed under new conditions. Victoria had the grace and tact, the courage and wisdom, to adapt herself to that reshaping of the Constitution which went on during her reign.

THE REV. A. N. BLATCHFORD, AT LEWIN'S MEAD MEETING, BRISTOL.

IN life we rendered her no mere conventional homage, and that was why our sorrow was so unaffected at her loss. Reverently and humbly we laid aside all thoughts of pomp and pride. Our darkened realm was as one bereaved home, and we were but as children longing for the vanished presence of a beloved one. For it was that motherly love of hers that we so sadly missed. Her heart went out to her people in their sorrow, and in their happiness, and, therefore, in her vicissitudes she drew comfort from her people, whose lonely monarch was no less their friend. Trouble had smitten her again and again, and yet, how beautiful the bearing of her cross, and how uplifting the story of her life! The sympathy of the nation sprang from her tender thoughtfulness for all around her, and that sympathy was deepened from the people's knowledge of her own sweet and lovely home life. Her nature, and her influence linked together throne and hearthstone; and therein lay the secret of the power of this womanly Queen over all hearts. We seemed to forget the Sovereign in the friend, and in our reverent devotion to her, loyalty and friendship were the same. There was comfort, too, in the knowledge that we had the right to grieve for her, because, long before God's angel touched her, we knew, and gloried in, the flawless beauty of her life. And, inasmuch as the throne o'ertopped all earthly stations, she raised to a supreme height the claims of virtue, and of integrity, in every scene and circumstance of life. To this realm of ours, she has indeed become "the fair beginning of a time"; setting an example of glorious reproachlessness even in the glare of "the fierce light that beats around a throne," and filling us with the glad anticipation of progress still to be won, beneath the sway of him, who fills, to his own deep grief, a loving mother's place, declares the high promise of following in her footsteps, and makes his kingly vow to toil, while life and strength are his, for the progress of his people.

THE REV. L. P. JACKS, AT THE CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH, BIRMINGHAM.

QUEEN VICTORIA so used her sovereign place as to be a representative of our best virtues and our incentive to our best life. Reigning at a time when men had begun to think that monarchy was an outworn institution, she gave it a new meaning and invested it with a new reverence, showing the world that as a Queen she had nobler work to do than merely bend others to her will. She governed this vast Empire not so much as a monarch dominating his subjects, but as a mother ruling her household. It was that spirit in the Queen's actions, it was that element in the Queen's character, which gave to her government its chief authority, and elicited a loyalty to her person such as no other Sovereign has ever commanded. She had played a mother's part chiefly in this, that like a mother she stood between the nation and its worst faults. What those faults were, what they were in their extreme form they could only imagine, because, thanks to the Queen's influence, they had been restrained from many of their most fatal developments. Many hard things might be said, and perhaps be truly said, as to the tone of English social life, as to the general level of personal and national ideals, but let them picture what would have been true of England to-day if during the last sixty years the influence of the Throne had been corrupt. They were fond of celebrating the splendid progress of the reign, but they might well believe that on one side this progress had been a menace and a temptation to the moral life of the nation, the effect of which would have been little short of ruinous had it not been for the restraining, the refining, the uplifting influence of her who was the head. The growth of wealth and the growth of Imperial power carried with them temptations to which all nations, sooner or later, fell victims when restraint was unexercised. They did not know, they could only vaguely guess, what they owed to the Queen. He thought they owed her not alone the preservation of their national greatness, but the preservation of the national character. She had stood between the nation and its worst possibilities. Hers had been the silent influence of the mother in the home, but for whom many would have been prone to play the part of the prodigal son. When men grew powerful they were apt to think themselves superior to right and wrong. They would do right only if it pleased them, and if wrong pleased them better than it was wrong they would do. And when nations grew powerful they were prone to act in the same manner; they used their power as they liked; they, too, thought themselves superior to right and wrong. To this sense of superiority to right and wrong the Greek thinkers gave a name, and the nearest equivalent the English had for that name was the word "insolence." Insolence was the besetting vice of the powerful, but as soon as all checks upon it were removed then it was the view of these thinkers that private morals decayed, social life became corrupt, and nations went to ruin. He was not going to say that the influence of the Queen had extirpated this malady or made them exempt from the risk of its recurrence. He would not even say there had been no manifestations of it during her reign. But her influence had been against it. High as was her station, mighty and well-nigh irresistible as were the forces at her command, the whole record of her public and private life displayed an attitude of mind the opposite of that which thought itself superior to right and wrong. With the humility which marked the greatest minds, she had bowed to the eternal law. She had set the nation the example of a life steadfastly guided by the ideal of duty. She, seated in the most illustrious place, beat upon by the fierce light which falls upon a throne, had been a shining instance of self-control and moderation in an age whose besetting danger was insolence and excess.

DR. G. DAWES HICKS, AT UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON.

QUEEN VICTORIA stood to us all in another and a deeper relationship than that of Queen. We should have hesitated before in declaring our personal affection for one to whom we had never spoken, and whom probably few of us had ever seen. But death is the great revealer of hearts, and in its presence we are dimly realising how entirely genuine and true our attachment to her has been. From childhood we have been taught to look up to her with loyalty and reverence; she has been associated with our earliest recollections of home and native land, and, as we have watched her descend the vale of years, bravely bearing her own load of sorrow, and tenderly sympathising with the sorrows of men and women everywhere, a halo of moral beauty has crowned her head, and we had come to love her with a love that was for herself alone. We, indeed, are sometimes prone to imagine that there is little merit in "wearing the white flower of a blameless life," if the wearer be removed from the struggle for existence and above the necessity of earning daily food. We forget the overwhelming temptations, thus opened out to a career of pleasure and worldly enjoyment. No, it has been no easy thing to preserve a pure unsullied character amidst a myriad inducements to baser things, and we might well rejoice that our Queen had been proof against them all. How was her ideal attained? It was due to the fact that her life had not been an aimless life, but was directed from the outset towards a conscious definite purpose, moulded from the very beginning by the notion of the noble end in which it should culminate. On its threshold, she had asked herself the question, so few of us ever stay to ask, "Why am I here, in the midst of God's universe, with all these powers and opportunities of service? How can I best use them? How can I apply them to the most profitable account?" When, at the age of twelve, it was considered right she should know that she was heir to the crown, the information, awakening in her even then a heavy sense of all that it implied, drew forth the resolve of the child and the principle of the grown woman. "I will be good," she cried, and, with the registration of that early vow, the bent of her life was set. Thenceforth, she knew herself to be training for a high and difficult task, and mind and heart were constrained to acquire the cultnre that was needful for it. That early determination expanded into a life principle, leading her to a right conception of an English sovereign's duties, enabling her to be the means of hallowing the grand old English customs of home, and, by the power there was in sorrow to unite in deepest intimacy those who had borne it together, to be a fellow-sufferer with all those whose troubles she could help to bear.

THE REV. W. H. DRUMMOND, AT ALL SOULS' CHURCH, BELFAST.

IT is enough for us if we share deeply and sincerely the feeling of the moment; but even while we are being carried along on its full flood we are aware, at least dimly, of some of its deeper meaning. In personal experience it is often the things which make us sad that bring life back to its true centre, and the same is true of gladness which sinks deep enough into the heart to escape the taint of pride and selfishness. In the same way there is great virtue for men and nations in being able to feel the power of common joys and sorrows, which pass swiftly from heart to heart like the quick leaping of fire. They break down the barriers of class and creed. They unite masses of men into one body moved by a common impulse of affection. They show how in spite of the greed and cruelty, the false pride and evil ambitions of the world, men are still somewhere deep below the surface, living close to the simple realities of God, with reverence and love, and sympathy for all that is noble in human goodness or pitiful in human grief, still fresh within the heart. Unless it teaches that lesson, and gives men power to think and act more nobly, a common feeling, however widespread it may be, is little better than a desolating storm. It lifts the heart up in fevered excitement, and then it leaves it to sink back exhausted and weary, with hope and love and faith in goodness ebbing away like the last grains of sand in the glass.

Men and nations do not always recognise the day of their redemption. Sometimes the cleansing wind of God blows upon them, prophetic of new duties and larger hopes, and they only open their dull, listless eyes for a moment, and then turn to their own dreams once more. The mere power of feeling is nothing, unless with high resolve we learn the lessons and welcome the duties which the feeling has to teach. And so it is for us to see to it that this great motion of grief, which in extent and power is unlike anything we have ever known before, shall not pass away without leaving the influence of its redemption upon our life as a people. We have been accustomed to measure the greatness of the British race by the extent of our commerce and the prowess of our arms. We realise it now in a deeper and more moving way by this common sorrow, which has put a girdle of mourning round the earth; and we see with eyes made clear by grief that it is a greatness to be accepted not in a spirit of boastfulness or the mere greed of success, but only in utter reverence for the Will of God and the good of men. Faith and joy spring often right out of the heart of grief. The whole world, far beyond the range of our own thoughts and ideals, is sad to-day for the death of one gracious Lady, because she was good and knew how to make people love her. It is a fact which must impress the slowest imagination; and it will come back to us, like some angel crowned with light, in dark days when we are sore beset by evil, and faith in God's love is burning low in the heart. For it could not be at all unless somewhere far off in the spiritual land Goodness sits enthroned as Sovereign of the world.

THE REV. EDGAR I. FRIPP, AT THE OLD MEETING, MANSFIELD.

QUEEN VICTORIA was beloved. Only one monarch in our long annals had so strong and abiding a hold upon his subjects' affection. In 901, just a thousand years ago, the great King Aelfred died, worn out by his heroic labours, at the early age of fifty-two, and was lamented as "England's Darling." Those were days of struggle with the Danes—of death and life conflict in England between the forces of religion and civilisation and the savage strength of heathendom. Aelfred was the saviour and the educator of his people, their leader in war, their law-maker, their teacher—and in all, and above all, their loved one. And now, in these changed times, when, indeed, the same struggle goes on but in vastly different forms, we have had a ruler who from her girlhood has been beloved—as a young and happy princess, as a gentle wife and mother, as a widow suffering a great bereavement, and lastly as an aged and gracious lady who out of her trouble has brought forth sympathy and blessing for all her people in affliction.

Times have indeed changed not only since Aelfred, but much more recent sovereigns, when for over sixty years the destinies of the most extensive and powerful empire the world has ever seen should be in the hands of a woman.

Only six women have sat on the English throne. Aelfred's own daughter, the brave Aethelflaed was the first; but she ruled over only half England, which, like an Amazon, she delivered at the head of her army from the Danes. The next, six hundred years later, were the gifted daughters of the Tudor Henry—Mary and Elizabeth; then came the Stuart cousins, Mary and Anne; and at last came our own Queen. Of these, Elizabeth and Victoria stand out pre-eminently. Both their reigns are illustrious—unsurpassed in our history. Under Elizabeth England rose to be foremost in Europe; under Victoria her empire has spread far beyond the bounds of any previous realm. Yet in other respects the two periods are difficult to compare. The "spacious days" of Elizabeth were spacious in ideality and poetry, in aim and dream; but in knowledge and power, in territory, in command of natural resources, in government and influence, in outlook, they were petty compared with the Victorian era. And still more the great queens themselves are a striking and emphatic contrast.

Elizabeth's greatness was almost entirely intellectual. She was extraordinarily accomplished, from archery and horsemanship to music and Greek. She spoke French and Italian nearly as well as English. Her sagacity drew about her Ministers of the first rank, but she was at the head of them all. She had, moreover, remarkable popular gifts. The enthusiastic admiration she was capable of exciting in her subjects may be seen in Spenser's "Faerie Queen." The poet's devotion was more or less that of the entire nation—until, at any rate, a few years before her death. Yet this attitude was only possible from a distance, among those who judged her by her public acts and knew little of her personally. She lacked righteousness. She was far more clever than good. She trusted to her wits rather than to her conscience. She had, as time went on, less and less affection. She grew vain and worldly, untruthful, coarse, cruel and irreligious. When her popularity waned she tried to recover it by show and splendour, by gorgeous pageants and progresses, until, it must be confessed, she became at last a very pitiable old woman. Her effigy in Westminster Abbey, beautiful with the simplicity and dignity of death, reveals the masculine force of her intellect. Looking at her there, without her paint and finery, we forget her littlenesses and pronounce her great. But the title great and good must be reserved for another queen.

And that is Queen Victoria, who has been an example to two generations of her people of what can be done with comparatively humble gifts in conjunction with moral and religious greatness. No one, I suppose, would claim that she was born of a talented family; and the word "brilliant" would strike few as an appropriate description of her power; but by her strong sense of duty, her deep affections, and the tact which is the outcome of love, and her constant faith in God, she has succeeded where brilliant talents alone would have utterly failed.

She was a typical good Englishwoman. As a race the English are not brilliant, and they would not like to be so characterised; but they often do what they can as well as they can, patiently and steadfastly, with order and reverence; and for some centuries now they have been the strongest and most successful people, perhaps, in the earth. The Queen was an embodiment of these homely but essential virtues. She was a hard-working and painstaking ruler, serious and persistent, upright, simple, quiet, devout. Her household was a home. She was a true wife and mother. She had good men and women about her. Her statesmen were men of good life. Her Court was pure. And if her sympathies occasionally lacked range they were never wanting in depth; nor was there the least ostentation in her old-fashioned regard for ceremony. She was entirely sincere. The idea of parading before the public or seeking mere popularity was odious to her healthy nature.

I shall never forget the simple way in which she visited an agricultural show in the Isle of Wight. She came in a pony-carriage with a couple of outriders, in a very plain dress, and bowed to every one in a kind, motherly fashion, yet with a great dignity, notwithstanding, the dignity not merely of her high office, but of a sincere and unaffected goodness.

And therefore, now that she is dead, her people of all ranks, creeds, parties and even nationalities, rise up to call her blessed.

VICTORIA.

ETERNAL God! The peoples stand
And own their times are in Thy hand:
With mingling tears and thanks they raise
Their broken song of love and praise.

Thy Servant rests! Her task is done;
Her race with noble patience run;
From year to year, serene and true
To that Thou gavest her to do!

From year to year, her people's good
Has been her high beatitude:
Their weal her joy; their grief her own;
Their loyal hearts her queenly throne!

She rests at last; she rests in Thee:
From burdening griefs and ills set free:
The sceptred cares of earth laid down,
She takes from Thee her deathless crown.

Thou givest Thy beloved sleep!
No longer shall she mutely weep
O'er loved ones gone, and soldiers slain
On Afric's bloodstained battle-plain.

She rests: her toils and sorrows cease:
For us the tears; for her the peace;
For us the warfare and the strife;
For her the glad Eternal Life!

H. W. HAWKES.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT.

WITH one auspicious exception, Liverpool Unitarianism has not been aroused by the New Century to any enthusiastic enterprise. While our Manchester friends have organised special Mission services through the length and breadth of their province, the somewhat sluggish waters of our 'pool have not been stirred by any angel to special zeal for the healing of the religiously sick and impotent. Whether this arises from apathy or from a sense of well-being and well-doing it is not for me to say. Certainly there is no falling-off in the good work already being done in so quiet and steady a way as to court no public attention.

The Liverpool District Missionary Association as far as existing work goes, fosters Crewe, Liscard, Bootle and Garston; along with a friendly and financial connection with the Hamilton-road Domestic Mission. Southport owes to its initiative and early support its flourishing Portland-street congregation, now entirely independent. Ormskirk was also under its wing, but proved so utterly hopeless that the chapel was sold and the proceeds invested. Prescot has also proved hopeless, and the old chapel there is a forlorn wreck.

A very real Forward Movement was inaugurated last autumn, by the appointment of a District Missionary, whose work is to combine a kindly episcopal intercourse with Crewe, Liscard and Bootle, the full charge of the new congregation at Garston, and a vigorous effort to open up new work in likely places. With a hearty welcome from everyone, the Rev. H. D. Roberts, late of Chester, entered on this work four months ago. He has already solidified the Garston effort, and has extended its methods of usefulness; and while it is still in the day of small things, encouraging hopes are entertained of its growth. Not content with this, Mr. Roberts is attacking St. Helens, a fair sized town devoid of a Unitarian congregation, but where previous spasmodic efforts have been made. To do this he has to rely on steady help from a number of Liverpool laymen, who have already rendered admirable service at Garston. The existence of this band of lay-preachers is one of the most hopeful elements in our local church life. It is too early to prophecy what response St. Helens will give to our gospel, but the fact of the effort being made is cheering.

Crewe has always been a tough place to work in, and Mr. Redfern finds it uphill work. We all feel admiration for his faithful efforts, and wish him every success. He is making the best of the materials at his disposal, and all who come under his influence must be the better for it. A self-supporting congregation seems almost past hoping for; but what better thing can our wealthier churches do than keep alive such centres of kindly and liberalising influence!

Liscard, with its handsome and commodious Memorial Church, has had to go through an ordeal in the loss of its eloquent pastor, now removed to Nottingham, and the long period of pastorless anxiety. It has stood the ordeal right well, and, in spite of losses by removal and death, has held its own, financially, numerically, and, better than all, religiously. Happily it has now only a short time to wait when the Rev. A. E. Perry, who has done admirable outpost work in Kirkcaldy, will commence what we all hope will be a prosperous ministry.

Bootle has also passed through a transition, and is all the better for it. September brought with it a healthful tide of new energy, clear thought, eloquent speech and overflowing geniality, in the person of the Rev. J. Morley Mills, late of Nantwich; and the result has been a corresponding quickening of energy and enthusiasm in the Church. To change the metaphor, whereas, owing to the failing grip of its first minister, the church was only marking time, under the new command it has now begun a quick march.

Turning from the work of the L.D.M.A. to the Domestic Missions of Liverpool, I could write columns did space allow. The splendid buildings in Mill-street are a veritable mill, grinding out, day and night, love, sympathy, help, cheer, instruction and inspiration for all comers. In spite of the wild efforts of a neighbouring vicar to frighten from the doors every man, woman, and child, the more he denounces the more they come. Being at the right end of the city, a goodly number of earnest teachers and workers drawn from the parent churches give welcome aid, and are brought face to face with the problems of city slum-life. It is a mutual benefit.

At Hamilton-road, at the north-east end of the city, Mr. Haigh has to do without such a contingent; but he has the happy ability to elicit enthusiastic help from the young men and women he gathers round him. His Sunday-school overflows; his week-night meetings are popular, his congregations full and hearty. It is a marvel how he does all the work of which he is the originator and mainspring. The old Bond-street Mission, which is also under Mr. Haigh's charge, with the efficient help of Miss Wells, is more and more a difficult problem. The neighbourhood has changed and become Roman Catholic, so limiting the sphere for much of the Mission's best work. If a young, enthusiastic and brotherly man, content to work on a small salary (such as the Methodists and other bodies can find in numbers) were forthcoming, possibly he could still find some good work to be done.

I have reported first on the missionary work of the District on the principle that the tree is known by its fruits, the fountain by its waters. The congregations which support all these efforts now claim a word.

I attended worship at the Ullet-road Church a few days ago, and was more struck than ever with the stately beauty of the building and the dignity and efficiency of the surpliced choir. It chanced to be Hospital Sunday, and Dr. Klein touched skilfully and effectively on the inner meaning of the praying and anointing with oil, which, taken with crude literalness, as by the Peculiar People, may become a dangerous absurdity. The collection of well over £600, though below that of last year, was, as usual, far ahead of that taken in any other single church. Part of the falling off was probably explained by a large increase at the neighbouring Ancient Chapel, of which members of the Ullet-road Church are also members. A deep feeling of sympathy was evoked by the presence of Lady O'Hagan and her son.

At Hope-street Church all rejoice in the improved health of Mr. Armstrong, who is now able to bear the full burden of the preaching. He has a young curate who helps in the pastoral work, with especial care for the Sunday-school and allied institutions, and is occasionally to preach. Of this gentleman, who was intended for the ministry of the Established Church, but who found himself theologically out of harmony therewith, we hope good things in the coming years.

The Ancient Chapel, quaint and old-world as it looks, shelters a growing spirit of religious energy, which has broken out in the erection, now almost complete, of a church hall. The exigencies of the site and the fear of dwarfing the already small chapel, have limited it as to size, but it harmonises perfectly with its surroundings and will be most useful. There is a delightful aroma of primitive piety clinging to this relic of bygone days; and something in the minister seems to synchronise with his Puritan setting.

Of Gateacre and Birkenhead I am sorry and ashamed to say I cannot speak from any personal knowledge, but I believe that at both places there is a full tide of life and hope. The latter church is at present worshipping in the new school building opened a few months ago, pending the erection on the same plot of ground of a new chapel. The old Charing-cross Chapel is sold and pulled down, and the proceeds will go a long way towards the future edifice, which will be more centrally situated. The prospects of this church are therefore bright, especially as I hear great things said of the ability of its preacher.

One way and another, Liverpool and District actualities and possibilities are encouraging. Let us not forget our city motto "Deus nobis haec otia fecit!"

H. W. HAWKES.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Memorial Services.

It is impossible to report even in the briefest manner the memorial services for the Queen which were held last Sunday in our churches as in all others throughout the country. It will be known to our readers that everywhere there has been the same reverent observance of this time of mourning and grateful commemoration. In many of our churches special services are to be held to-day (Saturday). We note with special satisfaction that at Heaton Moor a united memorial service is to be held in St. Paul's Church, in which the Rev. Priestley Prime is to take part with two clergymen of the Church and a Wesleyan minister.

Birmingham.—Through the kindness of Miss Abbott, a tea and entertainment was given to eighty of the younger members of the Church of the Messiah Sunday-school, when Aunt Amy's play was the enjoyment of the evening, acted by a class of older girls of the school.

Chelmsford.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Wednesday, Jan. 23, followed by a pleasant social evening.

Kirkcaldy.—The annual congregational meeting was held in the church on the evening of Wednesday, Jan. 23. After tea the reports for the past year were read, which showed a slight increase of membership and that the ordinary church finances were in a healthy condition. The debt on the building had been reduced during 1900 by £70, only £10 of which was raised outside the town, and now stood at £120. The various institutions of the church, but especially the Sunday-school, were flourishing. The various reports were adopted, and office-bearers and committee elected for the ensuing year. The secretary then read the minister's letter of resignation, which was reluctantly accepted amid many sincere expressions of regret and equally sincere good wishes for his future. Several speakers gave expression to the personal affection of the members for Mr. Parry, and of the deep sense of loss, both to the congregation and the community at large, which they felt his departure to be. Mr. Parry suitably replied, and votes of thanks, which included one to the McQuaker Trustees for their grant, concluded the meeting.

Leeds: Hunslet.—The annual teachers' and parents' party was held on Saturday, Jan. 19, and was well attended. After tea Mr. J. Thornton, of Leeds, took the chair, and satisfactory reports were read. The year's prizes were then distributed to the children by Miss Lucas, of Harrogate, and the remainder of the evening was very pleasantly spent.

London: Kentish Town.—On Monday evening the Rev. Alexander Farquharson presided over the annual general meeting of the Clarence-road congregation, which was numerously attended, and after referring to the good work done during the past year, made an earnest appeal to the congregation to continue and to extend the growing influence of the church. After a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting closed with the singing of a hymn and the benediction.

London: Lewisham.—The annual business meeting of this congregation was held on Wednesday last, 30th ult. Mr. S. S. Tayler, who was announced to take the chair, was too unwell to be present. The congregation sent him an expression of sympathy. The several reports were considered to be encouraging. Throughout the year the work of the church in all its branches had been assiduously carried out, everyone co-operating loyally and harmoniously.

Manchester: Lower Mosley-street Sunday-school (Appointment).—The Rev. A. Cobden Smith has received and accepted an invitation to become general superintendent of this school, and enters upon his duties in the beginning of the present month.

London: Rhyl-street Mission.—From Monday to Friday next the Rev. Edgar Daplyn is to conduct a Special Mission, service each evening at eight o'clock.

London: Wood Green.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Tuesday, the chair being taken by Mr. Hahnemann Epps, who made an encouraging speech. Mr. Sudbery traced the progress of the work at Wood Green, and other speeches followed, showing that there is vigour and the utmost good-feeling in the congregation and a bright outlook for the future.

Moneyrea.—On Saturday evening telling speeches were delivered in the schoolroom by the Presbyterian minister of Castlereagh, the Rev. J. B. Thompson, and by Mr. Sermple, I.O.G.T., Belfast, at a miscellaneous concert, held under the auspices of the United Temperance Guild. There were over 200 present. An attractive programme, arranged by Miss Anna Lamont and Mr. J. Lamont Orr, of Belfast, was rendered. The net profit, £5 8s., was devoted to aid a case of need in the district.

Whitchurch.—On Jan. 27 the twenty-fourth anniversary services were held, conducted by the Rev. W. F. Turland, who delivered two earnest addresses of encouragement and exhortation.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk.

ART and HANDICRAFT CLASSES, KIRKBY LONSDALE. — WANTED, a young lady STUDENT-ASSISTANT. Small salary; preparation for A.C.T.C.—Apply, Miss R. E. BARNARD.

NEW CENTURY TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL, MANCHESTER.—WANTED, lady of good education (18–25) for special training.—A. H. WAYLEN, M.D., Secretary Curative Home for Paralysed Children, Clarendon-road, Blackpool.

WANTED, a COMPANION for a blind lady to read aloud, sew, and perform light duties. She must be young, have good references, good health, and good eyesight.—Apply to Miss FLORENCE HILL, 13, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W.

WANTED, by a young lady, re-engagement as USEFUL COMPANION to lady or in a family. Thoroughly domesticated and musical. Salary from £20 to £25. References given.—Address, H. B., INQUIRER Office, Essex-street, Strand.

TO LET, two or three unfurnished ROOMS in quiet house. Bath (h. and c.). No children. North London.—Apply, C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

THE "INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, February 3.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel' 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN. Morning, Boy's Own Brigade Service—"In His Name." Evening, "The Beautiful." Mondays, 8.15 P.M., Recitals by Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR, B.A.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS, and 7 P.M., Rev. V. D. DAVIS, B.A.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. WM. LLOYD.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON. Morning, "A Memorable Reign." Evening, "The New Era."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A. Morning, "On the Uses of Adversity, Individual and National." Evening, "On Making Excuses."

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. FARRINGTON. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., PERCY AMES, F.G.S., and 7 P.M., Rev. G. CRITCHLEY.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Mr. W. J. HAWKINS, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. P. W. AMES, F.S.A.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRADFORD, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. LIVENS.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Rev. E. DURANT CECIL.

DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKSPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.

EASTBOURNE, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. L. SCHROEDER.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN.

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, M.A.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Claremont, 21, Albion-place (facing Harbour), 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. WALTER LLOYD.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.

SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.

WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION RELIGIOUS CONFERENCE at COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY-GREEN, E., SUNDAY, Feb. 3rd, at Five o'clock. Subject, "Brotherhood and Patriotism." Opened by the Rev. GEORGE CRITCHLEY.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—Feb. 3rd, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Sheldon's Ethical Sunday School."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Feb. 3rd, at 11.15 A.M., HERBERT BURROWS, "The Nineteenth Century—Deism to Ritualism."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. J. B. BARNHILL, 26, Clovelly Mansions, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.

BIRTHS.

GRIFFIN—On the 16th Jan., at "Avondale," Fawnbrake-avenue, Herne Hill, the wife of George Griffin, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

BOOTH—On the 29th Jan., in his 92nd year, William Booth, of 137, Chadwick-road, Peckham.

LIVENS—On the 26th Jan., at Mansfield, West Croydon, George Livens, aged 83 years.

SHAWCROSS—On the 27th Jan., Francis Shawcross, late of Carfax, Worsley, in his 70th year.

WARREN—On the 25th Jan., at Lewisham, Priscilla, the beloved wife of William Grayston Warren, in her 73rd year.

The Bible in the Nineteenth Century.

A COURSE OF LECTURES by

PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

(of Manchester College, Oxford),

at BOLTON, LEEDS, and LIVERPOOL.

II. Changed Views of Prophecy.
III. The Gospels and the Origin of Christianity.
IV. The Gospel Question: (1), The Synoptics.
V. The Gospel Question: (2), The Fourth Gospel.
VI. The Bible and the Church.

BOLTON: Spinners' Hall, St. George's-road.
Tuesdays, February 5th, 12th, 19th, 26th, March 5th, at 7.30 P.M.

LEEDS: Philosophical Hall.
Wednesdays, February 6th, 13th, 20th, 27th, March 6th, at 8.0 P.M.

LIVERPOOL: Royal Institution, Colquitt-street.
Thursdays, February 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th, March 7th, at 8.30 P.M.

Admission Free. A copy of the Syllabus will be sent on application to the Rev. C. J. STREET, Maythorn, Heaton, Bolton; the Rev. C. HARGROVE, 10, De Grey-terrace, Leeds; or C. W. JONES, Esq., 39, Drury Buildings, Liverpool.

SUSTENTATION FUND

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors and Friends to receive the Report, appoint Officers, and transact other Business, will be held at 2 P.M., on WEDNESDAY, February 13, 1901, at DR. WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY, GORDON-SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

HARRY RAWSON,
A. W. WORTHINGTON, } Hon. Secs.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY

ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman—Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21, Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Schools, etc.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

DR. DANIEL JONES' TRUST.

The Trustees offer to Ministers who have shown themselves efficient in active service, and desire to devote a year to further study, one or two Bursaries, tenable for one year at the College.

For further particulars apply to—

Rev. H. E. DOWSON, Gee Cross, Hyde;
A. H. WORTHINGTON, 1, St. James'-square, Manchester. } Secs.

MANCHESTER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological Knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological Doctrines.

PRINCIPAL:
Rev. J. DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D., D.LITT.

SESSION 1901-1902.

CANDIDATES for ADMISSION are requested to forward their Applications and Testimonials without delay to the Secretaries.

The Trustees offer for competition External Exhibitions, open to Students for the Ministry, tenable for the ordinary Undergraduate period at any approved British or Irish University.

The Trustees also offer Exhibitions, tenable at the College, for Students for the Ministry.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, or to

Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, Gee Cross, Hyde; or
A. H. WORTHINGTON, 1, St. James'-square, Manchester. } Secs.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,

SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

THE HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

(Founded by Miss J. F. GRUNER, May, 1897).

The SPRING TERM begins on WEDNESDAY, January 23rd, 1901, the School being carried on at the HINDHEAD HALL as heretofore. Boarders are received by the Misses GRUNER at Moorcroft, Hindhead, Haslemere, from whom prospectuses and further information may be obtained.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

THREE NEW BOOKS

BY THE

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.

OUR REASONABLE SERVICE. Four Sermons on Acts of Worship. 6d. net, by post 7d.

SERMONS and IMPRESSIONS brought from AMERICA. 6d. net, by post 7d.

JESUS OF NAZARETH: Lessons of his Life, Death, and Resurrection learnt from Ober Ammergau. 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor road, S.W.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,

THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY

THE COMING DAY.

ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for FEBRUARY.

The New Heaven and Earth. A New Century Study.
Notes on Herbert Spencer's "First Principles."
Alfred Russel Wallace and Victor Hugo on Spiritualism.
Two Window Panes: India.
Sane Australia.
England's "Hero."
Hooligans and Heroes.
Our Pillory.
Our un-English War.
The Queen and Peace.
Notes by the Way and Notes on Books.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford:
WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

THE NEW KINGDOM.

AN

ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY.

ONE PENNY. Post Free, 1s. 6d. per Annum.

Contents for FEBRUARY.

Henry Jones McCance, J.P., D.L. (with Portrait).
Praise (Hymn). W. A. Bacon.
Sunday in the Sahara. Andrew Chalmers.
Progress in the Nineteenth Century: I. Municipal Government. J. M. Bass, M.A.
A Golden Age (Poetry). E. C. Jones.
The Evolution of the Brain.
My Early Days. Walter Fergusson.
The late Bishop of London.
Temperance Reform. R. Wilson.
New Publications.
A Century Carol (Poetry). Deas Cromarty.
In the Field.

To be had from the Publishers, Messrs. WM. HOUGH and SONS, Manchester; RAWSON and Co., 16, New Brown-street, Manchester; ESSEX HALL, London; and all Newsagents.

THE CRISIS. A Quarterly Review.

Devoted to the cause of Progress, and the National Honour and Welfare, and the saving principles of Liberty, Equity, and Fraternity.

Contents of No. 1, JANUARY, 1901.

Pax Britannica.
Forewood.
Events in Boer History.
Salisbury Government.
The Colonies to the Front.
Alcohol and Crime.
Liberty and Equality as a part of Christianity.
Notes.

Price SIXPENCE, by post 7½d.

London: WATTS and Co., 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

Just published, price 2d., by post 2½d.

THE DREAD ALTERNATIVE:

"COME TO JESUS" —

OR: ————! By A PROTESTANT DISSENTER.

London: WATTS and Co., 17, Johnson's-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—The Rev. A. COBDEN SMITH from 22, Russell-road, Sefton Park, Liverpool, to 71, Claremont-road, Alexandra Park, Manchester.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 2, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3059. NEW SERIES, No. 163.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 81
LITERATURE :—
Morality as Religion 84
Short Notices 85
CORRESPONDENCE :—
"The Sunday School Helper" 86
The Unrighteous Steward 86
OBITUARY :—
The Rev. James Black, M.A.... 87
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 87
LEADER :—
The New Reign 88
POETRY :—
The Queen 88
The Creed of the Pious Agnostic 92
ARTICLES :—
The Salvation Army and the Labour Church 83
Queen Victoria 86
Choose Life 89
Ancoats Hall, Manchester 90
The High Peak Chapels 91
MEETINGS :—
Liverpool District Missionary Association ... 92
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
The Yorkshire Unitarian Union 92
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 93
ADVERTISEMENTS 94

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

ON Monday the last sacred office for what was mortal of our Queen was completed, in presence of her children and other nearest relatives, who followed the coffin from Windsor Castle through the park to the Royal Mausoleum at Frogmore, where it was laid by that of Prince Albert, in the place long since prepared by the Queen herself. On the same day the King sent three messages to his people at home, and in the Colonies, and in India. The first message, "To my People," begins as follows :—

> Now that the last scene has closed in the noble and ever glorious life of my beloved mother the Queen, I am anxious to endeavour to convey to the whole Empire the extent of the deep gratitude I feel for the heart-stirring and affectionate tributes which are everywhere borne to her memory.

The King also warmly acknowledges the universal expressions of sympathy with himself and the Royal Family in their overwhelming sorrow, and says how deeply he was touched by the sorrowful, reverent and sincere enthusiasm manifested in the whole course of the funeral by sea and land. The consciousness of that generous spirit of devotion and of the sharing in a common sorrow gave him courage and hope during those most trying and momentous days. And he concludes :—

> Encouraged by the confidence of that love and trust which the nation ever reposed in its late and fondly mourned Sovereign, I shall earnestly strive to walk in her footsteps, devoting myself to the utmost of my powers to maintaining and promoting the highest interests of my people, and to the diligent and zealous fulfilment of the great and sacred responsibilities which, through the will of God, I am now called to undertake.

WRITING specially to the Colonies and Dependencies, the King recalls the heartfelt interest ever shown by the Queen "in the welfare and prosperity of her subjects throughout Greater Britain," and the thankfulness with which she saw "the steady progress which, under a wide extension of self-government, they had made during her reign." For himself, with the loyal support of the people and their Representative Assemblies throughout his vast Colonial Dominions, the King declares that with God's blessing, he will solemnly work for the promotion of the common welfare and security of the great Empire over which he is now called to reign. To the Princes and people of India the King also sends greetings, and assurance of his sincere goodwill and affection, and heartfelt wishes for their welfare. He recalls the deep personal interest always shown by the Queen-Empress in all matters connected with India, and declares his intention to follow her great example, to work for the general well-being of his Indian subjects of all ranks, and to merit, as she did, their unfailing loyalty and affection. These are messages worthy of a great occasion. Of what we must hope for the new reign, and what it demands of us, we have written in another column.

FROM our friend and correspondent, Dr. George Boros, we have received a letter telling how deeply the Queen's death is felt in Hungary. While the whole of Europe has been touched by a common regret, in Hungary it has been most keenly felt, where the people, as in England, have long enjoyed the privileges of a constitutional monarchy, and where there is a love of freedom and respect for the rights of others, equal to our own. Dr. Boros sends us several quotations from Hungarian papers, including the following :—"It was not by chance or fortune that Queen Victoria had always the best counsellors, it was her great power of judgment, her exceptional wisdom, and her royal soul, that achieved such great triumphs."

WE desire to call the special attention of our readers to an article under the title "Choose Life," by the Rev. E. W. Lummis, M.A., the first part of which appears in our present issue, and which will be concluded next week. It is a forcible statement of the present condition of our religious community, with incisive and most salutary criticism on certain points, and a strong appeal for closer union, clearer apprehension of our calling and more devoted service in the future. We ask for it the most serious consideration of all who have the welfare of our Free Churches at heart.

ROSSLYN HILL CHAPEL was crowded last Sunday morning when Mr. Stopford Brooke preached an eloquent sermon in memory of the Queen, in which she was contrasted with Alfred the Great. To-morrow morning and on the two following Sundays Mr. Brooke is to preach at Little Portland-street Chapel.

MR. STOPFORD BROOKE'S course of Browning lectures at University College was concluded on Thursday, having been devoted to a deeply interesting study of Browning's women. The lecture on Thursday week was devoted to Balaustion, the Greek girl of genius, of whom Mr. Brooke spoke as the most perfect of Browning's women, "the most luminous and most at unity with herself." "Made of the finest clay, exquisite and delicate in grain, she is yet strong, when moulded by distress, to resist the blows of fate." As a woman of genius, she was contrasted with Pompilia of "The Ring and the Book," the other supreme creation among Browning's women, whose greatness is in the power of goodness and love. They were contrasted as the wild pomegranate flower, with its rich colouring amid dark green leaves, and the white rose touched with faint and exquisite colour. The second course of lectures, which is to deal with other poets of the latter part of last century (not Tennyson or Browning), begins next Thursday.

IT is extremely gratifying to hear from Liverpool of the overflowing audience that assembled on Thursday week to hear the first of Mr. Carpenter's lectures on "The Bible in the Nineteenth Century." A lecture-room at the Royal Institution had been engaged, with seats for an audience of about 200, but some time before the lecture began it was evident that this room would by no means accommodate those who wished to attend, and an adjournment was made to the large hall, where it is estimated that the audience numbered from 400 to 500. The chair was to have been taken by Sir Edward R. Russell, but, unfortunately, the death of Lady Russell prevented him from being present, and his place was taken by Mr. Charles W. Jones. Among the audience were a number of ministers of various denominations, including the Rev. G. Harford Battersby, Rector of Mossley-hill, and joint-editor with Mr. Carpenter of the great work on the Hexateuch, of which we published a review last week. Mr. Carpenter's second lecture was delivered this week at the Royal Institution, but, unfortunately, the large hall could not be had for the following weeks, and the remainder of the course will be given at the Institute in Mount-street. We trust that audiences proportionately as good are attending the course at Leeds and Bolton.

THE February number of the Free Church Chronicle is a special mission number, containing an interesting series of thirty-four portraits of the chief men engaged in the great united mission of the Evangelical Free Churches, which has now been held in London, and is to be held in the country during the coming weeks. Dr. Clifford's experience of the mission in London, as told in the Christian World this week, is of special interest. It was with great reluctance that he consented to conduct a series of mid-day services at Bishopsgate Chapel, being unprepared to adopt the methods usually associated with the missioner's vocation, but he found that the attendance steadily increased, and consisted chiefly of men, and of these the majority were young men, engaged in work of various kinds in the city. "The atmosphere of the service," Dr. Clifford says, "was one of reverence and devotion. Better listeners I have never addressed. They were eager to hear and understand the actual facts of religion and life as they are set forth in the Gospel of the Son of God." And altogether, the chief good of the mission, he thinks, will be felt by the young.

At Westbourne Park more than a hundred young people, from fifteen to thirty, have declared their acceptance of discipleship to Christ Jesus. They have made their choice and avowed it. It will be in bringing to a definite decision the hesitating purpose and intermittent wishes of many days, and in some cases of many years, that the Mission will signalise itself in the experience of many. But I frankly confess the chief impression made on my mind is the gigantic character of the task facing us Christian men and women, and the pathetic inadequacy of our resources. The "outsider," as he is called, has not been reached to any appreciable extent. The men of education, the men who have no lack of money and strength and boldness of intellect, the men at the bar and the students of medicine, the journalists, the so-called "working classes," the great crowd of old men and of young men burdened with crime, the boys to whom crime has become a profession, the helplessly weak—how few of these and of many other classes have been won over to the side of God! They are averse or indifferent to all our organisations and efforts, and can only be reached by that individual and personal ministry to which every believer in Christ is distinctly called.

THE February number of Yr Ymofynydd, our Welsh magazine, opens with a memorial article on the Queen. The Rev. J. Davies writes on "Nearly Forty Years in the Ministry," telling how in 1864 he settled at Alltyplacca, with a salary of only £8, but would not be tempted away by an offer of £60 elsewhere! He also relates how in 1874 he worked as missionary for the B. and F.U.A., and was mobbed and in danger of his life at Llanelly. The Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas writes on the "Old and New," and Mr. E. Gwilym Evans, of Manchester College, on "Francis—the Saint of Assisi." The whole magazine this month is in Welsh, but in a short poem we see two familiar words Essex Hall—surely the first time the hall has been publicly enshrined in verse. The picturesque cover shows an improved arrangement of the title and contents.

THE East Cheshire Christian Union, of which the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson gave an interesting account in his "Provincial Letter," published on Jan. 26, has arranged a series of special Forward Movement services and lectures, to be held at Ashton, Glossop, Hyde, Knutsford, Stockport, Stalybridge, Congleton, and Macclesfield, on various dates, Sundays and weekdays, ranging from Feb. 17 to April 3. Ministers connected with the Union are themselves taking part, and of outsiders whose help has been secured there are the Revs. C. Hargrove, F. Walters, J. C. Street, J. E. Manning, E. W. Lummis, J. M. Lloyd Thomas, and W. Copeland Bowie.

IN an article on "Queen Victoria and the Middle Classes," prompted by a remark of Lord Salisbury's as to the wonderful insight the Queen always showed into the feelings of the middle classes of her people, the Spectator points out that "in character, and also, in a very real and deep sense in the framework of life, there was a special community between the Queen and the English middle classes. In them has come down the great inheritance of Puritan feeling—in them, and not at all in the same proportion among the aristocracy and the working classes." The Queen could not indeed be rightly called a Puritan. Before her great sorrow came she enjoyed theatre and opera, and never encouraged the Sabbatarian gloom, which used to be so habitual with many of her people.

But she had, in a conspicuous degree, the Puritan virtues—the love of purity itself, the loyalty to truth, the steadfast adherence to duty, and the conscious dependence on God. It was the recognition of these moral and spiritual qualities in her which first drew towards her the affection as well as the loyalty of the great body of the British middle classes, and it was doubtless her recognition of the worthiness of their moral and religious standards which established a sense of kinship on the Queen's part towards them. That sense was deepened on their part by the publication, by the Queen's authority, of books giving an insight into the simplicity of her country life, and the intensity of her family affections, and on hers by a knowledge of the pleasure and satisfaction with which those publications had been received among them. With all her perfection of personal dignity and augustness of bearing on all suitable occasions, there was without doubt an element of homeliness in the life of the Queen who has been taken from us that brought it nearer than the life of the English grand seigneur, or even of the lesser nobility, ordinarily comes to the atmosphere of the British middle classes.

WE quoted last week from the sermon in memory of the Queen preached by the Rev. R. A. Armstrong, in Hope-street Church, Liverpool. The sermon is now separately published, and may be had from the Liverpool Booksellers' Co., 70, Lord-street, Liverpool, and also at Essex Hall. Price 3d.; by post, 3½d. Here we will further quote the conclusion of the sermon:—

She is gone, and we are left with our King with the old historic English name, and the Queen-Consort, whom all of us whose memories date back to that time, loved from the moment her bright smile first glanced on the London streets; and with the great English people with all its splendid virtues and its grievous faults and its destinies for good and evil in its hands as it remembers God and truth and honour and duty or forgets them. It is a moment of exceeding great crisis. The two paths diverge. On the one hand, there is pure and generous aspiration after the higher national life, that the records of England may be sweet and clean, that we may hand down to our children an empire the home of justice, freedom, and righteousness between man and man. On the other hand, surging passions, lusts for gold, scoffings at holy things, mockings at God and at religion, open professions of a coarse and base materialism. From the Court which is the residence of Kings to the court which holds the cellar and the garret of the poorest, the great choice lies before us. Let every man and woman who believes in God and goodness, in faith, in high purpose, in religion, dedicate the soul afresh to the truest patriotism, the patriotism which prefers the good name of this sea-girt land to all the wealth that all the Continents can pile together!

AMONG the tributes to the Queen's memory, which we printed last week, was a passage from the sermon preached in Mill Hill Chapel, on Sunday evening, by the Rev. Charles Hargrove. His morning sermon "In Memory of Queen Victoria" is printed in full, as the February number of the Mill Hill Pulpit. (To be had at Essex Hall, or from Mr. C. Stainer, 82, Ravenswood-terrace, Hyde Park, Leeds. 1d., or by post 1½d.) Having paid a very high tribute to the Queen, the sermon concludes:—

She rests from her labours now, labours so faithfully performed through so long years of reign; she rests and her works follow her. Ours is the loss of her presence among us, loss of her unrivalled influence on behalf of peace among the nations, loss of the strong control which no minister dare set at nought, loss of the wise guidance and long experience which any wise statesman valued so much—hers the peace she wept for, the rest she so well earned, the eternal reward "Well done, good and faithful servant." Earth anticipates heaven's welcome, nor doubts she has passed from earthly sovereignty to the joy of Him who is the great and only Potentate, the King of Kings.

Another sits on her throne, another claims our allegiance. For her sake let us give the more heartily what in any case we should give to the descendant of our ancient kings, and the rightful heir to the crown. May he live long, and inherit of his Royal Mother, mother of us all, not the crown only and the right to rule, but the love and loyalty which she won of us by her virtues far more than by her birth!

Her we shall see again no more, nor receive her messages, nor be comforted by her sympathy. But the memory of her shall endure as long as the English race abides, and her story be told wherever the English tongue is spoken. Queen and Mother, thy people bid thee a sad farewell, proud even in their sorrow of such a sovereign; thanking God through their tears for life so long, for end so sweet, for hope so sure of life eternal.

I, TOO, rest in faith
That man's perfection is the crowning flower,
Towards which the urgent sap in life's great tree
Is pressing—seen in puny blossoms now,
But in the world's great morrows to expand
With broadest petal and with deepest glow.—George Eliot.

THE SALVATION ARMY AND THE LABOUR CHURCH.

MUCH as they differ, these two movements are alike in this, that they are late births of the nineteenth century. What suggestion does this fact carry—that religion is decrepit, that the higher energies of man are feeble in our time? Surely not, but quite the opposite. And yet, when strong men go from the beaten tracks in religion, and especially when they break right away from their religious homes and found new ones for themselves and others, there are always at first doubts and alarms and chidings. Most of us have, at least, half forgotten the amazement and abuse and persecution with which the Salvation Army was greeted twenty years ago. But it is well to remember that fact. Few people have yet sufficiently learned the necessity and value of experiment in religion. We admit it in science—nay, we insist upon it. In science we commend most the man who is readiest in resource, who is most original and energetic in devising means of solving difficult problems and meeting human needs. But in religion we are too apt to assume that the needs of all men are precisely alike, and that they must be met in the same way. Hence the shock at first caused by Salvation Army methods—the processions with trumpet and drum and strange wild singing, the curious "order of service" in their meetings, and so on. But soon it appeared that these almost weirdly novel expressions of religious feeling were manifestations of an energy wider in its sweep than had been supposed. The same originality and power which had been applied to the "salvation of souls" was brought by the Army into a crusade against poverty and social evils. And then came almost universal respect, very general sympathy and frequent imitation. It is a profoundly instructive story. Mr. and Mrs. Booth, though both came from Anglican stock, had been brought up among the Wesleyans. Both had been excluded from that body on account of their sympathies with a movement for denominational reform. After their marriage (1855) they joined the Methodist New Connexion. There they did not find the scope they needed, and after a few years of independent mission work, they organised their "Army."* It is as true in religion as it is in literature, that originality must find its own field, and it is useless to lament that the original man will not work on the old lines or amid the old associations. His answer is—and it is sufficient—"I cannot live my fullest life, I cannot do my best work for humanity, without breaking away and starting afresh."

The Labour Church.

But does this apologia hold as good for the Labour Church as for the Salvation Army? Probably many members of the Churches for whom THE INQUIRER speaks would answer, "No, there is no need for a Labour Church." The simple but irresistible rejoinder is—"One man strongly felt the need. He had a right to try whether others were feeling it. He has proved that there were some. It is good that the Labour Church should exist so long as any feel the need to be urgent." Some of us (I am one) may think that our Churches, the freest in the land, ought to meet every need supplied by the Labour Church, so far as such need is permanent and founded upon truth. But what we ought to do is one thing, what we are doing may be another thing. The fact that the Labour Church exists, ought to make every Church ask (the fact that it was founded by a man who went out from our midst ought to make us ask with special emphasis)—are our Churches answering all the proper ends of the Labour Church? And for those who think they are, there is a further question—what means are we using to convince men that we are, and that, in so far as they suppose we are not, they are mistaken as to their permanent needs, and have ideas which are not true?

Character of the Army.

Let us now glance at some leading characteristics of the movements under review.

One stroke of Salvation Army unconventionality has been more daring and more potent than any other—namely, the freedom and prominence given to women. In one of the earliest of the Army's rules it was said:—

> The Army refuses to make any difference between men and women as to rank, authority, and duties, but opens the highest positions to women as well as to men.

This is the Quaker principle, but in practice it has carried the Salvationists far beyond the Quakers, because their methods have been so unquakerly. They have been free and demonstrative in their expression of religious feeling, they have been intensely aggressive, they have worked largely in the open air. It is surely a striking fact, signifying much, that the prominence of women under these conditions have not led to the extravagancies and disasters which almost everyone would have prophesied. Mr. Stead remarks in his recent volume:—*

> The extent to which the Salvation Army has employed women in every department of its administration has been one of the great secrets of its strength. No religious body, with the exception of the Society of Friends, has ever accorded to both halves of the human race equal rights in the affairs of religion. The Army did this from the first, but it was not till 1875 that the absolute equality of the sexes in all the departments of the administration of the Army was solemnly and formally affirmed. It may only be a coincidence, but, if so, it is a curious one, that that year marks the beginning of what may be called the phenomenal expansion of the Salvation Army.

The Danger of Despotism.

Another feature of the Army, though less new in history, is perhaps more remarkable in modern England—namely, that it is an army, and recognises the principle of implicit obedience.

> "A telegram from me," wrote the General, "will send any of them to the uttermost parts of the earth. . . . . So far from resenting the exercise of authority, the Salvation Army rejoices to recognise it as one great secret of its success, a pillar of strength upon which all its soldiers can rely, a principle which stamps it as being different from all other religious organisations founded in our day."†

Unquestionably despotism has been a source of power to the Army. But the old questions have to be faced. Can despotism keep from corruption? Can it secure a continuance of the kind of power it was established to exercise? This was the point of Huxley's attack in the Times. In his fifth letter he drew an important distinction. He said:—

> For my part, though I conceive the corybantic method of soul-saving to be full of dangers, and though the theological speculations of these good people are to me wholly unacceptable, yet I believe that the evils which must follow in the track of such errors, as of all other errors, will be largely outweighed by the moral and social improvement of the people whom they convert. . . . All that I have hitherto said, and propose to say, is directed against Mr. Booth's extremely clever, audacious, and hitherto successful attempt to utilise the credit won by all this honest devotion and self-sacrifice for the purposes of his socialistic aristocracy.*

Huxley laid chief stress upon this latter point, and his strong voice of warning did good service. What he wrote will, indeed, have its highest use in the future, for the critical period is yet before the Army—the period when the original enthusiasm has diminished, and the governing forces have lost the unity which is at present given to them by the founder and his numerous family. But it would be unfair to judge the Army from Huxley's point of view alone. He had to answer the question whether he should approve a large money-gift to the Army, and, answering in the negative, his letters were purely controversial. The historian's point of view is different. He will do full justice to the Army's actual work, which Huxley only alludes to in passing. He will take the facts as a whole and recognise their connection. Is it too bold to prophesy that whatever corruption and disruption the Army may have suffered, his verdict will be that it did a work for our age which no other organisation did, or could do?

This at any rate is certain—it has excited more interest, exercised more influence and spread more widely than any other religious organisation of the nineteenth century.

Small Progress of the Labour Church.

By the side of the Salvation Army the Labour Church looks a very little thing. Certain causes of its smallness are obvious. First, Mr. Trevor, its founder, has been compelled by ill-health to withdraw from active public work for it. Secondly, the very idea and method of the Church are such that rapid and imposing results could not be expected. To be convinced of this it is sufficient to read the five Labour Church Tracts. Neither in style nor in substance are they what is frequently called, with a regrettable degree of truth, "popular," that is, mixed sensationalism and platitude. They are for the more thoughtful only, even amongst those to whom they might be supposed to be specially welcome. Who are these latter? The foundation of the Labour Church was an earnest attempt to grapple with a serious fact which other Churches have tried to grapple with, but with very imperfect success. Thousands and tens of thousands of working-men do not go to church. Mr. Trevor had them in view—and more particularly those who stayed

---

* First under the name of the "Christian Mission" in 1865, but not till 1878 under the name of "Salvation Army" with complete military system.

* "Mrs. Booth," by W. T. Stead, p. 82.

† "In Darkest England," p. 243.

* Huxley's "Collected Essays," Vol. IX., p. 262-263.

away deliberately and conscientiously, or even in the same spirit denounced the Churches. "What is it that separates these men?" he asked, as so many have asked. "Why do they feel indifference or animosity?" His answer was twofold. The Churches insist upon theological dogmas which are repugnant to reason, and they have no social gospel—at least none which meets the requirements of the age. What more natural than that serious working men should reject the usual forms of religion and seek a social gospel for themselves?

But religion, in Mr. Trevor's view, is permanent in all healthy human nature, and, like a plant, if nipped in one part, it will concentrate its blossoming power in another. And so the serious working man who does not go to church may be as religious as the strictest churchgoer—even more so. Only his religion may be disguised in his faith in a social gospel and in his work for it. Even he may not know it as religion, he may be repudiating the word all the time. And this means loss. For man's thought becomes larger, his life fuller and richer, as he consciously grasps the meaning and relation of his aspirations and hopes and deepest faith.

These I take to be the essential ideas which gave birth to the Labour Church. The aim was to make explicit the implicit religion of men who could not honestly make any profession except faith in "the Good," or in some ideal, and an earnest desire to improve the lot of the toiling multitude.

The Barrier of "Socialism."

It would appear that there are now Labour Churches in less than twenty towns. This result is so insignificant when compared with the aim and with what might have been expected, that it is worth while to pursue the inquiry—why? Is there yet another reason than those given above, why so little fruit has come from such a seed? I suspect there is. I cannot resist the impression that the Labour Church has too much limited itself as regards the form and name of its social gospel by identifying itself with "Socialism."

Take a very simple and practical test of this policy. Probably the best piece of social work which the Labour Church has done is its successful crusade against lead-poisoning in the potteries. But to such a movement the word "Socialism" in our days has no special application, and lends no force. "Justice," "Humanity"—either of these is more appropriate and more powerful as a rallying cry in such an agitation. Is not "Socialism," in fact, too ambiguous for the watchword of a church? It sometimes stands for a very definite political creed, sometimes for a broad and deep moral sentiment which all sound-hearted people share. The saying, "We are all Socialists now," was popular before the Labour Church was born, and behind the saying there is the fact that the strict individualistic theory is out of fashion, and that very few people would now be deterred by it from invoking the aid of the State to remedy any clear injustice or widespread evil. Meanwhile, however, Socialism as a definite and comprehensive political dogma goes on flourishing. And the consequent ambiguity has, I think, made the purpose and drift of the Labour Church somewhat uncertain and obscure: my impression is that it has made many outsiders suspicious, and many insiders vague and inconsistent.

Labour Church Tracts.

The Labour Church Tracts are remarkably free from explicit political dogma. The word "Socialist" and its allies are used often in them; but even in Mr. Trevor's "Unspoken Address to the Foreign Members of the International Socialist Congress, London, July, 1896," the idea of "Nationalisation" is conspicuous by its absence. "Emancipation" is spoken of in every variety of impassioned phrase; but there is even an express disclaimer of political action.

"As an organisation the Labour Church claims no right to political action. Its influence in politics is personal rather than collective. Its members act politically through their political organisations."*

This absence of distinct political creed gives the Labour Church Tracts a breadth which is admirable. It is in harmony with the second principle of the Church, "That the Religion of the Labour Movement is not a Class Religion, but unites members of all classes in working for the Abolition of Commercial Slavery." But is a "Socialism" of this kind calculated to attract those who attend no Church, but are interested in the Labour Movement? Some of them (many admirers of Mr. Bradlaugh, for example) are as averse from all Socialism as they are from all Theism; and those who do call themselves Socialists have usually a very definite political creed. What should we expect then? That the vague Theistic Socialism of the Tracts would appeal to a section only of the "Labour men," and that even they would read into Mr. Trevor's words more than was actually there, and would tend to make the Socialism of their Church more definite.

This is what has happened. Though it is said that "the Religion of the Labour Movement is not a Class Religion," there are certainly many members of the Labour Church who regard one class, "Capitalists," as beyond its pale, and as incapable of being united "in working for the Abolition of Commercial Slavery." That was, in fact, the tenour of a Labour Church address I heard, and I regarded it as only a natural result of starting with "Socialism," however vaguely.†

I believe that inconsistency on this point has been a source of weakness to the Labour Church. It has attempted to be a Free Church and a Socialist Church at the same time; and the double aim has diminished the success which, in spite of adverse circumstances, it might have had as a really uncommitted Labour Church—a Church aiming simply and solely to express and develop the best thought and aspiration which is animating the Labour movement. Such an experiment, tried thoroughly, consistently and under favourable conditions would, indeed, be of the highest value.

Conclusion.

The Salvation Army has reached and raised multitudes of the poor. But its Theological creed repels the more intelligent, and its military system is dangerous. The Labour Church has made a gallant effort to fill a place which even the Salvation Army leaves vacant. It has wisely adopted other methods for its purpose; but I venture to suggest that the one avoidable mistake of its founder was, that he introduced a shibboleth just in that sphere in which the Salvation Army had none but only worked.

HENRY RAWLINGS.

* P. 55. The principal title of the Tract is "The Labour Church in England."

† It should be remarked that the journal of the Labour Church, The Labour Prophet (now discontinued), distinctly advocated a comprehensive State Socialism. Further, in an editorial note I observed the following:—"The Labour Church stands for an Independent Labour Party"—an explicit repudiation of the non-political attitude.

LITERATURE.

MORALITY AS RELIGION.*

THIS book may be taken as a manifesto of the Ethical Religion Society, which meets at Steinway Hall, Portman-square. The author often uses the word "we," not in the ordinary journalistic sense, but rather as speaking the thought of a community or church. The utterance is not merely individual, it is representative. For this reason the lectures, seventeen in number, have an interest apart from the merits or demerits of the author's style. One learns something of the new thought and the new movement which intend to pass beyond the thought and work of Christianity, to supplement and perfect Christianity as it supplemented and reconstructed the Religion of Moses. If the reader find that he cannot always understand the new thought, or feel very sure in what direction the new movement is to go, he will doubtless remember that not only the cavilling, heckling Sadducees, but the most earnest men of the Pharisaic school failed at first to understand the teaching of Jesus, which nevertheless contained elements of enduring worth.

One who is seeking to learn or to teach a new doctrine necessarily explains it very largely by its antagonisms. The Ethical Religion finds its antagonisms on the one side in the Christianity which refers us to an external Revelation imposing dogmas to be believed, and conditions to be performed; and on the other side in the claim sometimes made for science—practically for physical science—that it can evolve and develop and guard a sufficient morality.

A morality that does not grow out of scientific experiment, a Religion that does not depend upon an inspired Book, natural morality, idealised, sanctified, perfected as Religion—such seem to be the ideals of the Ethical Church. They are set forth in lectures always interesting and readable, sometimes eloquent and powerful; but again sometimes a little baffling and disappointing. Fine figures of speech, as if the writer had read his Martineau not in vain, and a constant reference to Immanuel Kant and to Emerson, promise the reader a noble conclusion; but anon he seems to find himself in the midst of a tangle, and no great authority comes near to deliver him.

Foolish priests once thought that by the dogma of the invention of hell they could terrorise men into morality, and so they preached their Divinity, the magnified copy of a fiend, who would have cheerfully created humanity out of nothing and damned them everlastingly, had not he himself, in the shape of his son, who is one in being with him, decided to appear upon earth and atone to himself for the mischief, which presumably he could have very well foreseen, perpetrated by man.

* "Morality as a Religion." By W. R. Washington Sullivan. Swan Sonnenschein. 1898. 6s.

It is not here suggested that the shapeless sentence just quoted is a fair specimen of the author's style. It is an extreme example of a few statements that might have been differently expressed. Can we not buy a copy of the Assembly's Catechism for a penny, and there find the atonement doctrine expressed in terms much more dignified and therefore more dreadful than these?

The sentence quoted above is from the chapter on the "Doctrine of Compensation." Whosoever reads the chapter will find out that there is no lack of dogma in the Ethical Church. Following pretty closely Emerson's Essay on "Compensation," and perchance not without some recollection of some well-known pages of Dr. Martineau, the writer formulates as rigid a dogma as ever was read in the pages of John Calvin or Ernst Haeckel.

Hence there can be no such thing as "forgiveness of sin." An act once done is irreparable. The consequences must endure to all time. Our most agonising repentance cannot undo the past, it can only avail to safeguard the future. We cannot escape the law of compensation. There is no magnified man in the skies, swayed by human passions, ready, at the call and entreaty of prayer, to obstruct the operation of natural laws.

Again:—

Will it never dawn upon our priests and ministers, our masters and mistresses in schools, that God bears none of the burden of humanity; His heart never breaks because a life is withering in despair? He takes no hurt by the weltering sorrows by which so many are overwhelmed. It is man, it is woman, who bears the agony; the crushing burden of wrong-doing falls on them.

That is clear enough, earnest enough, dogmatic enough for anybody. The author believes that the enunciation of it will hold men back from sin as the fear of hell never did. Question: Will the enunciation of this doctrine by Emerson and the Ethical Churches do what the fact itself has never done? For if the doctrine be true it has been true in all the ages, and man from the first has lived in an unforgiving world beneath the gaze of an unhurt and therefore unforgiving God, not only since the time of Plato and Sophocles, but since the days of David, and from long before the days when Joseph forgave his brethren, or the time when Esau said to Jacob, who had once robbed him, "I have enough, my brother, keep that thou hast." But those misguided patriarchs like the Hebrew singers who followed after worshipped a "magnified man in the skies," the very Being whose name was afterwards to be translated as Our Father.

They may have been wrong. And all the Psalmists and prophets who have testified of One afflicted with our affliction; of One hurt with the wrongs of men; "rising up early," as the bold Hebrew prophets expressed it, to call men to Himself, promising to receive them graciously and love them freely: all these may have been wrong in finding God in the human heart and the human affections. Those may be right who declare that the justice of God is typified in the ceaseless vibrations going on endlessly when the air has once been disturbed; by the phenomena that speak of the persistence of force, and that suggest the law of compensation and moral gravitation. But then, not knowing modern scientific generalisations, Joseph, without essaying to be juster than God, could forgive his brothers and speak kindly to them, just as St. Paul could sanction the forgiveness of a sinner in the Church of Corinth, though he had in a previous letter ordered him to be flung out of the church and delivered to Satan. Full surely modern scientific discoveries and modern scientific generalisations ought to furnish us with illustrations of the spiritual world. They have their place in the Revelation of God as well as the lost sheep restored, and the returning prodigal, forgiven and protected, which furnished Christ with parables. But when, in the name of the higher ethics, I am presented with a religion which does not know the very need of mercy, and denies the possibility of forgiveness; which would make every idle word that a man has spoken rise up to curse him from an everlasting phonograph that can neither be crushed nor silenced; that gives a sinful man no outlook but that of an eternally pitiless law: I reject it in the name of human history; in the name of family love; in the name of the Father of whose nature more can be learned from the history of one soul that knows what it is to forgive and be forgiven, than from all the chemical or mechanical laws of matter, or from any specimen of a growing weed which, not having been duly checked or destroyed, happened in a single case to bring forth a perfect harvest of nuisance.

This subject has taken up time and space that might have been devoted to other parts of the book. With much that is there, as in the chapter on War, I am in entire agreement. The South African War has illustrated the writer's views; it has also dispersed some of his hopes. The expression "Doubtless we are in advance of other nations" reads ironically now; but the chapter is yet worth reading. By the way, it is curious to refer to Erasmus and Wickliffe as "despised heretics." It is questionable whether either of them was formally heretical, and neither of them could be considered despicable even in his own day.

That is a small matter. These lectures will be of use to those who are Christians and those who are not. They will help the reader to consider the question whether morality is his religion, and, if so, what morality; whether Jesus is still trusty in that which is of the very essence of his teaching, or whether knowledge of modern science and observations of Nature's sequences have rendered the doctrine of the Father for ever incredible. These are not small questions, and they are certainly timely.

J. RUDDLE.

SHORT NOTICES.

The Science of Civilisation, by C. B. Phipson, author of "The Redemption of Labour." This is a substantial volume, dealing for the most part with questions of currency too technical to be discussed here. It also aims at overthrowing—"(1) the Malthusian theory of population, which represents the earth as incapable of yielding food for all the children that can be born upon her; (2) the Roman theory of Justice, which asserts that it is the duty of the State to enforce the payment of private debts; (3) the philosophic theory of Man, which asserts that Reason supplies him with an efficient and his only dependable guide for conduct." This, it will be admitted, is a somewhat large order, and the contemplation of it is likely to deter readers. But the book is characterised by a generous spirit and an earnest search for truth, and can hardly fail to be suggestive to those who are able to give it thorough study. (Swan Sonnenschein. 1900. 10s. 6d.)

Government or Human Evolution, by Edmund Kelly, M.A., F.G.S. In the Preface to this book, Mr. Kelly speaks of it as dealing with the theoretical part of his subject, under the head of "Justice," and promises a second volume dealing with the practical part, under the heads of "Individualism" and "Collectivism." He gives an interesting account of the formation in New York of the Good Government Clubs by which Tammany Hall was overthrown in 1894, and of the way in which these clubs, having little in common save the enemy they had overthrown, speedily lost their influence in consequence of their differences in opinion as to what good government really required. A thorough study of the subject, therefore, seemed indispensable, and the present volume is a careful and thoughtful contribution to such study. Mr. Kelly reaches the conclusion that Justice may be "described as the effort to eliminate from our social condition the effects of the inequalities of Nature upon the happiness and advancement of man, and particularly to create an artificial environment which shall serve the individual as well as the race, and tend to perpetuate noble types rather than those that are base." This is giving Justice a good deal more to do than has usually been included under the word, but it undoubtedly expresses the aspirations of multitudes who are convinced that they are seeking only Justice, and we shall look forward with interest to Mr. Kelly's second volume dealing with practical problems. (Longmans, London and New York. 1900. 7s. 6d.)

Commerce and Christianity, by the author of "Life in our Villages," "The Social Horizon," and "Evil and Evolution," pleads for the application of religious principles to commercial affairs, and endeavours to show that the only way to do this practically is to adopt the principles of Collectivism or State Socialism. The author points out the tendency to a general breakdown in competition and the establishment of monopoly, and that unless these monopolies are to be intolerable tyrannies, they must be managed by the State. Then comes the opportunity for the State to determine the conditions under which its employés shall work, and the terms of their remuneration, and with this comes the chance for the practical application of Christianity to industry. He thinks the Socialists have the Christian ideal, but in a merely material form, and he quotes a saying of Dr. Tate, when he was Bishop of London, "What is wanted is a deeply religious Liberal party. The great evil is that the Liberals are deficient in religion, and the religious are deficient in Liberalism." Some good practical applications are made in connection with London bakeries; and, altogether, this brightly-written, earnest-minded book should be most useful in helping to form public opinion on the most important subjects with which it deals. (Swan Sonnenschein. 1900. 3s. 6d.)

H. SHAEN SOLLY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE "SUNDAY SCHOOL HELPER."

SIR,—I desire to be allowed through your columns to make an earnest appeal to all those interested in our Sunday-schools to support the efforts of the Sunday School Association to provide assistance to the great body of our teachers in that most admirable publication, the Sunday School Helper.

It is published annually at considerable cost, and the Committee are grateful to the Editor and the contributors for the ability and kindness with which they have done so much to render the publication one of the highest value.

But the circulation is most disappointing, and the Committee have gravely to consider whether they are justified in so large an outlay unless those whom it is intended to benefit make larger use of the Helper.

The current number is, in advance of anything previously published, beautifully illustrated. It is hoped that the teachers will be induced to purchase copies and avail themselves of the help it can give them in the fulfilment of their important duties. The cost is 25s. a dozen.

If, however, school committees, as has been done in some cases, would purchase copies for presentation to teachers, or for sale to them at a reduced price, it would be the sure way to give the Helper a new lease of life, and lead to its use on a much larger scale than at present, and so justify the continuance of the publication.

H. ENFIELD DOWSON,
President of the Sunday School Association.

Gee Cross, Hyde, Feb. 5.

THE UNRIGHTEOUS STEWARD.

SIR,—I am sorry to learn from a letter in THE INQUIRER, of Jan. 26, that the Rev. F. T. Reed has formed an unfavourable judgment of, at least, one chapter of my little book, "Half-Hours with the Parables," recently published by the Sunday School Association.

Mr. Reed's logic, however, is not easy to follow. He implies that I have been guilty of a "suppression of the truth" because I do not place on record an opinion which, as he admits, it is evident I do not hold. Is one bound, then, under penalty of incurring a charge of suppressing the truth, in writing a short lesson for children, to indicate every view that was ever expressed adverse to the writer's own? The contention does not seem a very reasonable one, nor one to which it would often be practicable to give effect. In the case of the parable of the Unrighteous Steward scores or hundreds of different interpretations have been put forth; but, in a single Sunday-school lesson, is it either feasible or desirable to recapitulate them all? If one makes no such attempt, is he fairly chargeable with a suppression of the truth?

Mr. Reed thinks that, in dealing with this parable, mention ought to have been made of the fact "that scholars, refusing to accept it as a genuine utterance, assign it to a late period," and blames me for assuming that it was spoken by Jesus. If scholars were unanimous in ascribing it to an Ebionite source, it would not, of course, be right to include it in a book treating of the parables of Jesus, but I have yet to learn that any such unanimity exists. In the meantime, having formed a very different estimate of the moral quality of the parable from that so vigorously expressed by Mr. Reed, I venture to think that it can be attributed to the speaker of the Sermon on the Mount without supposing any mental or moral deterioration in him. Readers of the book must be left to judge between the exposition therein given and the view of the parable propounded by your correspondent.

J. CROWTHER HIRST.

QUEEN VICTORIA.*

BY THE REV. L. DE BEAUMONT KLEIN.

THE English people know, beyond all power of expression, that they have lost a mother, a friend in the person of their beloved Queen; they know that a great glory has departed from their midst; that an element of national dignity, of national purity, of national stability has ceased to be; they know that a strong link between the many members of this world-wide Empire is no more; they feel that they are the poorer for the loss of all the unselfishness, the devotion, the faithfulness to duty, the pure example which shone so brightly in the character of their great Queen. The heart of the nation had become her throne; on it she rested immovably secure. None of the fictions by which it is too often necessary to support hereditary claims and to recommend them to the people were necessary in her case, for she was their Queen in her own right, as it were, by virtue of the love she gave and the love she received, and by an assured mutual trust. Thus Queen Victoria had the supreme merit of realising in her own person, more perfectly than any other British ruler of Royal birth, the ideal of a constitutional sovereign, and she endeared herself so deeply to a people at once conservative in its instincts and progressive in its aspirations because she helped materially, in the course of her long and brilliant reign, in reconciling finally the spirit of a commonwealth with the forms and traditions of a monarchy. What in the past had been more or less the result of conflict became under her rule the normal state. Reforms in every direction within the ancient fabric of the Constitution became possible, and were accomplished, or at least inaugurated. A spirit of freedom and justice has been infused into political, social and religious questions during the Victorian age beyond anything that previous ages had seen, and this was done not by the unwilling and ungracious yielding of the Crown, but with its sincere, open co-operation. With the Queen there was no selfish attempt to resist any wishes of the nation which were founded on justice, no unwise effort to delay the inevitable in the gradual evolution of those principles of political and religious liberty upon which the life of this country has been established by the courage and wisdom of her best children. In a word, the supreme merit of Queen Victoria as a ruler has been this: she realised that a modern throne cannot be made secure merely upon ancient claims or present force; that a people who have reached the full consciousness of their strength and of their rights must look upon a throne so established as an intolerable obstacle to progress. But she understood also what a blessing that throne may be which is made to rest upon trust, sympathy, and love; what an element of peace, stability and orderly progress such a throne may be in the midst of a free people. She laboured during sixty-three years to fulfil that ideal and she has not laboured in vain. Our feelings to-day bear witness to that fact.

Queen Victoria's throne, established as it was in the hearts of her people, has become not only the symbol of a glorious past, but the promise of a still more glorious future. Her reign has unsealed to us the vision of a beneficent Empire whose strength is the love of all within it as well as the ordered freedom of all and the willing co-operation of all towards the ideals of prosperity, righteousness and peace: an Empire conferring upon the world the benefit of the long struggles for political freedom and social equity which have brought into existence the blessings which such an Empire has to give; in fact, an Empire whose relation to its world-wide dependencies shall be after the pattern of the relation which existed between Victoria and the English people, a relation of love and goodwill and mutual trust. We may seem to be yet very far from the realisation of such a vision; before it can be realised the people who have the power must learn from the gentle sovereign, who had the needed moderation and love, the value and use of those qualities. But Queen Victoria has set an ideal before us which, I believe, will bear its natural fruits in the future. She remains the type of the modern ruler, as well as the type of the perfect soul, untouched by false aims, unaffected by the dangers of greatness. To politicians she has shown the true way, to citizens she has shown the best example of citizenship, to women she has shown how to reconcile their legitimate aspirations with the simplicity, the modesty, and the purity which are the most beautiful adornments of their sex. And now, at this very time, they are bringing her remains to their resting-place, close to the remains of him who was so dear to her, of him from whom she received many of the inspirations which her noble character has translated into facts for the benefit of the State. Already she has entered that immortality which those whose lives have been an honour and a service to humanity possess, with assurance in the hearts of succeeding generations, strengthened and comforted in their sorrow by the lessons of that beautiful life. "Her children rise up and call her blessed."

* From an Address delivered in Ullet-road Church, Liverpool, at a memorial service on Saturday, Feb. 2.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c. received from the following:—J. E.; C. M. G.; E. C. J.; G. L.; F. H. M.; M. M.; W. E. M.; R. R.; F. W.; J. W.; J. H. W,

OBITUARY.

THE REV. JAMES BLACK, M.A.

It will come as a surprise and a sorrow to many of our readers to learn that the Rev. James Black, M.A., died in London after a very brief illness on Jan. 31. Mr. Black, who was born in 1834, was a graduate of Glasgow University; and, after ordination, in 1860, served for some time as the minister of the Church of Scotland in Canada. Having become a Unitarian, he ministered at Stockport (1867-1882), Todmorden (1882-1886) and Knutsford (1886-1889). For some years he was Missionary Tutor in the Unitarian Home Missionary College in Manchester, and one of the editors of the Unitarian Herald. In 1889 he went to the United States and engaged in teaching there. About a year ago he came to England on a visit, and, after returning to America for a brief period, came back to the old country a few months ago. He caught a chill while witnessing the proclamation of the King at St. James's Palace. Pneumonia set in, and he died at Highbury on Thursday, Jan. 31, aged sixty-six. The funeral took place at Abney Park Cemetery on Tuesday, Feb. 5, when the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie conducted the service. The Rev. W. G. Cadman, an old friend and fellow-minister, was present. In the course of a short address of appreciation and sympathy, Mr. Bowie said:—"For many years Mr. Black lived an active and varied life of thought and toil. He passed through many different stages of thought, and he had experiences and trials which at times taxed his endurance. A genial friend, a patient teacher, a keen observer of men and things, he was bright, happy, and hopeful until the end. Shortly before his death, when last I saw him, he was full of plans and schemes, and only lacked opportunity for their exercise and fulfilment."

The change of editor at the Daily News office which is one of the most noticeables, and perhaps most important, of recent events in the world of journalism, has been accompanied by the retirement of Sir John Robinson, who has completed more than half-a-century of distinguished service. Sir John has himself recorded (The Inquirer, July 9, 1892) that his first experience in journalism was gained in connection with this newspaper, which in 1847, the date of his coming as a lad in his 'teens to London, was the property of the late Mr. Richard Kinder. Since this modest but not wholly inauspicious beginning Sir John has gone far, and the knighthood conferred on him by Queen Victoria was hailed by all as an honour well-won. A man of keen intelligence and warm sympathies, he has mingled with a remarkable circle of writers and publicists, and we would venture to hope, while respectfully congratulating him on his release from his arduous office while still hale and active, that he may find it a pleasant occupation of his leisure to produce some record of his past experiences, which could not fail to be of the utmost interest and value.

The good actions which we perform in this world take form and meet us in the world to come.—Rabbi Samuel.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

My Picture.

At home I have a little picture, not much bigger than one of your copy-books. It is not particularly fine on account of its colour; it has blue, white, yellow, light red, and brown—not half the colours you have in a paint-box. Nor is it treasured because it is a likeness of a loved place. It is like a patchwork cushion, made up of all sorts of different scenes, composed together into a complete picture. You could hold a looking-glass up to a landscape and get a copy of it, but you could not get a picture like mine, except by bringing "mind" into play, and by picking out the best here, and the best there, and making them blend together, till, though you had not an exact copy of any one hedge corner, or lake, or wood, or view, you would be in possession of a perfect picture of the poetry of the wonderful earth we live in. A painter who used to make very brilliant sketches was once asked by a purchaser what it was that he mixed his paints with, that made him able to produce more glorious tints than others. The painter replied, "I mix them with my brains, Sir." And in the same way the artist, who nearly a hundred years ago painted this little diamond of a picture, looked at life with his mind's eye as well as with his bodily eye, and so produced a work of art that is of greatness because it is full of beautiful and true imagination, full of mind.

It is a wonderful picture. I often lie on the sofa and look at it, and the longer and oftener you look at it, so much the more you see in it. There is a bridge over a river, a quaint but strong bridge of fine proportions, and with ivy thickly over one buttress of it. The blue river, reflecting the almost cloudless summer sky overhead, when it has come some little distance from under the fine arch, makes a little waterfall over some stepping-stone rocks across it; on the other side of the arch you see that it goes back a long, long way till it winds away and is lost to sight where some cliffs stand out; over the cliff tops show the faint outline of mountains, so that, though the river soon escapes from the eye, you follow it in fancy along all its lovely course through green valleys and rocky glens till it shrinks to only a little stream bubbling over stones and pebbles, and so shallow that the cattle can stand in it and not wet much more than their hoofs. At one side of the picture, on the top of a great wooded steep, is a castle; at the other, on a smooth level of meadow turf, several big, proud trees, and the suggestion of snug thatched cottages hidden away under their protection. In the distance on the water glimmers the white sail of a boat, and close at hand in the home-meadow a fisherman is fishing from the bank. Across the blueness of the sky, there is a kind of rainbow of cloud, of perfectly pure, clean cloud, with the sun's tints on it like the petals of a white hyacinth.

As I lie on the sofa sometimes, I seem to hear a wind stir the leaves of the great elms, and ruffle the waters of the stream, and puff out the sails of the far-away boat. Rooks fly out of the high boughs, and the clouds begin to slowly, slowly move across the sky, and make the colours of the distant mountain crests change. A traveller now and again passes over the bridge, sometimes many together; sometimes a party of rich people belonging to the castle, riding on horseback and with much state, and gaily-clad servants; sometimes an old cottage woman with a load of marketing slung over her shoulders, and knitting away as she walks along thinking of the children in the cottage, for whom she has been to the distant village, and for whom she is plying the long needles. The fall of the waters gushes and splashes; the fisherman swings his rod up with a jerk, and finds he has got himself his supper. The whole picture lives, and the things in it that you see, make you think of the country all round about it, and of the world and life itself. So it is a good picture, because it gives you pleasure, and makes you think happily, and always has a charm that no familiarity can destroy.

Now—and here comes the reason why I have so described the picture to you—each one of us has to make our life a picture for God and man to see. You can make it a bad one, a smudgy copy of worthless things; or you can copy the best you see—this good quality there, this noble idea from here—until, when you are old, and your picture is nearing completion, it will be seen that it is a true picture, a picture that has been drawn and painted by using the soul's eye as well as the body's.

And here, just to finish, is a short set of notes on the picture you may like to have: let us give it an interpretation. The bridge, with its true balance and scientific strength, let us call the bridge of thought and accuracy that lifts man over floods he could not otherwise pass. Let us call the little waterfall the waterfall of mirth and good-humour—and it's a very poor picture that leaves that out, small though it be. Then the mountains are will and resolution; and the meadows kindness and shelter. The strong castle—the tower "four-square 'gainst ev'ry wind that blows"—is a sign of true ambition: in disorderly times law and protection came from it, and in peaceful, it receives all who will to rejoice in happiness and plenty. The white sails of the boat mean enterprise and adventure; and the design and composition of the picture bind all these things into a oneness under the great clear sky of reverence to God the Creator.

Now, you can all set to work and be painters.

Ernest B. Betham.

When a man believes in some common good, some ideal of justice, for which the tears and blood of generations, and his own blood and tears, are willingly poured out, then you may scourge or excommunicate or exile him, but you can never take from him the peace of God.—May Kendall.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
In Tins
And Packets.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Tins 1lb.
And 3lbs.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Packets 1lb.
And ½lb.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Sold by Grocers.
Export Oilmen.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 9, 1901.

THE NEW REIGN.

WE have bidden a last farewell to what was mortal of our QUEEN. On Friday and Saturday of last week the solemn pageant by sea and land proceeded, watched with intense sympathy by many thousands of people, nobly expressive of a great common sorrow and of the highest honour worthily paid to a revered and beloved Sovereign. Then on Monday followed the last more private act at Windsor, the final entombment in the Royal Mausoleum in Frogmore Park, hitherto enshrining the one memory of ALBERT, and now the memory of ALBERT and VICTORIA.

All that was done on those successive days has been vividly described in the Daily papers, so that not only those who were privileged to be present, but the whole people in this country and beyond the seas, and sympathetic friends in many lands, have been able to share with deep emotion in those solemn and impressive scenes.

Amid all that has been thus vividly impressed upon the memory, and upon the heart of those who loved the QUEEN, there was one touch of nature recorded by a correspondent of the Daily News, which was no part of the public observances, and which, perhaps, ought not to have been recorded; yet we cannot but be grateful for the knowledge of it, for it brings the KING nearer to us than any other thing that has been told of what happened throughout those days.

After the passage of the Solent on Friday week the Royal yacht with its silent burden was moored for the night, while faithful attendants watched from hour to hour. The other vessels, which had followed, bearing the KING, the GERMAN EMPEROR, and the other Royal mourners, were also moored not far away. Then in the silence and alone came the KING, in the midst of that solemn vigil under the stars, after the great pageant of the day, to stand once more by his mother's coffin, sobbing out his grief in secret. We will not break into that sacred privacy with any further words; but this man is now our KING, with earnest sincerity he has expressed his purpose to follow in his mother's footsteps, and we are thankful for whatever proves to us that he is of one heart with her. With that image of the night vigil before us, the son in silent, tender commune with the mother, we say with a new depth of feeling: GOD bless the KING! GOD save the KING!

He and his people have now to face the new time. In the KING's heart we may be assured that his mother's wisdom and grace will abide, that with wide experience and the utmost skill and tact, with noble seriousness of purpose and great diligence in the manifold business of his exalted station, he will set himself to fulfil the duties of the Throne; and for all citizens of this nation and in every dominion of the Empire, which circles the earth, if this time of mourning is not to be fruitless, it must leave a deeper sense of responsibility, a new loyalty to the highest aims of citizenship, and a fearless determination to bear steadfastly, and not in self-interest merely, the burden of a mighty trust.

The QUEEN loved peace and gloried in the peaceful development of her Empire, in the growing powers of self-government, which bound the great colonies with a new loyalty to the mother country, and immeasurably strengthened the forces making for good in the world. Now, kindled by a new devotion to her memory and to her ideal of a righteous and beneficent sway, it must be the aim of every true citizen to withstand the insidious temptations of greed and overbearing power, to see to it that the British flag, as has been its proud boast in the past, shall fly only for liberty and honour, and that the stupendous forces of the Empire shall not be degraded to any base use, but shall be knit together for noble service, for the defence of the weak, and for the furtherance in every quarter of the globe of the highest interests of humanity.

The QUEEN loved the humblest of her people, and had an overflowing pity for all sufferers; she delighted in the progress of knowledge and the spread of all beautiful, compassionate, and uplifting influences, especially among those who had the heaviest burdens to bear. Thus again, she sets the right standard for our strenuous endeavours, if we would be faithful citizens. As we desire to maintain the greatness of our country and its power for good in the world, we must look at home, and face the terrible and destructive evils which are sapping the manhood of our people. The KING has already done splendid work in furtherance of beneficent charities and in the attempt to grapple with the question of the housing of the poor. We may be confident that his sympathy and active countenance will go with all such endeavours, which are among the most urgent needs of our time; and so too with education, which must make immediate and pressing demands, not only to maintain the commercial prosperity of the country, but to assure the physical, no less than the mental and moral well-being of the whole people. The worship of wealth must be resisted, the craving for excitement, the dreadful canker of insidious vice; against all these a mighty and redeeming force arises when the higher gifts of life are widely shared, and such purity and noble simplicity of tastes and aims as made the QUEEN's life so beautiful. To this end the true ideal of education for the whole people, in every rank of life, is to be maintained; and it is perfected when the reverence and natural piety of heartfelt religion dominate the whole, and bring the spirit of CHRIST to purify and replenish all the springs of life.

The reign of a pure and noble woman has bestowed incalculable blessings on our people. GOD grant that the new reign may be marked by a renewed consecration of the manhood of this country to the noblest ideals, with the same standard of purity and honour for men as for women, that the glory of our people's strength may be not only maintained and rescued from shameful and imminent destruction, but may rise to a height as yet unknown, and thus build in the hearts and homes of this country and of our people beyond the seas the noblest possible memorial to the blessed memory of the woman, wife, and mother who was so long our QUEEN!

THE QUEEN.

I.

THE shades have fall'n, O God, upon our land.
Wars have not left so bare and desolate
The heart of England, but a loss more great
Than that of those who died at her command
Can give a deeper pang. All blind we grope
Upon the summit of remember'd years,
Gazing into the future, dumb with tears,
And worn with sorrow. Have we dared to hope
That death would cease to crave the sacrifice
Of what we most did cherish, when the glow
Of the oncoming century was seen?
For that half-uttered faith a costly price
The hour demands—ah, costlier than we know!—
And now her Empire mourns its silent Queen.

II.

Give place to sorrow, wrapp'd in mourning weeds
One short, sad hour: then raise thy dust-crowned head,
Look once again upon the royal dead,
O England; then recall the urgent needs
Of thy discouraged state, and in her name
Who sought to knit the Empire in one bond
Of mutual trust, too ardent to despond,
Resume the struggle for enduring fame.
Because her life has fed the springs of thine,
And sent it forth replenished, vigorous, pure,
To animate fresh worlds; yea, most, because
She loved her people, and could well divine
Their great necessities, not less endure
All griefs for them—be zealous for our cause!

III.

Dare we, remembering with what tireless zest
Her brain, her hands, her strong heart work'd for us,
Relapse from deeds that raise the glorious
Ideals of old-time, and yearn for rest
While every hour new claims, new terror brings,
And tidings of disaster come to shake
Sad hearts, too vers'd in misery to break,
With one more apprehension? Noble things
Must yet be done to keep our children free,
Our Empire firm, our honour unimpair'd;
Oh, then, shall we, reaping where one has sown
Who now lies mute for ever, idly see
How ills are done, that yet might be repair'd,
Could men but feel the wrong is all their own?

IV.

Dear land she wept and smil'd for! Tears must flow
A little—yet the sun looks forth again
Already through the clouds; for not in vain
The good perform their actions, but the glow
Of their indomitable faith illumes
Each cranny of our dull, disorder'd days,
Till holier impulses beneath those rays
Of light supreme are born, and truth resumes
Her temple in the soul. O royal one,
Strong in the simple habits thou hast taught,
Enrich'd for ever by that selfless love
Which drew thy subjects' hearts, the past is gone;
But that which glorified it fills our thought,
And shall re-knit the souls we long to prove.

LAURA G. ACKROYD.

WHEN we burn our boats the victory is half won. This is emphatically true in spiritual life, and what is the matter with a great many of us is simply that we refuse to burn our boats. We are never sure that the realm of the higher life will reward our exploration, and we always want to see our way back again quite clearly before we start.—May Kendall.

CHOOSE LIFE.

"I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before thee life and death, the blessing and the curse: therefore choose life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy seed: to love the Lord thy God, and to obey his voice, and to cleave unto him: for that is thy life, and the length of thy days."

I.

1. THE beginning of this new age must be to Unitarianism either the beginning of a holier and stronger life, or the beginning of death. If we go on as we are going, and seek neither to amend our direction nor our pace, it is the beginning of death. Unless we thrive as a community more, much more, than we have thriven in the nineteenth century, our churches in the third millennium will be living, not on their faith, but on their endowments; and unless we love more, pray more, think more, spend more, work more than has been our habit, we shall not thrive.

2. "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward" has been the text of many sermons of late; and those listeners who were not born to this freedom have remembered the Egyptian bondage from which God led them forth. Have they not felt bitterly, as I felt at Leeds, when a stern voice told me rather to die in the wilderness than return to the fleshpots of servitude, that something better than the fleshpots had been left behind? This is the place, surely, here between Elim and Sinai, where the manna ought to be falling, and all our host should gather a certain rate every day. Why is it withheld, when we hear of such plentiful showers in the Land of Goshen? Why has Aaron's rod ceased to bud, while the wands of Pharaoh's magicians are burgeoning so proudly?

3. Is it a law of nature that as a man begins to think more clearly, and to believe less blindly, he shall worship with less joy and faith? Is religion illogical? Be not deceived: God is not mocked; nor does He deal in mockery with His children. The manna falls, but we do not go out to gather a certain rate every day. Religion is not merely God's gift to man: it is God's gift through man. We fail of the joy because we do not earn it. Our miserable plight is evidence, not of our misfortune, but of our fault. It is not to be remedied by whining, but by work.

4. So far we all agree. Or, perhaps not? Some reader, perhaps, thinks that we have done as much as the rest, and wonders, wistfully, why we are not equally blessed. It may be that we have—though I doubt it—but we ought to have laboured more abundantly than they all. Unto whom much is given, of him shall much be required. So far, then, we are taken to agree: we must work. But what must we do, and how must we do it? Unfortunately we have no Moses, and our tent of meeting is only pitched once in three years. As being the especial exponents of man's brotherhood, we are the least brotherly of all the sects. An Egyptian is an Egyptian, and looks to Pharaoh. Moab has a synod, dear to all Moabites. What are we, and what have we? We are any number of things; we have a meeting-tent of Ephraimites, Manassites, Zebulonites, Benjamites, and other non-Canaanite and kindred tribes. Therein we have great searchings of heart for the divisions of Reuben. Why, we plaintively ask each other, did Dan remain in ships and Asher in his breaches? I think I know, and a little later I will tell what I think; but first I must give another answer to my two questions. This is what we are, what we have, in outward semblance. What are we, what have we, in real meaning?

5. We are a religious community: we have a special and peculiarly glorious mission.

6. As I wrote this last sentence I heard the newsboys calling in the street, "Death of Queen Victoria," and while I stayed my pen, in deep respect for the good woman who has gone, in solicitous musing what this might mean for England, there came solemn words into my memory. In the year that King Uzziah died, Isaiah saw the Lord, and heard His voice, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said he, Here am I, send me. This year will be called the year that Queen Victoria died: will it be called the year of our consecration, the year of the beginning of our message? There is the vision of the Lord for us, if we will see it; fire for our lips, if we seek it; the burden of the message is ours already—we are sent on God's business: for God's sake let us go and do His bidding.

7. We are a religious community: but we lack religion. We have a special and glorious mission, but we need greater zeal, better methods, in performing it.

II.

8. We lack religion. Not we only, alas; the world is irreligious; but our own lack lies nearest, and must be our first concern. Of such religion as we have we are ashamed. In public life, business or society we often do things, and refuse to do others, because of our Father's will: but we have always another reason to offer the world, because the world would laugh at our true one. This is bad, and should be amended; in season, if not out of season, we ought to acknowledge our Master. Shall we begin the new century and the new reign by raising God's standard, and on occasion saluting it?

9. But this is not the worst. We lack religion, in the sense that we do not lead all our life in the consciousness of His presence. Our practical materialism is very gross, and the more wicked, because we have knowledge of the eternal, invisible things. The vilest of sins is to use ideal insight as a luxury, and not as an incentive. We use our visions of the Kingdom of God to make a theme for Sunday talk, or to minister (for we must not shirk the real, sad truth) to our spiritual vanity. Because we see the needs of men more clearly than some, we pose in our own eyes as if we loved them more. We do not love, because we do not pray. To realise God, so far as human spirits may, is to realise the absolute importance of God's will. Such realisation implies self-surrender, and one moment of real self-surrender to God's will has power to vitalise many days of our life. If we pray, then, we strive; and though the frailty of our nature hampers our striving, though we fail often and sin often, yet that effort is our salvation. But do we pray, and strive? or do we not content ourselves with a life whose main elements are those of the world, modified only, not commanded and transformed, by the Spirit? I say that Unitarianism is failing because Unitarians are not faithful to God. Their purpose is not fixed, their sacrifice is grudging and measured. Our first and deepest need is the need of real prayer, real worship, sincerity in God's service.

10. Some of the tasks to whose joyful performance such prayer will prompt us are, in my mind, plain to view; and, for lack of Moses, a Levite of the rank and file ventures to propound them. First of all, we must find means to reach "the masses," that is to say, our brethren. We ministers need help in this, our special duty. We do not seem able to find the words that have wings, the phrases that pierce. We need a language that shall go home instantly to men's hearts, with urgency of personal appeal. When Mr. Wood, at the Sheffield Conference, deprecated our stress on "truth" because it hindered our access to souls, I thought he was wrong; now I am sure he was right. Not that we must be disloyal to truth, but that an ineffective preaching of truth is not unlike a lie. We must so mould our pure truth (I do not say, or mean, adulterate it) that the man in the street, and in the workman's lodging-house, can understand it; more than that, must understand it, because he feels it. Volunteers are called for to labour at this task—to find the right words to carry home our gospel to all men's hearts.

11. Next, there is another field ripe for harvest, where the sickles of keen and strenuous intellects must be wielded. We are God's agents in the world, and the world needs much repair. The sin and misery in large cities weighs more and more upon our conscience. Each of our churches does its little best, or something less, to heal symptoms. But that is not enough. As God's agents, we are called upon to do more than tinker and patch. We must set to work with all our united power on the problem of removing the causes of sin and misery. It is our simple duty to give our leisure and the sweat of our brain to devise sane measures of sweeping social reform, and to give our labour, our money, our lives to bring them to pass. Slums, overcrowding, industrial feuds, sweating, drunkenness, harlotry, cruelty of all kinds—every sordid phenomenon of the workaday world is our common concern. We are not worth a denominational name unless we are collectively at war with all these things. It is not enough to declare war, we must wage war; and the first step is to hold councils of war, with earnest intention to find the blows that will tell, and then to strike home.

12. Money will be needed, and I must speak a plain word about money. Some few men I know who have consecrated their money to God; many more who occasionally give Him a gratuity. The reluctance of rich men to give of their superfluity is a disgrace to their theistic profession. Let me take one obvious example, and be, like the prophet, "very bold." What is the average stipend of a Unitarian minister? Would you like to live on it? "But, of course, being a minister, he has accepted the necessary conditions. The ministry has compensations of its own, of a higher kind than money can bring." Doubtless, but is it very gracious of you to plead that, as a substitute for increasing his income? Why not take a share in his "compensations," by sharing his sacrifice? Not, of course, in his degree, but in your own funded, and therefore exalted, fashion. I do not ask you to starve yourself of books, as he is starved; or to rob yourself of the means of artistic culture, as he is robbed; a contribution such as shall make no practical difference in your way of living, will make a very practical difference indeed in his. In sober sadness, do you really think that a ledger clerk's stipend is enough for your instructor in spiritual things? Is that your estimate of his work—the work he ought to do? And do you Unitarians know that among all the sects of any standing in this land you pay your ministers least, and give them least voice in affairs, and demand the highest standard in their sermons? *

13. "I am sorry I cannot come to your meetings. I have so many things to attend to." What minister does not know the excuse? Able men are so apt to be engaged elsewhere when they are wanted for church work. Does not the church stand first? Personal labour is urgently needed everywhere in our church institutions. I will not dwell on this, for if a man's religion is sincere, it is active; and if it is not sincere, we do not want his activity.

14. Each church does its little best, I said, or less, to cleanse its neighbourhood of misery and sin. Alas, it is generally less. At Hurst-street, in Birmingham, there are many agencies always at work to help the poor, the wretched, the fallen, such as might well be imitated wherever a Unitarian church can live. I name that place because I know it: there are other missions, I hope, whence useful lessons could be learned. Why are we not all doing that sort of work—plain, direct Samaritanism for the sufferers nearest our door? The obvious reasons are the lack of helpers and of money: the deeper reason is the lack of religion. Where dwells the spirit of prayer, which is the spirit of love, there is all kindliness made possible. "The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man": it is either a gospel or a blasphemy. We, who take those words on our lips, are helping our brothers, or else insulting God.

E. W. LUMMIS.

(To be concluded.)

IF the prayer, "Thy will be done," seems far beyond us, yet can we not, in the very next choice we make, surrender our own will, just now? With no thought for the morrow, can we not take from God to-day the daily bread of sacrifice? We know that if we do our ears will be opened to the Spirit's witness, and aspiration will cast out despair, and a quickened conscience vanity. Only let us be true to the beginnings of spiritual life. The man who finds the ocean is not he who turns with scorn from the tiny mountain brook, but he who follows it, patiently yet courageously, as it broadens and deepens on to the sea.—May Kendall.

---

* See Mr. F. J. Nettlefold's letter about Channing House in last week's INQUIRER. The writer takes it for granted, as it must be, that many of our ministers are quite unable to pay for the due education of their children. Is not this disgraceful and horrible? And is not the right course for you to remove such inability, instead of providing piecemeal charities to cover some of its more scandalous effects?

ANCOATS HALL, MANCHESTER.

ANCOATS HALL is in one of the gloomy and poverty-stricken districts of Manchester, with dark, ugly masses of factory building, squalid houses, and dimly-lighted, uninviting little shops all around it, and in the close embrace of the Midland Railway goods station, where engines whistle and shunt, and carriages bang together by night and by day, and from early morning huge waggons come forth laden with barrels of beer and other heavy commodities.

In some ways it is a contrast to its present surroundings. An old mansion, it reminds one of times less distant than the imagination readily pictures, when it was set among fields and cottages, a clear stream, and a pure sky. Almost alone in the district, it remains the same in substance and form, though it has not escaped the coating of dirt which envelopes everything. There whitewash seems scarce, or speedily becomes black, and blackwash is continuous and persistent. Dirty streets, dirty buildings, dirty canal, dirty stream, dirty sky—all is dirty. What wonder that there are dirty clothing, dirty flesh, dirty homes! People do but accommodate themselves to their environment in accord with the doctrine of the survival of the fittest. The dirty man who is not sensitive in regard to filth and vermin is fittest to survive in Ancoats; if he learn to need cleanliness and physical purity of surroundings he may be advancing to a higher and safer life; but he is unfitted for his present dwelling-place and work.

Grime and mud and smoke surround Ancoats Hall, blacken its walls, darken its windows, and generally encase it in a shroud; but the sway of blackness is modified within the building; there, among the many pictures which line the walls are fine engravings of lovely scenery and beautiful buildings, casts of world-renowned statuary and other reproductions of fine designs, together with a smaller number of original works of art. A written description of the aim of the work and its meaning is attached to each picture. Though the dirt of the district cannot be excluded, something very different of life purpose and possibilities is expressed within the building, an ideal requiring purity and cleanliness and the cultivation of the intellect and of the perception of beauty, of moral and intellectual and physical soundness; ideals which are at war with those which are materialised in the gaunt factory buildings, the filthy waters, and the other sordid surroundings of the people outside. Were the dirt entirely excluded, the institution would be merely a plantation of other life in the midst of that of Ancoats, but still different from it, and without influence upon it. Some efforts to improve the condition of people in slums have resulted in little more than a visitation of quite other people on certain occasions to hold converse with each other in a place remote from their usual assemblies. It is not so at Ancoats Hall. The unwashed multitudes flow in to the weekly concert given by gifted, and often well-known, musicians, and to the weekly entertainment for children, with no more restraint upon the untidiness and aged shabbiness of dress than would be met at one of the neighbouring public-houses. The dirty multitude flocks in as if it were at home there, and sits facing one of Watts's fine pictures (presented by the artist) to hear a performance of the music of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, or Handel.

A large meeting of mothers is conducted weekly. The cripples of the neighbourhood (and they are many) are gathered together that they may be amused and cared for in a way they do not often experience elsewhere. The large and vigorous Toynbee Debating Society meets here and has freedom of speech secured for it, and avails itself of its freedom by the expression of very varying opinions under an able president. Women as well as men are members on payment of the stipulated sixpence a year; but the women having shown themselves disinclined to speak out their thoughts in the presence of the men, they are being encouraged by a Fawcett Debating Society, from which men are excluded. There are courses of lectures on philosophy, art, and literature given by professors and other learned folks, and a lecture complete in itself is delivered every Monday evening; classes are held for the school children, at which lessons are given which can be illustrated by objects in the gallery, and such agreeable breaks in the ordinary routine of school days are counted as part of the scholar's school time. A choral society, founded some years ago, has reached a high standard of excellence, so that no critic need say, "Very good for Ancoats"; he need merely say "Very good" when he has heard its performance. A poor man's lawyer is in attendance regularly to give gratuitous advice.

The University Settlement, which has its home at the Ancoats Art Museum, consists of a few residents and a large number of associates and workers who carry forward all these and many other branches of the work. There used to be a Men's House near at hand, but being without a warden, it has broken up. Ruskin Hall, however, about a hundred yards away, in Every-street, a house remaining from earlier days, and larger than most in the neighbourhood, has accommodation for eight men, and sends some earnest and hearty helpers to the Art Museum—men who, after a day's work in Manchester, devote their evenings to study and to the service of their neighbours. A few women reside at the Art Museum: there have been more; there should be more again. Other workers come, some almost daily, many for settled regular work which is carried on under the superintendence of Miss Crompton, the Warden. Some who come regularly to take their part in the work of the settlement have been residents in past times, and are thus the more capable of giving their services with good effect when they are there. Often workers find the possibility of taking meals or staying the night a great convenience when helping at the Museum. In the absence of a Men's House, a masculine visitor is occasionally permitted to stay at the Ancoats Hall, and hence this article comes to be written. Such visitor finds as much comfort as anyone ought to desire whose purpose is to bridge over the gulf between Dives and Lazarus, or even to know how the poor live, and may sleep very comfortably, unless the shrill shriek of the Midland Railway engines and the banging of their waggon buffers disturb his peace. But most tired people soon cease to worry about such things when they get used to them. The settlers, with any visitors there may be, take their meals in a large warm kitchen, whose woodwork is painted a colour not far removed from Ruskin's favourite blue. Much is lost of the simplicity of life when people forsake the kitchen and take to a dining-room for their meals; and a homely comfort and satisfaction may be found in the quick transference of food from the fire to the table, and thus to the eater, as also in the presence of the glowing fire itself which, in winter at least, is not readily compensated in the more pretentious home, save at great expense and by a machinery that, breaking down in the use, often produces half-warm viands and a shivery atmosphere for the early riser to start the day with ere his business begins.

There is an atmosphere of sympathy for the poor and understanding of them combined with a considerable degree of culture and the belief that whatever knowledge or beauty or refinement is of permanent value ought to belong to Ancoats not less than Didsbury or Bowdon. The average drawing-room and commercial tone and manner of speech about "the people" is as much out of place at Ancoats Hall as would be the ordinary style of dress at an Ancoats concert in a drawing-room. It is something to have secured such an influence and to have brought a considerable number of the people who have a fairly large share of the good things of this world—knowledge, education, culture, money—into a true relationship to those who need them. They would probably be the last to deny that they learn as much as they teach and gain from the poor as many benefits as they give; but, fortunately, such calculations are unusual among the people who are earnestly at work. One of the most promising signs for the future greatness of England, to set against many painful and distressing symptoms of the last few years, is typified in such sights as that observed at a recent settlement party at Ancoats, when the hall was decorated and thrown open to a concourse of the inhabitants of the district. Many associates and other workers well organised did their appointed share of the arranging and carry out of the feeding and entertaining; young men from Ruskin Hall were seen tenderly carrying deformed and ponderous cripples in dusty and dingy attire to reserved seats that they, the privileged ones, might be sure of a good view; and there was an object-lesson in Fraternity, anyone who wanted to hold aloof from anybody else being decidedly incongruous and inconvenient.

The people who are engaged in this work are cheerful folks. Those who give their energies to even the most troublesome tasks are seldom so unhappy and gloomy as those who sit at home and deplore their own unsatisfied wants. There is wholesome fun among the folks who congregate at Ancoats Hall. The intellectual and artistic side of the work gives a certain distinction to their humour, and seldom is "society" enlivened by such witticisms as sometimes play around the serious work of the settlement. One wonders why more of the leisured people do not seek to associate with their neighbours of the slums that they may intelligently serve them, and know how to live a more wholesome life. What is needed is not patronage, the visitation of superiors in purse or person with gifts of money or of knowledge poured down from above, but a friendly sympathy and desire to learn as well as to teach, and to realise the common brotherhood. Small in comparison with the needs of even one of the many districts of one of the many towns which force their weaker citizens into dreary and overcrowded monotony of life, the activities of Ancoats Hall show the spirit in which the problems of poverty and dirt and gloom are to be met and the way of learning to understand them. There is no sectarian or partisan taint about the the place. Only those are excluded who exclude themselves by their own narrowness. There is something prophetic of a better age in the mingling of classes, creeds, parties and characters in practical human fellowship of aspiration and goodwill, which is practical Christianity.

PRIESTLEY PRIME.

THE HIGH PEAK CHAPELS.

THE recent establishment of the Holiday Home of the Manchester District Sunday School Association, at Great Hucklow, has aroused considerable interest in the High Peak of Derbyshire, and in our little group of non-subscribing congregations there. Two of these congregations—Bradwell and Great Hucklow—were founded by the Rev. W. Bagshaw, "the Apostle of the Peak," who for the eleven years preceding 1662 was vicar of Glossop. The other congregation—Flagg—was founded in 1839. Bradwell and Great Hucklow have always been united under one pastor, while Flagg has never, except for one short period, had a settled minister. For twenty years the late Mr. Charles Woollen, of Sheffield, one of our most devoted lay workers, made Flagg his special care, and since his death the Rev. J. Ellis, of Sheffield, has looked after it. Bradwell and Great Hucklow are in the district covered by the North Midland Association, which renders them generous financial aid; Flagg is not associated with any union.

The joint pastorate of Bradwell and Great Hucklow having recently fallen vacant, it appeared to a number of gentlemen interested in the Peak and in our congregations there, that an effort ought to be made to bring all our work in the High Peak district under the direction of one responsible minister, and that a gentleman should be secured for the post, whose character and abilities afforded promise of successful leadership.

The appointment of a strong and experienced man seemed all the more important in view of the development of Great Hucklow as a holiday resort for the scholars and teachers of our schools. About one thousand of these younger members of our congregations spent their holidays in Great Hucklow last summer. The advantage of a wise and sympathetic pastoral oversight of this great summer gathering of our young people will be at once obvious.

A Committee has, therefore, been organised, representative of all the towns converging on the High Peak—namely, Manchester, Sheffield, Nottingham, Chesterfield, and Derby—to be known as the High Peak Chapels Sustentation Committee. The objects of the Committee are to foster the life of our congregations in the High Peak, and to afford the opportunity for rendering assistance in the work of the Holiday Home. Its business will be primarily to guarantee the regular payment of the stipend of the minister chosen by the local congregations, and to this end it has been agreed that it shall receive all moneys from all available sources—endowments, grants, subscriptions, and local contributions, which it will endeavour to supplement as far as may be necessary.

Circumstances connected with the health of his family having compelled the removal of the Rev. Sydney H. Street, B.A., from Manchester, the Committee announce that he has accepted the invitation of the local congregations—Bradwell, Great Hucklow, and Flagg—to become their minister, and that he has also undertaken the position of Superintendent of the Holiday Home, on the promise of their support. They are strongly of opinion that no wiser or better appointment could have been made. Mr. Street has been in close touch with the Holiday Home ever since its commencement, and was himself one of the originators of the movement out of which it has grown. His long and devoted work at the Renshaw Street Mission is also a sufficient guarantee of the earnestness and ability with which he will organise and administer the large pastoral charge now committed to his care.

Mr. Street will probably take up his work in the High Peak about the end of April. In the meantime the Committee is endeavouring to raise sufficient funds to guarantee him in his position there. Mr. J. Dendy is chairman of the Committee, the Rev. Charles Peach is secretary, and the Rev. L. Scott is treasurer. The Rev. S. A. Steinthal is also a member of the Committee. A very earnest appeal is made for help. There is just now a remarkable development of new life at Bradwell under the devoted leadership of Mr. C. A. Smith, one of our most earnest lay-workers; Hucklow, from its association with the Holiday Home, offers also a most interesting field of work, while the long and faithful witness of the little congregation at Flagg is worthy of all encouragement. Opportunities of new work are also presenting themselves in other directions, and altogether the time is most opportune for a forward movement in this district. Any help will be warmly appreciated. Subscriptions should be sent to the treasurer, the Rev. L. Scott, Great Hucklow, Eyam, Sheffield.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of this Association was held on Friday evening, Feb. 1, in the Hope-street Church Hall, Liverpool, the President, the Rev. L. de B. KLEIN, D.Sc., in the chair. Letters of regret for absence were read from Sir J. T. Brunner, Bart, M.P., Messrs. W. Rathbone, W. B. Bowring, and others.

The report of the Committee opened with a reference to the great loss sustained by the death of Mr. H. J. Cook, who was one of the founders of the Association, and for many years its treasurer. Having referred to the work of the past year, in terms which we need not repeat here, as the ground was covered in our "Provincial Letter" of last week, the report pointed out that the balance of £101 in hand indicated only a temporary financial repletion, and that the estimate of expenses for the present year, with its new work, showed a deficit of £200, which would have to be met by the congregational collections and new and increased subscriptions. The Committee expressed confidence that the work of the new missionary would not be allowed to be crippled for lack of sufficient monetary support.

The report of the Rev. R. S. Redfern, from Crewe, recorded steady, progressive work, and added: "We have many difficulties, but they are not overwhelming, and they could be overcome by greater enthusiasm, and more earnest devotion, and a more business-like organisation."

The report of the Rev. J. M. Mills, from Bootle, recorded that before his settlement at the Free Church, in September, in succession to the Rev. H. W. Hawkes, the interior of the hall had been effectively painted and decorated at Mr. Hawkes's expense, and the Ladies' Sewing Society had devoted £15 to the purchase of carpets, cushions, &c. The congregation was in a prosperous condition, and full of hope for the future.

The report of the Liscard congregation, though recording a year of transition from one ministry to another, was also confident for the future; as was also the report of the Rev. H. D. Roberts as missionary of the Association.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, said that the spirit which inspired the work of that Association was laying the foundations of a great and noble cause; they were not merely holding the ideals of pioneers, but were carrying out those ideals in actual life.

Mr. A. S. THEW, in seconding, laid stress upon the importance of the new effort, which had resulted in the appointment of a missionary to superintend the work of the Association.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG moved a resolution of cordial appreciation of the work of the Revs. R. S. Redfern and J. M. Mills, and of the Liscard congregation, and in heartily welcoming the Rev. H. D. Roberts as missionary of the Association, expressing the determination "to support him to the best of their ability in his endeavours to extend, with those already engaged in the work, the influence of a liberal religious faith." He said that many friends were absent that night because of the deep loss they had all sustained in the passing away of the Queer, whose noble character was the expression of genuine religion. The work of the Rev. R. S. Redfern was continuing steadfastly and truly. Outpost duty often brought credit and renown, but for the missionary it must generally be solitary; yet Mr. Redfern's influence was growing and spreading wide. He (Mr. Armstrong) was impressed with the greatly increased achievements at Liscard and Bootle, compared with those of only a few years ago, and to-day the Garston report was not unlike what Liscard and Bootle were. The Sunday services being carried on at St. Helens showed the progress of the Association. The figures contained in the reports of the attendance could not be taken to represent the spiritual work done, yet they showed what an increasing number had come under the influence of the broad and free religious life of their churches.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. R. ROBINSON and the Revs. R. S. REDFERN, J. MORLEY MILLS, H. D. ROBERTS, Mr. ROWLANDS (secretary of Liscard Congregation), and the Rev. J. L. HAIGH (the missionary at Hamilton-road) responded.

The Committee was then elected, and a vote of thanks to the President for his services during the year, and for his conduct in the chair that evening, closed the proceedings.

It may be noted here that services are being held by the Rev. H. D. Roberts at seven P.M. every Sunday evening at the Assembly Rooms, Hardshaw-street, St. Helens, preceded by "Open Talks to Men" at 3.30 P.M.

THE CREED OF THE PIOUS AGNOSTIC.

I KNOW not if this Universal Frame
  Has goodness at its core
Such as I mean when "Loving Lord" I name
  The Being I adore.

I only know that Being as the source
  Of all that here is best,
Bending the stubborn will with gentle force,
  Giving the weary rest.

I know not if a Father's constant care,
  Which perfect Wisdom guides—
Though dire distress so many creatures share—
  Their lot for all provides.

I only know that it is Love supreme,
  Tender and wise as well,
That gives me faith and hope when all things seem
  Dark as the gates of hell.

I know not where the truth has been reveal'd
  Of things beyond our ken;
The key to Life's enigma is conceal'd,
  Creeds are the guess of men.

I only know that though we cannot trust
  Props weak and worthless found,
Though dogmas snap and crumble into dust,
  Faith still has solid ground.

The Spirit of all good is round us still,
  Breathing the breath of love,
Moulding true hearts, aiding the struggling will
  To seek the things above,—

Above this world, but not, as dreamers say,
  In worlds beyond the sky:
The "things above" come down with us to stay
  When thoughts and deeds aim high.

Then "Sursum Corda!" Let the old refrain
  Our watchword be as well:
To rise above ourselves is heav'n to gain,
  To sink below is hell.

R. BRUCE BOSWELL.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

THE YORKSHIRE UNITARIAN UNION.

THE Unitarians of Yorkshire have made a good beginning of a new century, and I trust that the New Year's Day services, which Mr. Lummis so well described in your columns, will be remembered till the time comes to celebrate the beginning of a new millennium in the year 2001. When the proposal was first made the objections seemed overwhelming. We are a people scattered far and wide over the biggest county of England; it costs money, and it takes time, and it involves more or less discomfort to attend a distant meeting; it was midwinter and the days were at the shortest; it was a specially busy day everywhere and market day in Leeds, and, moreover, a day of social and family gatherings. So it seemed that any attempt to hold a meeting of the kind suggested, to occupy all the business hours of the day and dismiss people from a distance, not to reach their homes till late at night, was certain to prove a failure. It turned out a great success. Rarely or never have we had so large a gathering at our Annual Summer Service; never except on the occasion of the National Conference have we had so many taking part in the Communion: never was there more entire unanimity at the afternoon meeting for the arrangement of our future work.

We have begun well, we have succeeded in eliciting a certain display, one might almost say, of enthusiasm, rare with us. Now we are engaged on the more difficult and less pleasing work to "make level the highway for our God." The immediate ends we have determined: we are to have special missions for every church which will welcome them—Holbeck has set the example already without waiting for the approval of the Union, Hull has followed it, and Sheffield has already made its arrangements; we are to have a minister at large; we are to have a Monthly Record common to all our churches, which will help to further the sense of common interests hitherto so much wanting. And these ends are only means to the all-important end on which we are all agreed—the revival of Religious Life and Faith among us. We are excellent unbelievers, we are unanimous and decided in rejection of Trinitarian doctrines; the old controversy about miracles and the authority of Scripture has long ceased. But we are beginning all of us, laity and ministers, to be painfully conscious that unbelief, however ample and substantial, is a diet on which no spiritual life can be maintained. Negation cannot be made a bond of church membership; agreement in negative propositions leads to no common life and purpose.

Of course we have known this—some of us more clearly, some less so—all along. Yet I think my own experience is that of the body at large. I have in no wise changed my opinions about the use and necessity of controversy. It seems to me to be a duty imposed upon us, to be faithfully discharged in due time and on fitting occasions. My revered predecessor, Mr. Wicksteed, once told me of the controversial sermons which he used to give regularly every winter—how great a success they were, the chapel crowded out, benches brought into the aisles—and how much he disliked them, how nothing but a sense of duty compelled him to continue them. It is to those sermons we owe three or four families who are now, at half a century's distance from Mr. Wicksteed's time, the firmest and most generous supporters of the Mill Hill congregation. At the afternoon meeting, already referred to, Sir James Kitson, our present Chairman of Trustees, told us how it was those sermons which brought his father to Mill Hill. Joseph Cliff was another who sought the truth and found what satisfied the demands of his intellect and the yearnings of a deeply religious heart under Mr. Wicksteed's dogmatic and controversial teaching. From those two have descended—I said three or four, it would be more correct to say six or seven families who are among the foremost of Leeds Unitarians. It seems to me that inquirers have a right to demand of every minister of religion reason for the hope that is in him, reason to satisfy his own doubts and difficulties. But if a minister publicly dissents from the commonly received faith, if he omits from his teaching as unimportant what is generally agreed and asserted to be of supreme importance, then is he bound in common respect to his fellow-men, in duty to anxious seekers after truth, to justify his position—to state publicly not only what he believes and why, but also why he does not believe so much which appears to men as good and wise as himself to be the Revelation of God. I sometimes fear for myself and for my brethren that we are too much shirking the irksome duty of controversial lectures. I very much doubt whether it will be possible to maintain a church which it is in many ways disadvantageous to belong to, unless we make it plain to all who will listen why it is that we dissociate ourselves from our fellow Christians, and what we do believe and disbelieve.

So I am intellectually convinced as much as ever I was of the necessity of controversy. It is my feeling which has changed. I feel the infinite importance of faith so much more than I ever have done before, and differences of opinion seem to me of so much less account than they once did. And if I am not mistaken, the change in myself is only what has taken place throughout our group of churches, and to a considerable extent throughout the churches at large. Our thoughts are more of those things which we all believe than of those in which we differ. The communion which each denies to the other we find in the God whom we all worship.

Worship—that it is for which all congregations are formed and maintained; and if we lose the spirit of worship we are doomed, we have no right to pose before the world as a religious body; and to assume the right, in virtue of our descent from ancestors who did believe and worship, will avail to keep a semblance of life in us only for a generation or two longer. When we cease to worship, we ought to cease to exist as a church.

We all feel this, and it is to revive and establish the sense of worship that our united efforts are directed at this beginning of a new century. May God help our weak endeavours to draw near to Him, in spirit and in truth.

It is a drawback to our work that, just at this time when we should put forth all our small force, Mr. Lummis is leaving us. Consequently we have three churches without ministers—Scarborough, Hull and Malton. The Union Committee have appointed Mr. Morgan Whiteman to the charge of the church at Dewsbury for six months. If his ministry is not more successful than that of some of his predecessors has been, we shall know that the fault is not with him, for he is a man of tried character, who comes to us with the testimony of good work done at Liverpool. But we must all hope that sore experience will not have been without profit, and that the sturdy little remnant which have held so faithfully to the cause during the year of depression, amounting almost to despair, will have its reward in witnessing the re-establishment of a harmonious and prosperous congregation.

Bazaars are not an unmixed good; they entail much work and worry and expense, and those who are expected to patronise every church bazaar in their county are naturally inclined occasionally to "murmur against Moses and Aaron," against the leading layman and the minister who contrive them. But they are a welcome sign of life. A church which is doing nothing does not bother with bazaars, though churches which are doing much may manage to do without them.

Bradford seems to be always breaking out into a bazaar, and the last of all is only the precursor of the next. They do well with them, and have added greatly to the appearance and convenience of their admirably situated buildings. Another is announced for the spring, which we hope will clear off the debt incurred for repairs and alterations.

Hunslet has its annual bazaar next week, and Pudsey, which is happy in having found an active and zealous minister in Mr. Davies, has some grand scheme in contemplation, which so far as I know it is deserving of all support. On the whole—while we have to speak humbly if we would speak sensibly of our work in the past, for our Union has had many failures and only partial successes where it has succeeded at all—there is a new spirit of life and hope among us which is of good augury for the future.

CHARLES HARGROVE.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Appeal.

The Rev. Vernon Herford, of 60, Percy-street, Oxford, appeals for help to provide books, &c., for a Men's Club, just opened, in connection with his work in Oxford. He writes:—"We are beginning modestly in a small house, but already a good many have joined and are on the point of joining. An institution of the kind is very much needed in our thickly-populated district, and there is nothing of the sort within a long distance. I think the nearest place of the kind is a coffee tavern about a mile off. We especially want books, such as old volumes of Scott, &c., and games. We hope soon to be able to raise funds to buy a bagatelle board, though already we have had one very generous donation which has enabled us to furnish."

Memorial Services.

We must repeat what we said last week, that it is impossible to report all the services held in our churches, as in other churches throughout the country, in memory of the Queen. A large number of special commemorative services were held on the day of the funeral, as well as on Sunday and Sunday week. Resolutions in reference to the Queen's death and the King's accession have also been passed by a number of congregations and other societies. Among the services on Saturday of last week, one of the most noteworthy, of which we have received a report, was that at Bridport, where a United Free Church Service was held by the Congregationalists, Wesleyans, Baptists, and Unitarians. The Congregationalist Chapel, being the largest chapel in the town, was offered and accepted for the occasion. Five ministers of the above-mentioned denominations took part in the service, three giving short addresses, while the singing was led by the united choirs. The hymns chosen were "O God, our help in ages past," "Peace, perfect peace" (with a slight alteration to the second line of the first verse), and "For ever with the Lord." Last Sunday afternoon the same chapel was again crowded to its utmost capacity with the four Nonconformist Sunday-schools, and a very impressive service was held. Previous to this each scholar had been presented with a commemorative medal. In the Unitarian School these medals were distributed by

Mr. Colfox, who, as an old Sunday-school teacher of many years standing, took great interest in the proceedings.

Blackpool : Bank-street.—At the recent annual meeting the chair was taken by Mr. John Lancaster, and among those present were the Revs. D. Davis and W. Binns. Satisfactory reports were read from church and Sunday-schools, the latter deeply deploring the death of the late superintendent, Mrs. Binns. The Ladies' Sewing Society, the Choir, and the Dramatic Societies are reported as doing good work.

Gateshead.—At the monthly social meeting of Unity Church, held on Friday, Feb. 1, a most interesting event in the history of this church took place. The Rev. Arthur Harvie, who had ably fulfilled the office of building secretary, presented to the officials of the church, on behalf of the trustees, the trust deeds and other documents of interest belonging to the building. Mr. J. Harte, the treasurer, and Mr. S. Hulse, secretary of the church, received, on behalf of the congregation, the deed box containing the papers, and spoke in high terms of praise of the zeal and earnestness of Mr. Harvie, and his colleague, Mr. Henry Sutcliffe, the building treasurer. Letters of apology for absence were received from Alderman Baxter Ellis, Chairman of the N. and D. Unitarian Association, and Mr. John Pattinson, treasurer of the Association. Mr. Edward H. Coysh, minute secretary of the Association, occupied the chair, and referred to the advent of Mr. Harvie into this district and the good work he had done, especially in Gateshead. The occasion was taken advantage of by his friends to show their appreciation of Mr. Harvie's services by presenting him with a bookcase, lantern and screen, and Chadwick's "Life of Theodore Parker." The secretary, who made the presentation, spoke of the valuable and permanent work accomplished in the town by Mr. Harvie's faithful and self-sacrificing efforts, and hoped he would long be spared to carry on the good work founded in their midst. Mr. J. Duncan Donald also addressed the meeting, and Mr. Harvie gratefully acknowledged the gift. Mr. Henry Sutcliffe gave the treasurer's statement of accounts, and announced, amid applause, that a sum of £25 was the balance to hand over to the church treasurer.

Leicester : Great Meeting.—The annual meeting of the church and congregation was held in the schools on Tuesday evening, Jan. 29, Mr. E. Clephan, Chairman of the Vestry, presiding over a large attendance. On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by the Rev. H. Gow, a resolution on the death of the Queen, and the King's Accession, was unanimously carried, the congregation upstanding. Mr. H. T. Cooper, secretary, read the annual report of the Vestry, which stated that the year had been a memorable one in the history of the church by the holding of the National Conference in Leicester. Mr. E. F. Cooper, treasurer, read the financial report, which showed that the year opened with a debt of £81 9s. 5d., and ended with a balance in hand of £12 8s. 3d. The ordinary income had been £737, and special collections to clear off the debt from the previous year realised £132, making the total income £869. Reports on the various institutions connected with the chapel were also read, those referring to the Boys' and Girls' Sunday-schools being particularly encouraging. The various reports were unanimously adopted. Mr. A. H. Paget moved, and Miss M. C. Gittins seconded, a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Gow for his services as minister during the past year. The former said that as each year went by the ties between Mr. Gow and the congregation seemed to be drawn closer, and Miss Gittins laid particular stress on the minister's interest in the young people. The resolution was carried with acclamation. The Rev. H. Gow, acknowledging, said the general impression left on his mind by the church-life of the year was a favourable one, and he was inclined to think that it had been a year of progress. Undoubtedly the holding of the National Conference in Leicester during the year had done them good, and it had demonstrated, moreover, what a wonderful reserve of force there was latent in the congregation. Concluding, Mr. Gow urged the formation of a Ministers' Advisory Committee—a committee not at all abrogating the rights of the vestry, but consisting of workers in the various departments of church life. Mr. T. F. Johnson proposed a vote of thanks to the Vestry, and in doing so specially referred to Mr. Clephan, who, after many years' service, was now retiring from the chairmanship. Mr. Mentor Gimson seconded, and the resolution was carried unanimously. Mr. Clephan, replying, traced in a most interesting fashion, the history of the church during the entire Victorian era. He joined it as a youth on coming to Leicester in 1834, beginning as a Sunday-school teacher; he had held office ever since, and for the past twenty-five years had been chairman of the vestry. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the meeting.

London : Essex Church.—A fifth series of Educational Lantern Lectures was commenced on Tuesday last, when Mr. Herbert Rix, B.A., addressed a delighted audience on "Wordsworth and the Duddon Sonnets." Subsequent lectures comprise, "From London to Canterbury with Chaucer's Pilgrims," by Mr. Walter Slater; "From Southey to Tennyson," by the Rev. Frank K. Freeston; "From Hogarth to Millais," by the Rev. E. I. Fripp, B.A.; and "King Alfred the Great," by Mr. Warwick Draper. A full illustrated Syllabus of the Course may be had from the Rev. Frank K. Freeston.

London : Stepney.—In connection with the Postal Mission, a series of interesting conferences on "The Religion the Age Wants" is being held in College Chapel on the first Sunday afternoon in each month at five o'clock. Last Sunday at a well-attended meeting, presided over by Miss Florence Hill, the Rev. George Critchley, B.A., delivered an eloquent and stirring address on "Brotherhood and Patriotism." After stating that the need of the churches was the restoration of Christ, not as the exalted Lord of the Skies, but as the preacher of the Sermon on the Mount, he proceeded to define in clear and forcible terms two kinds of patriotism—one, loud-voiced and aggressive, urging expansion by the absorption of weaker States; the other seeking expansion by natural development, on the principles of industrial progress and social liberty, and friendly international relations. The first is quite incompatible with the ethics of the Sermon on the Mount; the second is in complete harmony with the Fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man. During an interesting discussion which followed an elderly gentleman, who had served in the Crimea and in the second war with China, spoke of the marked contrasts in those days between the reality and the popular view, between the ugly facts and the ecclesiastical phraseology of the special prayers ordered to be used on board the ships engaged. He further enforced his argument by telling quotations from "The History of the Sepoy War," by Sir John Kaye, a work which created much embittered controversy at the time of its appearance. On the next occasion the subject will be "The Brotherhood of Nations," to be opened by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed.

Newry.—By the death of Mr. J. Colvin, which occurred on Monday evening, at the age of seventy-four, the Newry congregation has lost a very faithful member, who for many years was superintendent of the Sunday-school and a trustee of the church. Latterly he had been also treasurer of the congregation. He was a man of sterling worth and greatly respected.

Padiham.—On Tuesday, Feb. 5, the annual congregational tea and meeting took place at Nazareth Chapel, and was well attended. The chair was taken by Mr. Councillor Jackson, and an excellent report of the year's work was read, showing the finances to be in a satisfactory condition. While the open collection showed a falling off, there was an increase in the envelope offertory, and the Christmas Sale of Work has produced an unpectedly large sum. The Rev. J. H. Wicksteed spoke of his unfortunately prolonged summer holiday, and expressed his deep gratitude for the kindness and sympathy he had received. The meeting was one of the most encouraging of the year.

Sheffield : Upper Chapel.—The annual report of the trustees and committee for 1900 records a substantial balance in hand on the general account, and also a small balance from the special bi-centenary fund of £521, expended in the recent celebrations, the enlargement of the vestry, the printing of Mr. Manning's "History of the Chapel," &c. The report speaks with great regret of the unsatisfactory condition of the Sunday-school owing to the want of male teachers and superintendents. Efforts have been made to find a qualified man to look after the school and hold Mission services in the town and generally to help the minister, but hitherto without success. Reference is made to the Bi-centenary Celebrations, and the autumn meeting of the B. and F.U.A., and to the proposed Forward Movement of the Yorkshire Union, and fresh support is asked for the Association and the Union.

Sheffield : Upperthorpe.—The annual congregational meeting was held on Monday last, Feb. 4, when the various reports were presented and adopted. Votes of thanks were accorded to all voluntary workers, and the committee and officers were elected for the ensuing year. The reports show that the church and its affiliated institutions are in a healthy and vigorous condition. Special mention is made of the valuable work done by the Young People's Religious Union and the Christian Union. This latter institution has been inaugurated in order to provide for earnest men and women an opportunity for the discussion of questions affecting the social life from the standpoint of Christian principles. Meetings are held on the first Sunday afternoon of each month. The numbers attending and the interest shown, thus far, leads us to think that this Union meets a distinct need in the neighbourhood of the church. A resolution expressing in warm terms the congregation's appreciation of their minister's worth and work, and also Mrs. Ellis's kindly assistance, was carried unanimously; also, a resolution requesting the National Conference Committee to consider the advisability of compiling a Service Book for use in our churches, with a view to uniformity of worship. It was thought the revision necessitated by the Queen's death would present a favourable opportunity for the compilation of a book that might soon come into general use.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk.

WINIFRED HOUSE,

Invalid Children's Convalescent Nursing Home,

Wray Crescent, Tollington Park, London, N.

For poor children suffering from debility or rickets, or recovering from hip or spinal disease, &c. Ages: Girls, 3 to 12 years; Boys, 3 to 10.

Applications for admission to be made to Miss M. PRITCHARD, 11, Highbury Crescent, London, N. Maintenance fees, 4s. weekly.

Subscriptions and Donations will be gratefully received by WM. M. BLYTH, Esq., Hon. Treasurer, or by either of the Hon. Secretaries. Subscribers are reminded that the year of the HOME commences on May 1st, so that the subscriptions for the tenth year, if not paid, are now due.

Hon. Secs. { MARIAN PRITCHARD, ROBERT HAMPSON.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

ART and HANDICRAFT CLASSES, KIRKBY LONSDALE. — WANTED, a young lady STUDENT-ASSISTANT. Nominal salary; preparation for A.C.T.C.—Apply, Miss R. E. BARNARD.

WANTED, for the Upper Chapel, Sheffield, a gentleman to act as SUPERINTENDENT of the Sunday-school, and to assist the Minister in Missionary and General Work. One who is a University Graduate, and has been trained for the Ministry, preferred.—Further particulars from the SECRETARY, to whom applications, accompanied by two references, should be sent.

BIRTHS.

SHIPMAN—On the 30th Jan., at Cleveley, Altrincham, the wife of Walter M. Shipman, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

BAKER—On the 5th Feb., suddenly, at Bay House, Ilminster, John Collins Baker, Solicitor, in his 59th year.

BLACK—On the 31st Jan., at 20, Hamilton-road, Highbury, the Rev. James Black, M.A., aged 66 years.

MACKEY—On the 31st Jan., at Islington, Samuel Grove Mackey, eldest son of the late Samuel Francis Mackey, aged 60.

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, February 10.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN. Monday, 11th, Lantern Lecture, "A Trip through Canada," by Mr. F. H. WILLIAMS.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON, and 7 P.M., Rev. EDGAR M. DAPLYN.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN, and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON, "The New Chivalry." Children's Class, 12.30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. WM. LLOYD.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON. Morning, "An Old Testament Prayer." Evening, "Do Unbelievers Believe?"

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. FARRINGTON. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. E. A. CARLIER, and 7 P.M., Mr. T. ELLIOT.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. EDWARDS.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. J. HARWOOD, B.A.

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRADFORD, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. LIVENS.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. HERBERT RIX.

DEAL and WALMER Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKSPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.

EASTBOURNE, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.

LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. ISAAC WRIGLEY, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.

LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN.

MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.

MARGATE, Forester's Hall Union-crescent, 11 A.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

NEWPORT, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.

OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND.

PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.

PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.

RAMSGATE, Claremont, 21, Albion-place (facing Harbour), 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. B. BARNHILL.

ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.

SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. STEPHENS.

SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.

SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.

SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.

SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.

TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.

WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—Feb. 10th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "Huxley's Life and Letters."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Feb. 10th, at 11.15 A.M., JOHN M. ROBERTSON, "The Nineteenth Century—Philosophy from Kant to Bradley."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

POSITION desired as ASSISTANT MINISTER or MISSIONARY, or would form new Church. Fully experienced. Well educated. Excellent testimonials. — Address, "Veritas," INQUIRER Office, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

DOMESTIC MISSION ASSISTANT.—The Committee of the North-End Domestic Mission, Liverpool, desire to engage a YOUNG MAN, accustomed to move among working people, to assist in Missionary work.—Apply to J. H. BURROUGHS, 41, Rodney-street, Liverpool.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A MEMORIAL SERMON ON THE FUNERAL OF THE QUEEN.

Preached by the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., on SUNDAY, February 3, 1901.

Price 6d. net. Post free 7d.

TRUSLOVE, HANSON, and COMBA LTD., 143, Oxford-street, W., & 6B, Sloane-street, S.W., London.

HIGHGATE HILL UNITARIAN CHURCH.

SPECIAL MISSION SERVICES will be conducted in the above Church by the Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN, of Hampstead, every Evening at 8 o'clock, from MONDAY, Feb. 18th, to FRIDAY, Feb. 22nd, inclusive.

SPECIAL MUSIC. All are earnestly invited.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at ESSEX HALL on SATURDAY, February 23rd. The Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE will preside.

Tea at 6 P.M. Meeting at 7 P.M.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.

Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and

Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Schools, etc.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
(UNIVERSITY OF LONDON),
YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET, W.

The HALF TERM begins on THURSDAY, February 21st.

LECTURES are given in all branches of General and Higher Education. STUDENTS are prepared for all the University of London Examinations in Arts and Science. A single Course of Lectures in any subject may be attended.

There is a Department for Professional Training in Teaching and an Art School.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.

One Clift Scholarship in Arts, annual value £31 10s., tenable for three years.

One Pfeiffer Scholarship in Science, annual value £48, tenable for three years.

Will be awarded on the results of the Examination to be held in June.

Particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL.

CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE,
HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
AND BOARDING SCHOOL.
For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home.
Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term :
Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s.
Extras : Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s.
Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d.
Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra.
Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.
Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.
The HALF TERM begins MONDAY, March 4.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

MISS JARVIS and MISS CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.
HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.
—o—
A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor road, S.W.

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE ; close to sea ; sheltered among the Pines ; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams : "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

The Bible in the Nineteenth Century.

A COURSE OF LECTURES
PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
(of Manchester College, Oxford),
at BOLTON, LEEDS, and LIVERPOOL.

III. The Gospels and the Origin of Christianity.
IV. The Gospel Question : (1), The Synoptics.
V. The Gospel Question : (2), The Fourth Gospel.
VI. The Bible and the Church.

BOLTON : Spinners' Hall, St. George's-road.
Tuesdays, February 12th, 19th, 26th, March 5th, at 7.30 P.M.

LEEDS : Philosophical Hall.
Wednesdays, February 13th, 20th, 27th, March 6th, at 8.0 P.M.

LIVERPOOL : Liverpool Institute, Mount-street.
Thursdays, February 14th, 21st, 28th, March 7th, at 8.30 P.M.

Admission Free. A copy of the Syllabus will be sent on application to the Rev. C. J. STREET, Maythorn, Heaton, Bolton ; the Rev. C. HARGROVE, 10, De Grey-terrace, Leeds ; or C. W. JONES, Esq., 39, Drury Buildings, Liverpool.

SUSTENTATION FUND

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Contributors and Friends to receive the Report, appoint Officers, and transact other Business, will be held at 2 P.M., on WEDNESDAY, February 13, 1901, at DR. WILLIAMS'S LIBRARY, GORDON-SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

HARRY RAWSON,
A. W. WORTHINGTON, } Hon. Secs.

TO LET, two or three unfurnished ROOMS in quiet house. Bath (h. and c.). No children. North London.—Apply, C., INQUIRER Office, 3, Essex-street, W.C.

THREE NEW BOOKS

BY THE
Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.

OUR REASONABLE SERVICE. Four Sermons on Acts of Worship. 6d. net, by post 7d.

SERMONS and IMPRESSIONS brought from AMERICA. 6d. net, by post 7d.

JESUS OF NAZARETH : Lessons of his Life, Death, and Resurrection learnt from Ober Ammergau. 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Every Sunday School Teacher should possess a copy of

THE HELPER, 1901.

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers & for Parents

Edited by W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Price 2s. 6d. net. (Postage 4d.)

With Frontispiece—"Alfred the Great"; and many Illustrations of Beautiful Natural Objects—Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Insects, &c.

CONTENTS.

Introduction : Sunday School Teachers whom I have Known. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
A Message for the New Year. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Alfred the Great. FRANCES E. COOKE.
From Josiah to Jesus. Sixteen Lessons. EDITOR.
Parental Help in Religious Training, with Suggested Talks. I. M. R.
Nature Lessons from Ruskin. Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Leaves, Flowers, &c. LUCKING TAVENER.
Jesus at Jacob's Well. FRANK WALTERS.
Bible Homes. Eight Sketches. J. RUDDLE.
Some New Testament Churches. A. HARVIE.
How Teachers and Scholars may know one another. ION PRITCHARD.
Nature Sketches. C. ROPER, B.A.
"My Pond." (Illustrated). Dragon-fly and Knat. T. ROBINSON.
How I Prepare (with outline lessons). Confidential Notes to the Editor by Teachers.
How to Teach. FELIX TAYLOR, B.A.
Sunday Schools at Home and Abroad. American, MARIAN PRITCHARD. Welsh, W. TUDOR JONES, Scottish, A. E. PARRY. Irish, R. LYTTLE. A French Sunday School Fete.
Summer Session (Oxford) Papers : What Sunday Schools may learn from Day Schools (from lecture by A. J. MOCKRIDGE). Child Study, EDITOR. Wanted, Men and Women, J. L. HAIGH. What the Average Teacher may do, J. J. WRIGHT.
The Boys' Own Brigade. J. C. BALLANTYNE.

London : THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. Manchester: H. RAWSON AND CO., 16, New Brown-street. Liverpool : THE BOOKSELLERS' CO., 70, Lord-street.

"QUEEN VICTORIA."

A SERMON Preached at HOPE-STREET CHURCH, LIVERPOOL, on the Evening of SUNDAY, Jan. 27, 1901, by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A. Price 3d, by post 3½d.

BOOKSELLERS' CO. LTD., 70, Lord-street, Liverpool.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address : Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale). JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 9, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3060. NEW SERIES, No. 164.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 97
LITERATURE :—
Mr. Hargrove's Sermons 101
The Sunny Side of Life 102
Articles in the Reviews 102
Publications Received... 103
ARTICLES :—
Burne-Jones's "Merciful Knight" 99
Dr. Stopford A. Brooke's Sermon on the Queen's Funeral 100
Gleanings from Huxley's Letters 101
Choose Life.—II. 105
The Growth of Power 106
OBITUARY :—
Mr. J. Barron, Mottram 103
Mrs. Samuel Rider 103
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 103
LEADER :—
A Living Church 100
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Story of the Unrighteous Steward ... 106
Temperance Reform 107
Forgiveness 107
POETRY :—
Matins 103
Love 108
MEETINGS :—
The New Church at Chorlton-cum-Hardy ... 108
Memorial Hall, Manchester 108
Sustentation Fund 109
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 109
ADVERTISEMENTS 110

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

ADDRESS TO THE KING.

AT a special meeting of the Committee of the National Conference, held at University Hall, Gordon-square, on Wednesday, Feb. 13, Mr. David Martineau in the chair, on the motion of Mr. Edwin Clephan, seconded by the Rev. F. W. Stanley, the following address was adopted, to be presented to the King:—

Unto the King's Most Excellent Majesty:

The loyal and dutiful Address of the President, Vice-Presidents, Treasurer, Secretaries, and Committee and other members of the National Conference of Unitarian, Liberal Christian, Free Christian, and other Non-Subscribing or Kindred Congregations:—

May it please your Majesty, we humbly desire to express to your Majesty our heartfelt sympathy on the occasion of the death of your Majesty's beloved and august Mother, our late Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria.

We commemorate with deep gratitude the many and illustrious virtues which ennobled Her rule, Her steadfast adherence to the methods of constitutional government, Her abiding devotion to Her exalted duty, Her wisdom in counsel, Her love of peace, and Her gracious sympathy with the joys and griefs of all classes of her people.

Especially do we remember with reverence the unfeigned trust in the guidance of Almighty God our Heavenly Father which enabled Her to bear great responsibilities, to endure many personal and public sorrows, and to sustain unfailingly the principles of civil and religious liberty.

And, finally, we respectfully offer to your Majesty the loyal assurance of our earnest prayer that your Majesty may long be enabled to fulfil in prosperity upon the Throne those great purposes which your Majesty has been pleased to announce as the guiding aims of your Majesty's reign, and may be supported, with the divine blessing, in every arduous labour for the welfare of the realm by the help of your gracious Consort Queen Alexandra who shares so fully with your Majesty the sincere affection of your people.

J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, President.
W. BLAKE ODGERS, Vice-President.
H. CHATFEILD CLARKE, Treasurer.
A. W. WORTHINGTON,
CHAS. FENTON,
F. W. STANLEY,
JOHN ELLIS, } Secretaries.

PARLIAMENT re-assembled on Thursday, opened by the King in person. As we write this note the ceremony is proceeding, with great regal state, and we do not yet know what the King's speech will say. But on Wednesday addresses were presented by the City of London, and the London County Council, and replying to the latter His Majesty spoke some notable words:—

The development made in the government of London constitutes one of the most important features of the reign of her late Majesty. The good work done by you and your predecessors and coadjutors in municipal administration has resulted in an improvement in the health and conditions of a vastly increased population which testifies to your well-directed zeal.

In the discharge of your onerous duties, which closely concern the welfare of millions of my people, I am confident that you will not slacken in the efforts which you have made and are making for dealing satisfactorily with the many difficult questions which await your consideration, and especially with that of the proper housing of the working classes, which is one in which I have always felt the deepest personal interest.

IT gives us the greatest pleasure to record that at Oxford on Tuesday Convocation by a unanimous vote conferred the degree of M.A. upon the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter. Mr. Sidgwick, who spoke in support of the proposal, said of Mr. Carpenter (as reported in the Times) that "he was equally distinguished as a preacher, a writer, and a student; that Professor Sanday had especially dwelt upon the merits of his work upon the Hexateuch, lately published by the University Press, and that he had been a keen promoter of the University Extension lectures in Oxford. He warmly advocated the decree, not so much to do honour to the man as to rectify an omission." To many of us it has certainly seemed that this honourable recognition, which gives to Mr. Carpenter a standing in the University so thoroughly deserved, has been long overdue, and we are all the more glad to find it given at last. At the same Convocation an honorary degree of D.Litt. was conferred on Dr. F. J. Furnivall, so distinguished for his Chaucer and Shakespeare studies, and an honorary degree of D.Sc. on Dr. Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., for many years Professor at University College, Liverpool, and now Principal of the new University of Birmingham.

THE last of Mr. Stopford Brooke's Browning lectures at University College on Thursday week returned to the subject of Browning as poet of Nature, which had been partially dealt with in an earlier lecture. With Browning, Mr. Brooke said, the love of humanity always came first, and the love of Nature second, which was quite right; but it was only in his earlier work that these two were blended in a noble harmony, and then his best poetry was written. In the middle period, to which "Fifine at the Fair," "Red Cotton Night-cap Country," and "The Inn Album" belonged, the human interest had driven Nature out, his subjects were commonplace or mean, and Browning had become a dissector of corrupt bodies, not a creator of living beings, and his humour was also in abeyance. He was too absorbed in the intellectual interests of those meaner aspects of human nature, from which, if he had still loved what was great and glorious in Nature, he would have been saved. Later his love of Nature returned, but with diminished power, and there was again more passion and music in his poetry. At the conclusion of the lecture, Dr. Furnival, who presided, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Brooke for the course, which was very cordially passed. On Thursday the second course of five lectures began, which is to deal with the poetry of Clough, Arnold, Rossetti, and Morris.

THE National Conference of Temperance Reformers, held in Manchester on Tuesday, rallied enthusiastically to the support of Lord Peel's Minority Report. It was a great meeting, one of the most significant in its practical bearings, and as prophetic of the future, ever held in the course of the Temperance movement in this country. A special report from the Rev. C. J. Street, who attended the Conference as a representative of the Essex Hall Temperance Association, we are obliged with much regret to hold over until next week.

As President of the Social and Political Education League the Right Hon. Leonard Courtney delivered an address at University College on Wednesday evening, Feb. 8, on "The Making and Reading of Newspapers." The chair was taken by Sir M. E. Grant Duff, and on rising to give his address, Mr. Courtney was enthusiastically received. The address dealt in a lucid and often humorous manner with what goes to make a good newspaper, and with the characters both of editors and readers. The present tendency in Daily papers, he said, was for the comment of the leading articles to grow less and less. Cobden had a theory that papers should have no comment, and only information; but even if that were possible, the result would be very dull. Even the arrangement of a paper implied comment, and it was now a growing custom for papers to mark their emphasis by startling head-lines and spaces. The serious comment of leading articles, he thought, was preferable and of greater value. Contrasting the chief features of French and English journalism, in the former of which the personality of distinguished editors was much more prominent, and signed articles were the rule, Mr. Courtney thought that signed articles had greater weight, and imposed a greater feeling of responsibility on the writers. In England the magazines had largely adopted the practice of signed articles, while Daily papers frequently had special contributions from known men, and he hoped that the habit would grow. From experience of both, it was his opinion that it was as easy to be honest in Fleet-street as in Westminster. Refraining from any direct reference to burning questions of the day, Mr. Courtney reminded his hearers how almost the whole London Press (the Daily News being an honourable exception) had been completely wrong in its judgment of the American Civil War, and it might possibly be found to have been equally so in the present time.

IN the current number of the London Quarterly Review there is an interesting article on "The Present Position of Quakerism," by Mr. Edward Grubb, M.A., joint editor with Mr. W. E. Turner, of the British Friend. During the first half of last century the numbers of the Society of Friends declined from close upon 20,000 in 1800 to only 13,755 in 1864, but since that time there has been a slow but steady recovery, so that at the end of 1899 the numbers were 17,153, with about 8,000 habitual "attenders" at meetings in addition. Last year there were in Great Britain (to which the above numbers all refer) 376 congregations of Friends and 364 "recorded ministers," of whom 219 were men and 145 women, ministers, that is, not in the sense of professional and salaried service, but as persons recognised as "frequently engaged in helpful vocal ministry." The foreign mission work of the Quakers dates only from about 1866, the year in which the "Friends' Foreign Mission Association" was established. The Society administers funds amounting to about £20,000 annually, and in 1899 had 28 missionaries in India, 19 in Madagascar, 17 in Syria, 13 in China, and 2 in Ceylon —79 in all.

ONE of the most remarkable recent efforts of the Society of Friends has been in its Adult Schools, the first of which were established by Joseph Sturge, of Birmingham, about 1845. The Friends' First-day School Association had last year 28,000 adult members enrolled, considerably more, it will be seen, than the membership of the Society of Friends itself. The work is educational and social, and not conducted with a view to proselytising in the interests of the Society, though a certain number of new members are naturally drawn from the Schools into closer religious fellowship with the Society. A large amount of Quaker Home Mission work is done on the ordinary evangelistic lines, but many members of the Society feel strongly that their principles of worship ought to be strictly maintained in this work also. Of the different types of thought to be found within the Society, the "Conservative," the "Evangelical," and the "Intellectual," this last representing the "Broad Church" tendency, and having in Whittier its typical poet, Mr. Grubb says:—

> While the three lines of religious thought, which I have thus attempted to indicate, undoubtedly exist in the Society, there is, I am convinced, no sign of anything in the nature of disruption, but on the contrary a growing harmony of fundamental conviction. I have been struck when attending our Yearly Meetings, to observe how all sections are agreed that Christianity is not essentially a creed but a life and an experience; that for any effective Church life the prime condition is a personal experience of salvation from sin and submission to the will of God; that in Jesus Christ is to be found the supreme and final revelation of God to men. While it may be urged that the Conservatives need more breadth of view, the Evangelicals more "sweetness and light," and the Intellectuals more consecrated fervour and missionary zeal, there is reason to hope that these desirable results may more and more ensue from the various elements continuing to work together.

THE Evangelical Free Church Council of Ashton-under-Lyne does not seem to have distinguished itself either for breadth of sympathies or public spirit, in connection with the memorial services at the time of the Queen's funeral. While in neighbouring boroughs, as very largely throughout the country, churchmen and Nonconformists forgot their differences in a common sorrow and joined in united services, the Ashton Free Church Council appears to have refused the invitation of the Mayor (a Churchman) to a united service, and excluded the Unitarian minister from the Nonconformist service which they themselves arranged. The Ashton Herald of last Saturday contains a vigorous protest from the Rev. W. C. Hall, which is fully endorsed in a series of editorial notes. The following is the conclusion of Mr. Hall's letter:—

> I had hoped that for once our denominational divisions could have been forgotten, and that believers of all creeds could have met in brotherly communion reverently to thank God for the great life which He gave to the nation.
>
> Your readers will understand that my protest is much more than a trivial personal matter; it involves a very serious principle.
>
> Now, sir, I formulate these charges and lay them frankly before those members of the Evangelical Free Church Council who have made the occasion of this letter:—
>
> (1) That, by their refusal to accept the suggestion of the Town Council and their disregard of the earnest desire of the Mayor, they are guilty of an act of disrespect and disloyalty to his Worship.
>
> (2) That, by their insistence on an independent and simultaneous memorial service, they are responsible for a division of religious parties which, from the nature of the occasion, should have been closed and unrecognised.
>
> (3) That, by their ignoring of a free Nonconformist congregation, they have grossly violated the principle of religious freedom which they profess to defend.
>
> (4) That they have subjected that congregation and its minister to public indignity.

WE have not published this year any formal notice of the Essex Hall Year Book, that invaluable handbook of information concerning the churches and other institutions connected with our religious fellowship, published by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. The features of the Year Book are so well known to our readers, that it seems needless to do more than remind them that every year the roll of churches and ministers is revised, and to urge that the book should be brought to the notice of anyone asking for such information as it so admirably gives. (Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. 1s. net.)

WE heard at the time with the greatest regret of the death, on Jan. 16, of the Hon. Mr. Justice Ranade, C.I.E., of Bombay, but waited to record the sorrowful fact, until we should have received fuller information, which has now reached us in the Subodha Patrika, the organ of the Prarthana Samaj of Bombay. Mr. Ranade died very suddenly of heart-disease, having been for the last seven years a Judge in the High Court of Bombay. The whole community mourns his loss. The Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Jenkins, said that he had died "at a critical juncture in the history of his community, whose welfare he had so close at heart, when his sagacity and foresight, his moderation and sympathy can ill be spared." And further:—"It is not only an able and distinguished Judge we mourn to-day, but a great and good man, whose loss can be reckoned as little short of a public calamity." Mr. Ranade was born in 1842, and after graduating in Arts and Law in the Bombay University, became an Advocate in 1871, and thus entered on a distinguished legal and judicial career. For some years he was stationed at Poona, but latterly again at Bombay. A man of great gifts and engaging personality, he was the leader of the Theistic movement in Poona and Bombay, and was an ardent reformer. He had much political sagacity and was in touch with reform leaders in all parts of the country. As President of the Prarthana Samaj, which is akin to the Brahmo Samaj of Calcutta, and President also of the Social Conference, his annual addresses were always looked for with the greatest interest. He was a frequent preacher, and in every way devoted himself to the cause of pure religion and the welfare of his people.

WE are requested to state that the quotations from May Kendall which appeared in our last week's issue are from that writer's essay on "The Work of the Spirit," in the January number of Present Day Papers, to which we had already called attention, with very warm commendation, in THE INQUIRER of Jan. 26.

BURNE-JONES'S "MERCIFUL KNIGHT."

BY THE REV. E. L. H. THOMAS, B.A.

"Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."—Rom. xii. 19, a.v.

"Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy."—Matt. v. 7.

MR. GLADSTONE used to speak of his library as a "Temple of Peace." It seemed to me, spending a holiday once in a great city—and one reputed to be the best governed city in the world, with a school of art founded and supported by its own municipality and with a gallery of choicest works of Art—it seemed to me that even in the heart of such a city is provided for its citizens not only a temple of peace (for such indeed is its magnificent library with something of the stillness of the central sea about it), but also a perfect Temple or Palace of Rest in its Art Gallery. It is, indeed, not usual to regard an Art Gallery as a Palace of Rest. Yet since Mr. Ruskin laid down the maxim that Beauty could only be perceived in repose, a little change has come over some of the Galleries themselves, and over the manner of regarding and treating those Galleries. Those who rush through Galleries experience fatigue, indeed there is no fatigue quite like it. Those on the other hand who believe that a great painter has something to teach, look at his picture, look at it long and lovingly, and let him speak in his own delightful way, and if he be, indeed, a master he gives us at once mental rest of the sweetest kind, and spiritual food: he creates a mere Gallery into a Temple or Palace of Rest.

Birmingham was the birthplace of Burne-Jones. It possesses in the Church of St. Philip four large stained-glass windows, very miracles of design and colour, by his hand: it possesses one of his latest, largest, and finest works in the "Star of Bethlehem," and it possesses the "Merciful Knight." This painting created a profound impression at the time of its production (1863), and while it was met with ridicule, contempt, and distrust by most, for Burne-Jones had a long struggle before him, it was welcomed by others as the beginning of "a triumphant creation of a world of undreamed of beauty, the message of high and holy mysteries." All felt, however, that a genius most powerful, however peculiar, because so unusual, had arisen. In connection with one peculiarity which is now generally felt to be of the very essence of Burne-Jones's work, it is worth while always to remember these helpful words of Mr. Ruskin. "He was inclined to think," he said, "that a certain strangeness or quaintness or even violation of probability, was not only excusable but desirable in the representation of what was neither body nor spirit, nor animal nor vegetable, but only an idea." The exquisite irony of this remark on behalf of the Pre-Raphaelite School must have fallen like a bomb-shell into the enemy's camp, and shaken down many wooden and foolish pictures from acres of walls vulgarised and desecrated by their presence—pictures void of ideas.

Burne-Jones's painting of the "Merciful Knight" depicts "the legend of St. Giovanni Gualberto, a Knight, who rode out on Good Friday to avenge his brother's death, but sheathed his sword and forgave the murderer when he prayed for mercy in the name of Christ, who had died on the cross that day. That evening as the merciful Knight knelt at the wayside chapel, on the Hill of San Miniato, the Christ on the crucifix bowed to kiss his cheek, and at that miracle the warrior laid down his arms to devote himself to the religious life, and became the founder of Vallombrosa." It is, of course, hardly possible for those who have not seen the picture to quite realise its power and beauty, considered merely as a work of art, but the "idea" which Burne-Jones attempted to represent, that at any rate we may realise through a bare description of the picture. It is hardly possible to see more in such a picture than the artist himself put there, since in what Mr. Ruskin has called the mythic school, everything has its meaning, more or less subservient to the main idea of the picture. Yet the origin of this picture would almost seem to belie this statement. Some seven years before the artist had fixed upon his subject, he had painted a background for some as yet unknown subject. Rossetti, the Master of Burne-Jones, as also of Holman Hunt, had been deeply delighted with this wonderful bit of woodland scenery. In course of time the little rude rustic wayside shrine and the figures of the legend were painted in, and there is something very fascinating in the harmony between this story and the scenery amidst which the figures of the story are placed. Looking at the scenery alone, apart from the figures, had one been asked to give it a name, I think one could hardly have failed to name it "Evening Stillness." The subdued light seen through the dense tops of pinewood, the quiet unruffled pool, the lengthening shadows, the water-lily leaves, and closed lily cups, the closing marigolds in the nearest foreground, these would have been signs enough, but there is something about evening, so still and spiritual, that somehow interprets itself without signs: we all know what it is, yet cannot describe it, and in order just to note such perceptions, it is not unusual to use such a word as "mystic" in connection with them. That mystic touch Burne-Jones somehow contrives to convey into his painting. Therein consists a large part of his peculiar genius.

What kind of a spiritual story would most harmonise with such a divine mystic stillness in Nature? Surely something that should equally mystically speak to us without speech or language the divine command, "Be still and know that I am God." As we look upon the actors in this little legendary scene we feel that there is no lightest sound anywhere, as if the very wind were listening to the benediction of the still small voice which the entranced knight is hearing as the thorn-crowned Christ in the carven wooden figure stoops and places his pierced hands about his neck, and touches his face with his lips. The other knight in armour on horseback standing at some distance turns to gaze upon the scene, but the little opened door obstructs his vision of this secret, sweet communion of the All-Merciful with the merciful.

Those who having seen the stooping dimly gilded figure of the Christ of the crucifix felt repelled by what seemed superstitious in it, at least were struck with the genius that somehow contrived to make an obviously rudely carved wooden figure seem living and full of blessing. Men felt that a new and marvellous power had arisen in the world of art, and when, thirty years after, that series of four great paintings entitled the "Briar Rose" was exhibited, the feeling was almost universal that the painter of the "Merciful Knight" had proved himself to be the greatest master of the age.

As we begin to see that it is an idea that was being painted, we begin to perceive the twofold harmony of such painting. Everything is realistic enough, every detail attended to as if it were a photograph, and yet one feels that it is all ministering to the central thought. Never could the marigolds or the curiously interwoven briar roses, or water-lily leaves be more realistically painted, nor the cup thar hangs on its appointed nail, nor the carved angels at the corners of the shrine, not the steel helmet and the sword drawn from its scabbard and placed at the foot of the crucifix, nor many another object, yet gradually one feels how they blend into a common symbol of the spiritual life and tell the story of the soul victorious in its spiritual warfare. The helmet of temporal safety is laid aside for the helmet of spiritual salvation, the sword of the avenger is surrendered for the sword of the spirit. Not less eloquent is the meaning of the woven briars with their sweet roses, which the crown of thorns on the stooping figure almost touches; not less eloquent the marigolds, Mary's golden flowers, Mary the mother of sorrows and of pity, the mother of the Prince of Peace—because the Prince of Mercy—not less eloquent the cup on the shrine so suggestive of the water of life. All contributes to show that the still small voice is speaking to an awakened soul, and saying, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay," saith the Lord, and "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy"—the spirit of Christ is dwelling in him richly, and the gleam of the spiritual life shines through the careworn face of the knight.

The more one looks at such a picture, until one is weaned from its merely artistic beauty to its spiritual beauty, the more one is impressed with the truth of Christ, with the heroism of his warfare. A saying is brought home to us of Ruskin's, "The painters" (he says) "of the mythic school are in the most solemn sense hero-worshippers, and their aim is the brightest and noblest possible, for they at least teach us that all great art is praise." The "Merciful Knight" is the superbest praise of true Christianity.

An incident, related some little time ago in one of our own papers, calls to my mind a parallel incident that came within my own knowledge, many years ago, but they were so different in their results as to afford a vivid illustration of the thought which the great painter endeavoured so powerfully to convey in his "Merciful Knight." The one incident related to a noble-minded man of our own community, one of whose two boys was accidentally shot dead by another boy of the age of fourteen. On the Sunday following this terrible accident he appeared at church with the very lad who had unwittingly caused his son's death. We were asked "to think over the cost and meaning of such an action as this and to try and realise too what a perpetual benediction and means of grace that Sunday morning's service in such companionship must have been to the boy himself." Surely such Christlike action might well be symbolised by such a legend as Burne-Jones has depicted. But how shall we realise the "cost and meaning" of such mercy better than by contrasting it with a similar incident, in which the spiritual power was too weak to combat with the "natural man," but which provides us with a measure of the agony which the father must have experienced, and indicates how much it must have cost to transmute the natural passionate fury of the natural man into the forgiving pity of the spiritual man, enabling him to feel so deeply for another (and that other the offender) as well as for himself. The other incident relates to a young boy who was similarly shot dead accidentally by a young companion. The news had to be broken to his mother. He had been a fatherless boy. The scene was described to me by an eye-witness. It was one of very natural agony, of very natural fury and of a very natural burning sense of vengeance: it was human nature with the passions let loose, deaf to reason, the spiritual life as yet unborn in the poor soul; no power was there to control them, far less to transmute them by spiritual alchemy into forgiving pity and tender mercy for the offender. She would have torn even the mere bearer of the ill-tidings. Ultimately, it is said, she lost her reason. Such, then, is the "cost and meaning" of mercy—victorious. Military warfare, bad enough in all conscience, is mere child's play compared with spiritual warfare. Were it not so, militarism would long ago have ceased to be, slain by the sword of the spirit, abolished by the merciful knights of the spiritual army of Christ. No man who is spiritually strong enough to forgive and show mercy is weak enough ever again to don the steel helmet and buckle on the sword of the avenger, or sanction anyone else's doing it. He knows that the wrath of man does not work the righteousness of God; he learns that, after all, in the last analysis, vengeance belongeth not to him, for he pursues but the shadow, and wreaks his wrath on that shadow, but it is for the Almighty to search the substance, the heart, and repay by awakening it to the horror of its deep guilt. What a vain thing is human vengeance if the heart of the offender is not wrung; and in whose hands lies the power to wring the hearts of men? Not ours. We fill them with bitterness, hatred, revenge.

God is everywhere, we say, and hold this to be a necessary truth, but the truth is rarely grasped with anything like a genuine conviction; indeed, it is probably never brought home to us as we really at heart desire it should be, until after some spiritual victory we rest at our wayside shrine and offer up once more the customary prayer "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us." Hitherto, when that act of devotion had been performed, we had taken our way through the tangled woods and along the hard or slippery paths of life, unaffected, conscious of no response, conscious that no miracle of a stooping and blessing figure had thrilled us to the depths of our being, and poured henceforth a holier influence into our heart. But now—after a genuine spiritual triumph—the wonted act of devotion has won an unwonted response. All is changed. All breathes a joyful response, the very heavens bow themselves down to the victorious soul, the loving arms of the All-Merciful meet about our neck. Alas! not more inanimate and unresponsive than the carven wooden figure of the crucifix does God seem to men in general, as they contemplate Him at church, or by their bedside, or wherever their wayside shrine is, as day by day they offer their devotions to Him, but do not according to the spirit of those devotions. Let us but genuinely strive and conquer in the spirit of our prayers, and at once the wayside shrine is transformed; all its symbols and all our acts of devotion vanish before the flood of real communion with God, as the broken lights of the stars are scattered before the light of the rising sun: God has drawn nigh to us because we at last have drawn nigh to Him. Ah! how vain most of our customary acts of devotion are, how wooden our shrines, how lifeless our Christ, how absent our God; what melancholy pervades our hearts many a day and through the years, because no miracle is wrought on our behalf, because no loving arms of divine approval are thrown about our neck, no kiss of heavenly love imprinted on our face, no holy, joyful influence pervades our soul, giving us cheerfulness, and even a divine gaiety of heart. And yet one genuine spiritual victory brings all heaven to our feet, and the everlasting arms of Heavenly Love are felt about us, and Life is transfigured, and we enter into the joy of our Lord. It is for this divine event we all are really living—often wearily waiting out our three score years and ten and exclaiming, "How long, O Lord, how long!"—and yet the key to Heaven is placed in every hand—to live more nearly as we pray: "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive them that trespass against us"; "I will have Mercy and not sacrifice," saith the Lord.

MR. STOPFORD BROOKE'S SERMON ON THE QUEEN'S FUNERAL.

THE memorial sermon preached by Mr. Stopford Brooke at Rosslyn Chapel on Feb. 3, on the Funeral of the Queen, is now published, and may be had from Messrs. Truslove, Hanson and Comba, 143, Oxford-street, W., or from Essex Hall (price 6d. net., post free 7d.). The sermon is an eloquent and beautiful tribute to the memory of the Queen, in which a striking parallel is drawn between her character and reign and Alfred the Great's. The thousand years' record, which separates the two, is mingled of wrong and right, of wisdom and folly, of base and high endeavour; and yet, said Mr. Brooke, we may humbly acknowledge that the moral and spiritual forces have been stronger than their opposites or we should have met the inevitable doom of unrepented evil.

That we have not met it is due to the predominance, on the whole, in our people of the qualities which were eminent in Alfred and Victoria—love; truth; justice; honour; reverence for divine law; faith in God as sovereign righteousness; desire for the best, and determined effort to gain it; close holding together, shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart; fortitude in trial and difficulty and no surrender to them; duty done even to the death, and obedience gladly given to freely chosen rule and law in the teeth of suffering and defeat; love of the country and of one another; a deep reverence and love of home, its ties and its affections; and lastly—the love of God—deep-seated religious life, in spite of all the waves of unfaith which time after time have broken in storms on our society.

The parallel is then more fully drawn out between Alfred's character and the Queen's, so different in the outward circumstances of their reigns, but so alike in devotion to their people, in goodness and in the simple earnestness of their religious faith, in the love and reverence which from near and far gathered about them.

In the latter half of his sermon Mr. Brooke took the different stages of the funeral procession from Osborne to Windsor as symbolic of the chief lessons of the Queen's life and of what we owe to her. Starting from Osborne suggests the thought of the Queen's beautiful home life in the country, her "quiet, kindly, unadorned life, loving nature and humanity."

To us who are sorely troubled by the noise and complexity of life, by the din of the great cities in which passion and thought never cease to forge new problems; whose society is set far from simplicity and nature; whose literature, art and science have of late removed themselves too much from the ancient and quiet joys of natural beauty and natural affections; whom increasing wealth has led to despise poverty—this is a legacy from her which England would do well to receive and cherish. Let it be linked in thought to the place where she died, whence she was borne across the Solent.

The naval and military pomp of the funeral, symbolic of duty and devotion to the country's flag, point to her ardour for freedom and the true greatness of her Empire. Those great forces, as she honoured them and desired that they should be always used, were for "Defence and Peace."

The vast crowds through which the procession passed stood for the intense interests of the living Present, in which the Queen also lived so faithfully; while the historic chapel, which was the goal of that great pageant, symbolised the long and honourable Past of England, watching over the Queen.

It were well, if on this day when in our vision of the dead Queen lying at Windsor we visit the great past of England, we were to resolve to live not only in action of the present, but in honour of the past. For we are too much beset in the present with base, dishonourable, and material things, with the curse of luxury and mammon, with lies and theft, and shameful forgetfulness of honour. The ideal of true glory which the past has handed to us, and which burns like a star for those who pursue it, ought to be always present with us; the invisible, immaterial, everlasting things which alone make and keep a nation great. To live in the present is our nearest duty, but it saves us from the evils of the present if we live also in the ideal of the past and for the good and glory of the future. So lived Queen Victoria; so may we all live and die!

Finally, the burial beside her husband brought to remembrance once more her beautiful home life, "sanctified in love of God."

The last and wisest legacy she has left us is the record of a perfect home, on which, and on the affection and reverence of which, great and true national life is founded as upon the living rock.

And the sermon ends with a note of joy—joy for so noble a life, so peaceful a death, for her finished work, and for the new life into which she now has entered.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

GLEANINGS FROM HUXLEY'S LETTERS.

To his Sister, after his Engagement (1850).

THE worst of it is I have no ambition, except as means to an end, and that end is the possession of a sufficient income to marry upon. I assure you I would not give two straws for all the honours and titles in the world. A worker I must always be—it is my nature—but if I had £400 a year I would never let my name appear on anything I did or shall ever do. It would be glorious to be a voice working in secret, and free from all those personal motives that have actuated the best. But, unfortunately, one is not a vox et praeterea nihil, but with a considerable corporality attached which requires feeding, and so, while my inner man is continually indulging in these anchorite reflections, the outer is sedulously elbowing and pushing as if he dreamed of nothing but gold medals and professors' caps.

On the Fitness of Women for the Medical Profession (1874).

Without seeing any reason to believe that women are, on the average, so strong physically, intellectually, or morally, as men, I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that many women are much better endowed in all these respects than many men, and I am at a loss to understand on what grounds of justice or public policy a career which is open to the weakest and most foolish of the male sex should be forcibly closed to women of vigour and capacity.

We have heard a great deal lately about the physical disabilities of women. Some of these alleged impediments, no doubt, are really inherent in their organisation, but nine-tenths of them are artificial—the products of their modes of life. I believe that nothing would tend so effectually to get rid of these creations of idleness, weariness, and that "over-stimulation of the emotions" which, in plainer-spoken days, used to be called wantonness, than a fair share of healthy work, directed towards a definite object, combined with an equally fair share of healthy play, during the years of adolescence; and those who are best acquainted with the acquirements of an average medical practitioner will find it hardest to believe that the attempt to reach that standard is likely to prove exhausting to an ordinarily intelligent and well-educated young woman.

From a Birthday Letter to His Son (1878).

Your mother reminds me that to-morrow is your eighteenth birthday, and though I know that my "happy returns" will reach you a few hours too late, I cannot but send them.

You are touching manhood now, my dear laddie, and I trust that as a man your mother and I may always find reason to regard you as we have done throughout your boyhood.

The great thing in the world is not so much to seek happiness as to earn peace and self-respect. I have not troubled you much with paternal didactics—but that bit is "ower true" and worth thinking over.

From Rome (January, 1885).

I need hardly tell you that I find Rome wonderfully interesting, and the attraction increases the longer one stays. I am obliged to take care of myself and do but little in the way of sightseeing; but by directing one's attention to particular objects one can learn a great deal without much trouble. I begin to understand old Rome pretty well, and I am quite learned in the Catacombs, which suit me, as a kind of Christian fossils out of which one can reconstruct the body of the primitive Church. She was a simple maiden enough, and vastly more attractive than the bedizened old harridan of the modern Papacy, so smothered under the old clothes of Paganism, which she has been appropriating for the last fifteen centuries, that Jesus of Nazareth would not know her if he met her.

I have been to several great Papistical functions—among others to the Festa of the Cathedra Petri in St. Peter's last Sunday, and I confess I am unable to understand how grown men can lend themselves to such elaborate tomfooleries—nothing but mere fetish worship—in forms of execrably bad taste, devised, one would think, by a college of ecclesiastical man-milliners for the delectation of school-girls. It is curious to notice that intellectual and æsthetic degradation go hand in hand. You have only to go from the Pantheon to St. Peter's to understand the great abyss which lies between the Roman of Paganism and the Roman of the Papacy. I have seen nothing grander than Agrippa's work—the Popes have stripped it to adorn their own petrified lies; but in its nakedness it has a dignity with which there is nothing to compare in the ill-proportioned, worse decorated, tawdry stone mountain on the Vatican.

On Alcohol as a Stimulant (1889).

I understand that you ask me what I think about "alcohol as a stimulant to the brain in mental work"?

Speaking for myself (and perhaps I may add for persons of my temperament), I can say, without hesitation, that I would just as soon take a dose of arsenic as I would of alcohol, under such circumstances. Indeed, on the whole, I should think the arsenic safer, less likely to lead to physical and moral degradation. It would be better to die outright than to be alcoholised before death.

If a man cannot do brain work without stimulants of any kind, he had better turn to hand work—it is an indication on Nature's part that she did not mean him to be a head worker.

The circumstances of my life have led me to experience all sorts of conditions in regard to alcohol, from total abstinence to nearly the other end of the scale, and my clear conviction is the less the better, though I by no means feel called upon to forego the comforting and cheering effect of a little.

But for no conceivable consideration would I use it to whip up a tired or sluggish brain. Indeed, for me there is no working time so good as between breakfast and lunch, when there is not a trace of alcohol in my composition.

After Tennyson's Funeral (1892).

I think you would like to hear that the funeral yesterday lacked nothing to make it worthy of the dead or the living. Bright sunshine streamed through the windows of the nave, while the choir was in half gloom, and as each shaft of light illuminated the flower-covered bier as it slowly travelled on, one thought of the bright succession of his works between the darkness before and the darkness after. I am glad to say that the Royal Society was represented by four of its chief officers, and nine of the commonalty, including myself. Tennyson has a right to that, as the first poet since Lucretius who has understood the drift of science.

LITERATURE.

MR. HARGROVE'S SERMONS.*

OUR people are getting a very poor reputation as buyers of books, and especially of those books issued in our own religious connection. It is, we believe, more from want of thought than want of heart, but none the less it is deplorable, and discouraging to the faith which is eager to be of service. For these two little books of Mr. Hargrove's we wish a better fate than recent experience would seem to promise them; and especially the first, containing sermons on Acts of Worship, on Adoration, Confession, Thanksgiving and Supplication, we would commend to our readers as likely to be the less popular of the two. They contain lessons which we should do well all to take to heart. The call to worship, in the first sermon on Adoration, is very striking. It contains the following parable:—

Says the mite, "Fine world this cheese of ours, out of it we came and to it we return, excellent its flavour and boundless its extent so that a mite's whole life time would not suffice to make full acquaintance with it! Let us enjoy it while we may, have a good time of it all of us together, and bear no ill will to one another. So shall we live pleasantly and die without anything wherewith to reproach ourselves, and cheese return to cheese. What more could sensible mite desire?" Nothing, I suppose.

Says man, "Look at this earth of ours, how much it affords for instruction and for profit and for pleasure! Let us live and let live, let us get all the good we can for ourselves and not refuse some small share to others! So shall we die content to have lived, and what more can reasonable man desire?" Nothing indeed, unless perchance he feel within himself what one of old asserted "There is a spirit in man and the breath of the Almighty giveth him understanding." Then cannot all these things content him, needs must he stretch beyond them and seek to the Cause of all—beyond the years which come and go to the Eternal who is and was and shall be—beyond the ever-changing phenomena to the abiding Reality—beyond the innumerable many to the Infinite one.

And this is Worship, the highest act of which man is capable, the only one which lifts him out of utter insignificance and makes him great.

The sermon on "Confession" which follows teaches a true lesson of humility, striking a wholesome mean between the orthodox confession of utter depravity and that insensibility to the meaning of sin found in some shallow forms of Unitarianism. The other two sermons on "Thanksgiving" and "Supplication" also

---

* "Our Reasonable Faith: Four Sermons on Ac of Worship." By Charles Hargrove, M.A. London Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. 6d. net. By post 7d.

"Sermons and Impressions brought fro America." By Charles Hargrove, London: Phil Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand W.C. 6d, net, B post 7d.

touch the realities of our religious life in a helpful manner, disposing the hearer or reader to sincere worship; and to the whole is prefixed the following inscription :—

To the Congregation (Present and Future) of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, and to Kindred Congregations founded simply for the Worship of God, these Sermons are with all earnestness and diffidence dedicated.—Leeds, Jan. 1, 1901. C. H.

Mr. Hargrove's "Impressions" of America were contributed to these columns in four letters, now reprinted with the five sermons which set forth some of the lessons which the preacher drew from his experiences across the Atlantic. Of the sermons, four have already appeared in the "Mill Hill Pulpit," and were noticed at the time of their first publication. They are on "Expecting Much and Finding More : A Lesson of Diffidence," "The Ruin of an Empire," "Persecution by the Persecuted," and "Christ's Reign in America." The other sermon, No. 4 in the series, is on "The Worth of Learning," as a preparation for work, telling in a most interesting manner what the early settlers in New England did for education in Harvard College, and of their standard of sacrifice for the higher life.

THE SUNNY SIDE OF LIFE.*

THERE are many readers of THE INQUIRER who are glad to hear of interesting and helpful books of American authorship. Transatlantic literature commends itself to them by reason of a certain freshness of thought, simplicity of statement, lucid exposition rather than originality of idea, aptness of illustration, and a breezy, sunny optimism. Such a volume is the one under notice. It is of special value to ministers as an illustration of the art of popular preaching, and, besides, would interest and help the general reader.

Dr. Perin is a minister of the Universalist Church, and in a city famous for its distinguished preachers, he is well known within and beyond the borders of his denomination. In the face of difficulties in the South-end, the district of the city where his church is situated—difficulties which have killed or dispersed several Unitarian churches—he has built up a living church. It is called The Every Day Church because its doors are always open, offering to all comers the hospitality and quiet rest to be found within its walls, and an unbroken ministry of counsel, help, sympathy, every day of the week given by some sentinel always on duty. A paper read at a ministers' meeting, entitled "A Divided Interest," strongly deplored the long holiday system during which many of the city churches are closed for three months. But here is an Every Day Church justifying by its continual activity the subject of one of those sermons, "The Service of Love," all vitalised by a love of service.

The sermons, twenty-one in number, are simple, thoughtful, practical, and, above all, they are bathed in an atmosphere of sunshine. "I make no secret," he says, "of my faith in an optimistic gospel. Sorrow and sin are real facts. The battle of life is fierce and long. But this is God's world and men need to be assured over and over again that in God's economy night and death and failure and sin are not final. God is in his world. Victory must be final."

Some of the titles of the sermons are worth quoting. The first sermon is entitled, "The Sunny Side of Life," furnishing the title of the volume. Others are—"Don't Worry," "Common-place People," "Listening," "Common Little Lives," "Waiting," "Uncrowned Kings," "The Task and the Man." This is not a critical notice that would come more pointedly from a lay-hand, but a commendatory one. Here is an extract taken from the sermon, "A Divided Cruise," fitted for our own admonition and instruction :—

> Did anyone ever hear of a church impoverished or made weaker because it started another church in a suburb of the same city? Did anyone ever hear of a denomination made weaker because it gave of its substance and time to plant another church in another city, or because it planted a mission in a strange land? One of the most familiar principles established by the foreign missionary work of the last fifty years is that of the reflex action upon the churches which have these missions. Of course they have faith in the intrinsic value of the missionary enterprise, but quite aside from its intrinsic value, aside from its beneficent influence, it is a recognised fact that it has had immense influence upon the home churches themselves. They have been stronger, they have been braver, more enthusiastic, self-sacrificing, more devoted to the cause of Christ because they have divided their meal and their oil with others who needed it.
>
> And what is true of the church in general I believe to be absolutely true of the individual church. I do not even suggest that a church should throw prudence to the winds, that it should be unbusiness-like in its methods, that it should be careless of its resources. But what I do affirm is that a church which will go forth in the spirit of Jesus Christ and serve God with absolute trust and not with despicable fears as to its starvation, is far more likely to succeed. In other words, safety from the famine is to be found, not in guarding the handful of meal and the cruse of oil, but safety and prosperity are to be found often in the hour of famine in sharing it with somone else.

The proceeds of the sale of this volume will be devoted to the support of the charitable agencies of the Every Day Church. J. MCDOWELL.

* "The Sunny Side of Life." Sermons by the Rev. George L. Perin, D.D., Boston. Every Day Church Publishing Co., Boston, U.S.A. One dollar.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

THE February Reviews had little time to prepare any worthy memorials of the Queen. We have already quoted from Sir Theodore Martin's sonnet in The Nineteenth Century and After, after which Sir Wemyss Reid offers a tribute in his record of "Last Month." In the Contemporary, Mrs. Crawford writes as an accomplished newspaper correspondent. The Fortnightly has a sonnet on "Death," and a black border like the others. The Monthly Review was issued too early to contain any notice of the great national event.

The first of the editorial articles in the Monthly is on "The Happy Warrior," with a not very convincing tilt at "our latter-day peace-mongers," whose doctrine is said to rest upon "a materialistic view of life." Who those particular peace-mongers may be we do know, but the writer of the article urges in his argument against those who plead for arbitration that "human justice without an executive power is an absurdity," implying that the final appeal must be to arms. That may be true; but what more materialistic basis for the conduct of human affairs could be assumed? The writer's plea for a noble chivalry in modern arms is worth a good deal more than his travesty of the position of those who uphold the principle of conciliation. This month's number is particularly rich in illustrations. Mr. Roger E. Fry's article on "Giotto," continued from the December number, is rendered doubly valuable by the reproductions of the great artist's pictures, and in another on "An Emperor's Sporting Chronicle," there are some extremely quaint illustrations reproduced from the Emperor Maximilian's hunting and fishing books, dating from 1499 and 1504. Among other articles is a notice by Dr. Hodgkin of Mr. Morley's "Cromwell."

In the Contemporary, Mr. Meredith Townsend writes on "The Influence of Europe on Asia" with not much confidence in what the West may be able to do for the East, and in the matter of missionary effort hardly drawing the conclusion we should have expected from his view of the facts. Mr. Townsend believes literally in the command to Christian disciples to preach the Gospel to all nations, but apparently thinks that in the Divine counsels that effort is not expected to succeed, except in very few instances, "while the rest 'perish everlastingly,' that is, die like the flowers and the dumb creatures of God." We should rather say that the conception of "salvation" which leads to such a conclusion needs revision. Two other articles, "Christianity and Public Life," by D. S. Cairns, and "Co-operators, the State, and the Housing Question," by Gilbert Slater, are specially deserving of attention.

In the Nineteenth Century and After, His Highness the Maharajah Gaekwar of Baroda, following the recent example of the Amir of Afghanistan, writes an extremely interesting account of his "Ways and Days in Europe and in India," showing a clear appreciation of what is good in Western civilisation, and a serious devotion on his own part to the welfare of his people. Dr. Robert Anderson, Assistant Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, writes on "Our Absurd System of Punishing Crime," pleading for a clear distinction in treatment between those criminals who from their birth and the entire conditions of their life cannot really help themselves, and those to whom crime is a choice and a constant profession, without shame, broken only by repeated terms of imprisonment. The former, he urges, should be treated with the kindest restraint, and in homes for such morbid cases; the latter, when proved incorrigible, should not be again let loose on society. The reason for this view is that while crime on the whole is steadily diminishing, the class of professional criminals is on the increase.

To the Fortnightly Sir Robert Hart contributes the third of his valuable articles on China, and Mr. C. S. Jones, in a letter to the Editor, renews his onslaught on the London County Council's past record in the matter of the Housing of the Poor,

OBITUARY.

MR. J. BARRON, MOTTRAM.

IN the death of Mr. John Barron, the Mottram congregation and Sunday-school have lost a most devoted helper. He was born in the village of Mottram, and lived in it throughout his life, and died unmarried at the age of seventy-one years. For two or three years his health had not been good, yet his sudden death came as a surprise to his many friends. Mr. Barron was connected with the Sunday-school from his earliest years, going on from scholar to teacher and superintendent. The latter office he held between forty and fifty years, resigning the post only at the close of last year. For many years, and up to the time of his decease, he was choirmaster in the church. Without the advantages of an early education he strove by self-culture to improve the powers of his mind. He showed goodwill towards all, and was ever ready to do a friendly service whenever he had the power. As a worshipper in the church he was most constant at the services, as well as at his duties in the school. Having to labour during the week for his daily bread, he felt the greatest pleasure in sharing in the work of the Sunday-school. His general benevolence of character won for him a host of admirers.

He was buried in Mottram Cemetery on the 9th inst. The service at the grave was conducted by the Rev. N. Green, and was attended by a company of nearly 300 persons, composed of scholars, teachers, members of the congregation, and friends of the deceased. In the afternoon of Sunday, Mr. Green preached the funeral sermon to an immense congregation, who testified by their presence to the great and wide esteem felt for the Christian man who had ended a useful and honourable life.

MRS. SAMUEL RIDER.

THE congregation of Brookfield Church, Gorton, lost by death during the past week the wife of their church secretary. Although she was, for years, prevented by bodily infirmity from attending the services at church, Mrs. Samuel Rider ever displayed a real and active interest in all that concerned the welfare of both church and school. At the bazaar, which has just closed, and which was held for the purpose of raising £600, to be used as an investment to cover the ground rent of the new schools, some of the work of Mrs. Rider's hands was on sale, and the purchasers of that work value it all the more as being the result of many hours of labour, not entirely free from bodily pain, cheerfully and affectionately given to a cause she held dear.

In these busy restless times we are somewhat apt to overlook those who are not constantly in our midst sharing our excitement and worry. But Mrs. Rider was never overlooked. Ever patient in suffering, loving and gentle in thought, word, and deed, she won the hearts of all who had intercourse with her. The memory of her sweet patient face and kindly ways will have an abiding place in the hearts of a great number of the congregation. The world is the poorer by the loss of such noble gentle souls.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

OUR great and dearly-loved Queen has passed away. She was, indeed, a mother to us all, and we feel like orphans without her. When you are grown up you will be able to tell other children how, when you were young, this great sorrow fell upon us all; and I hope you will always do what you can to make her known to those who come after us, and to keep up the memory of one who was so great and good, both as a Queen and as a woman.

Perhaps some of you may have seen the wonderful and beautiful sight when, on Feb. 2, her body was carried through the streets of London, drawn by her own eight cream-coloured horses; whilst her son, now King Edward VII., and his brother the Duke of Connaught, and her grandson the German Emperor, rode behind the bier, on their beautiful horses, followed by the Guards on their horses, wearing their helmets and great red cloaks; and in front, for something like a mile in length, marched or rode sailors and soldiers of the Queen's Navy and Army, all with slow and solemn step, and arms reversed, all looking so sad and sorry. And the minute guns fired, and the muffled bells of the Churches were tolled; whilst the crowds of the Queen's loyal people stood for hours in the cold, packed as close as they could stand, and silent, full of sorrow for their Mother-Queen. If you saw it, you will never forget it: and many who do not live in London and are far away will read about it, and see pictures of it, and understand, too, how solemn and fine it was, and wish they had been there to see it.

As we sat for hours, waiting for the procession, we were watching the crowds collecting, and the police and the soldiers keeping them in their places. Every soldier was in his place; every policeman did his duty. There were some lancers on their lovely horses, keeping the cross-streets. When the crowd were not to press forward, the lancers moved their horses into a line; the beautiful creatures understood, and gently backed themselves into a closely-packed row, side by side; and when they had to press back the crowds the horses moved gently against them, and put their feet down carefully, as if feeling so as not to step on anyone. When anyone in the crowd fainted or turned ill, a little band of men at once appeared, and took care of the sick person, and carried him or her away out of the crowd, on their arms crossed together, or on a stretcher.

One could not help feeling that one spirit moved everyone that day; and that the great spirit of the whole nation was there showing its sorrow, its honour, love, and reverence. And there was another great spirit present among all those crowds—one of the greatest and highest of all spirits—the spirit of Obedience. It was there in the crowd of lookers-on; it was in the noble horses, in the policemen, the lines of quiet soldiers, guarding the lines of street; it was in the parties of soldiers who marched past, in the sailors, in the officers, in the cream-coloured horses that drew the gun carriage on which lay the coffin with its white covering, with the Royal Standard across it, and the Queen's crown and sceptre upon it.

And then the thought came that in all this obedience they followed the example of that dear friend and Queen whose body was being taken to its last resting place beside the husband "loved long since and lost awhile"; for she, though highest and chiefest of all, was indeed the servant of all, working from her childhood to her old age for the good of her people; always simple, always loving, always just, always compassionate; not asking or demanding honour for herself, but getting it and the warmest love of her people just because of what she was in herself. She was "obedient to the heavenly vision" of what was right and good; just in the same way that every one of us may be. There are sentences in the prayers in two of the services used in some churches that pray thus for our Queen and her people. "Fill her heart and theirs with such loyalty to thee, that her people may be exalted by their loyalty to her." And again, "May the glory of her rule be in the simplicity of her obedience." Those prayers were fulfilled in her, I am sure. Jesus said, "Whosoever will be great among you shall be your minister; and whosoever of you will be the chiefest shall be servant of all." This was one great secret of why our dear Queen's life was so noble and beautiful; she "ministered" to others, and was "servant of all." And so she was truly "chiefest of all," and reigns a true Queen and Mother in all our hearts.

Do we need to be told what this teaches to us, who love her so devotedly, and in our little measure would follow in her steps and try to be worthy of her?

GERTRUDE MARTINEAU.

MATINS.

FLOWERS, when the night is done,
Lift their heads to greet the sun;
Sweetest looks and odours raise,
In a silent hymn of praise.

So my heart would turn away
From the darkness to the day;
Lying open, in God's sight,
As a flower in the light.

HENRY VAN DYKE.

(In the new edition of Horder's "Treasury of American Sacred Song.")

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

TO PUBLISHERS.—[All Books, &c., sent to THE INQUIRER will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review].

Encyclopædia Biblica. Vol. II. Edited by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M.A., D.D., and J. S. Black, M.A., LL.D. 20s. (A. and C. Black.)

Modern Criticism and the Preaching of the Old Testament. By G. A. Smith, D.D., LL.D. 6s. (Hodder and Stoughton.)

The Historical New Testament: A New Translation. By James Moffatt, B.D. 16s. (T. and T. Clark.)

Naomi's Exodus. By Lily H. Montagu. 3s. 6d. (Fisher Unwin.)

Ruskin School Home. By H. Lowerison. (A. J. Paton, 32, Beech-street, E C.)

Scribner's, Expositor, Contemporary, Bookman.

Concerning Children. By Mrs. (Stetson) Gilman. 6s. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 16, 1901.

A LIVING CHURCH.

WE have invited special attention to the article under the title "Choose Life," by the Rev. E. W. LUMMIS, M.A., which is concluded in our present issue. It is a fearless and very earnest statement, by one who has devoted himself to the service of religion, and has an ideal of fuller life and more effective service, into which our churches are called to enter. The statement is clear and vigorously made. Very likely there are points in it which will be met with vigorous dissent; but at least it is deserving of serious consideration. Its appeal cannot be met by any plea of self-complacency. If on any side it is unwisely directed, it must be met by some clearer, more prophetic word, that shall arouse a deeper passion of earnest devotion, and show us a still better way.

There is one point on which we do not agree with Mr. LUMMIS. "We need a name," he says, "and it must be the name of a church." And the difficulty of agreeing upon one satisfactory name he regards as a trifle, which must be overcome, unless our cause is to be given up as hopeless. For our own part, we cannot accept the alternative. It is easy to make fun of the laborious title of our National Conference, but it denotes a serious attempt at a true unity, which for the present, in our judgment, it is best to accept and leave as it is. In the first of three articles on "A Century of Unitarianism in England," published in these columns last December, we described the varied origin of the churches now united in our National Conference, and popularly known as the Unitarian body. We briefly traced the history of Unitarianism in those churches and attempted to draw out the main lines of religious life along which their endeavours ought to be directed. But as to a name that could truly denote their distinctive character, and therefore be adopted with satisfaction and profit by the whole body, we then wrote :—

The time may come, when, re-born to a new fervour and clearness of purpose and spiritual insight, they will realise that they are in fact a union of Free Catholic Churches, and that they can have no other name; but that time is not yet.

And we still hold that our wisest course for the present is to have patience with the various names of our churches, and their collective use in the title of the National Conference, and that what we have to work for is a deeper conception of the meaning of our church life and a truer fulfilment of the great purpose for which we are united in Free Churches. It may be an awkward position to be in, but it might easily be very much worse, and it is because Mr. LUMMIS's article, quite apart from the name question, pleads so strongly for the essential things, that we value it so highly, and hope that it will command the attention it deserves.

The essential things, as we understand the matter, are the complete consecration of our individual lives and of our churches to the worship and service of GOD, that we may more perfectly do His will in the nurture of a true spiritual life, in the battle with evil in the world and in testimony to truth. In these things we have common aims with all churches, and we have our own special service to render.

Mr. LUMMIS, asking what is our peculiar mission, "our cause," says it is not to proclaim GOD's Fatherhood and Man's Brotherhood, since that is a mission common to us and all other disciples of CHRIST. It is of course a large part of our duty, and so of our mission, as worshippers of the living GOD, who with JESUS have learnt the great truth of His love. Our churches would still have that duty and that high privilege, even if all that separated them from other churches and gave them a "peculiar mission" were at an end. And in the same way it must be their supreme aim, as it should be of all other churches, to nourish a true spirit of worship and surrender to the will of GOD; as, indeed, Mr. LUMMIS has said: "Our first and deepest need is real prayer, real worship, sincerity in GOD's service." And anyone who desires to see stronger, fuller life in our churches will use every endeavour to attain and to nurture in the House of Prayer a deeper reverence, more absolute surrender to the FATHER'S will, more heart-felt prayer.

This is not to be achieved apart from the practical conduct of life. Prayer grows stronger and more fervent in the church where lives are bent with passionate endeavour, in brave, practical faithfulness and self-surrender, on the doing of righteousness; and so the ideal of a beneficent Christian brotherhood, with its spiritual home in the church and its work in the world, must be inseparably bound up with all endeavour after more vitality and fruitfulness of church life. There must be in the fellowship of our churches in far richer measure, not only the spirit of prayer, but the graces of a true Christian manhood and womanhood, and lives pledged to active service for the Kingdom of GOD amid all the needs and interests of the world.

All this is essential, and ought to be felt to be essential in every church of whatever name. But then we come to what is peculiar in the mission of our own churches, for there is a special call to faithfulness on our part in the manner in which we must fulfil these great ends, the only manner in which we can fulfil them with fidelity to the light that has been granted us.

Our Cause, Mr. LUMMIS declares, is the Gospel of Truth. That is to say, in our religious life we are to be absolutely dependent upon GOD, who is the Spirit of all truth. We are to receive no creed or standard of belief imposed by external authority, even the most venerable and august; but are to dare to make the great surrender and pledge ourselves to the holiest service, obedient to the one authority, the inward witness of the present Spirit of GOD. We are to receive from Him our daily bread, living out in all its fulness our true life with GOD, fearlessly declaring all that He shall give us of truth to speak, humbly dependent upon Him and open always to new light. Thus, what seems to some a dangerous trusting in ourselves is in fact a complete surrender to the living GOD. Neither does it, as some would say, cut us off from the past and from the great tradition of Christian faith. That inward witness interprets for us all the past, while it gives us present light and leads in the true way. It opens to us all the spiritual riches of Christian truth and fellowship with CHRIST himself and the Communion of the Saints. It is our distinctive mission to prove in the fellowship of our Free Churches, that this is the truest service of GOD, the open way for the clearest and fullest revelation of His truth: that so old error is most surely purged from our religious faith, while knowledge grows from more to more; conscience is quickened to the truest insight, and worshippers are made the most effective workers in every good cause, for the uplifting and blessing of mankind. It is a solemn and glorious trust which we have received, demanding of us the utmost and humblest consecration—consecration of the inward spirit and of all that makes the outward ordering of our life.

Some of the things we may do, and are called to do as witnesses to GOD's truth in the present time, and servants of His Kingdom, Mr. LUMMIS has indicated, as also the spirit in which all our work must be done and our sacrifices made. We now ask of others also their counsel in this matter, not in captious criticism, but in earnest endeavour after deeper wisdom and clearer insight, that together, if it is the will of Him in whom we trust, we may attain to something more of what we long for in the holy service to which we are called.

CHOOSE LIFE.

III.

15. As a distinct religious community we have a distinctive divine commission; but we realise it so imperfectly that we are doing little or nothing to fulfil it. Now this our failure to realise our special mission is not, as some keep telling us, an index of religion, but of irreligion. If a man neglects his own peculiar duty, is that a sign that he is more, or less, careful in the common duties of mankind? When we fall into sectarian vices, it is not through obeying too eagerly, but through listening too carelessly to the voice of God, as it speaks to our very selves.

16. What, then, is our peculiar mission—what is "our cause"? Not, certainly, to proclaim God's Fatherhood, and Man's Brotherhood; this grand duty we share with our fellows in Christ. Not, I suppose, to announce that Joseph begat Jesus? No; our belief concerning certain historical facts is conspicuous only by contrast. If there were no Virgin-birth superstition, no leaning to the vulgar-wonderful among our fellow-Christians, we should never need to touch those facts at all, but "our cause" would still remain to us, surely. Our cause is the Gospel of Truth: truth of mind, as well as truth of lips. Therein the God of Truth has quickened our conscience, in order that we may quicken the conscience of the world. We are to proclaim, in His name, that while a man may believe error, or speak error, inadvertently, yet to do either deliberately, or through wilful carelessness about truth, is a sin; that it is as wrong to force our reason as it is to lie; as wrong to accept beliefs without examination as it is to vouch for a story without certainty of its truth. No man has a right to believe anything on inadequate evidence; no man has a right to petrify his beliefs, loving "the truth," as some Credo enshrines it, or his own opinion, more than truth as God reveals it to the earnest soul: when Faith and Reason blend their diverse images, like the two eyes of a man, into one ordered message. This is our cause—to restore Intellectual Truth to her high place in the circle of the Virtues. He that sinneth against her wrongeth his own soul: all they that hate her love death.

17. And how shall we serve our cause? First of all, by a more vigorous polemic. I fear that this word may startle and distress some readers. "Would it not be better to expound the positive aspects of our faith, and leave negations in the background? Ought we not to live at peace with all men?" When we rightly can; and here our warfare is not with men, but "against tyrannous principles which keep the world in darkness, and the spirit that breeds evil in heavenly things."* Let us not cry peace with the spirit of untruth, for there is no peace for us with that spirit. And do you not see that this is the most positive thing we have to tell? That its revealing radiance flings a thousand shadows of negation is proof and measure of the world's need of it. But it is not primarily with the shadows that we have to do: we are sent to bear witness of the light.

18. In Biblical criticism, especially, certain results are by this time established; you may know them, or not know them; but there they are to know; they are not matters of opinion any longer, but of knowledge. To ignore them, or to deny them without scrutiny, is a sin against truth. And their necessary implications in religious belief are enormous and far-reaching. It is our plain duty, in due time and place, to proclaim them, exhibit their consequences, and urge obedience to intellectual truth.

19. Do you think God sent us out before we were needed? Religion in Christian lands stands on the very brink of choice between life and death—life, if faith be pure enough to correct its creed; death, if it cling to that dying body wherein truth used to dwell. Rome of the second century, Rome of the sixteenth, show us what religion becomes when its forms survive belief, and still are cherished. Shall England of the twentieth century form a triad with these? She will, unless the prophets of the God of Truth proclaim their message.

20. This polemic is not sectarian; it is at the opposite pole from the spirit of schism. The spirit of schism says, "Believe what I believe, or be anathema." Let us say, "Believe only what God reveals to you, believe all that He reveals to you, entertain His angels with diligence and without fear, and you will be blessed."

21. Next, we must educate both ourselves and our fellows. There are many of us with leisure and capacity for obtaining knowledge of much that we ought to know. Means are readily found. Let strong churches by themselves, weak churches in groups, become centres for University Extension teaching. Let them employ University lecturers for social, economic, literary teaching; critical scholars for Bible study and comparative religion; others for subjects in which they are strong.* To such lectures many would come who are not yet of our fold. In the economic courses a hopeful effort might be made to trace the real causes of slum-misery and cognate horrors. The day cometh, and now is, when we must labour in that dreadful field of duty with all our heart and all our mind.

22. And are we not, we cultured Unitarians, are we not able once a quarter, once every half-year, to produce a really worthy review? Has the New World left the country of Milton, Locke, and Martineau so far behind? Critical reviews there are already; but we want one that shall apply the results of criticism. We want a vehicle for social-economic thinking of heavier calibre than our weeklies can carry. We want a first-class review consecrated to intellectual truth. I am sure we have writers among us, equal to the task. It is money, no doubt, that lags.

IV.

23. Why did Dan remain in ships, and Asher in his breaches? Because there was no king in Israel. When the king came, by his very first act "Saul chose him three thousand men of Israel," and we hear but little of the tribes after that. But this earlier affair of Barak begins with the choosing of men "of the children of Naphtali and of the children of Zebulon"; to whom Ephraim, Machir, and others added contingents—but Gilgal abode beyond Jordan, and Reuben among his sheepfolds.—(Reuben's "Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds," if extant, are doubtless of a sturdily independent type.) Is not this an inspiriting cry: St. George for Merrie Northumberland, Huntingdon, Wiltshire, and other non-continental counties! We need a name and it must be the name of a Church.

24. We need a name. "But, you know, we shall never agree about it. Everybody has his own choice, and if you start that topic we shall quarrel till doomsday." I do not believe it. If it is true—if we really are capable of wrecking our cause for such a trifle—we are hopeless. The selection of a name is, of course, not unimportant (my own fancy is "Philalethian"; I resign it in advance), but it is a trifle in comparison with our need of finding some name for a common standard. There are many ways in which it could be done. I mention one. Let the Conference Committee, duly empowered, invite each congregation to send a suggestion, together with an expression of willingness to accept the final decision. Then take a plebiscite vote on all the names suggested, and a final vote, if necessary, on those that head the poll.

25. And this must name a Church—a really organic whole, capable of speaking and acting, thrilling its health and power into every slightest part. Why are we not a Church? We are bound together by spiritual ties; we are closer to one another even in creed than any populous orthodox sect; our common rejection of a credo is but another link; yet we do not come together. Our life is centred in our several congregations: to be a member of one of them is—to be a member of one of them, no more! It ought to be membership of a Church as great as the sum of our common life. How can we bring this about?

26. Well, we have our Triennial Conference of This, That, and the Other. Let us hope it will soon be rationally named. The next step will be to make it annual. Why not? Have we not life enough to throng the tent of meeting once a year? Is the real obstacle, again, money? Alas, if so! And we have our Conference Committee, already useful, capable of being made supremely useful. And we have our Sunday School Association. And we are to have our Union of Guilds. Here are all the stones to hand, will we but raise and lay them, for the building of a temple where the Sons of Truth may together worship their Father every day.

27. What is our Church to do? Ah! what might she not do, a church whose foundation is truth, whose corner-stone is love. Of all the glorious tasks awaiting her I will name two, for which the time is ripe.

28. We might begin a work of exceeding beauty and use—the creation of a pure dogmatic. Hitherto all systems of dogma

* Eph. vi. 12.]

* Cannot the Hibbert Trustees help us here?

have been based on some pretended special revelation, or on one man's sole insight. We might begin to build up the science of God revealed in conscience, inductively, by patient observation, record, comparison, inference and test, as the sciences of God revealed in Nature have been reared. The task would be long—in one sense, eternal—but full of joy, and exquisite in issue.

29. And we might, nay, we must, set ourselves as a church to detect some, at least, of the causes of disease in our industrial system, and to remove those which we detect. The drink evil we shall assail, of course; but there are deeper roots to it all than this crusade will touch. Is it usury that works the ruin? Is our system of taxation a cruel one? All the problems of wealth and poverty are to be faced, and the church that dare not face them is no true church of Our Father.

30. Our own union will be our first lesson in the great truth we have still to learn, our membership one of another. By common toil we shall realise our own faith, and uphold our brother's; reverence will grow in the service of truth, love in the work of kindness. We shall awake into a new harmony of saintly character, where mercy and truth have met together, and righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Here is life for the choosing; it is to be won by prayer, thought, love, toil. But if we delay to offer those sacrifices, Heaven and Earth in their austere order bear us witness that our very inertness will be the choice of death, and the beginning of death. In this time that now is we must wake to newness of life, or else drowse contemptibly into nothingness.

E. W. LUMMIS.

THE GROWTH OF POWER.

THE wealth of the world to-day is enormously greater than ever before, giving us more power for good or ill. The mere number of human beings means the raw material of power, and the great increase of populations in civilised countries throughout the century makes it probable that there is more vital human force in the world to-day than ever before. The power of knowledge, too, is incalculable: the mere power to read, and yet more the training given in our elementary schools has enormously increased the potential forces of the civilised world. All these and other changes I might mention, point in the same direction: they all show the stupendous increase in power which has been given to man in the nineteenth century. Man ought to stand amazed before his own creations and the opportunities of action which they give him. The gravest of all questions is, what are we going to do in the future with these tremendous powers? We have larger powers of mischief as well as larger powers of good: we can destroy far more easily, as well as produce far more easily, than formerly. A French General said a short time ago that he had in his hands a discovery which would place France once again at the head of all the nations of the earth. What was the discovery which was so to exalt his nation? It was no secret for abolishing poverty or healing diseases which have been thought incurable. It was not a discovery for making two blades of corn grow where one had been grown before, or for more effective education of children, or for providing vaster quantities of useful things. It was simply a new destructive, which to his imagination appeared likely to outdo all former destructives in its far-reaching ruinous intensity. We need not fear, I trust, that he was right, but the man's statement is typical of one of the dangers of our time. It is a strange and awful ambition to make a nation superior to others simply in virtue of its powers to destroy. Power, of course, there must be, to defend, to protect, to hinder wrong, as well as to produce what is useful and beautiful and good. But that any man should imagine that the mere power to destroy could make his nation great is an appalling perversion of the truth. Power to heal, power to alleviate, power to help, power to give knowledge and pleasure, power to make average human life bright and happy, and free from sordid cares, power to create beautiful things, these are the powers by which a nation can become great.

How little yet have we done in comparison with what remains to do! If an intelligent and kindly man a hundred years ago could have been made even partially to realise the powers which have been gained for us, and which we possess to-day, I think his first exclamation would have been, "Thank God, then there will be enough for everybody." He would have believed that poverty, except for those who refused to work, would have been rendered impossible. We feel to-day how sadly far from being realised is such an expectation. We have the poor still with us, living in wretched houses and with an insufficiency of everything. We have strife and misery and wickedness. It is a proof that mere machinery and power to produce useful things cheaply cannot solve our problems. If we have been taught one thing more than another by the nineteenth century, surely we have been taught that. We and the other civilised nations have increased enormously in power: but poverty and wretchedness and wearing anxiety and war are still all about us. It cannot be said that we have increased equally in joyousness, in loving kindness, in power of self-control. If machinery and intellectual methods and patient study alone could have solved the great moral problems and have brought peace upon earth, it would have been done, or, at any rate, approached, in the last century. We cannot feel that this is so. Great instruments of power for good or evil have been put into our hands, and are at the service of our hearts and minds. But what of the hands and hearts and minds themselves? It is the way we use these powers, not the mere possession of them, which will help or hinder the coming of the kingdom. We stand at the beginning of a new century more richly endowed with power than mankind has ever been before; forces have been entrusted to us which may make either for strength or weakness. Let us glorify God, who has given such power to men, and let us receive the gift with holy fear, praying that he may give us the wisdom and goodness to use these powers aright, that our strength may be for the healing of the nations and the spirit of our action in accordance with the mind of Christ.

H. GOW.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE STORY OF THE UNRIGHTEOUS STEWARD.

SIR,—This story of the Unrighteous Steward has occasioned much searching of heart on the part of Biblical commentators, because, when it is detached from its context and place in the Gospel narrative, as our good friend Mr. Reed has done, and treated as an illustration of violation of the moral law, of doing unto others as we would they should do unto us, Jesus does seem to treat the conduct of the Unrighteous Steward far too leniently, and does not insist, some naturally and properly think, with due emphasis upon the enormity of the man's wickedness in defrauding his Lord of his property, and the certainty that full retribution will ultimately overtake the man for his crime.

But if, instead of detaching the parable from its context and treating it as an illustration of unrighteous conduct, we carefully consider it in its critical connection with the Gospel story, we shall find another and, it seems to me, a truer and very significant meaning. The story occurs in the latter part of the ministry, when Jesus is going up to Jerusalem, as he has warned his disciples, to suffer and be rejected, and all the stories or parables in this section of the ministry are illustrations of Jesus's teaching of the doctrine of the Cross.

The story seems to me to illustrate that doctrine most thoroughly. For what is its real thesis? Is it not that when men have to deal with themselves and seek their own gain, and try to save their own individual lives, then there is nothing which they allow to daunt or hinder them? Then they do not wait on circumstance, but at once use every circumstance, however adverse at first sight it may be, as a stepping-stone for promoting their own advantage, and so resolutely making the best of things. But where it comes to seeking to serve God, by learning to deny ourselves when the call comes to us to leave our all and follow the Master, then we become exceedingly sorrowful and turn away, feeling that the time for such a decision is not yet come.

And so Jesus points out to all his disciples that if they were as determined to allow nothing to daunt them, if they were as resolute in using divine means as men in general are in using those means which he termed the mammon of unrighteousness, then the Christian disciple would be received into the eternal tabernacles.

It may be urged that this interpretation of the parable is accepted upon purely subjective grounds. It is true. But then what other grounds can we find upon which to base our judgment as to the authenticity of the parable? The parable is contained in every MS., every version we possess of the Gospel of Luke, and Textual Criticism has no objections to offer to its authenticity. So that all who reject it as authentic do so on subjective grounds also. Might not Mr. Reed's methods of criticism apply with equal facility to any and every parable? Am I to refuse to teach the parable of the Sower because Jesus has no rebuke for the careless husbandman, who wastes three seeds on unsuitable ground to one he casts on good ground? Or, again, am I to explain to my children the whole story of the relations of Gentile and Jew in the first century in order to make them understand why some do not accept the parable of the Prodigal Son as authentic, because they think they can find in it a reference to the contest between Paulinism and Legalism? May not a word be urged on behalf of the simple-minded and earnest Parent and Teacher, who wishes the children to learn what are the contents of the Gospel, what the New Testament does tell us about Jesus Christ, before initiating them into all the methods of the Higher Criticism? I for one am indebted to Mr. Hirst for his book just because he deals only with the text, seeks to make that clear, and leaves the disputes of the commentators entirely upon one side. I may claim to have been as diligent a student of the Higher Criticism, especially with regard to the New Testament, as my time and means have afforded opportunity. No one values the Higher Criticism more than I. The results thereof are, I trust, apparent in all my teaching to my young people and my pulpit ministrations. But the very last thing I desired for my own children, or any others for whom I am responsible, has been a premature initiation into the mere methods of criticism. An appreciation of these methods is simply impossible to children, and, I may add, to amateur theologians.

CHAS. J. POYNTING.

SIR,—Will you allow me to suggest another interpretation to the parable of the Unjust Steward? Mr. Crowther Hirst's explanation of it resembles that in Mr. Peabody's "Mornings in a College Chapel." But neither seems to me to touch the true meaning of the parable, or of the lesson it was intended to teach.

I remember Dr. Charles Beard drawing our attention to the fact, that in the Gospel according to St. Matthew we find the parables grouped together—all those referring to one subject, such as "the Kingdom of Heaven," gathered in chapter xiii. for instance, and those relating to "the End of the World" in chapter xxv. But that, in the Gospel according to St. Luke, this is not the case. Each parable is there connected more or less with the special subject our Lord wished to enforce, and in almost every instance it serves as a definite illustration to some definite thought, some great maxim. In many cases this is obvious. Thus in chapter xviii. we find "He spake a parable unto them to the end that men ought always to pray," and again "And He spake this parable unto certain that trusted in themselves that they were righteous."

But if we want to grasp the meaning of the parable of the Unjust Steward we must, I think, go back to the beginning of chapter xv., and notice that "the Pharisees murmured at him for receiving sinners and eating with them," and he answered them by the three great parables of God's forgiveness of sin, and of rejoicing over the conversion of one sinner.

Then he turned to his disciples and warned them, as he had done so often, against the spirit of self-seeking and worldliness that characterised the Pharisees and their captious criticisms. And after he had drawn the picture of one seeking his own advantage by unjust and unlawful means—hesitating at no meanness; and because he was successful, praised, or commended, by those of like mind, he proceeds to draw forth the moral: Why was he commended? Because the children of this world are, among those of like mind with themselves, wiser than the children of light. Here is the first antithesis between the unscrupulous man of this world and the sons of the light. Then, with a touch of that divine irony that sometimes broke from his sorely-laden heart, he adds, if I may paraphrase his words: "Make for yourselves, then, friends as this steward did—through the unrighteous use of the riches of this world—and then when the world and its riches fail will they receive you into the eternal habitations prepared by God for the children of light?" Returning to the meaning of the parable, he points out that unfaithfulness in little things leads on to unfaithfulness in great things—"He who is unjust in the least is unjust also in much." Who shall commit the true riches of God's heavenly gifts to one who has proved himself unfaithful in the trusts of daily life? If you are unfaithful—as the steward was in that which is another man's—who shall give you larger opportunities of service or the reward of righteousness? And he ends with that positive and emphatic declaration, "Ye cannot serve God, the God of Holiness and Righteousness, whom I declare unto you, and also the God of unrighteous riches and ill-gotten gains." That this was his meaning we can hardly doubt when we read that the Pharisees, for ever seeking to make the best of both worlds and who were covetous, "derided him." They recognised that he had taken up his parable against their spirit, and he returns, I think, to the original contrast between the commendation of wrong-doing by this generation, and the principles that must guide the sons of the light, in the strong words: "That which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."

ANNA M. WEIR.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

SIR,—Messrs. Rowntree and Sherwell's book, "The Temperance Problem and Social Reform," is now published in a sixpenny edition, and is thus placed within the reach of everyone. It is safe to predict an immense increase in its circulation, and a great impetus to the Temperance cause. The work had already reached a ninth edition, and had received the warmest approval of eminent men in every sphere of life. But the price was still six shillings, and the working man, who is most concerned, rarely buys so costly a book—though six shillings is found by the authors to be the average weekly expenditure of working-class families upon alcoholic drinks! The sixpenny edition is abridged, but in 180 pages of good print it contains everything essential. The last and most important chapter, "The Solution of the Problem," is complete, and (a very rare, if not unique, feature in such an edition) there are as many as sixteen of the original telling illustrations. If all Temperance Societies and elder classes in Sunday-schools would study this book, if all working-men's clubs and societies of various kinds would form reading-circles for the same purpose, the effect would be enormous. The careful yet comprehensive method of the authors, their clear and straightforward style, the moderation and restraint of their tone (as if they always felt, with Lowell, "In my own heart I find the worst man's mate")—all this would be to many an education in itself, and a far-reaching reform would at last get fairly under way.

H. RAWLINGS.

FORGIVENESS.

SIR,—In Mr. Ruddle's interesting review of "Morality as a Religion" he raises the very important question of Forgiveness. Is it sufficiently recognised that while the capacity for forgiveness is an essential element in all noble human character, it cannot in the same sense be applicable to the Almighty God? Consider the meaning of forgiveness. It implies either the remission of a penalty, or a change of feeling in the one who forgives towards the one forgiven. If we believe that the penalties attached to wrong by natural law are all reformatory and beneficial, would any one ask to have them removed, or expect that our Father would comply with so unwise a request? Human penalties cannot be trusted to be always wisely appointed; they are often simply revengeful, and may be beneficially remitted. The other meaning of the word—namely, a change of feeling towards the one forgiven—is equally inapplicable to the God of Love, in whom there can be no anger nor sense of injury, and who will surely do the best for each of us under all conditions.

Is there any sense in which the Almighty and All-knowing Father can "forgive" his human child? F. T. MOTT.

[In answer to Mr. Mott's final question we cannot do better than refer our readers to Dr. Martineau's sermons in the "Hours of Thought," Vol. I. "Divine Justice and Pardon Reconciled," "Forgiveness to Love," and Vol. II. "The Limits of Divine and Human Forgiveness." From the first of these sermons the following passages are taken. ED. INQ.]

From Dr. Martineau's "Hours of Thought."

The truth is, it is a hard thing for our narrow mind to take in the infinite harmony of Divine perfection. Our conscience and our affections make incompatible demands on God. We require for our support that he be faithful; we look, for our comfort's sake, that he be tender too.

. . . .

Not one consequence which he has annexed to wrong-doing will fail to appear with relentless punctuality: no miracle will interpose to conduct away the lightning of retribution. Within that realm of law and nature, he is inexorable, and has put the freedom of pity quite away; and as the Atlantic storm turns not aside to avoid the ship where sanctity or genius are afloat, so neither does the tempest of justice falter and pause to spare the head uplifted in repentant prayer. But it is otherwise with respect to the soul and person of the sinner himself: the sentiments of God towards him are not bound: and if, while the deed of the past is an irrevocable transgression, the temper of the present is one of surrender and return, there is nothing to sustain the Divine aversion or hinder the outflow of infinite pity. Free as our soul is to come back and cry at the gate; so free is He to open and fold us gently to his heart again. Weak indeed from the waste of all our strength, lame with our many wounds, in peril from our dim sight, and pain from treasured agonies, we must still be; and God can only say "My poor child, I cannot help thee here: this burden must thou carry to its end." But still the penitent lives no outcast life: the light of reconciliation is upon him: he suffers and is very faint, and often his heavy cross weighs him to the earth: but he can bear the scourge of nature, now that he is withered by no scorching look of God. Wrestling with the Almighty no longer, he can move on upon his journey with a cheerful heart, though ever after halting on his staff. And so ceases the contradiction between the exactitude of Justice and the tenderness of Pity; and we may say with understanding heart "If we confess our sin, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

NEW CHURCH AT CHORLTON-CUM-HARDY.

THE new church in Wilbraham-road, Chorlton (one of the fruits of the Manchester Forward Movement), the foundation stones of which were laid in July last by Mr. J. R. Beard and the Rev. C. J. Street, was opened on Saturday last by a religious service conducted by the Rev. J. Ruddle (pastor), with a sermon by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie. A crowded congregation enjoyed the sermon, which was well characterised by a hearer who remarked to the pastor, "What a capital sermon, perfectly simple, yet containing the very kernel of the Gospel." The appearance of the church within and without gave universal satisfaction, and if some remarked that the heating apparatus was a little too efficient, it was immediately remembered that the conditions were not exactly normal, for the crowd aided the heating and somewhat hindered the ventilating arrangement.

The service was followed by a tea in the schoolroom, after which there was a public meeting in the church, under the presidency of Mr. R. C. Law (chairman of committee). Addresses, in a cheerful tone, were delivered by the Rev. C. J. Street, W. H. Burgess, W. Copeland Bowie, C. Roper, J. Ruddle, and Principal Gordon; also by the Chairman, by Mr. A. E. Piggott, and by Mr. G. W. Raynor Wood. On Sunday sermons were preached by the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and there were excellent congregations both morning and evening. The collections made on Saturday and Sunday amounted to nearly £33. It should be said that assistance was very kindly rendered by the Strangeways Choir at the Saturday afternoon service. We understand that the church opens practically free of debt.

THERE is no future destiny for man too sublime to be rationally hoped for, and the dreamers of dreams are the wise men of the world.—Dr. Crosskey.

MEMORIAL HALL, MANCHESTER.

THE annual meeting of the trustees of the Memorial Hall, Manchester, was held on Friday evening, Feb. 8, followed by the annual dinner at the Reform Club, at which Mr. Harry Rawson presided, with Mr. John Dendy acting as vice-chairman. The following trustees were present:—Messrs. Benjamin Heape, G. H. Leigh, William Long, Henry Lupton, Francis Nicholson, Jesse Pilcher, A. E. Steinthal, Frank Taylor, G. W. Rayner Wood, G. S. Woolley, and A. H. Worthington. The guests were the Revs. Ambrose Bennett, W. Copeland Bowie, Alex. Gordon, W. Holmshaw, J. E. Manning, C. T. Poynting; Messrs. W. Haslam (Bolton), T. Holt (Mayor of Bury), W. E. Nansen (Monton), A. E. Paterson (Bowdon), Edward Talbot (Manchester), and E. W. Marshall (Secretary). Letters were read from Mr. Charles Eckersley and Mr. E. C. Harding, expressing their regret as trustees at their inability to be present; the Chairman also explained that Messrs. J. R. Beard, Joseph Broome, H. P. Greg, C. W. Jones, and W. H. Talbot, were unable to be present, and expressed the hope that Mr. Beard would return to England restored to health, for he was greatly missed at all gatherings of Manchester Unitarians.

Mr. RAWSON stated in his opening address that it was the thirty-sixth annual dinner of the Memorial Hall Trust, and that he had been present on every occasion. He bore witness to the broad principles of the Trust, and to the extremely useful work accomplished in and through the Memorial Hall. In proposing the health of the King, he said that when the dinner was arranged for he had expected to propose the health of the Queen, but it had been ordered otherwise. The best and most beloved Queen in the whole of our English history had been taken from us, and no better hope could now be expressed than that Edward VII. should imitate the noble example of worth and work set before him by his august mother. Mr. Rawson gave a brief but graphic sketch of the six Edwards who had preceded the King, and he thought that the addresses to the people of England, to the Colonies, and to India, were an evidence that he would make a name for himself greater and more beneficent than any of those who had gone before him had done.

In proposing the sentiment of the Memorial Hall, Mr. RAWSON said that the principle of the "open trust," on which the building was founded, had not yet attracted many imitators. Cobden and Bright prophesied that Free Trade once adopted by England would become universal throughout the world, but the prediction had not been verified. He had not altered his opinion as to the soundness of the principle which refused to pledge the future to any fixed form of doctrine, or ritual, but he was bound to admit that the world seemed in no great hurry to adopt it. The Roman and the Anglican Church still upheld the old intolerance and narrowness in their creeds and articles; and though individuals here and there were liberal, ecclesiastical systems seemed at present incapable of reconstructing themselves on any basis that would admit Unitarians to their fellowship; and "orthodox" Non-conformity in its organised forms was equally opposed to any federation of the churches which would encourage Unitarians to seek admission. It was, therefore, of supreme importance that Unitarians should hold together and work together, otherwise the broad principles of religious freedom and progress in which they believed were in danger of suffering an eclipse during the present generation.

Mr. JOHN DENDY, in responding to the toast, pointed out that in many different ways the Memorial Hall had proved of great service in affording a meeting place and a platform for free speech when other buildings were closed to the advocates of unpopular opinions. In addition to the Unitarian Home Missionary College, the Memorial Hall was used as the meeting place of various societies interested in the welfare of the churches and schools in the Manchester district. The District Association had held forty-nine meetings, the Sunday School Association twenty-nine meetings, and a great many other organisations had assembled in the Memorial Hall during the past year. Mr. Dendy concluded his address by proposing the health of the Chairman, whose active, large-minded, and generous-hearted citizenship was highly appreciated by the people of Manchester, and whose unswerving loyalty to their Unitarian work was an encouragement and inspiration to them all.

Mr. RAWSON made a graceful response, in which he declared that he attributed his good health and active life in a large measure to the principles of freedom and progress which he had happily inherited from his father and grandfather, who in their day were not afraid to stand up and, if need be, to suffer for unpopular opinions, which they were convinced were just and right.

Mr. RAWSON then proposed the guests of the evening, whom the Trustees were pleased to welcome at their festive board.

The Rev. AMBROSE BENNETT, Mr. THOMAS HOLT (Mayor of Bury), the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, and the Rev. ALEX. GORDON responded.

The proceedings then terminated.

LOVE.

IF suddenly upon the street
My gracious Saviour I should meet,
And He should say, "As I love thee,
What love hast thou to offer me?"
Then what could this poor heart of mine
Dare offer to that heart divine?

His eye would pierce my outward show,
His thought my inmost thought would know;
And if I said, "I love Thee, Lord,"
He would not heed my spoken word,
Because my daily life would tell
If verily I loved Him well.

If on the day or in the place
Wherein He met me face to face,
My life could show some kindness done,
Some purpose formed, some work begun
For His dear sake, then it were meet
Love's gift to lay at Jesus' feet.

C. F. RICHARDSON.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c. received from the following:—Mrs. B. B.; J. B.; R. B. B.; R. T. H.; R. J. J.; C. R.; H. R.; F. T. R.; C. J. S.; G. V. S.; H. S. S.; E. L. H. T.

THE SUSTENTATION FUND.

THE eighteenth annual meeting of contributors to the Sustentation Fund for the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends was held at Dr. Williams's Library, Gordon-square, on Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 13, the President, Mr. William Long, in the chair. There were also present Messrs. Edwin Clephan, Charles Harding, David Martineau, J. T. Preston, Dr. Haward, Mr. Edgar Chatfeild Clarke (treasurer), and Alfred W. Worthington (secretary). Apologies for absence had been received from the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, Messrs. G. W. Brown, Edwin Ellis, P. J. Worsley, and Harry Rawson, senior secretary, who was present at the meeting of managers in the morning, but was obliged to return to Manchester before the annual meeting. A letter was read from Lady Tate acknowledging the resolution of sympathy on the death of Sir Henry Tate, Bart., passed at the last annual meeting.

The minutes of the last meeting having been read and confirmed, Mr. WORTHINGTON read the annual report of the managers, which was as follows :—

THE REPORT.

It will be remembered that, at the last annual meeting, a resolution was passed, recording the gratitude of the Contributors to the late Sir Henry Tate, Bart., as one of the first and most generous donors to the Fund, and the regret entertained at his decease. A copy of this resolution was sent to Lady Tate, and acknowledged by her in kindly and grateful terms.

His death created a second vacancy in the number of Trustees of the Fund, as the place of the late Treasurer, Mr. Thomas Chatfeild Clarke, had not been filled up. The Managers have much pleasure in reporting that the present baronet, Sir William Henry Tate, has consented to accept the Trusteeship held by his father, and the Board recommend that he and the present Treasurer, Mr. Edgar Chatfeild Clarke, be appointed Trustees.

Sir Henry Tate was also one of the coöpted Managers, and the Board has been fortunate in securing the consent of another of his sons, Mr. Edwin Tate, whose residence in London will enable him to discharge its duties, to accept office in his father's place.

Another of the coöpted Managers, the Rev. T. L. Marshall, has signified his intention of resigning his post, as the state of his health renders it undesirable for him to undertake the journey from his present residence at Sidmouth to attend the meetings. The Contributors will regret to lose the help of so long-tried a friend and counsellor, whose large acquaintance with the non-subscribing congregations of the country qualified him to render abundant and wise advice, as to the applications made for assistance from the Fund.

During the past year, the Fund has been benefited by handsome donations of £300 from Mrs. S. Woolcott Browne, London; and of £100 from Mrs. Nettlefold, Birmingham; and by collections from several congregations in Ireland.

The sum of £500 has been invested, which raises the accumulated Fund to nearly £23,500.

The income of the Fund has enabled the Board to add to the amount of the Grants, which are highly appreciated by the recipients, from almost all of whom grateful letters have been received in acknowledgment. The total amount of the Grants was £1,073 19s. 2d. in 1898, £1,135 9s. 7d. in 1899, and £1,153 5s. in the year just expired.

The Board has made Grants as follows during the year 1900 :—

Congregation.	Amount. £ s. d.
Feb. 7, 1900. WALES.
Aberdare (Highland-place), half-year	10 0 0
IRELAND.
Moira, half-year	10 0 0
ENGLAND.
Newbury, half-year...	10 0 0
June 27, 1900. ENGLAND.
Bedford	20 0 0
Billingshurt	25 0 0
Birkenhead	30 0 0
Brighton	30 0 0
Cheltenham	25 0 0
Chichester	25 0 0
Cirencester	20 0 0
Colyton	20 0 0
Deptford	20 0 0
Dover	25 0 0
Gloucester	30 0 0
Godalming	30 0 0
Great Yarmouth	25 0 0
Guildford	25 0 0
Hastings	30 0 0
Ilminster	30 0 0
King's Wood...	25 0 0
Lewes	25 0 0
London (Avondale-road, Peckham)	25 0 0
,, (Wood Green)	25 0 0
Loughborough (for 1899-1900) ...	25 0 0
Maidstone	25 0 0
Moreton Hampstead	30 0 0
Newbury	25 0 0
Newport	25 0 0
Poole	25 0 0
Richmond	30 0 0
Saffron Walden	20 0 0
Shepton Mallet	20 0 0
Sidmouth	20 0 0
Tavistock	20 0 0
Torquay	25 0 0
WALES.
Aberdare (Old Meeting)	30 0 0
,, (Highland-place) (conditionally)...	20 0 0
Brondeifi and Caeronnen	30 0 0
Capel-y-Bryn and Alltyplacca (contionally)...	30 0 0
Cefn Coed	25 0 0
Cribin and Capel-y-Groes	30 0 0
Dowlais	25 0 0
Gellionen and Trebannos	25 0 0
Llandyssul and Pantdefaid ...	25 0 0
Merthyr Tydfil	20 0 0
Rhydygwyn and Ciliau Aeron ...	25 0 0
IRELAND.
Belfast (Mount Pottinger)	20 0 0
,, (York-street)	20 0 0
Crumlin	20 0 0
Killinchy	20 0 0
Moira...	20 0 0
Newry	20 0 0
Ravara	20 0 0

It has been found by experience that the first Wednesday in February is an inconvenient time for holding the Annual Meeting. Some of your managers belong to local authorities, who often hold their meeting in the first week of the month. A Special General Meeting of the Contributors was therefore called for June 27, 1900, when it was resolved to make arrangements to hold the Annual Meeting, in future, on the second Wednesday in February each year. This arrangement has been carried out by calling the Contributors together on the present instead of the preceding Wednesday.

The progress of years removes many valued names from the list of Contributors and the last twelve months have not been without their eventful additions to the obituary record. It includes the names of the venerable Rev. John Wright, B.A.; of Miss Ellen Frances Lee, of Kinfare, near Stourbridge, and of Mr. J. C. Haslam, formerly of Bolton.

These, and many other losses during previous years, have seriously reduced the list of Annual Subscribers. It is to be hoped that the example of their long and earnest sympathy with the purposes of the Fund, and their liberality in its support, will inspire their surviving relatives and others with the same generous interest in this useful Fund, so that its grants may be continued, and, if possible, increased.

The TREASURER then presented his statement of accounts, showing receipts from donations £409, annual subscriptions £404, interest from investments £824, making, with a balance brought over of £374 and income tax recovered, a total of £2,034. The expenditure showed £1,153 5s. in grants, £500 invested in South Australian stock, &c., and a balance of £333 7s. 7d. carried down. The Treasurer pointed out that there was an increase of about £200 in donations on the previous year, and of £7 in subscriptions. Grants were about £18 more than last year. £500 invested in Australian stock had been added to the Fund. The present value of the investments was £25,174 7s. 2d., showing an appreciation of £1,714 15s. 11d. on the cost price.

The PRESIDENT, in moving the adoption of the report and accounts, alluded with satisfaction to the increase of grants made, and said that donors to the Fund might be satisfied with the good work that was being done. If they could see the letters of gratitude received from recipients by the secretaries, they would know that to be the case. He emphasised the reference of the report to the loss of old supporters and the need of securing new subscribers. There was abundant scope for more to be done, if the funds allowed.

Mr. J. T. PRESTON seconded, and the resolution was unanimously passed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON said they would be glad if some of their ministerial friends would become members of the Fund, that they might qualify for service on the Board of Managers. That would be a great help to the other members in their work.

On the motion of the PRESIDENT seconded by Mr. CHARLES HARDING, Sir W. H. Tate, Bart, and Mr. Edgar Chatfeild Clarke were appointed trustees of the Fund.

The Revs. S. A. Steinthal and T. Thomas, and Messrs. Harry Rawson and A. W. Worthington, the retiring managers, were re-elected.

Votes of thanks to the President, treasurer and secretaries, and to Mr. E. W. Marshall, hon. auditor, were cordially passed, and they were re-elected.

Votes of thanks to the trustees of Dr. Williams's Library and to the President for his services in the chair, brought the meeting to an end.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Ainsworth.—The annual prize distribution and children's party was held on Saturday, Feb. 9. After tea the Rev. M. R. Scott presided, and the prizes were given by the Mayor of Bury (Mr. Thomas Holt). In a short, admirable speech, the Mayor spoke of the formation of character, earnestly insisting upon truthfulness and sincerity; also advocating the necessity of continuing education after leaving school.

Blackpool: South Shore.—On Saturday, Feb. 9, the members of the Sunday-school, to the number of about forty, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. F. R. G. Grundy and Mr. Cuthbert Grundy, at tea in the Masonic Hall. After tea Mr. S. Crompton, superintendent, occupied the chair, and a good programme was gone through by scholars,

First-class prizes for attendance were awarded, and Mr. C. C. Grundy gave each member of the school a remembrance of the first year of the twentieth century.

Byker.—In aid of the funds of this Mission Church, the Rev. Frank Walters recently lectured in the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on "Robert Burns." Mr. Walters, having himself received an enthusiastic vote of thanks, proposed a similar vote to Dr. R. A. Campbell, President of the local Burns Society, for his kindness in presiding. On Wednesday week a social meeting, with a varied musical programme, was held in the Byker Church.

Cardiff.—The annual general meeting of the congregation was held in the West Grove School-room, on Monday evening, Feb. 11. The proceedings commenced with tea, after which Mr. G. Carslake Thompson presided over a good attendance. The report of the committee for the past year, and the treasurer's account, were adopted. The report, while not recording any great strides with regard to church membership and average attendances, was considered satisfactory, in that it showed a year of steady work on the part of all concerned. Special reference was made to the marked improvement in the Sunday-school and Band of Hope, which was thought to be very hopeful for the future.

East London Unitarian Sunday School Union.—The fifth meeting of this Session of the Union was held on Saturday evening last, at the Mansford-street Church, Bethnal Green, when Mr. A. Thompson presided. Mr. C. A. Ginever gave a very good paper on the subject of "Christian Endeavour." The Rev. W. G. Cadman and Messrs. Waddington, Thompson, and Carlier joined in the discussion. There was a good attendance of teachers and friends, there being upwards of forty present.

Exeter.—At the invitation of the George's Chapel Social Circle, the members of the congregation and visitors were invited to a function at the Lecture Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 6, at which a welcome was extended to the Rev. J. M. Connell, who has recently joined the Rev. T. W. Chignell in the ministry of the chapel. Lady Bowring, the President of the Social Circle, who, unfortunately, was too unwell to attend, kindly provided tea. Speeches of welcome were made by the Rev. T. W. Chignell and Mr. E. Lemmon, the Rev. J. M. Connell making acknowledgment. A musical programme was carried out.

Liverpool: Ancient Chapel of Toxteth.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Sunday, Feb. 2, Mr. P. H. Holt in the chair. A very satisfactory financial statement was presented, and the report spoke with gratitude of the devoted services of the Rev. W. J. Jupp. It also stated that with the willing consent of the committee Mr. Jupp was about to visit Palestine with Mr. Herbert Rix, and that during his absence of over two months, from about Feb. 22, the services would be conducted by the Rev. J. Harwood, a former minister of the chapel. The meeting-room, in course of erection in the chapel grounds, it was hoped would be ready to be opened early in May. The Chairman offered to Mr. Jupp the good wishes of the congregation on the occasion of his visit to Palestine.

London: Rhyl-street Domestic Mission.—The special Mission conducted by the Rev. Edgar Daplyn from February 4 to 8 was very successful. The attendances varied from thirty-five to fifty. Certain people attended every night, and it was generally felt that it was a good thing to have such services, and that they were helpful and inspiring. Of course, the majority of people are not eager to be saved until what they think the eleventh hour. But it was a week of services that sowed precious seed which will assuredly have its influence for good. Similar services would no doubt be helpful elsewhere also for the awakening and deepening of religious life.

Manchester: Bradford.—On Saturday, Feb. 9, a public tea and meeting were held to inaugurate the second series of special services promoted by the Manchester District Association. The chair was occupied by the minister, the Rev. W. E. Atack, and the speakers were ths Rev. J. Page Hopps, the Rev. Dendy Agate, and Mr. T. F. Robinson. Mr. Hopps delivered an enlivening and instructive address relating to the possibilities of the Sunday-school, and the influence for good which can be brought to bear on child-life and leave a lasting impression. Mr. Agate spoke in his usual kindly and cheery manner, and Mr. Robinson gave many valuable hints with regard to church work, from a layman's point of view. Much good is anticipated from the special services.

Oxford: Charles-street Institute.—The annual report of the Institute, at 4, Charles-street, St. Ebbe's, records that throughout the year Sunday evening services were conducted by Mr. E. A. Hillier, and that the Sunday-school is doing good work. There are weekly meetings of Mothers, Men's Social, Band of Hope, and Recreation and Fretwork Classes. A Boys' Brigade and Physical Drill Class for girls have recently been started. On an expenditure of £79 14s. 5d., the accounts show a deficit of £4 9s. 1½d. The treasurer and secretary is Mr. John Cotton, 6, St. John's-road, Oxford.

Pudsey.—On Feb. 10 a memorial service was held in the afternoon in memory of the late Rev. J. G. Slater. It was conducted by the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A., of Bradford, and the choir of Chapel-lane Chapel also took part in the service, which was most impressive. At its close a beautiful tablet to Mr. Slater's memory, erected by his many sorrowing friends, was unveiled by Mr. Joseph Marshall. At the close of his discourse on Proverbs iv. 18, "The path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day," Mr. Ceredig Jones said: As I have gone on unfolding my theme this afternoon, I know that all the time the memory of one noble life has been present in your mind. I have refrained from speaking at length of our friend's virtues because our wounded hearts have not yet been healed, and we can scarcely mention his name, but our eyes are filled with tears. Whatever I have said of true human worth might be applied to Mr. Slater's career, as a conscientious citizen, an affectionate husband and father, a sincere friend, and a faithful minister of religion. He walked in his Master's steps with unfaltering feet, and sought to lead you and your children in the same heavenly path. When he was mercifully called from the sorrows of earth to the joy of higher service, we felt that we had lost a true friend who was transparently sincere in all relations of life. As time goes on, and we miss him from the positions which he so worthily filled, the dearer he seems to become to us. You have erected this tablet, which has been unveiled to-day, in memory of our friend's devoted labours in connection with this church. You have done well; but the best and most enduring memorial of him is the undying influence which he has left behind him. When his body has long lain under the green sward and the flowers of many springs have bloomed and faded on his grave, the lesson of his earnest life will continue to inspire you to worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness, and at last, when you stand on the verge of the undiscovered country, and life's last milestone is nearly reached, you will thank God that you have known so true a friend as he has been to you. "To live in hearts we leave behind—Is not to die." After the singing of "Lead, kindly Light," the congregation dispersed, taking with them memories that will not soon be effaced. The respect our deceased brother was held in was evident from the fact that many of the leading people of the town were present, among them being the Mayor and Mayoress of Pudsey.

Rotherham.—On Tuesday, Feb. 5, the Rev. H. Rawlings gave a lecture on "Tom Hood" to the Church of Our Father Literary and Social Union. The chair was taken by Mr. A. T. Jenkins, a member of the School Board, who referred in his opening speech to the indebtedness of the Unsectarian members of the Board to the Rev. W. Stephens for help at recent elections. The lecture was much appreciated, and he received a cordial vote of thanks.

Swansea.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Thursday evening, Feb. 7. The attendance was very large. The chair was taken by Mr. W. W. Holmes, who was supported by the Rev. W. Tudor Jones. Mr. J. Moy Evans acted as secretary in the absence of Mr. C. H. Perkins through illness. The reports of the church, the postal mission, the Sunday-school, the minister's adult classes, the philosophy class, the ladies' sewing meeting, and other institutions were read, showing signs of great increase during the past year, and an exceedingly hopeful outlook for liberal Christianity in the town. Mrs. Reid and Mr. Joseph Guppy were re-elected hon. treasurers, and Mr. C. H. Perkins was re-elected hon. secretary. It was a matter of great regret to the large gathering that the three were absent through ill-health, and a hearty vote of sympathy was passed with them.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, February 17.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Frederic Allen. Evening, Lantern Service, "Parables of Jesus." Monday, 18th, 8.15 P.M., Concert by the Misses Ormiston Chant, Emma Bridge, &c.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. Page Hopps.

Deptford, Church-street, 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. Edwards.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. Woods Perris.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Rev. Edgar Daplyn, 11.15 A.M., "Priest or Prophet?" and 7 P.M., "Impressions." Children's Class, 12.30. Collections for Minister's Benevolent Society.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Dawes Hicks, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Alexander Farquharson. Morning, "Life's Lowly Lot." Evening, "God's Fellow Workers."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. Carter.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. Farrington. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. E. A. Carlier, and 7 P.M., Miss Biggart, U.S.A.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. J. Toye, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. C. A. Ginever.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. F. H. Jones.

Bedford, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. Rowland Hill.

Blackpool, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. David Davis.

Blackpool, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. Coe.

Bradford, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A.

Brighton, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. Livens.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. J. R. Macdonald.

Deal and Walmer, Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. Shakspeare.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Burrows.

Eastbourne, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. St. Clair.

Guildford, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. Marten.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. Rattenbury Hodges.

LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. ODGERS, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chap St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. OTTWELL BINNS.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.
SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.
WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.
SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—Feb. 17th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The 'Decalogue'—Is it the Foundation of Morality? I. None Other Gods."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Feb. 17th at 11.15 A.M., JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "The Laissez-Faire Movement."

HIGHGATE HILL UNITARIAN CHURCH.

SPECIAL MISSION SERVICES will be conducted in the above Church by the Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN, of Hampstead, every Evening at 8 o'clock, from MONDAY, Feb. 18th, to FRIDAY, Feb. 22nd, inclusive.

SPECIAL MUSIC. All are earnestly invited.

LONDON SUNDAY SCHOOL SOCIETY.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at ESSEX HALL on SATURDAY, February 23rd. The Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE will preside.

Tea at 6 P.M. Meeting at 7 P.M.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

POSITION desired as ASSISTANT MINISTER or MISSIONARY, or would form new Church. Fully experienced. Well educated. Excellent testimonials. — Address, "Veritas," INQUIRER Office, Essex-st., Strand, W.C.

DOMESTIC MISSION ASSISTANT.—The Committee of the North-End Domestic Mission, Liverpool, desire to engage a YOUNG MAN, accustomed to move among working people, to assist in Missionary work.—Apply to J. H. BURROUGHS, 41, Rodney-street, Liverpool.

The Bible in the Nineteenth Century.

A COURSE OF LECTURES by
PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
(of Manchester College, Oxford),
at BOLTON, LEEDS, and LIVERPOOL.

IV. The Gospel Question: (1), The Synoptics.
V. The Gospel Question: (2), The Fourth Gospel.
VI. The Bible and the Church.

BOLTON: Spinners' Hall, St. George's-road.
Tuesdays, February 19th, 26th, March 5th, at 7.30 P.M.
LEEDS: Philosophical Hall.
Wednesdays, February 20th, 27th, March 6th, at 8.0 P.M.
LIVERPOOL: Liverpool Institute, Mount-street.
Thursdays, February 21st, 28th, March 7th, at 8.30 P.M.

Admission Free. A copy of the Syllabus will be sent on application to the Rev. C. J. STREET, Maythorn, Heaton, Bolton; the Rev. C. HARGROVE, 10, De Grey-terrace, Leeds; or C. W. JONES, Esq., 39, Drury Buildings, Liverpool.

HARMONIUM.—Very powerful Instrument in oak case (by Alexandre); 22 stops, 2 manuals, 2 knee swells. Suitable for Church or School use. Having pedal organ reason for disposal. Inspection invited.—Apply, ROBT. HALL, Unitarian Church, Lancaster.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made Monthly repayment, including principal, premium and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS
2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS
2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES
Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

DEATHS.

NUTTALL—On the 1st Feb., James Stephen Nuttall, of Moss-street, at his residence, 26, Sandringham-road, The Brook, Liverpool, the beloved husband of Ellen R. Nuttall; was interred at the Ancient Chapel, Dingle, Feb. 5th, deeply regretted.

HOLLAND—On the 9th Feb., at Maes-y-Porth Hale, Cheshire, Clara, daughter of the late Francis Waverley and Mary Faith Holland, of Manchester and Bowdon, aged 48 years. Interred at Hale Chapel on Tuesday, the 12th inst., at 2 o'clock.

PUDSEY UNITARIAN CHURCH.

ADDITIONAL SCHOOL PREMISES, SCHOOL FURNISHINGS, AND NEW ORGAN URGENTLY NEEDED.

The congregation of the above church, which has a Sunday-school with nearly 130 Scholars, male and female, has been for some time very much hampered in its work by the want of more school accommodation; having only one room in which to conduct all its classes and meetings of its kindred societies, whilst its school furnishings are very inadequate to its requirements.

The congregation is also in great need of a New Organ, the present one being very much worn and out of date.

It is estimated that £600 will be required for these objects.

The congregation, which is almost entirely composed of working people, has only been able to meet current expenses by dint of hard work.

We have now decided to carry out the needful alterations as soon as possible, and a "Building and Improvements Committee" has been formed for this purpose, which hereby respectfully desires to make an earnest appeal for funds.

No Similar Appeal (outside our own congregation) has been made for assistance during the past thirteen years; but as these improvements are absolutely necessary to the growth of our cause in Pudsey, we make this appeal with every confidence.

Subscriptions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by:—

Mr. G. E. VERITY,
Littlemoor Hall, Pudsey (President).
Mr. J. H. NOBLE,
Stanley House, Pudsey (Treasurer).
Rev. W. H. DAVIES,
2, Northrop-terrace, Pudsey (Minister).
Mr. J. TINDALL,
Rosemont, Pudsey (Hon. Secretary).

Bankers: West Riding Union Banking Company.

We wish to thankfully acknowledge the following subscriptions:—

PUDSEY LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Mr. G. E. Verity, Pudsey	25	0	0
Mrs. G. E. Verity, do.	25	0	0
Mr. H. Gott, do.	20	0	0
Mr. J. H. Noble, do.	10	0	0
Mrs. C. Myers, do.	5	10	0
Mr. W. J. Noble, do.	5	5	0
Rev. W. H. Davies, do.	5	5	0
Mrs. Wm. Harrison, do. (in memory of her late husband)	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tindall, do. ...	5	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Varley, do. ...	5	5	0
Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Clay, do.	5	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson ...	5	0	0
Adult Class (females), do.	5	0	0
Boys' Class (second), do.	2	2	6
Mr. Ineson Noble, do.	2	2	0
Mrs. Henry Hatherington, do.	2	2	0
Miss L. Hamsworth, do.	1	1	0
Miss E. Verity, do.	1	1	0
A Friend and Daughter, do.	1	1	0
Mr. Fred. Walker, do.	1	1	0
Mr. S. V. Tindall, do.	1	1	0
Mr. James Gaunt, do.	1	1	0
Mr. John Bolton, do.	1	1	0
Mr. J. A. Bolton, do.	1	1	0
Mr. Arthur Binks	1	1	0
Miss E. Strickland	1	1	0
Master Walter Noble / Miss Rosie Noble (In memory of their late mother)	1	1	0
	1	1	0
Mrs. Strickland	1	1	0
Mrs. Rayner	1	1	0
Miss L. Crowther	1	1	0
Mrf. B. Jones, Pudsey	1	1	0
Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Slingsby, do. ...	1	1	0
Mrs. Naylor Lawson, do.	1	1	0
Mrs. F. Gaunt, do.	1	1	0
Mr. J. E. Hamsworth, do.	1	0	0
Mr. J. Boocock, Stanningley	1	0	0
Miss Rose Noble, Pudsey	0	12	0
Miss Hilda Clay, do.	0	12	0
Mr. R. Berry, do.	0	10	0
Mr. Ernest Binks, do.	0	10	0
Mr. G. W. Harrison, do.	0	10	0
Miss Green, do.	0	5	0
Mr. G. Berry, do.	0	5	0
Mr. H. Tindall, do.	0	5	0
Mr. W. H. Murgatroyd, do.	0	5	0
Miss M. A. Slingsby, do.	0	5	0

Schools, etc.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN
(UNIVERSITY OF LONDON),
YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET, W.

The HALF TERM begins on THURSDAY, February 21st.

LECTURES are given in all branches of General and Higher Education. STUDENTS are prepared for all the University of London Examinations in Arts and Science. A single Course of Lectures in any subject may be attended.

There is a Department for Professional Training in Teaching and an Art School.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.

One Clift Scholarship in Arts, annual value £31 10s., tenable for three years.

One Pfeiffer Scholarship in Science, annual value £48, tenable for three years.

Will be awarded on the results of the Examination to be held in June.

Particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. (Established 1893).

PUPILS prepared for the Universities; resident gymnast and French mistress; healthy conditions of life; hockey and tennis.

Prospectus on application to Miss MACRAE MOIR, Lingholt, Hindhead Station, Haslemere.

THE
HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

(Founded by Miss J. F. GRUNER, May, 1897).

BOARDERS are received by the Misses GRUNER at Moorcroft, Hindhead, Haslemere, from whom prospectuses and further information may be obtained, the School being carried on at the HINDHEAD HALL as heretofore.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

WANTED, position of trust and responsibility (TRAVELLER or MANAGER) by middle-aged experienced Ironmonger. Highest references as to character and ability.—W. BARKER, 23, Adelaide-square, Bedford.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The NEW WORLD.

For DECEMBER, 1900, being the last number of the issue.

Price 3s. net; by post, 3s. 3d.

CONTENTS.—The Influence of John Ruskin, by L. P. Jacks; The Religion of the American Negro, by W. E. Burghardt Du Bois; Negro Education, by Hollis Burke Frissell; Schopenhauer and Present Tendencies, by W. Caldwell; The Book of Jeremiah, by Nathaniel Schmidt; Some Present-day Conditions affecting Theological Education, by George B. Stevens; Theodore Parker, by Francis Tiffany; The Recrudescence of War, by H. M. Simmons; Charles Carroll Everett, by C. H. Toy and Nicholas Paine Gilman; Professor Everett as a Metaphysician, by Josiah Royce; Book Reviews, &c.

London: PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—MRS ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor road, S.W.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

THREE NEW BOOKS

BY THE

Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A.

OUR REASONABLE SERVICE. Four Sermons on Acts of Worship. 6d. net, by post 7d.

SERMONS and IMPRESSIONS brought from AMERICA. 6d. net, by post 7d.

JESUS OF NAZARETH: Lessons of his Life, Death, and Resurrection learnt from Ober Ammergau. 1s. net, by post 1s. 2d.

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Every Sunday School Teacher should possess a copy of

THE HELPER, 1901.

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers & for Parents

Edited by W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Price 2s. 6d. net. (Postage 4d.)

With Frontispiece—"Alfred the Great"; and many Illustrations of Beautiful Natural Objects—Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Insects, &c.

CONTENTS.

Introduction: Sunday School Teachers whom I have Known. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
A Message for the New Year. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Alfred the Great. FRANCES E. COOKE.
From Josiah to Jesus. Sixteen Lessons. EDITOR.
Parental Help in Religious Training, with Suggested Talks. I. M. R.
Nature Lessons from Ruskin. Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Leaves, Flowers, &c. LUCKING TAVENER.
Jesus at Jacob's Well. FRANK WALTERS.
Bible Homes. Eight Sketches. J. RUDDLE.
Some New Testament Churches. A. HARVIE.
How Teachers and Scholars may know one another. ION PRITCHARD.
Nature Sketches. C. ROPER, B.A.
"My Pond." (Illustrated). Dragon-fly and Knat. T. ROBINSON.
How I Prepare (with outline lessons). Confidential Notes to the Editor by Teachers.
How to Teach. FELIX TAYLOR, B.A.
Sunday Schools at Home and Abroad. American, MARIAN PRITCHARD. Welsh, W. TUDOR JONES, Scottish, A. E. PARRY. Irish, R. LYTTLE. A French Sunday School Fete.
Summer Session (Oxford) Papers: What Sunday Schools may learn from Day Schools (from lecture by A. J. MOCKRIDGE). Child Study, EDITOR. Wanted, Men and Women, J. L. HAIGH. What the Average Teacher may do, J. J. WRIGHT.
The Boys' Own Brigade. J. C. BALLANTYNE.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. Manchester: H. RAWSON AND CO., 16, New Brown-street. Liverpool: THE BOOKSELLERS' CO., 70, Lord-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A MEMORIAL SERMON ON THE FUNERAL OF THE QUEEN.

Preached by the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A.,
on SUNDAY, February 3, 1901.

Price 6d. net. Post free 7d.

TRUSLOVE, HANSON, and COMBA LTD., 143, Oxford-street, W., & 6B, Sloane-street, S.W., London.

ADVERTISER (22) desires post in ARCHITECT'S or similar Office. Pilotting, tracing, colouring, knowledge of quantities, shorthand, &c. Good references.—Address, E. R., 15 Wyle Cop, Shrewsbury.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 16, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3061. NEW SERIES, No. 165.] LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 113
LITERATURE :—
Broad Church Theology 116
The "New World" 117
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The High Peak Chapels 118
Forgiveness 118
The Unjust Steward 119
A Living Church 121
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 119
LEADER :—
The "New World" 120
ARTICLES :—
John Ruskin 115
Is Nature Cruel? 117
The late Lord O'Hagan's reported "Reconciliation" to Rome... 121
The Peel Report Conference... 122
Two Voices 123
The Prophetic Soul 124
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
North and East Lancashire 124
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 125
ADVERTISEMENTS 126

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

ONE story affirming that the late Lord O'Hagan before his death was reconciled to the Roman Church having been effectually disposed of, a second is now being circulated, equally devoid of truth. Such discreditable persistence on the part of Roman Catholics is, unhappily, from long experience, to be looked for in cases of this kind, and much as we should prefer to pass them over in silence, it is our duty to make the statement which will be found in another column.

SATURDAY next, March 2, is fixed for the London County Council Election, and the result must be looked for with the utmost anxiety by all who have the interests of our great city at heart, and worked for with every available bit of strength and enthusiasm by those who desire to avoid a calamitous reversal of the present Progressive policy of the Council. Candidates of the Moderate party are appealing to the electors as "Conservatives and Unionists," thus introducing the false issue of party politics where it has no rightful place, while at the same time all the vested interests are in arms to prevent if possible any further equalising of benefits, and amelioration of the lot of the poorest citizens. "Stock-holders are urged to secure the return of Moderate candidates."

THERE years ago a similar attempt was happily foiled, but it is now renewed with the utmost vigour and astuteness. "London in Danger" is the title of an article by Dr. Clifford in this week's Christian World, in the course of which he says: "There is no frontal attack. There is an abundance of specious phrasing; phrasing which looks "Progressive," but has been contradicted by acts in the past, and does not commit to any definitely beneficial policy in the future." And Dr. Clifford adds:—

The Progressives are not men with axes of their own to grind. They have no private ends to serve. They are the foes of uncontrolled monopolies and abiding squalour, of dulness and drink, of insanitary areas and over-crowding, and the record of their battles with these enemies of the public good is their best defence. Indeed, there is nothing in the recent history of London I contemplate with deeper satisfaction than the uprising of a body of citizens, with sufficient public spirit to devote their time and energies to the benefit of their poorer fellow-citizens, to the abolition of the municipal defects of generations, and to the task of making London the healthiest, happiest, purest city in the world. It is the brightest side of our latest metropolitan history, and one of the finest auguries for our future. Therefore it would be a dire calamity to dismiss from their leadership the men who have made the last twelve years the beginning of a new epoch in our communal life.

DR. MCKINNON WOOD, ex-Chairman of the London County Council, has an article in the first number of the New Liberal Review, on "The L.C.C.: Three Years' Progressive Work," which is a clear and forcible statement of what has been done for the better government of London, and what more could have been done, if it had not been for the apathy or obstruction of the Moderate party. One great advance has been in the management of the Tram service south of the Thames, which has not only brought considerable profit, but better service for the public, and better conditions of labour for the employés. Progress has also been made in the matter of housing, although much still remains to be done, and the crucial question of water supply must also be dealt with. Again we will quote Dr. Clifford:—

The question is whether this civic ministry to the poor, the disinherited, the isolated is to be stopped, or whether it shall go on till this, the wealthiest of cities, becomes the home of a community so healthy in body, free, strong, and pure in mind, and high in moral tone as to be a pattern and an encouragement to the corporate life of the world.

The citizen's duty is clear, and the call to immediate service rings like a clarion from side to side of our growing city. Let no voter, man or woman, fail! Canvass so that you may get the opportunity of combatting the sophistical appeals of the "Moderates." Distribute information. Quicken interest. Feed civic faith. Build up a body of municipal conviction that will help in making London a little more like the apocalytic City of God.

IN opening Parliament last week the King was obliged to make a declaration against the Mass, which is a curious historical survival from the time of the Revolution, when the conflict with Roman Catholicism was acute. A number of Peers very naturally protested to the Lord Chancellor against the terms of the declaration which branded them and millions of the King's subjects as idolatrous. But only an Act of Parliament can modify the form of words. The part of the declaration which attracted our special attention was the following:—

I doe solemnely in the presence of God professe testifie and declare that I doe make this declaration and every part thereof in the plaine and ordinary sence of the words read unto me as they are commonly understood by English Protestants without any evasion, equivocation or mentall reservation whatsoever.

If all the clergy of the Church of England had to make their declarations in such explicit terms, and so acted up to them, we could not help wondering what would happen in the Church.

MR. STOPFORD BROOKE devoted the opening lecture of his second course at University College on Thursday week, to a completion, as he had promised, of the inaugural lecture on Poetry as one of the Arts. Having recalled what he had said as to the features common to all the arts, he proceeded to speak of language as the special vehicle, which distinguished poetry from the other arts, and then explained the difference between poetry and prose or eloquence. When fine prose or eloquence became metrical, he said, it lost its excellence. As to prose, the only rule was that it must not be accented like poetry. For the rest it had greater freedom than poetry, and so was a lesser art. Poetry demanded greater concentration of thought, more symbolic use of words, and deeper and sweeter melody. To illustrate the difference, Mr. Brooke quoted some lines from the "Ancient Mariner," and Coleridge's prose comment on it, describing the aspect of the heavens over a calm sea as night begins and the moon and stars first appear, and also a passage from Shelley's prose description of the Colosseum and some lines from the Adonais on a similar subject. Speaking later of different kinds of verse, Mr. Brooke said that for epic poetry the Greeks chose the hexameter as the most perfect, but Milton, who was himself an epic, chose blank verse.

THE following memorial on the subject of "The Royal Buckhounds" has been addressed to His Majesty the King by the Executive Committee of the Humanitarian League:—

We, the Executive Committee of the Humanitarian League, humbly approach your Majesty to express our earnest hope that your Majesty will be pleased to give consideration, at the present juncture, to the feeling of strong abhorrence with which a large number of your Majesty's subjects regard the so-called sport of hunting tame stags, as carried on in the Sovereign's name, and as a national institution, by the Royal Buckhounds. Your Majesty is doubtless aware that during recent years, repeated protests have been made against this degraded form of sport, on the score of its cruelty, and that these protests have been supported not only by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of which your Majesty is a Patron and H.R.H. the Duke of Cornwall and York is President, but also (as the enclosed list will show) by members of both Houses of Parliament; his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, and many leading Churchmen and Nonconformists; Heads of Colleges and great Public Schools; distinguished men of letters, and various prominent citizens representing all sections of Society.

In view of these facts we venture most respectfully to submit to your Majesty's judgment that the re-establishment of the Royal Buckhounds, at the commencement of a new reign and a new century, would be deeply deplored by many of your Majesty's subjects, inasmuch as the growth of humane sentiment has rendered the sport as obnoxious to the more refined spirit of the present age as were Bull and Bear Baiting in the early years of the past century. We therefore, with all humility, pray your Majesty to bring a prolonged agitation to a close by the discontinuance of the Royal Buckhounds, or their conversion into a drag-hunt; and we are the more encouraged to make this appeal by the conviction that Her Majesty the late Queen Victoria regarded the Hunt with disapproval.

The list of protesters against this contemptible form of fashionable cruelty, referred to in the Memorial, is a very strong one, and we must hope that the efforts, so long unsuccessful, to secure the abolition of the Hunt, may at last prevail.

MORE than one inquiry has reached us since the Queen's death concerning the book of devotional meditations which is spoken of as hers. After Prince Albert's death she found great comfort in the reading of Zschokke's "Stunden der Andacht, and made a selection of these to be translated into English. The book was at first printed for private circulation only, but afterwards the Queen allowed it to be published. The following is the title-page:—

Meditations on Death and Eternity. Translated from the German by Frederica Rowan. Published by Her Majesty's gracious permission. London: Trübner and Co., Paternoster-row. 1862.

The book consists of twenty-nine meditations selected for translation, because, as a note said, "to one in deep and overwhelming sorrow they had proved a source of comfort and edification." The Meditations are on such subjects as "Is Slow Decline or Sudden Death Most Desirable?" "Fear of Death," "God is Love," "A Foretaste of Heaven," "Eternal Destiny," "Why Must the Future Life be Hidden from us?" "A Joy in the Hour of Death," "Retribution," "Reunion," "The Triumph of Holiness." The book was printed by "Emily Faithfull, Printer and Publisher in Ordinary to Her Majesty, Victoria Press, Great Coram-street, W.C." It has, of course, been long out of print.

THE following resolution was passed at a general meeting of the trustees of Dr. Williams's Library:—

"That the trustees of Dr. Williams's Charity desire to record their profound grief and their deep sense of the loss that the nation has sustained in the death of its revered and beloved Queen. The Elizabethan age, the great Puritan movement of the seventeenth century, and the Victorian age will for ever stand forth as of pre-eminent importance to the moral, intellectual and religious life and thought of the English people. The accession of Queen Victoria to the Throne marks an epoch in English history. Her love of civil and religious liberty has facilitated an unbroken series of reforms and movements for the improvement of national, municipal, and social life. Education has been brought within reach of the poorest of the people, and the municipalities and rural districts alike have had increasing powers and opportunities of improving the environment on which the personal life largely depends, and so making the personal life healthier, nobler, and more truly human. Her reign has shown what it is possible for a great and good monarch to do in promoting and encouraging constitutional movements for the welfare of the people.

"The trustees humbly offer their congratulations to His Majesty King Edward the Seventh on his accession to the Throne. They declare their unswerving loyalty to the Throne and Constitution of their country. They pray that the blessing of God may rest upon the King and that His Majesty's reign may be crowned by universal prosperity and peace."

AN interesting memorial of the Queen has been issued from the Spectator office—an eighty-page pamphlet, in quality of paper and boldness of type after the manner of Mr. Murray's new Monthly Review, containing a reprint of the articles, poems, notes, and letters referring to the Queen, which have appeared in the Spectator since her death. The memorial is named after the first article, "The Queen's Best Monument," which, it is urged, would be a faithfulness to duty in our people like that which inspired her noble life. "Let the Queen's monument, then, be found in the resolve of her people to be worthy of her." (The Spectator, Ltd., Wellington-street, Strand, W.C. Price 6d., by post 7½d.)

THE annual report of the Sadharan Brahmo Samaj for 1900 contains the following:—

"The Executive Committee take this opportunity of recording their sincere thanks to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for making the necessary arrangements by which Mr. Fletcher Williams has been able to stay and work amongst us. He has worked here as one of us, contributing to the papers of the Samaj, conducting divine service in the metropolis, which has become a great source of attraction to the Brahmo public of all sections, as well as to the outside public; and it is hoped that if these services are continued for a length of time they will be the means of attracting within the pale of the Samaj a very large number of men who could scarcely have been reached by us. His preaching tour in the North-Western Provinces and in Behar during last autumn attracted considerable attention on the part of the educated public of those provinces to the Brahmo Samaj. To Mr. Fletcher Williams personally the Committee convey their best thanks for inviting the members of the three sections of the Brahmo Samaj in Calcutta to co-operate in all matters where no doctrinal differences are involved; and at the same time they record their cordial appreciation of the work done by him for the furtherance of the cause of the Samaj. But the Committee would fail in their duty if they did not at the same time record the gratitude of the Brahmo public, as well as that of the dying hundreds of Western India and Rajputana, to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, who, spontaneously, and guided by humanitarian feelings, collected so large a sum for their relief. It should also be noted that Mr. Bipin Chandra Pal and Mr. Hem Chandra Sarkar, who had been awarded scholarships in Manchester College, Oxford, by the Association, had returned to this country during the year; and it is hoped that they will devote their time and utilise the training which they have received in that College for the work of the Samaj."

WE have recently discovered that our set of bound volumes of THE INQUIRER is not complete. This, we fear, is due to the fact that volumes have been borrowed by friends and not returned. We miss the five volumes for 1863-66 and 1868. If among our readers there should be anyone who possesses these volumes, and would be willing to part with them (or if the above-mentioned borrower or borrowers should now remember) we shall be very glad to hear from them. We may also take this opportunity of saying that the Librarian of Manchester College, Oxford, is anxious to complete the set of INQUIRERS in the College Library. For this purpose the volumes of 1842, '43, '52, and '56 to '71 are required. Anyone able to furnish these volumes is requested to communicate with the Librarian.

THE article by Mr. Edward Grubb, M.A., on the present position of Quakerism in England, in the current number of the London Quarterly Review, from which we quoted last week, has now been reprinted as a pamphlet, and may be had from Messrs. Headley Bros., 14, Bishopsgate Without, E.C., sixpence net. It is, as we indicated last week, a most interesting and valuable statement.

MANY of our readers will be interested to hear that the Rev. J. T. Sunderland, M.A., who, to the great regret of the congregation, was unable to return to this country last year, to take permanent charge of the Highgate Church, has accepted the pastorate of the First Unitarian Church of Toronto, and entered on his duties on Jan. 13, when the subject of his sermon was, "The Better Christianity Coming." God's revelations, he said, are not ended, and inspiration is as much a thing of the present and the future as of the past. The coming Christianity will be broader, more catholic and more tolerant than that of the past. Men will recognise that truth is larger than any one mind or set of minds, and, therefore, will be more appreciative and charitable toward other forms of faith than their own.

JOHN RUSKIN.

"ALL literature, art, and science are vain, and worse, if they do not enable you to be glad; and glad justly." Ruskin said this to his Art Students at Oxford, in 1872; and if we lay due emphasis on the last words, "glad justly," the saying should go far to interpret for us the aim and the labour of his life. Fourteen years later, when, in time of old age, he is writing the story of his boyhood and youth, the memory of his own great happiness comes upon him, and he pauses to speak of it. He has been recalling the feelings of delight with which, after the long tour in Southern Italy in his twenty-second year, he approached Venice. They had passed through the gate of Padua in the early morning, and there, "on the horizon, in the sea, was Venice! How to tell the feeling of it!" Then he turns aside to say:

I have not yet fancied the reader's answer to my question—does he think me a fortunate or unfortunate youth? As to preparation for the future world, terrestrial or celestial, or future self in either, there may be two opinions—two or three, perhaps—on the matter. But there is no question that of absolute happiness I had the share of about a quarter of a million of average people all to myself.

Pardoning what, to the average reader, will seem exaggeration—and we must often pardon that in Ruskin, if we would love him and understand him—we may hear in those words the undertone of that strong feeling which determined the main direction of his career. The thought of human happiness—the failure of it in most, the possibility of it to all—this, it is very clear to me, was the great force which stirred him to such heights of passion, and plunged him into such depths of anger and sorrow, and moved him to those strenuous and many-sided labours that crowded the years of more than half his life. Simply and sincerely he desired, above all else, to see mankind possessing, or at least entering upon, that heritage of wise and widespread joy, which the beauty and glory of the world, as he beheld it, seemed meant to bestow—if only the people would accept it, in the fellowship of ordered peace, and under the conditions imposed by justice and mercy and love.

Ruskin's Central Faith.

I should say that Ruskin's faith centred, finally, in the Beatitudes of Christ. He found—as we all have to find—that the majority of the professed followers of Christ do not believe in them; that when any question of business or of political and national life has to be reckoned with, the ideas of human happiness which those Beatitudes express are rejected or dismissed to some other sphere of thought and action. But he, with a sort of childlike confidence, believed in them and loved them. He seemed to think they could not have been spoken either in mockery or in ignorance, that they were in no wise the pleasing sentiments of a kindhearted but mistaken Idealist, but were eternally true and possible of realisation in human life; that the blessings there promised by the Teacher, whom most people professed to regard as a divinely inspired Prophet, were to be had in all their wealth of gladness and virtue by men and women, here on this homely earth. And he laboured, with persistent and impassioned zeal, to show, according to the vision granted him, the way which led to those fair Elysian fields.

The Tragedy of his Life.

Human happiness—noble, just and universal happiness, here and now, in the present life—John Ruskin believed in that; and yet, "I had the share of about a quarter of a million of average people, all to myself": the pathos of his life, the tragedy of its last forty years, is revealed to us there. For to know himself possessed of opportunities of joy denied to so many of his fellows was, in a soul so charged with imaginative sympathy, to find that joy stricken through and through with grief. The blessedness of the "pure in heart," of the "peacemakers," of the "merciful," of the "meek," might still be his; but the thought of the multitudes who, by reason of their own or others' selfishness, were far from these things, must needs cast its shadow over all; and for him there could be no rest but restless strife against the wrongs that blighted so much of human gladness and human peace. How often in reading him do Arnold's lines recur to the mind:—

> The millions suffer still, and grieve,
> And what can helpers heal
> With old-world cures men half believe
> For woes they wholly feel?
>
> And yet men have such need of joy!
> But joy whose grounds are true;
> And joy that should all hearts employ
> As when the past was new.

The luxuries, of material wealth and of intellectual pleasures, to which he was born, ceased to be sources of delight to him, as he saw, more and more clearly, how impossible these things were to most—how impossible the homely necessaries of life were to many.

"Luxury," he says, "is indeed possible in the future—innocent and exquisite; luxury for all, and by the help of all; but luxury at present can be enjoyed only by the ignorant: the cruelest man living could not sit at his feast, unless he were blindfold. Raise the veil boldly; face the light; and if, as yet, the light of the eye can only be through tears, and the light of the body through sackcloth, go thou forth weeping, bearing precious seed, until the time come, and the Kingdom, when Christ's gift of bread, and bequest of peace, shall be 'unto this last as unto thee'; and when, for earth's severed multitudes of the wicked and the weary, there shall be holier reconciliation than that of the narrow home, and calm economy, where the wicked cease—not from trouble, but from troubling—and the weary are at rest."

The New Call to Service.

It was toward the close of the first half of his eighty years of life that the call came to him to take up the work which, with all its failure and disappointment, was to bring him the best consolation. Till then he had used the gifts which fortune laid at his feet, and genius granted to his spirit, in laying up treasure of knowledge, and rejoicing in the beauty of the world. Books and travel, the wonders of Nature from Friars Crag on Derwentwater, seen and remembered at the age of four, to the High Alps so often visited in the years of prime, the glories of Art from Giotto to Turner—these had been his delight and his inspiration. "It is not possible to imagine," he says, "a more blessed entrance into life, for a child of such a temperament as mine." One or two passionate episodes of unrequited, or finally-shattered love gave depth and intensity to a nature finely strung, and richly endowed. His powers were finding ever enlarged scope of exercise and expression; fame as an art critic and a great master of English prose was gathering about him year by year; a splendid future of literary achievement lay before him. And then, in mid career, he is stopped, and, by forces against which no resistance could avail, he is turned into new and untrodden ways.

What he Sacrificed.

When John Ruskin was thirty-six years of age his place in the roll of effective English writers was assured. And though his ambition to be a great painter had now ceased to trouble him, yet his skill in delicate line drawing, his power of perfect truthfulness in sketching a wayside flower, a spray of ivy, or the form of an Alpine height, or the front of a Gothic cathedral, was, perhaps, unsurpassed by any of his contemporaries. And his strength of art criticism, his gift of literary eloquence, his precision and delicacy in drawing, were all powers that he loved and rejoiced to use. And he was rich in all that could make a life devoted to these things prosperous and happy in itself. He was born to more wealth than he or any human being could possibly need for merely personal ends. He had made many friends—approving, sympathetic, helpful friends. His father and mother, who lived and loved only for him, would have died happy and content if only he could have kept to this line of work, in which, thus far, he had prevailed so well. He could not; and in that fact, rightly apprehended, may be discerned the secret of all that was noblest in Ruskin's character, and of all that is of deepest significance in his life for us and for all those that shall come after us. The second chapter in Mr. J. A. Hobson's powerful book, "John Ruskin: Social Reformer," gives the best account that has yet been written of the change which comes over the direction of his energies at this period. That change was entirely natural—I should say was inevitable, by reason of three great qualities which Ruskin possessed in a very high degree: his power of subtle and searching analysis; his keenness and depth of moral insight; and the breadth and passion of his human sympathy. The possession of these spiritual gifts, and the discovery that he was living in an age when, for the majority of his fellow-men, the things he held to be essential to all happy and noble life were out of reach, proved the main disturbing forces which, just midway in his career, turned the whole current of his thought and action in a new direction.

Knowledge and Feeling.

It has been said of Ruskin that he could not be a great artist because he was not content to see and to feel the beauty of the world, but must needs know and understand. That is true, though it is only part of the truth. When in early youth he is ravished with the beauty and glory of the Alps, he begins to study the form and structure of the rocks of which they are composed. In his sixteenth year he asks, as a birthday present from his father, Saussure's great work on the geology of the Alps. The power to think, and the longing to know, may tend to weaken the power of insight and deep feeling, even as to feel strongly may make it difficult to think clearly. It is not often that the gifts of thought and feeling are united in such strength as they were to him. The worth of this twofold energy can hardly be stated better than in one sentence of his: "Though we cannot, while we feel deeply, reason shrewdly, yet I doubt if, except when we feel deeply, we can ever comprehend fully." And the greatness of his power may be found in the fact that while he cared much for truth and had so keen a faculty for intellectual analysis, yet he was also possessed with so strong a passion for the beauty of the world and with so profound a sympathy for the sorrows and sufferings of mankind.

Let this article close with a few sayings of his in which these different elements of character find expression; in another the attempt may be made to discuss the significance of the work to which, in the second half of his life, he was so nobly and inevitably committed:—

"Where the search for truth begins, there life begins." "To him who does not search out truth it is darkness; to him who does it is infinity." "Ideas of truth are the foundation of all art."

———

"Great art is nothing else than the type of all strong and noble life." "There is no wealth but life—life including all its powers of love, of joy, of admiration." "Life without industry is guilt; industry without art is brutality."

———

"To be just is to give what we owe, and we owe to every one our love." "That man is richest who, having perfected the functions of his own life to the utmost, has also the widest helpful influence, both personal and, by means of his possessions, over the lives of others." "The human clay, now trampled and despised, will not be knit in its strength by accidents or by ordinances of unassisted fate. By human cruelty and iniquity it has been afflicted; by human mercy and justice it must be raised."

W. J. JUPP.

LITERATURE.

BROAD CHURCH THEOLOGY.*

THREE years ago the Rev. Charles Beeby, the vicar of Yardley Wood, scandalised orthodox Churchmen by publishing in his volume, "Creed and Life," a series of popular discourses in which he went through the accepted creed of the Church clause by clause, interpreting it in the light of reason and conscience, and, as they affirmed, destroying the very foundations of Christian faith. In face of the storm of indignation thus raised, Mr. Beeby boldly replied that he did seek to abolish the crude theological forms of Latin Christianity, but that his was a better orthodoxy, more spiritual and more ancient, while, at the same time, it alone was fitted to harmonise with modern science and the profoundest philosophical thought of the day. His plea was for a return to the modes of thought common to the Greek Fathers of the Church as expressed in the Nicene Creed, the only creed recognised by the whole of orthodox Christendom; and he certainly showed very good cause for radical changes in the prevalent doctrinal teaching of the Church, and brought weighty testimony from other liberal thinkers in support of his contention.

And now Mr. Beeby has published a further course of popular lectures, in which he deals even more thoroughly with the central doctrines of orthodoxy. The "Athanasian" Creed is set aside as not a development but a degradation of the earlier Christian teaching, a degradation in keeping with the barbarous age which produced it, but long since an anachronism, and intolerable to those who understand that Love is above all things; while once more the Nicene Creed, ideally interpreted, is affirmed to be in harmony with modern thought, and the best basis for a restatement of Christian truth.

Mr. Beeby protests against a tendency, not uncommon at the present time, to leave doctrine alone, and rightly urges that clear thinking is essential to healthy religious life. But when he says that "it no more belongs to this age to construct a creed than to build cathedrals," and adds that what is wanted is "the retention of the ancient Creed, and the new interpretation, by living theologians, of the terms of the old and comprehensive formula," we are inclined to ask, why go only so far back, to this particular creed of Nicaea? Is it not far better to go direct to our supreme religious teacher, and begin with the interpretation not of the clauses of a fourth century creed, but of the religion of Jesus himself? Do we want more creed than is to be found there?

> And so the Word had breath, and wrought
> With human hands the creed of creeds
> In loveliness of perfect deeds,
> More strong than all poetic thought.

We may share to the full Mr. Beeby's preference for the principles and results of Greek rather than Latin thought, but more precious still is the mind of Christ.

When we take this for the starting point of our interpretation of Christian truth, we may indeed feel with Mr. Beeby that the "Three Somethings" which make the One God of the Athanasian Creed are "a chimera of bad metaphysics," which it is "impossible for any sane man to worship in spirit and in truth"; but we cannot follow him when he affirms that "God is an infinite Christ," and that we can only know God "as He is in human flesh, under the limitations and conditions of human life and consciousness." When Jesus reveals the Father to us, it is not as one who is under such limitations. The starting point for our knowledge of God must be in our own consciousness, where the human spirit becomes aware that it cannot be separate from the Eternal. The filial spirit rests for ever in the Father's care, and where that spirit is most fully manifested, there is the most perfect revelation of the Father's love, in which it rests. Thus Jesus, the chief of faithful souls, as none other, reveals the Father to us, but not as "an infinite Christ," rather as the One Eternal all-loving Spirit, in whom the Christ and all who learn of him the secret of true religion, must ever live and have their being. Mr. Beeby has expounded in these columns his interpretation of the Trinitarian doctrine of God, but we cannot be persuaded, and remain convinced that the only basis for abiding faith is in surrender to Him, whose glory is revealed in the heavens and the earth, to whom Jesus prayed and taught us to pray as our Father, and who is the ever present Spirit of our deeper life.

We cannot follow Mr. Beeby through all the subjects treated in his lectures, but they will be found throughout full of trenchant criticism and earnest religious affirmation. The interest centres chiefly in two points, the real meaning of sin and atonement, and the birth and resurrection of Jesus, with a full discussion of the miraculous stories attached to each.

In what light Mr. Beeby regards the Latin doctrine of Atonement will be seen from his statement that "the sacrifice of Jesus, well pleasing to God, is the perfect surrender of the human will to the Divine will." "The sacrifice is a spiritual sacrifice, the offering of the inner moral being." "The death of Christ indicates the consummation of the earthly life of obedience, the continued surrender, to the end, of the human will to the Divine will." And the lecture on "The One Offering and the Sacrifice of the Christian Priesthood" concludes:—

> The great thing is to understand that we are God's people, that we may go directly to the throne of grace, and approach God our Father without fear, in the freedom of sons, and that the one and only offering which God seeks, and which is pleasing and acceptable to Him, is the obedience of the will, the life of sacrifice, of love, and of service.

In dealing with the subject of sin Mr. Beeby makes full use of the light thrown by the theory of evolution upon the development of human life, on the moral as well as the physical side, but we cannot say that we are satisfied by his account of conscience, which passes much too lightly over the meaning of obligation. Conscience, Mr. Beeby declares, "is the social faculty," and its basis is "simply feeling." The urgency of moral obligation may be called feeling, but surely it is a kind of feeling apart from all others in our life, marking the presence within us of a Power, not ourselves, which "makes for righteousness." When Mr. Beeby says, "Right or wrong, then, is determined by the opinion of the society, and the ground of the Right or Wrong is the presumed welfare of the society under the actual conditions which exist," that may be merely a loose and unguarded sentence, but if it means what it appears to say, it would seem to us an utter misinterpretation of our moral life, which is to us the surest witness of the presence and purpose of God.

As to the doctrine of the miraculous birth, Mr. Beeby replies to those who have expressed sympathy with his spiritual view, but urge that the old view is best left to die out of itself, that the result of silence can be only mischievous. "If there is any article of the Creed which is incapable of discussion, be sure that around that profession of belief will grow the grossest superstitions and follies"; and he proceeds to show how the received doctrine reduces the story of the birth of Jesus to the level of the legend of the birth of the Buddha, and does gross wrong to the most sacred relations of human life. His treatment of this and of the resurrection stories is unflinchingly radical, and such as to establish the permanent spiritual truth by stripping away the legendary elements which have become more and more a stumbling-block to earnest and thoughtful religious faith.

We will conclude this notice with a

* "Doctrine and Principles:" Popular Lectures on Primary Questions. By C. E. Beeby, B.D., vicar of Yardley Wood, near Birmingham, and author of "Creed and Life." Williams and Norgate. 1900. 4s. 6d.

somewhat long quotation from Mr. Beeby's first lecture, which admirably shows the spirit in which his work is done :—

But now if we accept the principle laid down—(1) that the formularies of the Church are to be interpreted by the Scripture, and not the Scripture by the formulary, that we are to refer our doctrinal formularies to the Scriptures, and to interpret the Scriptures with all the light of modern knowledge, and with all the resources of critical judgment; (2) that the living Church is authorised to place its own sense on the old language, and to interpret the common formula of its creed, essentially, morally, and spiritually, in the same sense, yet not always from the intellectual and rational side of the understanding in the same sense, as that in which it was received in the age in which it was composed, or in the sense of the compilers—we have here a very important and fruitful principle which cannot be confined in its operation to the formula of the Athanasian Creed; just the principle, it seems to me, which we need consciously to recognise, in order to be freed from most of our theological difficulties, and from those passions and animosities which, to this day, reveal the wide gulf which yet separates the Christianity of the Churches from the Christianity of Christ.

Christian people generally, it seems to me, should be ever ready to recognise and to welcome the new interpretation of the prophets and preachers of the living Church, as the very proof of the Divine Presence in their midst. When I think how much pain and misery has been removed from human life by the passing of so much which was gloomy and morose in the ancient theology we inherited, with its dread and haunting spectres of constant evil, and how that the brighter, larger, and grander doctrine of the Divine Fatherhood is accompanied to-day by a larger and deeper sense of a kindred humanity, there seems to me much cause for rejoicing, and that we Christians of this age are unworthy Christians if we do not thank God for all this new knowledge, which has brought such enlargement of our human horizon, and a new intense interest of human life, with its moral uplifting and dear sympathy of human brotherhood. The theological change, no less than other secular changes, is the proof of the Divine education, and therefore of the Divine care of man. The very stirrings and questionings and strivings of men, the very intensity and feeling of passion aroused in the Church, this conflict of opinions—all is good if in the heart and core of us we are good; it is the wave set trembling in our human thought and life which is passing through the whole body of the Church in answer to the Divine breath. Christians to-day ought to be optimists of a large hope, because we cannot fail, I think, to perceive more clearly the increasing purpose of God in the revelation of His Son, "because the darkness is passing away, and the true light already shineth."

THE "NEW WORLD."

THE December number of the New World is, we greatly regret to say, the last number which is to be issued, completing the ninth volume of a Quarterly Review of Religion, Ethics, and Theology which will be very much missed.

This final number opens with a striking and powerful article by the Rev. L. P. Jacks on "The Influence of John Ruskin." It begins with a parallel between the influence of Tolstoy and Ruskin, of whom Mr. Jacks speaks as "the challengers of 'civilisation,' as we know it in the year 1900."

From each of them, though in very different voices, has come a prophetic negation that the main tendencies of the modern world are in the direction of either the happiness or the morality of mankind. Whether Carlyle ought to be named as a third of the company may be open to debate; at all events his point of view is less easily defined. From Carlyle Ruskin learned to deepen his hatred of shams, but the study of perfection as it exists in the Fine Arts gave the latter an ideal of thoroughness differing from and even surpassing that of Carlyle, and at the same time brought a wider and sadder knowledge of the extent to which shams prevail in the world.

It is one of the tests of a genuine optimism, Mr. Jacks says, if after following the guidance of Tolstoy and Ruskin through the world, and seeing all the evil they make so terribly clear, one can still retain hope, as they themselves retain the hope of earnest reformers.

One other passage we must quote, referring to the standard of judgment of these two great teachers :—

As Ruskin ever and again refers to great periods of Gothic for his standard of what is perfect in art, so Tolstoy, with a not less thorough grasp of the matter, holds to the teaching of Jesus for the standard of what is right in life, and as the past aims of the cathedral builders serve Ruskin as a foil whereby to show the petty aims which inspire the builders of our streets or "villas," so does the grandeur of the Gospel enable Tolstoy, by force of contrast, to exhibit the life of the rich and the work of modern Governments and Churches as a product of delusion and lies. Between these two messages, outwardly so different, there is therefore this deep unity of purpose and of spirit.

Mr. Jacks then proceeds with his study of Ruskin's teaching, and concludes with a reminder that in denunciation there is no remedy, but that in the midst of the immense forces in the world which in themselves are neither right nor wrong moral idealism has a great work to do to make them right and conformable to the Kingdom of God. "This, surely, has always been the method with those who have been sent 'not to judge the world, but to seek and save that which was lost.'"

Among the other articles we may note specially that by the Rev. H. M. Simmons on "The Recrudescence of War" and the Rev. Francis Tiffany's review of Mr. Chadwick's "Theodore Parker," which he hails as the final biography. There are also two articles on "The Religion of the American Negro" and "Negro Education." Professor G. B. Stevens writes on "Some Present Day Conditions affecting Theological Education." Of the memorial articles on the late Professor Charles Carroll Everett, who was from the first the senior editor of the New World, we have spoken in another column.

The New World, December, 1900. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin and Co. London: Gay and Bird. To be had at Essex Hall, 3s.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
In Tins
And Packets.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Tins 1lb.
And 3lbs.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Packets 1lb.
And ½lb.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Sold by Grocers.
Export Oilmen.

IS NATURE CRUEL?

BY MRS. BAYLE BERNARD.

PERHAPS the oft-quoted line of Tennyson,

"Nature red in tooth and claw,"

is in no small measure responsible for the widespread feeling that Nature is essentially cruel. However this may be, it can hardly be denied that the sentiment is at the present day very commonly felt and expressed. This is certainly to be deplored, for, as another poet says,

"Nature is but another name for God," and any reflection upon His work is also a reflection upon His character. Indeed, the ordinary deduction from "Nature is cruel" is, "Then God is not good," which, if true, would make void the best hopes of humanity.

It must be conceded that there is much in the world which at first seems to countenance the idea that it has been subjected to a pitiless system; but a little reflection would often show the fallacy of such a notion. We are the victims of innumerable painful diseases, but are these cruelly inflicted? Few but the very ignorant would now attribute pestilential epidemics to Divine wrath instead of to neglect of sanitation; and, as regards our individual sicknesses, though sincere piety is apt to say when it suffers, "It has pleased God to afflict me," the suffering is really not by but against the will of God, for if traced to its source it will be found almost invariably to arise from some breach of His laws, from our own or our fellow-mortals' vice or carelessness. Eliminate from the list of our disorders all which are due to such causes, and few indeed will remain. How, then, should such ills be ascribed to Nature when they are so indubitably unnatural? As Paley well observes, "Teeth are contrived to eat—not to ache. . . . No anatomist ever discovered a system of organisation calculated to produce pain and disease, or in explaining the parts of the human body ever said, this is to irritate; this to inflame; this duct is to convey the gravel to the kidneys; this gland to secrete the humour which forms the gout."

But in the lower creation, innocent sufferers, do not we see the weak ever the victims of the strong, the dove struck down by the hawk, the fly enmeshed in the spider's web, and domestic animals slaughtered wholesale to appease man's appetite? Yet, if our carnivorous instinct needs any apology, it is assuredly not due to the creatures that are bred to supply its gratification. How many rational human beings would avow their deliberate choice of "a short life and a merry one," rather than length of days with diminished enjoyment; and can we doubt that if domesticated animals were capable of choosing they would not prefer a brief space of ease and comfort, to be well fed and sedulously tended as they are now from interested motives, and then fall by the butcher's axe, rather than be left to live uncared for and perish by slow decay. As to the creatures which prey upon each other, either far fewer doves and flies must have been called into existence had not hawks and spiders also been appointed to devour them, or there might have been a worse alternative. Can anyone seriously think that this would be a happier world were flies, unlimited permitted to swarm in it?

Both men and beasts are liable to be smitten by the bolts of heaven, are exposed to the fierce onslaughts of lions and tigers, to the deadly venom of the viper and other poisonous serpents, and we shrink with horror from the idea of such violence; but there is reason to believe that the reality is far less terrible than imagination pictures it. The lightning stroke brings a death so instantaneous that there is no time for pain to be felt. Dr. Livingstone's well-known narrative describes his being attacked and wounded by a lion as a sensation almost pleasurable; and as to the poison of the snake a recent writer observes: "Of course the main object of this liquid is to put the viper's living prey to death swiftly and easily. The venom from the viper's poison-bag acts as a strong narcotic, and has been utilised by homœopathists as a valuable opiate or sleeping draught, under the title of Lachesis. Thus, the creature for which no one has a good word, is the bearer of a beneficent drug—its poison is a blessing in disguise."

But what shall be said of the frightful catastrophes which ever and anon cause wholesale destruction. We learn of villages crushed by an avalanche, of whole cities buried in burning lava or entombed by earthquakes, and we shudder as we read; but do we always remember that such terrific calamities are by no means unmixed evils, as the discoveries of Science more and more reveal to us. Sir J. Lubbock, in his "Scenery of Switzerland," thus teaches us: "Avalanches are often looked on as isolated and exceptional phenomena. This is quite a mistake. They are an important factor in Alpine life. The amount of snow which they bring down is enormous. Coaz estimates it in certain districts as equal to one mètre of snow over the whole district. Without them the higher Alps would be colder, the lower regions hotter and drier. The snow-line would come down lower; many beautiful Alps would be covered with perpetual snow; the glaciers would increase, the climate become more severe, the mountains less habitable. . . . However destructive then they may be at times, avalanches are on the whole a blessing." Lyell again, in his "Principles of Geology," speaking of the two great agents of change in the inorganic world—fire and water—says "The aqueous agents are incessantly labouring to reduce the inequalities of the earth's surface to a level; while the igneous are equally active in restoring the unevenness of the external crust; partly by heaping up new matter in certain localities, and partly by depressing one portion and forcing out another of the earth's envelope."

Buckle quotes this passage and thus comments on volcanic action: "As the beauty of the material world mainly depends on that irregularity of aspect without which scenery would have presented no variety of form, and but little variety of colour, we shall, I think, not be guilty of too refined a subtlety if we say that fire, by saving us from the monotony to which water would have condemned us, has been the remote cause of that development of the imagination which has given us our poetry, our paintings, and our sculpture, and has thereby not only wonderfully increased the pleasures of life, but has imparted to the human mind a completeness of function to which in the absence of such a stimulus it could not have attained." Again it was but the other day that Professor John Milne, the distinguished seismologist in a lecture on "Earthquakes and Volcanoes," addressed his audience in these forcible terms: "Now are earthquakes of any use?" asked the Professor, and he replied, "Most certainly. The Japanese people, for instance, ought to go down on their knees after each earthquake in thankfulness instead of deploring the occurrences, for every hour of the day and night the forces of nature—frost, sun, and rain—were wearing away the surface of the land and carrying it to the sea. The earthquakes indicated a compensating process going on. The ground was being lifted by those crumplings, and, therefore, the Empire of Japan was being steadily enlarged." In so many instances fuller knowledge thus makes manifest to us "a soul of good in things evil," or which at least seem mere evil to the unenlightened.

Does not, then, even simple justice demand that when we observe anything which at first appears to indicate indifference on the part of our Heavenly Father to the welfare of His children, we should conclude, not that He is "cruel," but rather that, could we understand the case in all its bearings, we should find either that we have formed an erroneous judgment as to the cause of the evil, the responsibility actually resting elsewhere, or that at least the benefits arising from the arrangement really outweigh its disadvantages.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

THE HIGH PEAK CHAPELS.

SIR,—I have read with interest and pleasure the article in THE INQUIRER on the High Peak chapels, and desire for the effort now being made under such strong organisation and promising auspices every success. There is a statement in the appeal about which I would just like to say a word. It is to the effect that "Flagg has never, except for one short period, had a settled minister." With respect to this allow me to mention one or two facts with which I am somewhat familiar:—

1. The Rev. William Sutherland was minister and resided at Flagg for some years, and afterwards at Topsham, in Devon, and Malton, in Yorkshire.

2. The Rev. William Birks, my father, was for about seven years minister at Flagg, preaching also at Ashford, Cressbrook, Great Hucklow, and Bradwell, in conjunction with the Rev. Robert Shenton.

3. The Rev. John Ferrar, B.A., succeeded my father as minister of Flagg, although he resided at Ashford, and afterwards became minister at Bury St. Edmunds.

4. The Rev. R. Cowley Smith was also resident minister at Flagg, and afterwards at Stannington, South Shields, and Buxton.

During all this time Flagg was in union with, and supported by, first, the Manchester Village Mission Society, and then the North Midland Association. Afterwards, for twenty years, Mr. C. Woollen, of Sheffield, had the chapel in charge. JOHN BIRKS.

Derby, Feb. 18.

FORGIVENESS.

SIR,—Mr. F. T. Mott's letter is suggestive alike in what it omits as in what it advances. We are presented with the picture of a Beautiful Necessity, but do we trace therein all the lineaments of our Heavenly Father?—an invariable law, an undeviating attitude both benevolent in their purpose, but still unswerving, unchanging! Do we find here that discriminating standard set forth in the Christian teaching which visits with few stripes the sins of ignorance, but with many when the disobedience is with knowledge and wilful? Is there any room for the note of joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, or for the interweaving of the divine and human wills indicated in the words, "For if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses"?

So much to show that there are contents in the Christian thought of God, not presented in the conception offered to us.

Mr. Mott thinks that so far as forgiveness means a change of feeling, it may be permissible and laudable in man, but inconsistent with the undeviating good will of God. Therefore we must conclude that the man who sins and takes pleasure in his sin is regarded by God in just the same light as he who has sinned and now bitterly repents of it. "To err is human, to forgive divine," runs an old saying, but now that must be altered. A man may suffer the life-long consequences of another's sin against himself, and yet forgive and pity the wrong-doer and try to mitigate his remorse—if there be no corresponding attribute in God, do we not in our effort to disassociate Him from the human make Him something less than man? But we needs must love the highest when we see it; and any thought of God that does not embody the highest will be rejected of men.

Even the extract you give from Dr. Martineau's writings fails, I think, to cover the whole ground, for it does not take into account the power of the reconciled soul to enter into newness of life, the good fruits of which work concurrently with the consequences of the former sin, modifying them, and at last assimilating them into the new life of blessedness. Were it not for this the spiritual life would be at best but a tragedy, for who can escape sin?

The systems of philosophy seek for an Absolute, but so far as I can discover they fail to account for the mysteries of sin and redemption; these were revealed by a personality.

When we are called upon to divest our conceptions of the Diety of the attributes of will and affections, because they are associated with the finalities of a person, then our will and affections fold their wings, they have no longer power to soar into the atmosphere of worship, the voice of supplication is dumb and the tongue of sacred poesy is silent. May not our uncertain voice, I might almost say our silence, on the subject of sin and redemption have something to do with our non-success with the people? The old-fashioned sermon is dead; philosophic thought and the higher criticism have killed it. But as preachers must needs have parables, to-day we see the strange phenomenon of the works of our poets, painters, novel and play writers being expounded from the pulpit. Perhaps another turn of the wheel and the old gospel story will come back to pre-eminence, and we shall be able to fit all our new thought into it, and find guidance to help us in the pressing problems of our social and national life.

E. CAPLETON.

113, Highbury New Park, Feb. 17.

THE UNRIGHTEOUS STEWARD.

SIR,—Mr. Poynting's letter has not convinced me. I admire its general tone, but cannot accept its reasoning. He regards the parable as illustrating the doctrine of the cross; to my mind it exhibits unprincipled selfishness, and has not an atom of the Master's fine, elevated, feeling.

I most strongly object to one sentence in the letter, and for this reason: that instead of facing the chief difficulty in the passage in dispute, it dismisses it with a graceful wave of the hand, as though there were nothing there on which one need dwell.

Mr. Poynting says:—"And so Jesus points out to all his disciples that if they were as determined to allow nothing to daunt them, if they were as resolute in using divine means as men in general are in using those means which he termed the mammon of unrighteousness, then the Christian disciples would be received into the eternal tabernacles."

Now I will not say that this is a garbled statement, lest it be thought that I meant to be offensive—which I do not. But it is a statement in which the ninth verse has been worked over in such a way that the central thought is covered up and hidden. Mr. Poynting says: "If they were as resolute in using divine means as men in general are in using those means which he termed the mammon of unrighteousness." But this is altering the text, bringing in a comparison which does not exist in the original. The text gives specific instructions for the prudent use—not of "divine means," but of this very mammon of unrighteousness. The command is not, "Copy in the moral sphere the worldly man's prudence," but "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness; that when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." The meaning of this is so clear and direct that I am surprised there should be any hesitation about it.

Is not Mr. Poynting unfair to me when he asks, "Am I to refuse to teach the parable of the Sower because Jesus has no rebuke for the careless husbandman, &c."? I do not object to any parable being taught. I only object to the young being taught that all the New Testament Parables are necessarily the work of Jesus. Nor do I urge that all the grounds of the Higher Criticism should be prematurely dwelt upon. Do not children sometimes have elementary lessons, on various subjects? The results of the Higher Criticism (and occasionally the methods also) might at times be set before them in a way that would interest them, and at the same time lead them to feel that they are responsible for thinking rightly, as well as for feeling and acting rightly.

For examples of what I mean, I may mention that most useful book, the "Bible for Young People," where some of the parables are interpreted simply, clearly, and rationally.

F. T. REED.

[Our readers will remember that last week we published a second letter on this subject from Mrs. Weir, suggesting another interpretation of the parable, which sees irony in the direct statement of the verse which Mr. Reed particularly criticises.—ED. INQ.]

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

"BEHOLD I have done according to thy words, I have given thee a wise and understanding heart." These words were an answer to Solomon's prayer for wisdom, when the Lord appeared before him one night in a dream and asked him what He should give him; and Solomon's prayer was that he might have an understanding heart in order that he might be able to discern between good and evil.

And, children, I should like you to remember that a prayer should be a prayer of deeds, not of words only. When we pray to God to help us to be good and brave, we must really try to be so; and when we pray for a wise and understanding heart, we must wish with all our hearts to know the will of God and be able to do it. We cannot be wise unless we have an earnest desire to become so; and then in order to make the right use of our wisdom, we must try and help others.

There was a boy who had a dreadful illness which left him quite blind for the rest of his life. He had not eyes, like you have, to read and write, and see the sun and stars and all the trees and flowers in this beautiful world. Have you ever been through a long tunnel in a train, shut out from all the light of day? I expect most of you have, and you well know how dark it seems. That is what this world seems like to a blind man, and so it was to that poor boy.

What was he to do with his life? He could not see or read anything, but by his own wish he went to school, and by hearing he learnt the English language, and then Latin and Greek. Think of that, boys and girls! But he did not stop there; he had an earnest desire to learn, and, at his own wish, learned mathematics and gave lectures to others. How do you think he learned arithmetic? Not as you do, with slate and pencil, or on a blackboard, but by arranging pins and fixing thread upon them, and in this way he also solved some of the most difficult problems in Euclid. He afterwards became Professor of Mathematics at Cambridge.

So you see that even though his eyes were darkened he knew far more than a great many people who have the use of all their senses. He was indeed a true child of God, and had a wise and understanding heart. He did not spend his days bewailing the loss of his eyesight, but set himself bravely to learn all he could, and then was not satisfied until he had helped others to learn too.

Now let me tell you about a girl who in her early years became not only blind but deaf, and not being able to hear caused her to lose the power of speech also. Do you think a child like that could ever learn to do anything? Yes, if she had the wish and the will to learn; and so it was with this little girl, who learned to read quite fluently. She had a very acute sense of feeling, and was taught to read by a board with square holes into which she could set the types, so that the letters could be felt above the surface. She was also very expert with her needle, and made some very beautiful fancy articles. Like the boy in the other story, she had an earnest desire to learn, and make the very most of her opportunities.

And now I want to say a few words about another sort of blindness which is really far worse than being blind with our eyes; and that is the blindness of the heart and mind, which will not know truth, and wisdom, and God. The best way to overcome this blindness is to try and help one another. How did the boy and girl I have just told you about learn in spite of their blindness? It was by a desire to learn; and so in our spiritual blindness, it is by an earnest prayer in our hearts that we may know God and feel Him near us, and that we may have the spirit of right within us. No one can give us this, though others may help us, by their pure and unselfish lives, to feel that God is very near to them, and so giving us courage and hope that if we, too, try to live pure and unselfish lives, we may come to feel God very near to us. But it is into our own consciences and into our own hearts that we must look, doing all we can, even if it may only be very little, to help those around us.

The greatest joy is to know God, and to feel that He is near, and if we do not feel this, we are living in a world where we are spiritually blind.

I would like you to feel that it is by helping and teaching others that we learn ourselves; and God places us here in order that we may help each other and live for each other. If we do that, He will help us. God is the light of the world, and He has called us to live as His children in the world, that we may each one of us be the light and joy of those around us.

A. H., after W. H. C.

AMONG the extracts from Huxley's letters, which we published last week, was one containing his strong testimony against the use of alcohol as a stimulant by brain-workers. To this we will add here the following points from a recent lecture by Professor Horsley, F.R.S., at the London Institution, on "The Effect of Alcohol on the Nervous System." Everyone admitted, he said, that to take alcohol in large quantities was injurious, but the lecture dealt specially with the taking of small quantities, in its use as a beverage at meal-times, and this from the physiologist's point of view was declared to be also distinctly injurious. The sense of well-being which followed, for instance, the taking of wine was deceptive both as regards brain-work and muscular activity; for while there was at first a quickening effect, this was followed by a second stage of failure and loss of power. With tea and coffee it was different; the stimulation which they caused in time passed away, but was followed by no loss of power, as in the case of alcohol. He, therefore, strongly deprecated the use of alcohol as a beverage.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 23, 1901.

THE "NEW WORLD."

WE have received with great regret the final number of the New World (December, 1900), the Quarterly Review of Religion, Ethics, and Theology, which for the past nine years, published in Boston with an American Board of Editors, has been an invaluable organ of the best liberal scholarship on both sides of the Atlantic. The aim of the editors was to embrace in their Review the discussion of all questions connected with religion, in the departments of theology, the religious life, the history of religions, Biblical science and criticism, ethics, sociology, and literature, in a spirit at once reverent and free, without sectarian limitations; and how fully their ideal has been realised anyone may see who will look over the nine volumes now completed. Founded and published in America, it was of course inevitable that the majority of its writers should be drawn from that side of the ocean, but considerably more than a fifth of the whole number of contributors represented the scholarship of Europe. Among the English contributors were EDWIN A. ABBOTT, W. E. ADDIS, W. F. ADENEY, R. A. ARMSTRONG, EDWARD CAIRD, J. E. CARPENTER, T. K. CHEYNE, JAMES DRUMMOND, G. B. GRAY, ALLAN MENZIES, ST. GEORGE MIVART, J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, C. B. UPTON, and Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD, while from the Universities of the Continent was enlisted the help of such distinguished scholars as G. BONET-MAURY (Paris), KARL BUDDE (Strassburg), COUNT GOBLET D'ALVIELLA (Brussels), BERNHARD DUHM (Basel), H. HOLTZMANN (Strassburg), OTTO PFLEIDERER (Berlin), ALBERT and JEAN RÉVILLE (Paris), A. SABATIER (Paris), J. WELLHAUSEN (Göttingen), and H. H. WENDT (Jena). These, with many distinguished American writers, furnished a Review of a very high standard of excellence and variety of interest for all who were attracted by the more serious aspects of thought and life, and it is lamentable, though an old story in connection with such brave and enlightened undertakings, that for financial reasons it should have been found necessary to discontinue the publication.

The last number has an additional pathetic interest, in that it contains memorial notices of Professor CHARLES CARROLL EVERETT, who died last autumn, in his seventy-second year, and had been from the first the Senior Editor and one of the most constant and most welcome of contributors to the pages of the New World. Two of his co-editors, Professors C. H. TOY and N. P. GILMAN, pay grateful tributes to his memory, and Professor JOSIAH ROYCE writes on his character as a metaphysician. Professor TOY, giving an account of Dr. EVERETT'S teaching as Professor of Theology at Harvard, speaks of him in the following terms :—

> His was a poetical nature; he turned with delight, one may say, of necessity, to the ideal elements of life. He recognised fully the difficulties of the attempt to solve the mysteries of life, and he accepted gladly all the contributions that physical and psychological science has been able to make to the history of the world and of man. But he was captivated by the beauty and glory of the human soul and the external world, and his mind refused to rest in mere naturalistic and finite processes. He felt that man and nature were supernatural, and that, after scientific reasoning has exhausted itself, there remains something which can be conceived of only as a breath of the Absolute. The conception of goodness he held to be as real a fact as the external universe, and he could think of neither the one nor the other except as the expression of an infinite Life.

Professor EVERETT was an idealist of deep religious nature and of very attractive personality. His death is a very serious loss to the Harvard Divinity School, of which since 1878 he had been Dean, having joined the school as a teacher nine years before. The loss of his help for the New World would also have been deeply felt; but there were strong men left to take the vacant place, and we can well understand the keen disappointment with which the remaining managers have been obliged to accept the failure of their efforts to secure sufficient means to carry on this work. The loss of the New World is ours also, and we have read with sincerest sympathy Professor GILMAN'S wistful words concerning what might have been a most fitting memorial to so rare and fine a personality as CARROLL EVERETT'S, if an adequate endowment fund could have been raised to establish the Review upon a permanent basis.

We said that this untimely ending does but repeat an old story in connection with such undertakings. For though an American Review, and more fully than any earlier publication international in its character, we always liked to think of the New World as standing in the line of the honourable tradition of our English Reviews, which formerly for so many years were devoted to the cause of enlightened religious thought and life.

The Christian Teacher, edited for six years by JOHN HAMILTON THOM, became in 1845 the Prospective Review, of which TAYLER, MARTINEAU, THOM, and WICKSTEED were for ten years the Editors. This was followed in 1855 by the National Review, which came to an end in 1864. These were the Reviews in which many of MARTINEAU'S great Essays first appeared, and which counted among their contributors, in addition to the four Editors above-named, RICHARD HUTTON, WALTER BAGEHOT, W. CALDWELL ROSCOE, and other brilliant writers. It might have seemed that ten years marked the limit of the possible existence of such a publication, had not the Theological Review, edited by CHARLES BEARD, lasted from 1864 to 1879. Then came the Modern Review with the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG as Editor, and after its demise in 1884, the swallow-flight of the Christian Reformer during the two years 1886-7. After that we suffered a time of famine, until help came in such abundant measure from across the Atlantic.

And now that we must bid a sorrowful farewell to the New World also, is it too much to hope that some fresh effort may be made in this country to take up the good work once more? Possibly the forthcoming International Council of Unitarian and other Liberal Religious Thinkers and Workers, to be held in London in Whit-week, may furnish the occasion for fruitful conference on this subject also, and may open the way for some definite action. Distinguished scholars are expected from America and from the Continent. The object of the Council is "to bring into closer union, for exchange of ideas, mutual service, and the promotion of their common aims, the scattered liberal congregations and isolated thinkers and workers for religious freedom in many lands." Such was the aim of the New World on the side of thought and scholarship. A successor will certainly be needed, and we must hope that its arrival will not be long delayed.

MESSRS. WILLIAMS AND NORGATE announce that the translation by T. Bailey Saunders of Professor Harnack's "Das Wesen des Christenthums" will be published immediately under the title, "What is Christianity?" It will be included in their new series of the Theological Translation Library, and sold separately at half-a-guinea.

THE LATE LORD O'HAGAN'S REPORTED "RECONCILIATION" TO ROME.

OUR readers will remember that we called their attention, on Jan. 5, to the rumour circulated by the Roman Catholic Press and by the Daily Chronicle and other newspapers to the effect that Lord O'Hagan, before his death, had been reconciled to the Church of Rome. It is painful to have to revert to the subject, but since the story has come up again in a new form, it is our duty to give it once more an emphatic denial, and to add the proofs which stamp it as an invention. It was in the first instance reported, with a great show of authority, that Father Bernard Rawlinson, who had known Lord O'Hagan when at college, had "reconciled" him a month before his death. It has since been proved, through the War Office, that Father Rawlinson was stationed at Belfast, where he had been for four months; that he had not visited Springfontein at all; and, moreover, that Lord O'Hagan was admitted to the hospital on Dec. 2 or 3, and died on the 13th. The fiction of Father Rawlinson and the conversion a month before death having been thus disposed of, a second "authoritative" statement has now appeared in the Weekly Register and other papers. It is based on a letter, addressed by the Vicar-Apostolic in South Africa, from Port Elizabeth, to an Irish Bishop, "containing the fullest particulars of the happy occurrence."

A certain Father Bradley, by the merest accident we are told, owing to the disarrangement of the train service, found himself at Springfontein. "It was fortunate," he is reported to have said, "that I did so, because otherwise Lord O'Hagan would have died without a priest. As it is, I attended him, received him into the Church, and he died the following Thursday." What evidence is offered in support of this story? Absolutely none. Less, indeed, than what was pretended to be given for the reconciliation by Father Rawlinson.

On the other hand, let us relate the facts as investigated and tested by officers on the spot, and confirmed by the War Office. Lord O'Hagan was admitted to the hospital at Springfontein suffering from enteric. On his own initiative he entered himself as a Protestant. He grew rapidly worse, and only lived ten or eleven days after reaching the hospital. He became so ill and delirious that he pathetically mistook for his mother the devoted nurse who watched over him with unremitting tenderness. "Mother," he said, "are you there; hold my hand." He was attended by the Rev. Mr. Griffiths, the Protestant Chaplain, who performed the funeral service at his burial.

Father Bradley is called a "military" chaplain, but his name, we believe, does not appear in the official list. A story is told of a priest presenting himself at the hospital one day and claiming that Lord O'Hagan was a Roman Catholic, but his brother-officers told the priest that he had made a mistake, and he took his departure without seeing Lord O'Hagan. Another officer, a personal friend, who had heard the story of the reconciliation to Rome, said he did not believe a word of it, for he had known Lord O'Hagan "argue with no little skill against the tenets of the Roman Catholic Church."

Both the official and private correspondence in the hands of Lord O'Hagan's family clearly establish the truth on which we are thus obliged to insist, and no words are strong enough to condemn the conduct of those who have put into circulation these stories, born of a remorseless and ungodly zeal, and doing grievous wrong to the memory of a young officer who died for his country in South Africa.

A LIVING CHURCH.

SIR,—The vigorous articles by Mr. Lummis under the heading "Choose Life" ought to lead to a useful discussion in THE INQUIRER, for there are many forms which life may choose, and different minds may contribute suggestions all the more valuable because of their respective points of difference and agreement.

1. I entirely agree with you, Sir, in deprecating another controversy as to our common name. I can remember many such discussions, but never one out of which grew any deeper religious feeling or more practical manifestations of life. Nothing could be more fatal to a good start for the new century than such a plan as that proposed by Mr. Lummis. The scattered tribes of Israel chose a king, not a common name, and the name of Englishman came to supersede those of Saxon and Norman, not in consequence of a vote by ballot, but by reason of certain great accomplished facts.

2. I do not believe it would be well, at present, to ask for annual meetings of our National Conference. We have annual meetings of the B. and F.U.A. and of the S.S.A., also of each district association at which the local congregations can be far more largely represented than at one central gathering. We also have the Ministers' Institute at Oxford each year when the National Conference does not meet. Look through the further list of our societies holding periodic meetings which involve a considerable amount of travelling for those attending them, and then it is not hard to realise why it is so often difficult, with our limited numbers, to get the good attendance there ought to be, and the presence of the speakers we want to hear, at the gatherings for which we are already responsible. Besides, if the National Conference will undertake important tasks for the benefit of the Free Churches it represents, and will appoint committees and sub-committees to execute these tasks, a three years' interval will not be too long for their accomplishment, and interim reports can always be presented for the consideration of the independent churches and other executive bodies with whom the final decision will rest. Mr. Lummis thinks that more frequent meetings of our most successful Triennial Conference would infuse more life into all our other gatherings. I fear, on the other hand, that such a course would deprive the Conference of its national character, for the same effort to attend it would not be made, and that such attendance as was secured would be at the expense of the gatherings we now have.

3. I heartily agree with what Mr. Lummis says in par. 18 about Biblical criticism, and the duty of making known the facts that really are ascertained. What is most urgently needed at the present day is a good cheap popular Manual on the Book of Genesis. The way that book is avoided in series of Biblical Manuals would be amusing if it were not so pitiable. Meanwhile, millions, literally, of day-school children are being taught as divine truth statements which every educated person knows to be untrue, and yet there is not a single book which is just the right thing to put in the hand of an intelligent teacher. The best thing you can tell him is to read the subject up in the "Encyclopedia Britannica." We naturally ask, What has become of the series of Biblical Manuals begun under the editorship of Professor Carpenter? The answer, I understand, is that the contributors who promised MSS. failed to send in their contributions, and that the public has shown its usual indifference to most of the series already published. Hence the series has practically stopped. I should like to see the Quarterly spoken of by Mr. Lummis in par. 22, it being clearly understood that such a periodical was not expected to be self-supporting, but I believe that more good would be done at the present time by devoting such funds as can be secured for the support of literature to the production of small first-class handbooks to be sold at a price which our public will pay, and that will seldom exceed one shilling sterling.

4. Many of us are working in connection with local committees for University Extension lectures, and sometimes have opportunities for getting economic subjects discussed. But, surely, it is better that this work should be undenominational, than that it should be undertaken by a Church or group of Churches? In par. 29 Mr. Lummis asks two questions which fill me with amazement: "Is it usury that works the ruin? Is our system of taxation a cruel one?" The answer of economic science to both these questions is, I believe, "No." But there are reforms connected with the taxation of land and the rating of ground values which have been retarded for two generations because their advocacy has been taken up by sectarian organisations which ask for a great deal more than the country is willing to grant, and because their own indisputable claims evoke no enthusiasm among the crowds who care only for what they cannot have. Here, as in the case of the Biblical Manuals, we want ascertained truth (and righteousness) to be clearly distinguished from wild speculation and one-sided exaggeration, and then we must organise public opinion to care for truth and righteousness when stripped of the extravagance which now constitutes its most successful claim to popularity.

H. SHAEN SOLLY.

Bridport, Feb. 19.

SIR,—The strongest note in the trumpet call of Mr. Lummis seems to me to be the appeal to that personal and individual devotion to the higher ideals of life comprised for us in religion.

This is our real want: with it organisation, names, institutions live, and become beneficent: without it the lifeless machine crumbles into decay.

I thank Mr. Lummis for myself that he has once more pointed out plainly and primarily that, "The fault is not in our stars, but in ourselves, that we are underlings."

Speaking again for myself alone, I am conscious that the evil in the world at times weighs so much upon me, as to lead me to view the general trend of affairs out of all proportion. He does well to remind us that "We lack religion in the sense that we do not lead all our life in the consciousness of His presence." "Our first and deepest need is the need of real prayer, real worship, sincerity in God's service."

I went last Sunday evening to a mission-room in a neighbouring city; though I have visited it occasionally on week-days, I had not been there on Sunday for a great many years. The neighbourhood has changed considerably of late years, and the main work of the mission lies at another chapel some distance away. Just a few faithful people were assembled for quiet worship, no choir, nothing attractive about the service but the organ, which was played with great expression and taste, and gave evidence at once that it was under the hands of a real lover of music. On going to thank him afterwards, I asked casually how long he had played there on Sunday evenings? Nearly twenty years, was the reply. I thought, then, that it is faithful, quiet service such as this of which the world is full, that keeps it sweet, and heralds the dawn of the brighter day, when even the politician and the financier shall join the Kingdom of God.

The next point which I should like to emphasise is the vital importance of the call Mr. Lummis makes for the social work, which he rightly says "weighs more and more upon our consciences." "We must set to work with all our united power on the problem of removing the causes of sin and misery." . . . "It is not enough to declare war, we must wage war, and the first step is to hold Councils of War." Not, thank God, to ascertain how we can slay our neighbour, but how we can save him.

This is the nearest duty that lies before us to-day; it has been said before, and I thoroughly believe it, that no body of men are so likely to be able to see soonest the right thing to be done as the clergy and laity of the Free Christian Churches. What is wanted is a clear view of the problem as a whole, free from preconceived ideas as to the necessity of established abuses, or social customs—a determination to seek out the root of the evil, not to be satisfied with thinly veneering the surface so as to make it look better. Earnest men outside the Churches are doing this work of inquiry, and the Church of England, to its credit be it said, is making an attempt by many of its members to do likewise. It has been left to a comparatively despised member of the ecclesiastical community of our day, the Salvation Army, to make the noblest and most self-denying effort in this direction. Surely we can do our part. Why not call our Council of Social War against misery and sin of all kinds in each large centre of population as a first fruit of this appeal of Mr. Lummis, and a fitting commencement of the twentieth century? May we appeal to the National Conference to take the lead?

Another pressing need which Mr. Lummis called attention to, is that of ministerial stipends. The work of the two existing funds for their augmentation is necessarily and rightly so quiet, that it is difficult for an outsider to know how far the insufficient salaries voted by many congregations are increased. It is very hard work for many struggling congregations to raise even the small incomes they are pledged to; it would often be injurious to their congregational life if a wealthier community in the neighbourhood stepped in to take the burden off their shoulders. But it cannot be beyond the power of even the existing organisations to remedy this to a greater extent than is done at present.

I have only one criticism to offer, and this refers to paragraph 13, on the attendance at various meetings and institutions connected with the Church. As Mr. Lummis says, Who does not know the excuses given for not attending meetings of this nature. But surely we should distinguish here, What sort of meetings and institutions are referred to? And to what kind of activities does the Church member prefer to devote his or her time?

Activities of various kinds—social, intellectual, recreative, athletic, even amusing—have grown up around many of our churches; they may be all excellent and worthy of support, but they may not be in the line of work which appeals to the active and sincere Church member at the moment.

A Church cannot ask more than that the philanthropic, or even recreative activities of its members shall be consistent with the principles of their religious faith. It makes a great mistake if it attempts to denominationalise the social relations, the political and philanthropic predilections of its members, who probably seek very different alliances in these matters from those they form when they seek to worship in spirit and in truth, according to the highest that they know.

Mr. Lummis treats of many other questions, no doubt of equal importance with those I have named, but I must leave these to others more competent to discuss them. Once more let me thank him for the clear and lucid, the sincere and earnest appeal he has made, and you, Sir, for the invitation to write to you on the subject.

Birkenhead. RICHARD ROBINSON.

As a further contribution to this discussion we will give here the report we have received of what was said by the Rev. L. P. Jacks at the recent annual meeting of the congregation of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham:—

"Speaking of the prospects of our churches generally, Mr. Jacks said that the work of the ministry was made difficult by a widespread want of confidence in the laity as to the future of the movement. For his part he did not think that confidence would be restored through any attempts to come prominently before the public. He had a profound distrust of all factitious excitement. What the church needed was internal development, and until this had been carried much further than had yet been done there was nothing from which to start a public movement. Referring to a statement of Professor Huxley's, quoted by Mr. Wm. Kenrick, to the effect that any church would be crowded where the gospel of mercy, justice, and truth was preached, he (the speaker) believed that if their churches would concentrate on this, and resolve to win only by this, they would surely see in time the fulfilment of Huxley's prophecy. But patience as well as faithfulness was essential, and he had no sympathy with impatient attempts to win the people through public demonstrations of energy rather than by the influence of steady work within. Their churches were yet in a transition state. They were passing out of the realm of barren controversies and getting into closer touch with life, whence all religious movements had their origin. Let them labour, and wait for the results of this change to develop. The world had many delusions concerning us: they still thought of us as concerned with Socinian controversies. These delusions died a hard, slow death; but they were dying nevertheless. Gradually it was getting whispered abroad that Unitarians were concerned only with the Gospel of the weightier matters of the Law. Let them be ambitious for no other reputation, and let them seek to deserve it by quiet, steady, patient work."

THE PEEL REPORT CONFERENCE.

As the delegate of the Essex Hall Temperance Association to the great National Conference on Lord Peel's Report on the Licensing Question, I have been asked to send an account of the proceedings to your columns.

A truly magnificent assembly it has been, and its effect was most inspiring on the thousand and more delegates from all parts of the country who came up to represent their various organisations. The morning and afternoon conferences were held in the Manchester Town Hall, which, splendid and spacious room as it is, was altogether inadequate for the occasion, many being unable to find even standing space.

The morning Conference was a private meeting from which reporters were excluded, so that nothing should interfere with the frankest possible interchange of opinion. The chairman, Mr. E. Stafford Howard, C.B., was the right man in the right place, proud to preside over the greatest representative Temperance Council which probably has ever been held. He pointed out that many had been swept into the Temperance net who had never before associated themselves with Temperance reform. The Conference had been called jointly by the Central Temperance Legislation Board and the Church of England Temperance Society.

The main resolution was entrusted to Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., who has done more hard work in connection with the Royal Commission than any other man. It ran as follows:—

That the Conference, believing that the time has fully come for securing a substantial instalment of Temperance reform, and also believing that the recommendation contained in the report of Lord Peel, the chairman of the Royal Commission, and eight of his colleagues, would produce an immediate and beneficial effect, hereby pledges itself, without prejudice to any other scheme which may be approved by the general body of workers in the Temperance movement, to strive earnestly to secure legislation on the lines of that report at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Whittaker made an earnest appeal for union in the ranks of Temperance and social reformers, in view of the unique opportunity of getting something practical done. He boldly grappled with the "compensation" difficulty which has proved such a stumbling-block to advanced Temperance people, and showed that it was not compensation in the ordinary sense of the word, and involved no sacrifice of principle, but that it was really "commutation" for an unexpired period of a time-allowance in order to bring about a desired reform more speedily. Without some such time-allowance, or commutation instead of it, the general public could not be got to see the justice of sweeping away a number of licensed houses against which no specific complaint could fairly be brought; and we had to remember that it was only by the help of the moderate, reputable non-abstainer that sufficient force could be obtained to carry so great a reform. The commutation money was to come out of the pockets, not of the tax or rate-payers, but of the trade itself, so that there was no question of principle involved. Two things must be secured: (1) We must have some immediate and substantial reform; (2) No obstacle must be placed in the way of Local Veto. Lord Peel's Report would wipe out of existence one half of the licensed houses in seven years' time, and give the local licensing authority a free hand thereafter without further time-notice or commutation. Moreover, it would extend popular control over the liquor traffic to Wales and Scotland, and he was authorised to say that it was Lord Peel's view that this provision should be part and parcel of the original Act.

Canon Davenport-Kelly seconded the resolution, which was then thrown open to free discussion. Some of the speakers altogether objected to the compensation proposals, and an amendment was moved in favour of dropping them. But the overwhelming feeling of the meeting was in favour of the Peel Report as a whole. The Rev. Armstrong Bennetts for the Wesleyans, Mr. Whitley, M.P., for practical business men, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., as one of the Royal Commissioners and a strong "extreme" man, the Rev. Mr. Paton for the Church of Scotland, the Rev. Dr. Townsend for the Evangelical Free Church Federation, all gave in their adhesion to the resolution. When it came to the vote, about a score of hands from an audience of over 1,000 were held up for the amendment, and the resolution was carried with only four dissentients.

This was the great decisive step. The proceedings at the remaining meetings, which were public and most enthusiastic, were by way of confirmation. The same resolution was introduced and carried unanimously at the afternoon public conference in the Town Hall, and at the great public meeting in the evening in the Free Trade Hall. Sir William Houldsworth, M.P., presided at the Public Conference, and on the platform with him were four other members of the Royal Commission, all of whom had signed Lord Peel's Report—namely, Messrs. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., W. S. Caine, M.P., J. H. Roberts, M.P., and Lord Peel himself. Sir William pleaded for the support of the moderate men who were not accustomed to work for Temperance, without whose assistance such a great measure of reform could not be carried. If only a united front was presented by the friends of sobriety, the trade would not count for much. Their movement would help and not hinder the cause of more advanced reformers, and the time would come when "many of us moderate, timid reformers," seeing what good work had been done by unity, might join their ranks and carry it still further. He reminded the meeting that four-fifths of the proposals were altogether independent of the question of compensation, and in themselves presented a great body of most valuable and needed reform.

Lord Peel had a great reception and made a fine speech. He said he had never addressed so large an audience, and had a great sense of the responsibility resting on him. He, too, emphasised the need for union, and said it would be a bold Government that ventured to ignore so strong and general a public opinion as was now expressing itself. His report asked no one to surrender any of his principles. As for Compensation, the word might have been unfortunate, and Commutation would perhaps have been better. He paid a fine tribute to Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and hoped his attitude to the new Temperance movement would not be that of "an armed neutrality." "We may be only pioneers in the path of that great scheme" which Sir Wilfrid had consistently advocated for so many years. It was time some remedial measures were taken. The magistrates collectively had unquestionably failed in their duty, and the Watch Committees in many of the towns were a by-word.

The Bishop of Wakefield spoke for the Church of England Temperance Society in place of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was presiding for the S.P.G.

The evening meeting I had not the pleasure of attending, but I understand the Free Trade Hall was crowded with an enthusiastic assembly, and cordial speeches in favour of legislation on the lines of Lord Peel's Report were made by Rev. Dr. Maclaren (chairman), Lord Peel, the Dean of Hereford, the Rev. C. F. Aked, Lady Henry Somerset, Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., and the Rev. George Gladstone.

Such a magnificent opportunity has never been presented to this country of making a great social and moral advance. For once, the Churches are united on this question, and men of all parties mingle on the platform and in the assemblies. A clarion call is made for the support of every man and woman who loves his fellows in the agitation which must now necessarily follow throughout the land; and in the thick of the good work I am sure that Unitarians will be conspicuous.

Bolton, Feb. 13. C. J. STREET.

TWO VOICES.

I WAS lately surprised to see in a Unitarian magazine an article on the "Religion of the Incarnation"; but I was not very much surprised to find on reading it that the writer did not treat of the doctrine of the Incarnation at all, but something quite different. The religion of the Incarnation, he said, teaches "That the Spirit of God dwells in all men," which is a general truth, and that "It dwelt in a unique degree in Jesus of Nazareth," which is only a particular instance. The doctrine of the Incarnation is not that the Spirit of God dwells in all men, but that the Son, the Second Person of the Trinity, became man:—

God the Son, the Second Person of the Holy Trinity, the Eternal Word, chose the Blessed Virgin Mary, of Nazareth, to become His mother, and on receiving her consent, He, by the supernatural agency of the Holy Spirit, took human flesh from her and thus became man.*

* "Catholic Belief," by Rev. J. F. Di Bruno, D.D., p. 7.

This is the teaching of the Creeds and of the Liturgy of the Church of England. To say that Jesus was the son of Joseph and Mary, but that the Spirit of God dwelt in him, is not Catholic doctrine but heresy, and is not a definition of the Incarnation, however true it may be in itself.

But another surprise was in store for me when I turned the pages of "Doctrine and Principles," by the Rev. C. E. Beeby, vicar of Yardley Wood. Mr. Beeby is quite clear as to what the Catholic doctrine is, but he appears to reject it. He denies that the Virgin birth is taught in Scripture, or in the Nicene Creed, according to which, in his opinion, the Athanasian Creed is rank heresy; but strangest thing of all he doubts if it is a doctrine of his own Church.

The doctrine of a Virgin birth, or a miraculous birth, is a Roman doctrine. It is not, I believe, a doctrine of the Church of England.*

On the other hand, Dr. Ellicot, the venerable and learned Bishop of Gloucester, a much better authority, insists that the Catholic doctrine, which Mr. Beeby rejects, is the doctrine of the Church of England, as we should naturally expect him to do, and in a sermon delivered in Gloucester Cathedral on Christmas Day he affirmed it in the most forcible terms. The tenor of this sermon may serve to remind Unitarians what the doctrine of the Incarnation really is, and may remove from Mr. Beeby's mind any doubt he has as to its being a doctrine of the Church of England.

Dr. Ellicot began by referring to the mystery of the Incarnation as being sometimes set aside as something too deep for us ever to understand:—

That God should come down from Heaven, be incarnate by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary," &c.

Mr. Beeby says that "a practised ambiguity of speech has with some divines become a fine art"; but he must admit there is nothing ambiguous in the language of Dr. Ellicot.

From the very first, said the Bishop, there have been two attempts to explain away the adorable mystery, and these "two earliest tendencies of poor human thought" remain to this day. The first was the heresy condemned by St. John, "afterwards called Docetism, or the strange, wild persuasion that our dear Lord was only man in appearance, and was born and died only in semblance and deceptive manifestation." "The other tendency (Unitarians will please note) was probably older still, and apparently showed itself among the earliest Jewish Christians, under the form that our Lord was verily the carpenter's son, but that at his baptism, or at some other epoch, the Divine Power entered into Him, so that He became the Son of God." Both these doctrines the Bishop of Gloucester declared to be anti-Christian—"emanations from the spirit of anti-Christ," though only the first of them was condemned by St. John.

Dr. Ellicot then proceeded to state what the judgment of "our Church" is upon this great doctrine.

What could be a clearer indication of the mind of our Church in regard of belief in this holy mystery than this—not only that it instructs us by that noble and lucid Creed (the Athanasian Creed) which it has bidden to be sung or said on the morning of this blessed day, but further, that it teaches us in the Collect for the week that the eternal Son was to be born of a pure Virgin, and, in the proper preface in the Communion Service (in language which has ever seemed to me of the most reverential clearness) has even vouchsafed to explain the very mystery of the Virgin birth. Can words be more fully and more solemnly clear than those which our Prayer Book directs the celebrant to utter on this holy day in the presence, as it were, of angels and archangels and of all the company of Heaven—that Jesus Christ, the only Son of God, by the operation of the Holy Ghost, was made very man of the substance of the Virgin Mary, his mother.

* "Doctrine and Principles," p. 156.

So far from allowing that there could be any doubt in the matter, the Bishop concluded by saying that these "revelations" "must ever be regarded by every faithful believer as our Prayer Book regards them, as real and living truths on which all our hopes here and hereafter will be found ultimately and permanently to depend."

As my only object was to show that the Bishop of Gloucester declares that the doctrine of the Church of England is the Catholic doctrine I must refrain from following him further, though it would be perhaps interesting to give his remarks on the Scripture authority for the doctrine of the Incarnation as taught alike in the Church of England and the Church of Rome. I may, however, add one passage to show that Dr. Ellicot used language which expressly excluded any non-miraculous interpretation of the doctrine or of the narratives of St. Matthew and St. Luke.

In the first place this plain truth must never be overlooked, that the main features of the narrative could only have come from the Blessed Virgin Mary herself; either directly to the carefully inquiring Evangelist, or to someone to whom the Blessed Virgin had related them, and by whom they had been communicated to St. Luke. And what a consideration this is. Could she whom all generations shall call blessed unto the very end of time, could she have been in a way mistaken? Such a question in its mildest form is painful; in any other form it is to anyone bearing the name of a Christian unthinkable. It is thus through the Blessed Virgin herself that the full revelation has been made to mankind.

The author of "Doctrine and Principles" asks:—

What is the belief, permissible or determined, of the Church of England? Does it affirm natural birth, or does it deny natural birth and affirm miracle? Both it cannot do."

Yet the Bishop of Gloucester says the one and the vicar of Yardley Wood says the other.

Walter Lloyd.

THE PROPHETIC SOUL.*

BY THE REV. JOHN W. CHADWICK.

One of Shakespeare's largest and most impressive phrases is that which occurs in Sonnet 107, "the prophetic soul of the wide world, dreaming of things to come." It is impossible not to wonder of what things to come during the twentieth century the wide world is dreaming as this new century enters upon the stupendous possibilities of its great career. We have every reason to believe that it will be more significant for good or ill than the century which has just reached its term. Time is a mighty ball that gathers volume and momentum as it rolls along. Such great events as we have known must be the prophecy of greater in the coming time. Yet may we not too confidently assume that the coming century will be a better one than the century which has at once, being dead and gone, become one of the immortals? It is not the real teaching of the doctrine of evolution, but a foolish and not wholly innocent perversion of that doctrine, that each new time is better than the last, and that consequently we may break any or all of the commandments, and trust to the great onward sweep of evolution to make all things right. A right understanding of evolution involves a perception of the possibility of physical degeneracy and social lapse. In no respect was Huxley's teaching more important than in that great address which many of his followers and friends conceived to be a recantation of his scientific faith, for the essential matter of that address was that we cannot turn over the business of civilisation to the great world forces. We must rally the good in the depths of our own natures if the new times are to be better than the old, or we may find them worse. This by the way.

There is a history in all men's lives
Figuring the nature of the time deceased,
The which observed a man may prophesy
With a near aim of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings lie entreasured.*

The marvellous wisdom of Shakespeare speaks in those lines. We have here one of his many great anticipations of our latest thought. But the observations of men's individual lives is no such easy matter; and, when we come to the great social aggregate, it is extremely difficult. We are to one another as a witch upon the blasted heath to Banquo when he says,—

If you can look into the seeds of time
And say which grain will grow, and which will not,
Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours or your hate.

But he complains, "To me you speak not." As silent do we find the facts and tendencies we importune for light upon the hidden way. The prophetic soul of the wide world, dreaming of things to come, if it would tell its dream, would make us wise; but it is as uncommunicative as the Sphinx. Some of the forecasts of the coming century are very curious, some of them very interesting, some of them very impressive. But, with all that the most penetrating judgment can discern as to what grain will grow and what will not, the margin of uncertainty is wide. Importune the time-spirit as we will, to us it speaks not or still leaves the most unsaid.

There is consolation here as well as disappointment and regret. One of the most cheerful and encouraging aspects of the completed century as ominous of the newcomer's fortunes is the multitude of beautiful and noble things that century brought to light, of which there was but faint presentiment. Where, looking back, we see the "seed and weak beginnings," the grain that was to grow, those who were contemporary with them were frequently as blind to them as if they had no existence whatsoever. I was reading a few days since a letter from Frances Power Cobbe appropriate to the changing year and century, in which she mournfully inquired where was the promise now of men like Emerson and Parker and John Stuart Mill and Tennyson; and she might have added Garrison and Lincoln and Darwin and Spencer and others of great influence, and of reputation hardly inferior to these. Well, what did we know of any of these master spirits in the first year of the nineteenth century? They were all tuning their instruments in the pre-existent heavens for the great symphony they were to play. Emerson was not born till 1803, Garrison till 1805, Mill till 1806, Lincoln, Darwin, and Tennyson till 1809, Parker till 1810, Spencer till 1820. Who knows but that the inscrutable future may conceal, not further off than these were a full century ago, spirits as finely touched to finest issues as were they? Because we do not overhear the dream of the prophetic soul of things, it does not follow that it is not being dreamed at all. The poets and the painters, the sculptors and musicians, may not yet be born who shall make the new century beautiful with their creative work, nor the men who shall carry on the work of scientific exploration to yet vaster ends, nor those who shall be the statesmen that we need, and the social reformers, and the great teachers of morality, and the inspirers of a religious life.

* From a recent sermon in the Christian Register.

* 2 Henry IV. iii. 1.

It is mainly during the last decade that the constitution of the older local Unitarian Associations and Unions was so altered as to make them truly representative of our churches. The significance of the change is only being gradually appreciated, and the old view of regarding such Associations as mere money granting committees dies hard. The Rev. J. A. Pearson referred to this matter in a paper read before a meeting of ministers in Manchester the other week.

The churches (he said) have not learned to look to the local Association with much respect yet. They know little of its working, and only think about it with any concern when there is a chance of getting from it much more than ever they have given to it. But already there are signs that this state of affairs is weakening, and for that mercy we may be thankful.

The long distance between many of our country congregations has militated against the rapid growth of a close corporate life and often prevents a regular attendance of representatives at the meetings of the local Associations. This is overcome in some quarters by congregations bearing the expenses of their delegates. It is only by the regular reports from their representatives attending the meetings that the interest of the churches in the general work and welfare of the local Associations can be aroused and the affiliated churches, both strong and weak, be prompted to take their share in any missionary effort.

To Correspondents.—Letters, &c. received from the following:—D. A.; R. A. A.; A. B.; H. B. B.; J. B. M. B.; W. H. D.; J. E.; T. W. F.; G. D. H.; J. G.; K. L. L.; F. T. M.; H. S. M.; T. M.; W. H. N.; J. R. O.; A. H. W.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

NORTH AND EAST LANCASHIRE.

IT is required of me that I should write you a letter about what is being done by our congregations in this district. I will do my best to discharge my duty. But I have some misgivings. I have read my INQUIRER of last week, and if what I found there is true, then I have to write about congregations that "lack religion," that "do not pray," that are ashamed of what religion they have, and are altogether something worse than Scribes and Pharisees hypocrites. Your readers cannot wish to hear about such, if such they be. They will not like to be told of congregations working hard and increasing in numbers, for the increase can only be in persons and things that are bad. God knows the weaknesses and the faults of those who form our congregations; but then, He is not one who has only recently joined us, and perhaps He can see more of "the soul of goodness in things evil."

I will still venture to write about our congregations in North and East Lancashire. Mr. Lummis, so far as I know, has not had much opportunity of becoming acquainted with them. Perhaps, if he had, he would still adhere to his severe judgment; for one needs to be Lancashire born and bred to understand how much lies hidden under the somewhat rough and hard exterior of the Lancashire folk. Of course, Mr. Lummis did not refer specially to Lancashire in his criticisms; but, as they appear to be directed against all our congregations, I cannot refrain from speaking on behalf of some that I know.

Usually, in writing a Provincial letter, I have reported what the North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission has been doing. This time I will begin by giving an account of a piece of work with which the Mission Committee have had no connection. This is the foundation of a third congregation in Bolton, at present known as the Halliwell-road Mission. It owes its origin to the energy of the Rev. C. J. Street and his people at Bank-street, but is not an offshoot from that congregation. Most of the members, I believe, live in the locality where the mission has been planted.

The movement was begun on Dec. 2, 1899, and since that date evening services have been regularly held, except on the date of Bank-street sermons. The average attendance for the past three months has been sixty-nine. The premises at Halliwell-road were bought, altered and furnished; the expense being met out of a fund raised by the Bank-street congregation, amounting to £831 7s. 8d. A small balance of £15 12s. 5d., remaining after all initial expenses had been paid, has been handed over to form a reserve fund for the purchase of ground rent. To this the Halliwell-road Mission has been able to add a further £34 7s. 7d., making £50 in all. Finance has a great deal to do with the success or failure of even spiritual work; and the new congregation evidently mean to avoid a "healthy debt." Of course they are not self-supporting; and the services are conducted by the ministers of Bank-street. The assistant minister, Rev. E. S. Hicks, is especially associated with the mission work.

The Calendar for January, 1901, has the following paragraph on the progress made during the twelve months since the opening:—

The year's work has been in every way most encouraging. The list of subscribing members has steadily increased, and there are now sixty-three names on the register. For the last three months, exclusive of the Anniversary Sunday, the average adult attendance has been sixty-nine; while the Sunday-school, after steadily increasing, reached its record attendance on Dec. 2 with 123, and it is satisfactory to note that the average for the last month is the highest yet attained. In every way the work is most encouraging; and if all who are connected with the new movement will continue to work in the coming year as they have done in the past, with combined purpose and united effort, a centre of work and influence will be firmly established of which Bolton Unitarians may well be proud.

That is good for twelve months' work. In addition to what is there stated, a Band of Hope has been started, and a School Library formed, containing 114 volumes. Mothers' meetings are held, and the Mission evidently believes in its future, since a Christening service is announced to be held every month. The new effort will have the good wishes of all. The hard work that has been done at the cost of a great deal of time and thought and organising skill, to say nothing of money, implies other things that cannot be estimated in cash or statistics, and which are by some (perhaps erroneously) thought to belong to religion.

The foundation of the Halliwell-road Mission is undoubtedly the chief event in the history of this district during the last year. The older congregations—some of them not very old—have kept steadily to their work, and not said much about it.

The North and East Lancashire Mission has no great achievement to record, in the way of new work begun. It has had the more prosaic duty of attending to its finances, which had been somewhat disturbed by the large expenditure of recent years. Two years ago the assisted congregation set to work to raise what were called Independence Funds, with a view to relieving the Mission of a part of the expense incurred on their behalf. Horwich distinguished itself by raising a sum which (with a bonus from the Mission) amounted to £1,000. The other congregations are all engaged upon a similar task, some with more zeal than others. The list of subscribers to the Mission had for many years been growing smaller, owing to the impression that the Mission was very rich and did not need help. Last year a vigorous effort was made to obtain new subscribers, and the result of the appeal is highly satisfactory. Whereas in 1899 the subscriptions (apart from collections) amounted to £56 14s. 0d., the total for 1900 is £132 3s. 1d., considerably more than double the previous sum. The amount raised by collections in the chapels on Mission Sunday remains practically the same. This at least shows that there is some belief that the Mission has a work to do, and some readiness to help it to do that work. If the same spirit continues to be shown, then the Mission will not be slow to take up some of the work that is waiting to be done.

I have nothing of especial importance to record of particular congregations. All have their ups and downs, and some seem to lead a very quiet life indeed. But there is plenty of energy in them; and whatever the future may have in store, there is nothing in their condition to cause special depression at present.

R. T. HERFORD.

Stand, February, 1901.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Accrington.—A very successful tea and entertainment was given on Saturday last in the school-room in aid of the Church funds. The tea was entirely provided and served by the young men, the entertainment was in the hands of the young women, under the capable leadership of Miss Taylor. The Reading Circle has completed the reading of the Merchant of Venice and has just begun Macbeth.

Birmingham: Church of the Messiah.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Wednesday, Feb. 13. Owing to the death of the late Queen, the usual social gathering and conversazione were not held. Mr. Herbert New, chairman of the Vestry Committee, presided, and there was a large and representative meeting. The committee's report, read by the Chairman, contained a sympathetic allusion to the Queen's death, followed by a record of the year's work. Mr. Jacks had delivered lectures on special subjects on Sunday ovenings, including a course of seven lectures in the spring on "The Teaching of John Ruskin," and a sermon on Tolstoi's "Resurrection." During part of the year special services for children, conducted by him, had been held monthly on Sunday mornings in the church. The committee had reason to be proud of the estimation in which Mr. Jacks was held as a preacher, both in this country and in America. In the early part of the year he had the distinguished honour of being invited to preach in the Chapel of Harvard University, but he was unable to accept the invitation. Shortly afterwards he was appointed Tate Lecturer at Manchester College, Oxford, the subject of his lectures being "The Theory and Practice of Preaching." The report mentioned that a place had now been provided on the church premises where bicycles could be kept, while the owners were engaged in the church or schools. A small subscription was paid by those who used the accommodation, and there were now fifty-two subscribers. A new institution had been added during the year to the already long list, namely, the Band of Hope, and Mr. Tranter was about to form a Boys' Club. The treasurer read his statement of accounts, showing a balance in hand at the end of the year, but that further subscriptions would be needed in the coming year. The adoption of the reports was moved by the Chairman, and seconded by Mr. Russell Jolly. A vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Jacks was moved by the Right Hon. William Kenrick, and seconded by Mr. L. Hughes. Mr. Jacks, replying to the resolution, spoke of great happiness in his work and his relations with the congregation. Signs of progress were not wanting, and there had been a perceptible increase in the number of strangers attending the church, especially in the morning. A report of what Mr. Jacks further said, with regard to the prospects of our churches generally, will be found in another column under the heading, "A Living Church." On the motion of Mr. Priestley Smith, thanks were accorded to officers and committee, and Mr. L. O. Matthews was elected treasurer in the place of Mr. P. W. Crosskey, who resigned after three years' service. Other resolutions followed, concluding with thanks to the chairman.

Chatham.—On Wednesday week a tea-party was held for the children of the Hammond-hill Sunday-school, in the course of which prizes for good conduct and regular attendance were distributed by Mrs. Wood, who, with Miss Tribe, had provided the tea. Songs and recitations followed, and a very pleasant evening concluded with a vote of thanks to Mrs. Wood.

Deal.—This month we have had a tea to children, given by the minister; a lecture by Mr. E. Chitty, of Dover, on "How to Improve the Poor-Laws," which left a great impression on the thoughtful; and a lantern lecture by Mr. T. Voile, of London, on "Homes not Made with Hands," illustrating the methods of birds, beasts, and insects in forming dwelling places. It was very successful.

Hull.—The Rev. E. W. Lummis, M.A., will terminate his ministry at Park-street Church on Sunday, March 31, much to the regret of his congregation, and will carry with him the hearty good wishes of his numerous Hull friends to his new sphere of labour. New Century Mission services were held at Park-street Church during January—on the Sunday evenings by Mr. Lummis, and on Monday evenings by the Revs. J. C. Street, Charles Hargrove, E. Ceredig Jones, and Joseph Wood. The result has encouraged the congregation to respond to the call of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union to join them in similar services in March next. Mission services will be held on Sunday evenings, March 10, 17, and 24, and on Monday evenings, March 11 and 18, terminating with a tea, social gathering, and lecture or conference as may be found convenient.

Ipswich.—On Wednesday week a recognition meeting was held, in welcome of the Rev. Lucking Tavener, as minister of Friars'-street Chapel. Among those who took part in the meeting were the Revs. W. G. Tarrant (President of the Provincial Assembly of London and South Eastern Counties), Alfred Hall, of Norwich, and T. E. M. Edwards; Mr. J. G. Notcutt and Mr. John Evans, of Stepney, who bore testimony to Mr. Tavener's work in the East-end.

Liverpool Postal Mission.—The annual meeting of the Liverpool Postal Mission was held in the Hope-street Church Hall, on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 7, when, on the invitation of Mrs. Wright, about fifty met for tea, before beginning the business of the meeting. The Rev. R. A. Armstrong was in the chair, and the proceedings were rendered unusually interesting from the fact that the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter was present, and gave an interesting and encouragi g address on the subject of Postal Mission work. The annual report was read showing that the work has increased during the last year to a larger extent than in any previous twelve months, the number of new applications during that time being 290. Miss F. E. Cooke has joined the committee, and, working at Birkenhead, undertakes a great deal of correspondence, thus enabling the committee greatly to extend operations. A further extension is in Wales, where one of the correspondents offered to circulate books in his neighbourhood, if the Liverpool Postal Mission would supply him with some. This correspondent sent a very encouraging report of the interest taken in the books thus lent. The statement of accounts shows a large balance due to the treasurer, and points to the need of more subscriptions. On Tuesday evening, 12th inst., there was held, in the same hall, an interesting meeting of the Hope-street Church Women's Congregational Union, to which had been invited all the Postal Mission correspondents living in or near Liverpool. The gentlemen of the congregation were also invited, and after tea, and about forty-five minutes of social intercourse, the Rev. R. A. Armstrong took the chair, and opened a conference on "The Authority of the Bible in Religion." Several of those present joined in the discussion, and stated difficulties, or asked questions, to all of whom Mr. Armstrong replied. Such conferences cannot fail to be helpful when, as on this occasion, all join in them with an earnest wish to understand and help, or be helped over difficulties, and it is to be hoped that other meetings of the kind may be arranged.

Middleton.—The annual meeting of the Old Road congregation was held on Saturday, Feb. 9, and the proceedings were of exceptional interest. An entertainment had been arranged for Jan. 26, Alderman Wood's eightieth birthday, and when it was postponed on account of the death of the Queen, the commictee decided that the birthday celebrations should form part of the proceedings at the annual meeting. Mr. John Hilton presided, and was supported by the Revs. George Knight, J. A. Pearson, John Harrison, and Mr. Thomas Fielden. After a few remarks by the Chairman, Mr. Harrison said that in view of the meeting arranged for Jan. 26, he had written to the Rev. J. C. Street, Mr. George Rayner Wood and others. Mr. Street, in his reply, said that when he went to Middleton a young, unknown man, and invited the public to a course of lectures on Unitarianism, Mr. Wood and Mr. Brookes came courageously forward and stood by him, and were among the small group who at the close of the lectures determined on the continuance of regular services. This was in 1860. Mr. Rayner Wood said he should have pleasure in joining with his Middleton friends in bearing testimony to the services rendered, and the inspiration given by Mr. T. B. Wood, not only to his own congregation, but to the work of the body generally. Unfortunately, Alderman Wood was prevented by a severe cold from being present. The Address, which was read by Mr. Harrison, and afterwards presented to Mr. Wood, is a fitting expression of the hearty good wishes and sincere gratitude of the congregation. Mention is made of his ardent and untiring devotion to the public good in the various positions of trust and responsibility his fellow-townsmen had invited him to fill, and of his unswerving loyalty to the cause of Liberal Christianity in Middleton for more than forty years.

Shrewsbury.—The annual meeting of the High-street congregation was held on Thursday week, and was largely attended. The report and financial statement read by the Secretary (Mr. R. Mansell) was most encouraging and showed that good work had been done during the year. The business meeting was followed by a social. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the minister, the Rev. James C. Street, for his past valuable services to the church. Reference was made to the recent action of a section of Shrewsbury Nonconformists in their protest against Mr. Street becoming a member of the School Board. The following minutes were adopted:—"The members of the High-street Church had desired at this their annual meeting, to place on record their sense of the kindly and Catholic spirit of the Nonconformists in this town, in their having at a duly convened representative meeting of the whole of the Nonconformist Churches—with but a single vote in opposition—agreed to recommend their minister, the Rev. J. C. Street, who had contested the last election of the School Board, to be co-opted in place of their late respected friend, Mr. E. J. Piper. They looked upon this as a pleasing proof of the softenings of theological asperities, and the growth of the true spirit of Christian brotherhood; but they have received a rude awakening, by finding that some of those who were present at the Nonconformist meeting, assisted by a group of Sectarians outside, have, by a remonstrance on the grounds of religious differences of opinion, appealed successfully to the Church and Catholic members of the Board to set aside the wishes of the Nonconformist meeting, and to appoint a gentleman who had withdrawn his name from nomination; and now they regretfully record that Nonconformist principles, as well as trus Liberalism in religion and politics, have suffered at the hands of their professed friends. They trust that at an early day, the community generally may have an opportunity of pronouncing judgment upon conduct, which seems to them deplorable and unworthy."

Urmston.—The annual meeting was held on Feb. 15, attended by about fifty members and friends. The reports showed very satisfactory advance since the congregation entered into its own building a year ago. The average attendance at Sunday services is fifty-nine as against thirty last year. The Sunday-school shows a small increase of scholars and a decidedly improved attendance. A Guild for the Young People holds monthly meetings, and has several classes each week; it is not yet a year old, but has fifty-three members. Several concerts, lectures, and social gatherings have been successfully held, and have afforded valuable opportunities of friendly intercourse. The last remaining balance on the furnishing account has been cleared off by a Jumble Sale, and the church is quite free from debt. At the annual meeting Mr. G. W. Henshall presided, and he and the Rev. Priestley Prime (minister in charge) congratulated the congregation on their satisfactory progress, and pointed out further needs and opportunities. Reference was made to the expected early appointment of a resident minister when the right man should have been found.

We have nothing to dread but ourselves. Circumstances, however painful, are passive and impotent enough. It is the response to their stroke from within that gives them their nature and their power. For ever then look within for your rule of right; and always believe that those things which elicit the most patience and prayer and humility are your best things, and those which the most please and excite your pride and self-complacency are your worst, let them come in what garb they may.—Kelty.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk

OUR CALENDAR.

SUNDAY, February 24.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN. Evening, Musical Service, Solo by Miss MARY TAYLER and Mr. H. R. HARBY. Monday, 8.15 P.M. Evening Concert, conducted by Mr. JOHN HARRISON.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. STANLEY.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. MARCHANT.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. F. K. FREESTON, and 7 P.M., Rev. B. KIRKMAN GRAY.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. WOODS PERRIS.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. BLOOR.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN, 11.15 A.M., "Jesus at the Well," and 7 P.M., "Give Thy Strength." Children's Class, 12.30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. DAWES HICKS, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. ALEXANDER FARQUHARSON. Morning, "Influence." Evening, "The Ethics of Liberty."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. STRONGE.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. CHYNOWETH POPE.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. PERRIS, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. CADMAN.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. CARTER.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. JENKINS JONES.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. FARRINGTON. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Mr. MATTHEWS, and 7 P.M., Miss BIGGART, U.S.A.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M. Rev. W. WOODING, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Mr. A. B. MIDLANE, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. E. CAPLETON.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. TARRANT, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. MUMMERY.

PROVINCIAL.

BATH, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M Rev. J. MCDOWELL.

BEDFORD, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. ROWLAND HILL.

BLACKPOOL, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. DAVID DAVIS.

BLACKPOOL, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

BOOTLE, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. MORLEY MILLS.

BOURNEMOUTH, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. COE.

BRADFORD, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. CEREDIG JONES, M.A.

BRIGHTON, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road, North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. LIVENS.

BUXTON, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. STREET.

CANTERBURY, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. CHARLES FENTON.

DEAL and WALMER, Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. SHAKSPEARE.

DOVER, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. BURROWS.

EASTBOURNE, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. ST. CLAIR.

GUILDFORD, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. LANG BUCKLAND.

HORSHAM, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. MARTEN.

LEEDS, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. HARGROVE, M.A
LISCARD, Memorial Church, Manor-road 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
LIVERPOOL, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. J. JUPP.
LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B A.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. KLEIN.
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. W. E. ADDIS, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. SPEDDING.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. A. M. HOLDEN.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. HAROLD RYLETT. Stables in the grounds.
SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M., Mrs. RAWLINGS, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. J. W. ROWNTREE.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.
WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.
SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—Feb. 24th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The 'Decalogue'—Is it the Foundation of Morality? II. Graven Images."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—Feb. 24th, at 11.15 A.M., Prof. EARL BARNES, "The Indian in America."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

DOMESTIC MISSION ASSISTANT.—The Committee of the North-End Domestic Mission, Liverpool, desire to engage a YOUNG MAN, accustomed to move among working people, to assist in Missionary work.—Apply to J. H. BURROUGHS, 41, Rodney-street, Liverpool.

HARMONIUM.—Very powerful Instrument in oak case (by Alexandre); 22 stops, 2 manuals, 2 knee swells. Suitable for Church or School use. Having pedal organ reason for disposal. Inspection invited.—Apply, ROBT. HALL, Unitarian Church, Lancaster.

DEATHS.

MORTON—On the 15th Feb., aged 39 years, Milnes Loy Morton, of Sheffield, second son of the late Charles Morton, of Southport and Wakefield, and Mrs. Morton, Hillside, Exmouth.

PARRY—On the 15th Feb., at 149, Rosebery-street, Liverpool, Annie, widow of John Parry, aged 65 years.

RAWDON—On the 7th Feb., at Beckenham, Kent, George W. Rawdon, formerly of Liverpool, aged 61.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor road, S.W.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,
Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.
Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording
ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.
The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.
Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.
Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.
77 & 101,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.
Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.
CURRENT ACCOUNTS
2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%
DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS
2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%
STOCKS AND SHARES
Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager
Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

MANSFORD-STREET CHURCH and MISSION.

The ANNUAL MEETING of Subscribers and Friends will be held at the ROSSLYN-HILL SCHOOLROOM, HAMPSTEAD (entrance from Willoughby-road), on TUESDAY, March 5th, when the Chair will be taken at 8.15 by EDMUND B. SQUIRE, Esq.
The Meeting will be addressed by E. HOWARD, Esq., Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN, and others.
S. W. PRESTON, J. CLASSON DRUMMOND, } Hon. Secs.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.
Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.
LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.
Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.
FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

WANTED, by an elderly lady, a useful MAID. Unitarian, good reader and needlewoman, accustomed to illness, and an abstainer.—Apply, stating age, wages, and references to M. S., Peirce's Library, 50, High-street, Sydenham.

WANTED, for the Upper Chapel, Sheffield, a gentleman to act as SUPERINTENDENT of the Sunday-school, and to assist the Minister in Missionary and General Work. One who is a University Graduate, and has been trained for the Ministry, preferred.—Further particulars from the SECRETARY, to whom applications, accompanied by two references, should be sent.

THE "INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

Reckitt's PARIS Blue.
The Best is the Cheapest.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE,
HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
AND BOARDING SCHOOL.

For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home. Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term:

Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s. Extras: Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s. Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d. Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra. Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.

Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.

The HALF TERM begins MONDAY, March 4.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

MISS JARVIS and MISS CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. (Established 1893).

PUPILS prepared for the Universities; resident gymnast and French mistress; healthy conditions of life; hockey and tennis.

Prospectus on application to Miss MACRAE MOIR, Lingholt, Hindhead.

Station, Haslemere.

The Bible in the Nineteenth Century.

A COURSE OF LECTURES by
PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
(of Manchester College, Oxford),
at BOLTON, LEEDS, and LIVERPOOL.

V. The Gospel Question: (2), The Fourth Gospel.
VI. The Bible and the Church.

BOLTON: Spinners' Hall, St. George's-road.
Tuesdays, February 26th, March 5th, at 7.30 P.M.

LEEDS: Philosophical Hall.
Wednesdays, February 27th, March 6th, at 8.0 P.M.

LIVERPOOL: Liverpool Institute, Mount-street.
Thursdays, February 28th, March 7th at 8.30 P.M.

Admission Free. A copy of the Syllabus will be sent on application to the Rev. C. J. STREET, Maythorn, Heaton, Bolton; the Rev. C. HARGROVE, 10, De Grey-terrace, Leeds; or C. W. JONES, Esq., 39, Drury Buildings, Liverpool.

SUSTENTATION FUND

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

At the ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of Contributors held in Dr. Williams's Library, London, on Wednesday, February 13th, 1901, WILLIAM LONG, Esq., President, in the Chair.

The Annual Report and Balance Sheet were presented, and the following Resolutions passed:—

That the Report and Accounts, as now read, be adopted and printed for circulation among the Contributors and Friends of the Fund.

That Sir William Henry Tate, Bart., and Mr. Edgar Chatfeild Clarke, be appointed Trustees of the Fund.

That the retiring Managers, Revs. S. A. Steinthal and T. Thomas, and Messrs. Harry Rawson and A. W. Worthington, whose term of office has expired, having been nominated, and the requisite number of voting papers produced, be and are hereby re-elected as Managers of the Fund.

That the cordial thanks of the Contributors be given to William Long, Esq., for his services as President during the past year.

That Mr. William Long be elected President for the year 1901.

That the thanks of the Contributors be given to Mr. Edgar Chatfeild Clarke for his services as Honorary Treasurer, and to Messrs. Harry Rawson and A. W. Worthington as Honorary Secretaries, during the past year.

That Mr. E. C. Clarke be re-appointed Treasurer for the coming year.

That Mr. Harry Rawson and Mr. A. W. Worthington be re-elected as Honorary Secretaries.

That the services of Mr. Edwin W. Marshall, as Honorary Auditor, be gratefully acknowledged, and that he be requested to accept the office for the year 1901.

That the Contributors sincerely thank the Trustees of Dr. Williams's Library, who have courteously granted the use of rooms for the Meetings of the Fund during the past year.

That the thanks of the Meeting be given to the President for his services in the Chair.

HARRY RAWSON,
A. W. WORTHINGTON, } Hon. Secs.

Society for the Abolition of Vivisection.

Established by the late Mr. G. R. JESSE in 1875.

The object of this Society is a Law for the Total Abolition of Vivisection.

SUMS RECENTLY CONTRIBUTED.

	£	s.	d.
Amounts already advertised	62	19	0
Mrs. Pinson	2	2	0
Mrs. H. M. Dickinson	2	0	0
Mrs. Moilliet	2	0	0
The Misses Tacey	2	0	0
W. Tebb, Esq.	1	1	0
Miss Jesse	1	1	0
Lady Broke Middleton	1	0	0
Mrs. Butterworth	1	0	0
M. H. R.	1	0	0
Mrs. Nash	1	0	0
Miss H. F. Gordon	1	0	0
A Friend of Animals	1	0	0
The Misses Tacey (additional)	1	0	0
Miss Chapman	0	10	0
Miss Allan	0	10	0
Mrs. Brettingham	0	10	0
Miss A. G. Empson	0	10	0
The Misses Johnson	0	5	0
Miss E. Smith	0	5	0
Mrs. West	0	5	0
Mrs. A. W. Worthington	0	5	0
W. H. A.	0	2	6
Miss Cragg	0	2	6
Miss E. Copland	0	2	6
Anonymous	0	2	6

Special contributions towards Literature, &c., £2 5s. 3d.

C. G. OATES, Honorary Secretary.
W. JOHNSON, Honorary Treasurer.
62, Strand, London.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Every Sunday School Teacher should possess a copy of

THE HELPER, 1901.

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers & for Parents

Edited by W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Price 2s. 6d. net. (Postage 4d.)

With Frontispiece—"Alfred the Great"; and many Illustrations of Beautiful Natural Objects—Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Insects, &c.

CONTENTS.

Introduction: Sunday School Teachers whom have Known. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
A Message for the New Year. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Alfred the Great. FRANCES E. COOKE.
From Josiah to Jesus. Sixteen Lessons. EDITOR.
Parental Help in Religious Training, with Suggested Talks. I. M. R.
Nature Lessons from Ruskin. Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Leaves, Flowers, &c. LUCKING TAVENER.
Jesus at Jacob's Well. FRANK WALTERS.
Bible Homes. Eight Sketches. J. RUDDLE.
Some New Testament Churches. A. HARVIE.
How Teachers and Scholars may know one another. ION PRITCHARD.
Nature Sketches. C. ROPER, B.A.
"My Pond." (Illustrated). Dragon-fly and Knat. T. ROBINSON.
How I Prepare (with outline lessons). Confidential Notes to the Editor by Teachers.
How to Teach. FELIX TAYLOR, B.A.
Sunday Schools at Home and Abroad. American, MARIAN PRITCHARD. Welsh, W. TUDOR JONES, Scottish, A. E. PARRY. Irish, R. LYTTLE. A French Sunday School Fete.
Summer Session (Oxford) Papers: What Sunday Schools may learn from Day Schools (from lecture by A. J. MOCKRIDGE). Child Study, EDITOR. Wanted, Men and Women, J. L. HAIGH. What the Average Teacher may do, J. J. WRIGHT.
The Boys' Own Brigade. J. C. BALLANTYNE.

London: THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. Manchester: H. RAWSON AND CO., 16, New Brown-street. Liverpool: THE BOOKSELLERS' CO., 70, Lord-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Information concerning the History and Growth of the Bible.

Collected, condensed, and arranged by BERTRAM TALBOT for the use of

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS & OTHERS.

This little book is the outcome of a free enquiry. It consists largely of verbatim quotations from many sources worked up into a connected whole, and for nearly every statement a reference is given to the page of the authority which supports the statement, or from which, if a quotation, it is derived.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Price Sixpence net, post free.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, February 23, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3062. NEW SERIES, No. 166.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 129
ARTICLES :—
The Influence of Thought on Character ... 130
John Ruskin 131
South African Women and Children's Distress Fund 135
POETRY :—
Onward 132
LITERATURE :—
Exploratio Evangelica 132
CORRESPONDENCE :—
"Christianity, the Religion of the Incarnation" 133
The Unrighteous Steward 134
Politics and Religion 134
A Living Church 138
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 135
LEADER :—
A Buddhist Manifesto 136
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
Wales 140
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 141
ADVERTISEMENTS 143

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE Rev. Stopford A. Brooke has been preaching the last three Sunday mornings at Little Portland-street Chapel. Needless to say that the chapel has been abundantly filled, and last Sunday morning was crowded, when a collection was taken for the Home for Working Girls in Fitzroy-square. Very general satisfaction has been expressed by visitors with the greatly improved appearance and comfort of the renovated chapel. We are glad to hear that Mr. Brooke is to continue his services at Little Portland-street for the next three Sundays, March 3, 10, and 17.

THE issue of the London County Council election is to be decided to-day (Saturday). A correspondent, referring to our notes of last week on the election, asks what this issue has to do with Unitarianism? We reply that it certainly has to do with religion, and the setting of the welfare of the community above private interest; and we must repeat the hope, which we expressed last week, that all who share that conviction will use every effort to secure a maintenance of the Progressive policy, which has done so much, and promises to do so much more for London.

THE Lord Mayor has opened a fund at the Mansion House to provide a memorial of the late Dr. Creighton, Bishop of London. At a meeting held at the Mansion House on Thursday week it was agreed, on the motion of the Archbishop of Canterbury, seconded by Lord Kelvin, that the memorial should if possible include a portrait for Fulham Palace, a monument in St. Paul's, provision, if necessary, for the late Bishop's family, and a Professorship of History in the new Teaching University of London. A letter from Mr. James Bryce, M.P., strongly advocating this last suggestion, was read at the meeting, and contained the following sentence, as to Dr. Creighton :—

He was one of the Royal Commission which prepared the statutes for the University, was warmly interested in its future, and would have been, had he remained among us, the person whose aid would have been first sought, and would have been most heartily given, by those interested in developing the historical and sociological side of the University teaching, which is at present very imperfectly provided for.

Mr. Asquith, M.P., in moving the appointment of a representative Committee, paid a high tribute to the memory of his friend, in the course of which he said :—

If it were asked what was the secret of the peculiar power and influence that Dr. Creighton exercised—an influence which no office and reputation could in themselves confer—he thought the answer was this. Scholar, writer, thinker, speaker, organiser—he was all these, but he was something more. He was a man with an infinite and inexhaustible fund of interest in and sympathy with his fellow-men. And we saw the result. After a lamentably brief episcopate, he had left upon London an abiding impression not only of an exceptionally rich personality, but of one who, with great gifts and great acquirements, hoarded neither the one nor the other. He did not invest them in the pursuit of narrow interests or personal ambitions, but he held them always as a trust to be expended in the service of this vast community for which he laboured to the limit of his strength, and for which he might almost be said to have laid down his life. It was fitting that on this Committee there should be men who represented not only the Church and the State, but the great profession of letters and the civic authorities of the metropolis.

WE published last week some minutes passed at the annual meeting of the High-street congregation at Shrewsbury, referring to the kindly and catholic spirit shown by the general body of Nonconformists in the town, who, at a representative meeting duly convened, with a single vote in opposition, recommended that the Rev. J. C. Street, who was a defeated candidate at the last election, should be adopted as a member of the Shrewsbury School Board, in place of a deceased Nonconformist member; and further protesting against the intolerance of a section of Nonconformists who had presented a memorial to the Board objecting to Mr. Street, and suggesting another name—a suggestion which the Church and Catholic majority on the Board, against the proposal of the two Nonconformist members, only too readily followed. This action has caused great indignation, not only to the members of Mr. Street's congregation, but to what is clearly the majority of the Nonconformists of the town as a whole.

VIGOROUS protests against this intolerance have been made in the Shrewsbury papers. The Rev. J. W. Woodall, who wrote as the oldest Nonconformist minister in the town, expressed his bitter disappointment at such a breach of the principles of religious liberty and wrote warmly of Mr. Street, "who, since he came to Shrewsbury, has done more than any man I know to lift up the fallen, to make sweeter the homes of the poor, and thus encourage them to live a better life." And Mr. Woodall added :—

I have little doubt that in November, 1902, the Nonconformists and working men of Shrewsbury will resent this injustice by triumphantly returning Mr. Street if he will only stand.

Seven other Nonconformists ministers of Shrewsbury made the following joint protest :—

The action of the forty gentlemen who call themselves "Representative Nonconformists," in memorialising the School Board against the election of Mr. Street, because he is a Unitarian, has staggered not a few of their Nonconformist brethren. The memorialists' claim to have acted as "Representative Nonconformists" is preposterous in the light of the following facts. Among the signatories to the petition there is no member or adherent of eight of the sixteen Nonconformist Churches in the town, and half of the names on the petition are those of members or adherents of the Abbey Foregate Congregational Church. And whilst four Nonconformist ministers have signed the memorial, ten others have not signed it, and the majority of these strongly disapprove of the action of the memorialists and deeply sympathise with Mr. Street in having such an indignity inflicted upon him by fellow-workers in educational, temperance, and Nonconformist movements. In our judgment Mr. Street would have been a most efficient representative of Nonconformity on the School Board. The well-known fact that the President of the Evangelical Free Church Council, three ex-presidents, and the two secretaries are among the signatories, must not be taken as representing the attitude of the Council on this question. As individual Evangelical Free Churchmen, Nonconformists, and Christian ministers we feel compelled to dissociate ourselves from this most deplorable example of religious intolerance, which, in our judgment, is injurious alike to the best interests of the Evangelical Free Church movement, to Nonconformity, and true Christianity, as well as the educational interests of the town.

Signed :—
J. COOPER, Wesleyan.
DAVID S. LEES, Primitive Methodist.
D. M. DAVIES, Baptist.
A. H. H. ORGAN, Congregationalist.
EDWARD W. LEWIS, Congregationalist.
ROBERT CURSON, Primative Methodist.
D. M. ROWLANDS, Presbyterian (Frankwell).

Shrewsbury, Feb. 16.

THE INFLUENCE OF THOUGHT ON CHARACTER.

We have received from Mr. Bertram Talbot an exceedingly helpful little paper with the above title, the four pages of which open out and show on the back, printed down a long single column with a red border (such as might be mounted on a card to be hung in constant view), the series of notable sentences, under the title "Remember!" which we print below.

We are glad to be allowed to print the following passages from Mr. Talbot's paper, and warmly commend the whole of it to the attention of our readers:—

If the assertions and precepts quoted overleaf proclaim a truth, it is surely as momentous as it is fundamental. And, coming as they do from, among others, the leaders of three of the greatest spiritual systems of religion in the world, supported by utterances of the Founder of Christianity himself, he must, indeed, be somewhat presumptuous who would challenge, and shortsighted who would under-value, such conspicuous unanimity among so many of humanity's greatest religious teachers and brightest moral exemplars. Yes! Buddha, Zoroaster, Confucius and Jesus, all founders of widely accepted systems of religion, have borne witness to the incalculable influence of thought on character. Upon their words especially the serious reflection of the reader is earnestly invited.

As evidence of the practical bearing which a firm conviction of the truth of the principle involved undoubtedly has on life, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, the Roman Emperor of the second century, is cited. Of him the Very Rev. F. W. Farrar, Dean of Canterbury, in his inspiring book "Seekers after God," says:—"A nobler, a gentler, a purer, a sweeter soul—a soul less elated by prosperity or more constant in adversity—a soul more fitted by virtue, and chastity, and self-denial to enter into the eternal peace, never passed into the presence of its Heavenly Father."

Now the Emperor himself has left it definitely and gratefully on record that he learned from his mother, "abstinence not only from evil deeds, but even from evil thoughts," and it may be safely assumed that the teaching of this good mother was not merely negative in character, but that she should have no small share of the credit for those charitable and noble thoughts, which, throughout his arduous life, her son habitually fostered in his heart, and of which his "Meditations" afford us so many delightful illustrations.

PRACTICAL HINTS.

The first fact for us to realise is that we shall never become virtuous by chance, neither by drifting, nor yet by the free grace of God exerted against our own wills. Virtue implies right choosing. Personal mental effort is indispensable. Having acknowledged this, and being anxious to be free from the bondage of sin, we may pass on to the recognition of another truth, which indeed is the burden of the following quotations. All sins spring from evil thoughts. Admitting these two axioms, we are then in a position to declare and intelligently carry on war against sin (selfishness) in all its varied forms.

Without stopping to inquire as to the origin of evil, a problem fascinating but unfathomable, let us concern ourselves at once with that part of our nature evil touches first, for we can be held responsible for nothing antecedent to that. There is a useful truth in that quaint saying: "You may not be able to prevent a bird lodging on your head, but you can prevent it building its nest there," as also in that other suggestive simile: "Thoughts are like guests, we may not be entirely responsible for their first visit, but whether they come again and come often, depends upon how we entertain them." Hence we must be very careful not to encourage those unworthy thoughts which visit our hearts. Antipathy may be thus cherished into malice, anger into vindictiveness, fear into suspiciousness, with inevitably disastrous consequences. Brooding over injuries, fostering dislike or anger in our hearts must be absolutely forbidden to occupy a moment of our time. On the other hand "from the broad stream of ideas that is constantly passing through our minds, we should select the noblest and best, and by fixing our attention on them cause them to grow clearer and brighter."

* * * *

While not forgetting that "evil company doth corrupt good manners," let us remember that bad books are the worst company. Now, "It is not falling into the water, but lying in it, that drowns," so we must never hesitate at once to put aside a book or a paper which we perceive suggests ungenerous, unholy, or bitter thoughts. For, consider! how can we expect to keep our minds healthy if we allow them to feed upon detailed accounts of crime or sin, whether in fact or in fiction.

Finally, to successfully strive against sin, we all need Divine aid.

Frequent prayer is an inestimable source of moral strength. "Ask and it shall be given unto you." To attain a spiritual frame of mind for real prayer some definite preparation is usually desirable, though at times prayer is quite spontaneous, is the natural overflowing of the heart, the reaching out of the soul to the Great Spirit-Father. But after the distracting and perhaps harassing duties of the day, such is probably very far from the condition of our mind; it is well therefore to read and ponder one or other inspiring passage of Scripture, Hymn, or page of true devotional literature, previous to actual prayer. Though the Bible abounds with precious gold of the highest spiritual worth, we must not shut our eyes to the fact that there are quartz and earth mixed with the gold. It is wise therefore to keep a book of extracts or at least of references; and, as the same thing does not appeal to all alike, it is best for each to make his own selection of what he feels to be suitable and helpful to him.

There are other wise words in Mr. Talbot's paper, and we may add here that while the making of such a book of extracts as Mr. Talbot suggests is extremely helpful, and of the deepest interest, there are for those who are not disposed for such work a number of books published, and three especially of which we are glad to remind our readers. These three, which contain a page of readings for every day in the year, may all be had from Essex Hall:—

Day Unto Day. (American Unitarian Association. Boston, 1871. 3s.)

Daily Strength for Daily Needs. Edited by Mrs. Tileston. (Roberts Bros., Boston. 1884. 4s. 6d.)

A Book of Daily Strength. Edited by V. D. Davis, B.A. (Philip Green, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. 3s. 6d. or 5s.)

We understand that Mr. Talbot has generously offered copies of his paper to ministers throughout the country, that through them it may be brought especially to the notice of our young people, and we are allowed to say that during the present week copies may be had, for the cost of postage (1d. for ten, 3d. for forty, copies), so far as the present edition will go, on application to Mr. Bertram Talbot, 86, Cromwell-avenue, Highgate, London, N.

REMEMBER!

All that we are is the result of what we have thought; it is founded on our thoughts, it is made up of our thoughts. —Buddha.

To think evil is a sin.—Zoroaster.

Labour to purify thy thoughts; if thy thoughts are not ill neither will thy actions be so.—Confucius.

What ought not to be done, do not even think of doing.—Epictetus.

Such as are thy habitual thoughts, such also will be the character of thy mind; for the soul is dyed by the thoughts.—Marcus Aurelius Antoninus.

Keep thy heart above all that thou guardest; for out of it are the issues of life.—Prov. iv. 23.

We must think as if someone could and did gaze into our inmost breast.—Seneca.

Guard well thy thought; our thoughts are heard in Heaven.—Edward Young.

Whatsoever things are true . . . honourable . . . just . . . pure . . . of good report . . . think on these things.—Phil. iv. 8.

If the spirit, which is the master, be kept under control, it follows of itself that his servants will also be restrained. What does it avail if the power, but not the wish, to do wrong be vanquished? —Buddha.

The desire, of course, precedes the act, and should have one's first attention. It can do but little good to refuse the act over and over again, always leaving the desire unmolested, unconquered; the desire will continue to assert itself and will be almost sure to win in the long-run. When the (evil) desire intrudes, it should be at once banished out of the mind.—Samuel L. Clemens.

What one thinks to-day, he will do to-morrow.—Ian Maclaren.

Do good in thought—some future day,
'twill ripen into speech, and words are seeds which grow to deeds, none know how far they reach.—(Anon.)

Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.—Isaiah lv. 7.

Ex. xx. 17; Matt. v. 21 and 22; 27 and 28; Luke vi. 43-45; 1 Cor. xiii.

Watch and Pray.

The vision of God as He is, to see the King in His beauty, is vouchsafed not to science, nor to talent, but only to purity and love.—F. W. Robertson.

And this for comfort thou must know:
Times that are ill won't still be so;
Clouds will not ever pour down rain;
A sullen day will clear again.—Herrick.

JOHN RUSKIN.

II.

THE change which came over the spiritual activity of Ruskin's life, between his thirtieth and fortieth year, was due, in part, doubtless, to the influence of Carlyle. It was through his writings that Ruskin came to see more clearly the nature of those social evils which hindered the "Joy in widest commonalty spread" he so greatly cared to see triumphant in the world. His friendship with Carlyle began in 1851. In the following year the concluding volumes of "Stones of Venice" appeared; and there in a chapter, now published separately, entitled "The Nature of Gothic," may be read his first impassioned appeal on behalf of the workers of England. It is not a statement of their grievances, real or imaginary, nor a defence of their virtues, nor a condemnation of their vices. It is simply an appeal that they should be treated as men, not as tools—as thinking beings, not as parts of some vast machinery for the production of material wealth. Let those who care to know how an artist can speak for the toiling masses, how the cause of the worker can be pressed home by one who, himself born to a life that might have been a life of ease and luxury, yet recognised the claims of those who must toil for daily bread or starve—let them read that chapter and remember that it was written fifty years ago.

The Working Men's College.

But it was his connection with the Working Men's College in London that probably forced in upon him the conviction that some deep and far-reaching reform was needed, before justice could be done, or happiness made possible to the great company of workers in England, at that time. The College was inaugurated in 1854. Ruskin, with Rossetti and others, came to the help of Maurice and Kingsley and their little band of Broad Church enthusiasts, and taught in the night-schools there. Their object was to unite art with labour—to bring beauty and the joy of all lovely things into close relation with the toil and struggle of daily affairs, in a great city. For was not "Life without industry guilt?" and was not "industry without art brutality?" In trying thus to bring use and beauty, toil and refinement, into close fellowship, Ruskin was led to see how hopeless it was—except to the few—under modern conditions, to reach and to realise this ideal.

What is Wealth?

Very swiftly from this time the vision of a great underlying injustice in commercial and social affairs cleared itself to his mind. He studied the standard writings on Political Economy: Mill, Fawcett, Ricardo, Jevons, and the rest. Partly by vigorous thinking, but more by the sheer force of moral genius, he discerned what he afterwards exposed as the great initial fallacy of the orthodox economic creed. Something must be radically wrong in the theory, on which was based, and by which was defended, the modern system of mercantile and industrial economy. It seemed to him that it did not work, but only fought and scrambled, in a selfish contest for material things. It did not achieve any noble purpose; it did not set before itself a worthy human ideal of life. It did not produce wealth for men—or if some of its achievements might be so named, as securing that which was for the weal of mankind, it secured this for the few only, while for the many it brought either life-long poverty or weary, hopeless, ill-requited toil. The common weal might sometimes, in some things, be attained, but, as often, the common woe; since where poverty and misery and disease and crime prevail in a State, none can be quite free from the shame, or quite safe from the contagion, of these things; none can be wisely and justly happy while the conditions of life render it impossible for the vast majority to be so. There must be some fatal error, Ruskin thought, in the accepted theories of mercantile and industrial life; for they seemed to uphold as just, or as inevitable, a system under which so many were wretched, and where, for this delightful Art of his, no chance obtained except for the favoured few, and where, to large numbers of the people, Nature, which had been the source of so much of his own joy and inspiration, could be hardly known at all, in the splendour of her mountain solitudes, and the loveliness of woodland, dale, and stream.

"Unto this Last," &c.

Under this profound sense of something radically wrong in the social system—in the commercial and political life of England and in the whole field of human industry throughout the civilised world—Ruskin went abroad in 1859, and among his beloved vales of Chamounix, beautiful to him no more, since most of his fellows could never see them, he thought out for himself, and for us, if we can receive it, another and a nobler way of life. In 1860 there was given to the world his little series of papers, in the Cornhill Magazine, published now under the title of "Unto this Last." The next year "Munera Pulveris" appeared; in 1867 "Time and Tide," and ten years later "Fors Clavigera" was begun, and continued till his power to think and write was exhausted. In these volumes, with marvellous fertility of illustration and unrivalled eloquence of language—sometimes by subtle analysis and close reasoning, sometimes by scathing wit, by fierce denunciation or impassioned appeal—sometimes by glowing pictures of human peace and gladness, yet possible to be realised on earth—he has uttered his message and proclaimed his gospel of social reform.

The Artist as Prophet.

Thus, then, the artist became the political philosopher, the ethical preacher, the religious prophet. He never ceased to be the artist and the devoted apostle of all things beautiful and fair. But, like William Morris, he became an economist for art's sake. For art to him was not merely the painting of pictures and knowing how to appreciate and enjoy them. It was the crown and gladness of life—the reverent praise of creation's noblest work. To be an artist was to behold and delight in the beauty and glory of the world, and to express, in human work and life, some part of that radiant vision for others' joy. And he saw it was impossible to achieve this, in any worthy or sufficing way, while the present fierce competing strife of commerce, and the selfish greed of class monopoly and national jealousy prevailed. Therefore he turned aside, in mid career, to face that stern, perplexing problem of economic reform, and never ceased from wrestling with it as long as strength to work remained, and intellect and heart were free to think and love and hope.

III.

"I am, and my father was before me, a violent Tory of the old school—Walter Scott's school, that is to say, and Homer's." So Ruskin begins the story of his life when, at the age of sixty-five, he sat down to write of "Scenes and Thoughts perhaps Worthy of Memory." And later, in the thirteenth letter of "Fors," he says: "All the fighting in the world cannot make us Tories change our old opinions, any more than it will make you change your new ones." And these will seem strange words from one who has wrought so hard to revolutionise human thought, in certain directions. Yet doubtless to him the change he tried to effect in human manners and methods of life was a return to older and simpler times. He would probably call it Reaction rather than Revolution. There was something feudal and old-English about him. The old times were better than the new. His Toryism was a love of Kings. He believed in the great man, and would like to see him in power once more. He loved the people and wished to see them happy. But he did not think them wise or capable of self-government. Their cry for votes was a very foolish cry in his ears; and the use they made of what power they had seemed to him a proof that they ought to have less rather than more. He would have the strong man rule, and with a rod of iron, if need be, only the arm that swayed that rod of iron must itself be moved by a heart of love. There is the new force which Ruskin sought to bring into the world of practical human affairs—into all the relations of political and industrial life.

A Vital Element.

One thing, it will be found, Ruskin has taught us—one great and original contribution he has made to the problem of social regeneration: it is, that the only just and effective way to govern men, and conduct the business relationship of life, is through the affections. His one great contention is that, if in theory or in practice you slight and ignore the claims of love—if in trade or politics, in the production or distribution of life's common necessities, in your treatment of the child or the poor man or the criminal, you leave out the supreme human element—namely, the affections—then you are sure to go wrong. If you regard human beings—any human beings, however low down in the scale of development—as mere wealth producers and wage earners, and do not regard them as men, as brothers, as fellow mortals, claiming at every step, and in every circumstance of life, justice, sympathy, and love, then you are wrong, and the effect of your theory and the result of your action will be harmful, degrading, and disastrous, both to yourselves and to all those with whom you are dealing. The old "economic man," with his motive of selfish gain, and his doctrine of utility and expediency to guide him—this cold, calculating, merciless economic man of the old political theorists, is gone, is relentlessly banished from Ruskin's Gospel of social reform. And in his place stands the new man, the human brother, with his simple right of justice from all, and his plain duty of service to all. And Ruskin's one strenuous and uncompromising assertion is that, not for pay, and not under pressure of hard necessity, will you ever get the best work and the steadiest devotion out of any man. You will get this only when "the motive force, that is to say, the will or spirit of the creature, is brought to its greatest strength, by its own proper fuel, namely, the affections."

The Old Gospel Applied.

This was not new in the human world; it was very old. Jesus Christ had appealed to it, long centuries ago, and had based his ethical and religious doctrine entirely upon it. But it was new in the bold and unvarying application of it to the whole complex system of modern industrial life which Ruskin demanded. And to preach this ancient Christian gospel of human fellowship, and to live for it as best he could, Ruskin gave the strength of his last forty years. He wore out his physical and mental energies, and disposed of the larger part of his considerable fortune, in the aim and the effort to drive this gospel home.

A Great Resolution.

The words in which he declared his determination to do this have been often quoted. Let us read them once more. They occur in the first letter of "Fors Clavigera":—

I have listened to many ingenious persons, who say we are better off now than ever we were before. I do not know how well off we were before; but I know positively that many very deserving persons of my acquaintance have great difficulty in living under these improved circumstances. Also, that my desk is full of begging letters, eloquently written, either by distressed or dishonest people; and that we cannot be called, as a nation, well off, while so many of us are either living in honest or in villainous beggary.

For my own part, I will put up with this state of things, passively, not an hour longer. I am not an unselfish person, nor an Evangelical one; I have no particular pleasure in doing good; neither do I dislike doing it so much as to expect to be rewarded for it in another world. But I simply cannot paint, nor read (nor look at minerals), nor do anything else that I like, and the very light of the morning sky, when there is any—which is seldom, nowadays, near London—has become hateful to me, because of the misery that I know of, and see signs of, when I know it not, which no imagination can interpret too bitterly. Therefore, as I have said, I will endure it no longer quietly, but henceforward, with any few or many who will help, do my poor best to abate this misery.

But that I may do my best I must not be miserable myself any longer; for no man who is wretched in his own heart, and feeble in his own work, can rightly help others.

A Noble Example.

Whatever we may think of Ruskin's attempt at a constructive theory of political and industrial life, or of his personal character, with its eccentricities and want of balance, the real spirit of the man, the aim and motive purpose which controlled him, the sacrifice of time and talent and wealth which, through those years of unresting toil, he freely made for the sake of his great Ideal—these, I am assured, cannot appeal to us in vain. His theory of human society, as he tries to work it out in "Time and Tide" and elsewhere, probably will never be realised or even attempted in practical life. But his analysis of the social problem can no longer be ignored or even seriously questioned. And his example of heroic devotion and personal sacrifice is too noble and too powerful not to move men to follow it.

Hope for the Future.

In the new century to which we have come we may look forward in patient hope to see a great company of strong, well-equipped and capable disciples of his enthusiastic spirit. When men of this English race, born to wealth as he was, or attaining to wealth as he never could, endowed with gifts of insight and power of organisation, shall cease to care for wealth as a means of personal enjoyment or vulgar display, and shall no longer be content with mere gifts of "charity" out of their abundance—when they shall dedicate, as he did, their riches and their time and their talent to the cause of human deliverance; when, moved by sympathy and a strong sense of justice, they shall strive, in business, in politics and all social relations, to create a community of service and a brotherhood of goodwill—shall aim to replace this hard and cruel strife of competition by a friendly and merciful and masterly fellowship of co-operation, then the new day of human peace and gladness will dawn. For these rich and strong and capable men will not work alone; they will join hands with the great company of genuine democratic reformers, they will unite with the young and powerful labour party, who are now striving from below to work out a salvation for the toiling masses of the people. And then there will be peace, and in and through that peace justice and love will prosper, and the fair brotherhood of man will be established on the earth.

W. J. Jupp.

ONWARD.

Tho' this small globe be in a guide-book sphered,
And only clouds and stars untravelled stay,
Man pines not pent Earth's hopeless prisoner,
But makes himself thought wings for voyaging
Unsubject to the sea and beating storms,
Therewith uprising from the village place
Of life's to-day into Time's awesome realm,
That nooks it as the mountain may a nest.

Thro' all that has been bears his wond'ring way;
The heights of scripture and great keeps of verse
Where Truth her holy empire first began,
In ever-changing panorama pass
Instructive to his soul, and bountiful
Of force to nerve it for fresh enterprise
As splendent shine the future's virgin tracts,
Waiting the advent of unfearing thought
Born to the old in generation due,
Whose young strength shall not stationary mark
The final halt of progress, but sweep on Tumultuously strong yet fixt of aim,
Bearing the banners of humanity
Ever nearer infinite light divine!

Ernest B. Betham.

It is a heaven upon earth when a man's mind rests on Providence, moves in Charity, and turns upon the poles of Truth.—Bacon.

LITERATURE.

EXPLORATIO EVANGELICA.*

Some of the most striking books on theological subjects in the nineteenth century have been written by laymen. Seeley's "Ecce Homo," Matthew Arnold's "Literature and Dogma," Greg's "Creed of Christendom," and Professor T. H. Green's two sermons on Paul, are a few instances out of many which might be given of important contributions made to theology by laymen. Without claiming for the present work that it is equal to the best of the above, it may be fairly described as not unworthy to be mentioned with them. There are dangers as well as advantages in the layman's treatment of theology, meaning by layman not the opposite of minister, but one whose life's work and study are concerned with something other than theology. Dr. Gardner is an archæologist, and he is well aware both of the dangers and advantages of his position. "It is an astonishing sight to see," he says, "as we sometimes do, men of eminence in some branch of science, who know the danger of hasty assertion in their own province, entirely escape from the control of the scientific conscience when they deal with ethical and spiritual truth. They seem to fancy that knowledge of visible and material fact can be gained only by self-control and self-devotion, but that knowledge of things invisible and spiritual is obvious to every one." Great and admirable as were Mr. Gladstone and Professor Huxley, they make us rather afraid of the layman in theology. The one sets out light-heartedly to prove the scientific truth of the first chapter of Genesis, ignorant of what the best critics had to say against him, and relying on arguments and evidence which he would never have ventured to use in the House of Commons in connection with any political question of importance. The other sets out light-heartedly to deny the invisible and spiritual because it is not immediately obvious, forgetting that if the knowledge of visible fact and natural law can be gained only by self-control and long self-devotion, a discipline not identical but at least as searching may be necessary if we are to speak with authority about the soul and God.

On the other hand, Dr. Gardner rightly sees his advantages when he says:—

My daily work and my means of living are in no way connected with the acceptance of this or that system of belief. A layman's only excuse for writing about religion is that he finds the subject of absorbing interest, and that he is able to survey the history of religion with faculties trained in other fields of observation.

Dr. Gardner does not intrude his archæology upon us. In the hands of Professor Sayce and Professor Ramsay, it becomes despotic, claiming to be the one supreme means of discovering historic truth. With Dr. Gardner it has been a discipline strengthening the mind; it is not an obsession closing the mind to other methods of investigation.

Dr. Gardner's book contains many suggestive and interesting remarks, but it is a book which it is very difficult to review. It has no clear definite teaching, it comes to no satisfactory conclusion. It is exploration without discovery. The writer himself insists in the Preface on this fact, so that we have no reason to complain.

* "Exploratio Evangelica." By Percy Gardner, Litt.D. A. and C. Black. 15s.

The present work cannot fairly be called destructive; nor is it primarily constructive, but rather critical. It may, perhaps, most appropriately be compared to the operations which precede construction, to the investigation of the ground and the digging of trenches with a view to foundations.

We have to deal, then, with a sympathetic criticism of historic Christianity. It is criticism of the peculiarly modern kind, which sees no historic foundation for the orthodox creeds, but which finds endless spiritual truth in them. On the negative side Dr. Gardner is nearly as sceptical as Dr. Martineau. "The only part of the life recorded by the Synoptists which can fairly claim a historical character begins with the calling of Peter and ends with the crucifixion." Commenting elsewhere on the untrustworthiness of the Gospels, he says: "Few, indeed, had reached that stage of veneration for fact at which a historian accepts on evidence a tale which conflicts with cherished beliefs, and rejects for the want of evidence a tale which has an acceptable moral." And in another place he says: "As regards the teaching of Jesus we are by no means ill-informed. As regards the events of his life we are unable in the present state of our knowledge to discern between fact and fable, but events strictly miraculous rest on no sufficient evidence." It is evident from these quotations that all the miraculous presuppositions of orthodoxy are incredible to the writer.

But the book is not written in order to drive home a merely negative argument. Rather it would be true to say that the real work of the writer begins where negative criticism eaves off. It is here that we feel the book most wanting in definiteness and unity, and at the same time most suggestive. The writer is dealing with what we believe to be the pressing religious problem of our time. Here are creeds and articles presupposing and resting upon a supposed series of events which as unbiassed historical students we don't believe ever happened. Nevertheless, these creeds and articles have ministered to the spiritual life of millions, and evidently express something which is felt to be true and which has nothing to do with historical events.

How are we to reject the untrue history and preserve the true idea? "What we have to learn," says Dr. Gardner, "is to give to history that which belongs to history, and to idea that which belongs to idea. It is for critical history to determine the character of the writings of early Christianity, their origin and the medium in which the writers lived. And it is for a sane theology to preserve for the lasting good of mankind the noble ideas as to God and man and the Founder of our religion, which the evangelists embodied to the best of their ability in narrative." With this principle we entirely agree. Dr. Gardner's continual insistence upon this would by itself make us grateful for his book. "The solution," he says, "seems to me to be a matter of infinite difficulty," and the solution he certainly does not give us. On the one hand, he sees that an orthodoxy is insecure which rests the foundation of its faith on supposed historic facts, the evidence for which would be held insufficient to prove the most insignificant fact of ancient history. On the other hand, he sees that a Theism which rests merely on the individual reason, conscience, and feeling, and which ignores the witness of history, is, if not insecure, at least very imperfect. Religion resting on false history is in continual danger: religion unconnected with history is almost always unproductive, weak and egotistic. Of the two positions Dr. Gardner sympathises most with the former. Religion resting on false history did not matter as long as that history was generally believed.

It is likely that those who held to the Virgin birth in the early centuries of Christianity were less in the wrong on the whole than those who rejected it. It was a somewhat crude attempt to explain the nature of the Founder. As such it naturally partakes of the materialism which he seems to have constantly rebuked.

That statement gives us much insight into Dr. Gardner's views. It was more important that people should have a real reverence for Jesus than that they should know the details of his birth. So far as the Incarnation was truly believed, and so far as it gave men a deeper reverence for Jesus, it was a religious influence, although based on false history. The explanation of the false history is that it was a symbolic materialised expression of a genuine reverence. But at the present day this false history is in the way: it sometimes hinders reverence, it often hinders belief. There must be a restatement of doctrine, a translation of the creeds into terms of modern thought.

Christianity in early days showed its wonderful power of adaptability.

The doctrines which conquered the world were those set forth by the authors of the Fourth Gospel and the Pauline Epistles. They accomplished their task by taking up into Christianity the main religious ideas of the Hellenistic world; baptising them, so to say, in the name of the Master, and sending them forth on a fresh plane of influence amongst men.

A universal religion became possible through the general acceptance of Greek ideas and Greek culture. Christianity expressed itself through this language, and poured its spirit into these moulds. To-day "the spread of physical and historic science has brought the minds not only of Europeans and Americans but of Indians and Japanese on to a new level. Once more a vast field is being smoothed out in which a common religion may strike its roots. And this field can only be occupied by the religion of Christ."

A series of doctrines which will contain all that is true in the Incarnation and the Atonement, and which will so far from conflicting with the principles of modern science and historical evidence, actually speak through them, this is what the writer seems to desire. It is an ideal to attract us all. The doctrinal poverty of liberal Theism is very great; even worse is our frequent indifference to the root ideas, the spiritual truths contained in orthodox statements. Dr. Gardner's book may be salutary, if painful reading, for the orthodox in giving them a clearer idea of the weakness of thier historic foundation. But it is no less salutary for ourselves. It makes us realise our poverty, and it calls us to a deeper understanding of religion through the study of the truths of orthodoxy.

H. Gow.

CORRESPONDENCE.

[The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by correspondents. LETTERS CANNOT BE INSERTED WITHOUT THE WRITER'S NAME; and all private information should be accompanied by the name and address of the sender.]

"CHRISTIANITY, THE RELIGION OF THE INCARNATION."

SIR,—As the writer of the notes on "Christianity, the Religion of the Incarnation," whose appearance in the Seed Sower for January seems to have surprised Mr. Lloyd, may I be permitted a word in reply?

With every respect for Mr. Lloyd's theological acumen, I would suggest that he is a good deal too absolute in laying down "what the Incarnation really is." He quotes the Rev. J. F. di Bruno and the Bishop of Gloucester, who affirm that the Incarnation presupposes or implies the miraculous birth of Christ—and that, no doubt, is one interpretation of the doctrine; but suppose we invoke an even higher authority than either of those which commend themselves to Mr. Lloyd—suppose we find the essence of that doctrine in such words as "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father," "Believe me that I am in the Father and the Father in me," "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you," and a whole host of similar utterances, all of them occurring in the Fourth Gospel, whose author deliberately omits any reference to a supernatural birth? If Mr. Lloyd's contention—that Unitarians must not adopt the doctrine of the Incarnation in a spiritual form because Orthodoxy holds it in a material and to us distasteful form—be pressed to its logical issue, we shall soon be warned against speaking of God as "the Father," because the creeds interpret that term as meaning the First Person in the Trinity.

For the encouragement of those who, like myself, feel that the doctrine of the Incarnation must forever remain the central feature of every spiritual form of Christian theology, however much advanced or rationalised, and in order to show that the definition of that doctrine to which Mr. Lloyd refers is not the only legitimate one, I would ask to be allowed to quote some testimony on the other side.

In his remarkable Hulsean lectures on "The Gospel of the Atonement," Archdeacon Wilson expresses himself to the following effect:—

"In Christ, man's essential unity with the divine nature is made evident, and can never again be called in question." "The Incarnation was a revelation of the Father in the human limitations of a sinless Christ." "It is humanity, it is all men, not one alone, in whom the life of God is shown." "No one can fail to notice that the Incarnation is assuming, in theological preaching and teaching, the place which not long ago was taken by the Atonement. The doctrine of the Incarnation is replacing the doctrine of the Atonement."

In Professor Percy's Gardner's searching and scholarly volume "Exploratio Evangelica," I find this:—

"A critic in our own day . . . cannot accept the doctrine of the miraculous birth without allowing his intellect to take, in relation to Christian history, a line which he would repudiate in dealing with other history; but he cannot entirely give up the doctrine of the Incarnation without great spiritual loss." "If the will of Jesus was in perfect harmony with that of the Father in heaven, that would at once constitute an Incarnation, and enable us, as it were, to see the Divine will acting under human conditions, and yet remaining divine."

Last Christmas that well-known and devout writer, "J. B.," in his weekly article in the Christian World, surrendered with scarcely any reserve the non-human descent of Christ, speaking of "that marvellous legend of God's birth into our world" as common to almost every tribe of man in various versions, and called that legend "the husk holding the deepest and dearest truth of our race—namely, the doctrine of the Immanence of God which, under the name of the Christian Incarnation, "thoughtful minds are everywhere welcoming as at once the highest philosophy, while at the same time the essence of the New Testament Gospel."

And, finally, I find one whose guidance readers of The Inquirer may prefer even to that of the Bishop of Gloucester—Dr. Martineau—thus quoted in Mr. Odgers' paper on "Dr. Martineau and Unitarianism" :—

In Christ alone is the reconciliation perfect between the human and the Divine. But the same two natures meet in us all; and he is but the exemplar of a perpetual incarnation, of a living and constant union with our humanity.

Compare also, in part I. of the sermon, "Christ, the Divine Word," this explicit statement:—

If, in Christ, this divine margin was not simply broader than elsewhere, but spread till it covered the whole soul, and brought the human race into moral coalescence with the Divine, then was God not merely represented by a foreign and resembling being; but personally there, giving expression to His spiritual nature.

I still hold that it is what these utterances agree in affirming that constitutes the doctrine of the Incarnation, and justifies the use of the term. I have, of course, no objection whatever to being a heretic; but I venture to think that I am a heretic in such good company as to compensate me for being excluded from the Churches represented by Mr. Lloyd's authorities on the one hand, and from a certain type of Unitarian orthodoxy on the other. J. Warschauer.

Feb. 24.

THE UNRIGHTEOUS STEWARD.

Sir,—I know not if The Inquirer or its correspondents who are interested in the Unjust Steward will be willing to accept a suggestion from one who has long since ceased to be a Unitarian; but as the matter has always interested me, and has no theological bearing, I venture to offer for consideration some points in which I think the real key of the parable must be looked for.

We call it the parable of the Unjust Steward, and the name seems so appropriate that we almost overlook the fact that the epithet "Unjust Steward" is actually given to the leading character by our Lord himself, so that we might fancy that it had been applied afterwards and become traditional in consequence of what we are told about his doings. It is important, however, to put ourselves in the position of our Lord's first hearers, and not only weigh the very words he uses, but consider what they must have implied in that day. When our Lord (in verse 8) used the expression "the Unjust Steward," he simply applied the usual epithet to a character which was very well known in those days. As soon as he had uttered the first words "There was a certain rich man, which had a steward," all who listened to him must have fully expected the sort of character he was about to describe. There is another passage in the New Testament which shows this, or would do so if it were only properly translated, but even the Revisers have failed to see the point of it. In 1 Cor. iv. 2 we read, "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful"; which we in these days take to mean "it is expected in stewards." The true meaning of the Greek, however, is "It is a thing much sought for in stewards that some one should be found who is faithful." Three centuries ago our English word "require" did not mean to demand. Luther translates the verse very happily, "Nun sucht man nicht mehr an den Haushaltern, denn dass sie treu erfunden werden." The same sentiment, as applied to spiritual stewardship, is expressed by our Lord himself in Luke xii. 42, where in our English Testaments we lose the force of the Greek ἄρα, "Who, in all the world, is that faithful and wise steward," &c. It was much sought for, but it was very little expected. Places of trust in the ancient world were extremely difficult to fill satisfactorily; and I doubt not many of your readers are much better qualified than myself to tell of the extortions of Roman governors, the farming of revenues, and the oppression, corruption, and cruelty which those practices gave rise to.

A man in a place of trust had only to fear dismissal if any one could catch the ear of his employer and point out that he was cheating him. And this is what occurred in the present case. The lord calls the steward to account and tells him he must be no longer steward. Then comes the crisis. What is the dismissed steward to do? Here is the point where I think the story is a little misunderstood. It is no time now to cheat his master, for his master has just given him notice that he will require a strict account of his stewardship. He is a bad fellow, just like the majority of stewards, but his master is really the one man who must be satisfied to the full. He can only cheat himself, and this, accordingly, is what he does. The revenues are farmed, and he must pay the master what he has contracted to pay; but he may let off easily the debtors of his master's estate in order to secure their friendship and help in future. This he does quite under his master's eye; there is no concealment about it; "and the lord commended the unjust steward because he had done wisely." Of course the lord, who was one of "the children of this world," would never have commended the man for doing him an injury.

With this explanation there is nothing to shock us even in verse 9: "Make to yourselves friends with the unrighteous mammon"—the wealth which, indeed, you had no right to, but since it is now yours, you can bestow it graciously and make friends with it; for you will need them some day. It is a prudential warning, and not at all unlike our Lord's teaching in other places where he shows that prudence has a spiritual value.

James Gairdner.

West View, Pinner, Feb. 17.

P.S.—I should like to say that the theory that the steward cheated himself and not his master was suggested to me many years ago by a learned friend long since deceased, and the more I have thought of it the more it has approved itself to me as the right explanation.

[We have received several other interesting letters on this subject, but another discussion, which has a first claim, is making such demands upon our space, that we cannot publish anything more, at least for the present, on this parable.—Ed. Inq.]

POLITICS AND RELIGION.

Sir,—As you are opening your columns to a discussion of the question how the Unitarian cause may be made to flourish better in the present century than in the past, I venture to address a few words to you. I will confine this letter to one point—namely, to urge an abandonment of the practice of amalgamating religion and politics. I submit that every Unitarian should adopt the principle that in exercising his rights as a citizen he should abstain from any act which may appear to implicate his co-religionists in his proceedings; and every minister should pledge himself not to employ for political purposes the position of influence which is accorded to him for religious purposes. I would further add that, inasmuch as The Inquirer is regarded as the organ of the Unitarian body, the Editor should make it a matter of honour not to take advantage of his position in order to advocate his own political views. I regret to see that in the leading article in your last issue—namely that of Feb. 23—you take one side strongly in the coming election of the London County Council. Such articles are calculated to repel from the Unitarian body all adherents of the opposite party. And may I ask what Unitarianism has to do with the questions at issue in this contest? The Progressives wish to apply to Parliament for an Act imposing a tax on ground-rents, and declaring that all provisions in leases which stipulate that the lessee shall bear all future taxes shall be void so far as regards this new tax. They also wish to buy up the undertakings of the Water Companies, and apparently upon terms less liberal to the owners than those usually adopted when Parliament sanctions the compulsory purchase of private property. The Moderates oppose these proposals. I see herein certain financial and juristic questions, but nothing whatever that has the slightest connection with Unitarianism; but I see that stockholders in the Water Companies and owners of ground-rents are sure to be repelled from the Unitarian body when they see that by joining it they strengthen the hands of their political opponents who wish to pass measures which prejudice them financially.

A. D. Tyssen.

59, Priory-road, N.W., Feb. 23.

Essex Hall Temperance Association.—Owing to the numerous meetings arranged for Whit Week, it has been found necessary to arrange for the annual meeting of the Essex Hall Temperance Association to be held on Whit Monday evening, May 27, in the Council Room of Essex Hall. The committee hope that all members and sympathisers with their work will make a special effort to be present.

SOUTH AFRICAN WOMEN AND CHILDREN'S DISTRESS FUND.

An appeal for contributions to the South African Women and Children's Distress Fund will, we trust, meet with a generous response from all parts of the country. The following are particulars of what has been done, and what it is hoped to do, by the managers of the Fund, which was established last December :—

A provisional committee was formed, and later in the month Miss Hobhouse went out to South Africa to ascertain the extent and nature of the distress, and what relief was desirable or even possible while the war was still going on.

Miss Hobhouse estimates that at the lowest computation there are some 10,000 women and children detained in the various camps, nearly all of whom are in want of everything save the absolute necessaries of life. Friends in Capetown and elsewhere are doing what they can, but their resources are limited, and Miss Hobhouse found that the offer of help from sympathisers in the Mother Country was welcomed with gratitude, and even with emotion, by the Dutch colonists.

After a few weeks at Capetown Miss Hobhouse started on Jan. 22 for Bloemfontein, with the sanction of Sir Alfred Milner and Lord Kitchener, taking with her a truck load (conveyed carriage free by the kindness of the authorities), containing all the clothing collected at Capetown, and £200 worth of foodstuffs. From Bloemfontein she will try to visit the women's camps at Kimberley, Edenburg, Kronstadt, Norvals Pont, Springfontein, and elsewhere. She hopes eventually to get permission to go into the Transvaal.

Whilst thanking those whose prompt and generous response has enabled us to make so good a start, we now confidently appeal to a wider public to contribute to the fund, so that our delegate may not find herself empty-handed in the presence of much misery.

The appeal is signed by K. E Farrer, hon. treasurer, 3, Whitehall-court, S.W., and F. W. Lawrence, hon. secretary, Mansfield House, Canning Town, E, to either of whom contributions may be sent, and it is endorsed by the Marchioness of Ripon, Mrs. Leonard Courtney, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. Passmore Edwards, Canon Scott Holland, and others.

A special Committee, of which Lady Osborne Morgan is president, and Miss E. D. Bradby, hon. secretary, is charged with the provision of clothing for the Boer women and children detained in the camps. The following particulars are from the appeal of this Committee :—

Ladies forming sewing circles can obtain parcels of cut-out garments.

New clothes, materials, and money, may be sent to Miss E. D. Bradby, 19, Lindengardens, Bayswater, London, W., who will be glad to give further information.

Old clothes, which should be both good and clean, or they are not worth sending out, to Mrs. Mackail, 6, Pembroke-gardens, London, W.

Provincial centres have been formed in Birmingham, Bradford, Manchester, and other towns.

The Committee have issued a first report of their labours, which can be obtained by forwarding a stamped and addressed wrapper to Miss Bradby, whose address is given above.

When a man lives with God his voice shall be as sweet as the murmur of the brook and the rustle of the corn.—Emerson.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

Last week, in our talk about "blindness," I said that the best way to overcome the worst sort of blindness, our spiritual blindness, is to try and help one another; and that if we wish to know God and feel Him near to us, we must try and live pure and unselfish lives and be bringers of light and joy to those around us.

And now I am going to tell you about one way of doing this. Of course you all know about it; but we can none of us be reminded too often how important it is. It is by trying to be good-natured.

I think I hear some little girl or boy saying, "Oh, that's very easy," or "That's such a little thing, it can't make any difference to anybody else." But just wait a little and let us think about it. Is it such a little thing? and is it so easy?

No doubt it is very easy sometimes. When we get up on a beautifully bright sunny day, feeling thoroughly happy, and go off to school knowing our lessons and do not get into trouble over them; and then when we come home everything goes right, we get all we want, playing the games we like, and being allowed to take our favourite part in them: then being good-natured is easy and seems a very little thing.

But our days are not always like that, nor do I think it would be good for us if they were.

I am afraid we wake some mornings feeling cross before anything has happened to vex us; and so we go on all through the day, feeling sure the fault lies with somebody else, with cross looks on our faces, speaking crossly to every one about us, and, perhaps, what is worse still, making those around us cross too, until there seems no sunshine or joy about us at all.

Is it so easy and such a little thing to be good-natured then?

Some people are naturally much more good-natured than others, seeming to find it quite easy to be always bright and happy. Wherever they come, they bring brightness and gladness with them, and their presence seems to spread sunshine all around.

What a blessing such people are in the world! And, children, it is in the power of each one of you to become such a blessing.

I have heard of a Sunday-school class of little children who had been having a lesson on "Good-nature," and they had been talking with their teacher about the difference it made when those around them were happy and good-natured, when one little girl said, "Oh, wouldn't it be nice if every one was like that, and no one ever got in a temper and said unkind things? Why, it would make the world quite different!" The teacher asked them if they would like to try for a week not getting cross with anyone in their homes or at school, but being always happy and good-natured. They all said they would. And on the next Sunday when they met together again, the first thing they said was, "We did try, and it has made such a difference," and one little girl said it had been the happiest week in her life.

They had each had one or two failures, of course; they could scarcely expect to start right away not answering back, nor speaking unkind words, nor teasing their younger brothers and sisters, nor refusing to give up something their playfellows might want. But they had all tried, and found that it was worth while. It made the days brighter and happier, and not only for themselves but also for their brothers and sisters and school-fellows.

And when they had told their teacher all about it, the children wanted to know if they should try again the next week. So I fancy they must have found some happiness in it, don't you?

Have you ever noticed that when people are angry they generally speak in a very loud voice?

I think if you were to try when anyone said something you didn't like, instead of getting angry and answering back in that way, probably saying something that you would be sorry for afterwards, just to speak very gently, you would find that your angry feeling would soon pass away.

And have you ever thought that it takes two to make a quarrel? Try and remember that, and make up your minds always to speak gently when you feel angry, and in a whisper when you are very angry, or not to speak at all, and I think you will find in time that nobody will try to quarrel with you. So by being gentle and good-natured, you come to help others too.

Does it do any good to get angry? No, but generally a great deal of harm, because we say things we don't mean, without thinking what it may lead to, and then when our anger has passed away we are sorry for it. How many quarrels would be stopped if we could only remember this.

Nothing is so catching as bright and happy good-nature; it is as beautiful as sunshine in the world, and helps others to be good. Do you remember those words Jesus spoke when preaching to the people, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father who is in Heaven is perfect"? It will help us, and we shall help others, more than we often think possible, if we begin by trying to be unselfish and happy and good-natured. Alison Hall.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

To Publishers.—[All Books, &c., sent to The Inquirer will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review].

Resurrection. A Novel by Leo Tolstoy. Translated by Mrs. Aylmer Maude. 6d. (Simpkin, Marshall and Co.)

A Dynamic Faith. By R. M. Jones, M.A., D.Litt. 2s. 6d. (Headley Brothers.)

Quakerism in England: Its Present Position. By E. Grubb, M.A. 6d. (Headley Brothers.)

The Society of Friends: Its Faith and Practice. By J. S. Rowntree. 1s. 6d. (Headley Brothers.)

Review of Reviews, Harper's, Woman at Home, Good Words, Sunday Magazine, Cornhill, Monthly Review, Nineteenth Century.

In a note last week on the volume of translations from Zschokke made by the Queen's command, and published with the title "Meditations on Death and Eternity" in 1862, we regret to find that we were in error, but are glad that it was an error, when we stated that the book had long been out of print. On inquiry from Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Co. we find that it has not been out of print and that the last edition issued was in 1891.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, MARCH 2, 1901.

A BUDDHIST MANIFESTO.

A NOTABLE manifesto, addressed to "all the Ecclesiastics in the world," by the Buddhists of Japan, and dealing with "the Chinese Emergency," has reached us, and although it is dated October of last year, it has, so far as our knowledge goes, received little attention in this country. Ecclesiastics of the great Christian Churches are not, indeed, apt to receive with very good grace advice or exhortation from teachers of any of the other religions of the world; but it would be difficult for any humble-minded Christian to find in this Japanese address anything at which to take offence; and the substantive proposals of the address are such as have been made from other quarters nearer home. Coming from this unexpected quarter they carry additional weight and a peculiar interest, and in any case are deserving of the most respectful hearing.

We propose, therefore, to print in full the latter part of the address, but from the length of the document are obliged to summarise its earlier passages. That the Buddhists of Japan should have set an example to the preachers of Christianity in China, by declining to demand compensation for the damage done to one of their temples, appears to us particularly noteworthy.

The address opens with a reference to the dreadful confusion and social distress caused by recent events in China, and affirms that while schemes for the amelioration of the condition of the Middle Kingdom must be looked for as the result of negotiations between the proper authorities of China and the Powers, yet the work of eradicating the roots of evil and consolidating the permanent welfare and peace of the country must be in the hands of the propagandists of religion. Therefore it is that the followers of BUDDHA make this appeal to other teachers of religion throughout the world.

They believe that fundamentally the higher religions of the world are at one, those, namely, which are based upon the principles of love for mankind, and in which that principle is utilised "to destroy the darkness of life and to deliver myriads from sin and distress." To that great principle the propagators of religion must be always true. If they should be led, for any reason, to seek other ends, to implicate themselves in human ambition or intrigue, they would be proved disloyal to their foundation principle.

A warm tribute is then paid to the earnestness of Christian missionary work in China, which may be traced back for more than a thousand years, and to the social, educational, and charitable agencies which have grown out of that work. Recognising their own responsibility, the Buddhists of Japan have recently set themselves to follow that example.

But while the Christian Missions in China have had great results, it is unfortunately the fact that they have been met by strong antipathy and distrust, which have led to violent and cruel outbreaks on the part of the Chinese. Yet the character of that people is such that "they were not originally hostile to foreigners or to foreign religion: they were on the contrary signalised from the olden time as a people remarkable for the tolerance which absolutely deterred them from rising in arms in religious collision." Why, then, it is asked, this unexpected attitude towards the Christian missionaries, and such an outbreak of a violent anti-religious spirit?

The answer is found in the unfortunate impression made by the conduct of missionaries in certain respects. And from this point we print the remainder of the address in full.

Certain Conduct of Missionaries in China Deprecated.

Whenever we reflect upon these circumstances we cannot but express our profound regret for the deeds of the missionaries in China. In investigating the cause of the anti-religious spirit of the Chinese, we find that apprehension and terror entertained towards the foreign missionaries were virtually the origin of their implacable hostility. They have perceived that these missionaries have secured for themselves an immunity calculated to subvert their established customs and manners; they have also recognised in their attitude a tendency to ignore the statutes of the country, and a desire to accomplish the most selfish ends by the oppression of the Chinese Government and people. They have, moreover, supposed that the foreign evangelists in China have arrogated to themselves the power of protecting the followers of their creed in utter disregard of the latter's criminality under the laws of the State, whereas non-believers, though legally innocent, were frequently entrapped into a crime. Under these circumstances they were led to the conclusion that the foreign missionaries in China have been exerting their energies for the accomplishment of a certain obnoxious ambition by stirring up the unprincipled rabble of the country, and, with this object in view, made their chapels and cathedrals a sort of asylum for criminals. The Chinese began to entertain the idea that the missionaries were intimately connected with the foreign policy of their own countries, and that having made themselves instrumental in carrying out the intrigues of their own Governments they must have laboured for some sinister design, such as the extension of territory, along with the development of commerce. They saw with grave apprehension that in respect of foreign machinations the missionaries were the first to come, followed by Consuls, with generals at their backs; and they have feared that behind a man who had come with a Bible in his hand stood a warrior armed with a spear and a sword.

The Dread of Foreign Intervention.

They have apprehended that the result of all these intrusions would be claims for compensation, plunder of territory, and what not, the final settlement of the affair being only reserved for the country with every indication for its entire subversion. With such apprehension and terror it is quite natural that they should entertain a strong prejudice against foreign religion. It seems to us that this motive or spirit has virtually led the Chinese to the organisation of the Boxers' society; and this feeling having strengthened itself within the bosom of the Celestials, eventually brought about those disturbances which have been going on since last spring when incidents occurred involving the political authority of the central government in dispute. The violence and cruelty perpetrated by the Chinese really deserve to be deprecated with the utmost indignation, but when we turn our thoughts deep into their heart, we are almost unable to avoid a feeling of quasi-sympathy.

Unfortunate Impression Produced.

Nevertheless, it must be clearly understood that we, the followers of Buddha, are in no way disposed to inculcate the idea that the fears and doubts entertained by the Chinese are in every respect justifiable. On the contrary, we do not hesitate to condemn them as having laboured under gross misapprehension; inasmuch as there is no reason to suppose that the propagators of religion who are perfectly familiar with the fundamental doctrine of universal affection should have been persuaded to enter into proceedings calculated to create apprehension and terror on the part of the Chinese. Can it be presumed, however, that the missionaries themselves are entirely free from responsibility on this point, in spite of their having excited the Chinese to entertain erroneous views in connection with their conduct? As for ourselves we are inclined to believe that the errors of judgment into which the Chinese have fallen are, in many respects, attributable to the conduct of the missionaries in China, and that the justice of this assertion may be firmly established by taking into consideration the statements of the officials directly concerned in the foreign policy of their own countries, the public reports of the foreign Ministers accredited to the Court of China, the information given by the most trustworthy journals in the world, together with the existing annals of the Chinese Empire and its actual condition. In short, the proceedings of the missionaries were far from being compatible with the principle of universal benevolence to which they ought to have adhered, and that they have alienated themselves from the true spirit of their Churches at home by stepping beyond the legitimate sphere of religion, can in no way be denied. Such, of course, was not the intention they may have originally entertained, and might simply be regarded as the result of a bungling into which they have accidentally fallen. Still there can be no manner of doubt that in their dealings with the Chinese they have, in fact, advanced beyond the reasonable limits of operation.

Responsibility of the Missionaries.

To this is to be attributed the cause of suspicion as well as apprehension on the part of the Chinese: in this is to be found an element of provocation for the recent insurrection in China. If that be the case, then it follows that the missionaries are to be held largely, if not entirely, responsible for the present disturbances in the Middle Kingdom. As a matter of fact, the propagators of religion ought to seek for peace and inspire men with the principles of humanity, but the missionaries in China have constantly assumed an obnoxious attitude, and have thus brought upon the religious world a great disgrace and chagrin.

Appeal for Wiser Action.

Such being the case, we, the Buddhists of Japan, cannot but express our desire that all the ecclesiastics in the world would, in conjunction with us, recognise the above fact—a fact which clearly shows that the missionaries in China have proceeded far beyond the fundamental principles of religion—and devote their energies to formulating a plan by which the suspicion as well as the apprehension harboured by the Chinese against foreign missionaries may be speedily removed. Unless such a course be taken, how is it possible for them to uphold the gospel of humanity and love—to illume the darkness with the light of peace and welfare? Unless such a scheme be adopted, the four hundred millions of souls are certain to degenerate into a state of overwhelming distress and affliction, and the East Asian firmament permanently to be darkened by clouds of disaster and insurrection. We, as disciples of Buddha, can hardly restrain our fear and lamentation at such a prospect when we think of the Great Truth shining above and four hundred million souls groping below.

Proposals to allay Suspicion.

But how is the fear and apprehension on the part of the Chinese to be cleared away? On this question we Buddhists are prepared to submit two proposals to the propagators of religion in the world for their sincere acceptance and approval.

(i.) No Resentment or Recrimination.

The first is, that the ecclesiastical authorities in the world should exercise their influence in restraining the missionaries in China from proceedings which are likely to create suspicion on the part of the Chinese as to the existence of their secret connection with the foreign policy of their own countries. They should, for instance, be withheld from inducing their own Governments to carry out schemes conducive to successful aggrandisement at the expense of China, on the plea of persecution inflicted—a plea frequently resorted to whenever more or less suffering has been inflicted on them by the Chinese. Nor should they be allowed to claim compensation for damages incurred as they have hitherto done, for nothing can be more incompatible with the true principles of religion.

When some time ago a Japanese Buddhist Temple at Amoy was burnt by the Chinese, we Buddhists being desirous to persuade the home Government to refrain from pressing the Chinese authorities on this particularly account, have renounced all claims for damages, and this we did simply with a view to the discretion which we ought to exercise in the interests of religion. A glance at history shows us that the great teachers of every religion in antiquity, despite the persecution which they have incurred, have not only not displayed any spirit of hostility or vengeance, but, on the contrary, have prayed with compassion, to have the heavenly blessing bestowed upon the persecutors. It is earnestly to be recommended, therefore, that we, together with all the propagators of religion in the world, should be prepared to inspire ourselves with the noble spirit of the ancient sages, and instead of holding inimical feelings against the Chinese who have perpetrated so much havoc and atrocity upon the missionaries, should endeavour to do good for evil, and to supplicate a permanent blessing upon this pitiful race.

(ii.) Respect for Native Customs.

The second proposition we have to submit to our venerable brethren consists in withholding the missionaries in China from all forms of procedure which might possibly be regarded as disturbing the social institutions of China.

They must, in fact, be prohibited from any line of conduct subversive of the ancient customs of China, or derogatory to her laws, or liable to be recognised as producing abuses of misprision through partiality displayed towards the converts against non-believers—proceedings which can in no way be reconciled with the legitimate doctrine of religion. True, the Chinese civilisation is as yet rudimentary, and improvements may, in many respects, be necessary in the customs and manners of the country. Still, nothing can be a greater mistake on the part of foreigners than to attempt to overthrow the whole organisation at one blow, with a view of substituting their own customs and manners. China was early distinguished for her excellent etiquette and music, and some of these admirable formalities are still preserved among the people.

To ignore all these facts and to attempt to disturb the ancient decorum of China is to be condemned as the outcome of utter indifference to the legitimate sphere of action belonging to the missionaries. It is therefore advisable that we should assume a respectful attitude towards the customs and etiquette as well as the laws of China, and endeavour by degrees to implant the seeds of civilisation and religion.

The True Spirit for Missionary Effort.

It is sincerely to be hoped that the ecclesiastical authorities in the world should persuade the missionaries in China to act up to the principle we have just suggested, as it embodies in itself a legitimate course to be pursued by the propagators of religion who have embraced the doctrine of universal affection or benevolence.

We Buddhists desire respectfully to submit the above two proposals to the ecclesiastical authorities of all nations, with the full conviction that should they, in accordance with our humble sentiments be willing to take the course proposed by us, the honest people of China will at once lay aside all suspicion and apprehension, and appreciate with delight the intrinsic virtues of religion.

If so, the ruffians who seek to accomplish their selfish ends under the guise of converts will eventually become unable to do anything towards again disturbing the foreign religion, and the future of the missionaries in China will be as bright and smooth as the ocean in the spring. Then, too, the sources of disturbance in China will become extinct, and a new era of mental enlightenment immediately dawn upon the Chinese with every prospect of the reconciliation of the occidental and oriental civilisation.

Then again political as well as social institutions will become settled in perfect order, and finally the 400,000,000 souls, relieved from distress and affliction, will be enabled to enjoy the benefits of the doctrine of universal benevolence, and the 400 provinces of China, thus cleared from portents of disaster, will ultimately secure for themselves a happy condition of purity and tranquillity, and the whole world would then be filled with the sacred effulgence of peace and blessing in its utmost brilliancy.

Such really is the condition which we Buddhists of Great Japan are anxious to see brought about in China and throughout the world.

Signed by the following representatives of the Great Japan Buddhist Union, at their headquarters within the Kenninji Temple in Kyoto, Empire of Great Japan:—

GENKO NAKAYAMA, Superintendent of the Tendai sect.
IUKYO CHO, Superintendent of the Shingon sect.
KODO HISATA, Superintendent of the Hieizan branch of the Jodo sect.
DOKUTAN TOYODA, Superintendent of the Nanzenji branch of the Rinzai sect.
KOEI OTANI, Superintendent of the Otani branch of the Shin sect.
KORIN YOSHI, Superintendent of the Obaku sect.

Oct. 11, 33rd year of Meiji (1900).

WE beg to call the attention of our readers to the Mansford-street Church advertisement. The annual meeting is to be held this year at the schoolroom of the Hampstead Chapel, and it is hoped that all friends of mission work will attend to help on those who give up much time to the various agencies carried on here.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Letters, &c. received from the following:—D. A.; T. B. B.; W. H. B.; A. D.; J. E.; T. E. M. E.; C. S. H.; F. H.; W. L.; A. H. M.; Ph. M.; S. H. M.; G. P.; T. P.; H. D. R.; W. S.; J. M. Ll. T.; J. W.

A LIVING CHURCH.

Sir,—Mr. Lummis's sermon has at least the merit of provoking us to think, if only to understand what some of his obscure sentences mean. His earnestness is something to be thankful for in these dark days when aching hearts are waiting for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning. But, alas! much of this new prophet's message lacks inspiration. Some of its strains have an old familiar ring, but our ears have become wearied of the false harmonies. Is there something in the Yorkshire atmosphere that breeds an unwholesome pessimism? Timely transplantation to the neighbouring county may work wonders.

"Unitarianism is failing, because Unitarians are not faithful to God." "We do not love, because we do not pray." "As being the especial exponents of man's brotherhood we are the least brotherly of all the sects." I challenge these assertions, and maintain that they are as unkind as they are inaccurate. I have a closer and longer acquaintance with our churches than Mr. Lummis, and deny that they deserve any such stigma of reproach. There are, indeed, individual Unitarians and particular churches whom I should be the last to defend, and they must answer to God for their infidelity to the noble principles they profess. But, speaking generally, if Unitarians are not faithful to God, I wonder who are. Man for man, and church for church, I do not believe that any denomination can show greater sacrifices more cheerfully made than ours, though, perhaps, with no great outward results to show for them. There are many reasons for this which I cannot stay to discuss; but the standard of denominational success in any case is a low one, and I regret that Mr. Lummis should appeal to it.

But the question of personal fidelity is of vital consequence, and upon that our severe critic does Unitarians less than justice. He has poor encouragement to give to gallant leaders of "forlorn hopes" and sturdy members of the churches in remote country districts, far away from the great centres of life and thought. He gives little credit for the resistance to the temptations to a cheap and easy conformity which constitute the greatest and most insidious difficulty in many populous neighbourhoods. He forgets that it is harder to stand firm by one's principles when friends are few and funds are low than when the conditions are more favourable. There is no denomination which is set a more difficult task than ours, I believe. All the more honour, therefore, to those who are faithful; and the greater reproach against those who discourage them. In most populous centres there is a handful of true-hearted men and women—sometimes even a small crowd—who will not bow the knee to Baal, and prefer in their unpopular Bethel to worship the Father in spirit and truth. Poor comfort they receive from Mr. Lummis, and little acknowledgment of their perseverance under grave difficulties that would overwhelm persons of feebler faith.

And what is Mr. Lummis's ideal? A strong church with a single name. We have heard of this panacea before; but we are not encouraged by other experiments in the art of church-building. We might find a name to live, and be bound together in a shroud. Artificial bonds will not promote life. The life must be in the individual first, in the congregation next, to make association in a church worth while. A voluntary combination of living persons and of living churches to promote religious life is capable of revolutionising the whole community; but a combination of people who are "unfaithful to God," who "do not love because they do not pray," who "are the least brotherly of all," and who hold by a "dying" creed, can surely bring about nothing but the speedy dissolution of a corrupt system that cumbers the ground and deserves to perish.

If it is only the Unitarian denomination that is dying, I for one do not mind. It can only die by being merged into a larger life, and that means the perpetuation of its truth and beauty and faith. Many of us will be devoutly thankful when the need for the Unitarian protest has passed, when even Protestantism itself disappears in the glorious reality of a truly Catholic Church. But that ideal is yet far off. There are signs of a coming change, for Unitarianism is permeating all the churches, and the new century may effect the new reformation for which we have longed, and prayed, and worked. Then the Unitarian name may go, and few will regret it. But the call for a Free Church will always be urgent. Why not take the name then boldly at once, as the only Christian body which is honestly entitled to claim it? Here is my vote for the name of our religious fellowship—The Free Church. Such a name excludes no faithful worshipper, no earnest seeker after truth and love and righteousness.

And such a name would be indicative of our faith (the faith which at least is mine) that the Church of God is an invisible corporation, whose members are alone known to Him by whom the secrets of all hearts are understood; that its passports are of character and faith and love, not of creed or ritual; that it includes every true seeker of the light, every devoted worker for the good of his fellows, every self-sacrificing spirit that yields its all to love. And, let me tell Mr. Lummis, it is just because most Unitarians are passionately devoted to this great ideal which is their way of saying that the true Church is the Kingdom of God on earth, that they are to be found, out of all proportion to their numbers, in the House of Commons, the Town Council, the Board of Guardians, the School Board; leading the way in works of philanthropy and public usefulness; pioneers of moral and social reform, and regarded by those who hate their theology as the men and women who can be relied on to support any good and generous cause.

If this is to fail, then it is God-consecrated failure; and I for one shall be glad to be found, when the summons comes, serving this larger Church as the practical expression of my highest and deepest faith.

C. J. Street.

Bolton, Feb. 20.

Sir,—In reading Mr. Lummis's articles my first impression is that here, at any rate, is a man who has chosen life. This is healthy; the breath is sweet. Reaching an angle in our sheltered valley, the hills have broken away abruptly before us, and the wind leaps straight in our faces from the sea.

Wherein lies the life—the specific life of our fellowship?

In this new beginning of years we must not be tired of our rôle. Our mantle is not outworn. We cannot blend with the rest and pass away. There is something inalienably distinctive about us. We are called to worship God by thought. This function cannot become obsolete. All the more cordially do we welcome the plea for a more perfect prophecy and for entire fidelity to the truth—truth unlimited.

God's revelation is progressive, and someone, therefore, has to be the forerunner. This is the commission which is given to us as a Church, unhindered as we are by tradition, and unintimidated by ecclesiastical authority. Ours is the port of the pioneer. If anyone else will share the arduous duty and the honour with us, so much the better for him, and so much the better for mankind. But there will always be a place for us, for the great majority will ever prefer the safe and steadier-moving rear.

I do not see how, as a body, we are going to "reach the masses," although we must go on labouring for them. Still I am confident that our duty, as an advanced guard, is clear, and it would be an evil day for the world when the religious and social pioneer should no longer be called on for service.

> Have the elder churches halted?
> Do they droop and end their lesson? . . .
> We take up the task eternal, and the burden and the lesson,
> Pioneers! O Pioneers!

But I am told the elder churches have not halted, that having freed themselves from some of their needless baggage they have caught up to us. Then it is high time for us to go forward again.

Mr. Lummis makes several suggestions which should prove helpful in this relation. In referring last week to the proposal for a more adequate literature Mr. Solly put in a good word for the Biblical manuals, which have proved so useful, and expressed his desire for a shilling manual of the Book of Genesis. Such a volume ought to be widely welcomed. Not less important, I think, would be a teacher's manual of Paul of similar dimensions, giving a vivid portraiture of the man, and a clear and interesting account of his life and letters.

There is another phase of religious life which one might well have thought would be more precious to us than it seems to be. To this I may, perhaps, be permitted to make a brief reference.

"Do your people pray together?" I was asked not long ago by a friend full of the new light, though attached to another communion. I replied, "Not often." His further inquiry was, "How do you account for that?" I ventured an opinion of which I need say no more at present, but I have often asked myself whether we, as a spiritual community, are not in need of a posture of soul from which the effort of thought is at certain times almost as deliberately excluded as at other times it is dutifully acepted. Some of us profess to find a fitting margin of quietude and meditation and passive absorption in casual hours of solitude during the day and in the night watches. Are these haphazard, solitary communings sufficient? Do they lift us up when we are down? Have they enough of the colour of love, and comfort, and praise?

We do not always find what we need in these respects in our services. We are over-prone to come to the "preaching." The rest is liable to sink to the quality of a "preliminary" or an appendage. Are we not missing holy experiences, and deep, strengthening bonds of companionship in that we come not together, even in our own homes, say, once in the midst of the busy week, in the morning before the toil begins, when we can brace one another with prayer of sympathy and hymn of praise; or, after the work is done, with a benediction of comfort, a united utterance of gratitude and forgiveness for the day.

Like the pioneer ministry of the truth, this, too, is a calling which is heard and answered by but few. The many will not come together simply, solely to pray and praise. Yet "where two or three are gathered together there am I in the midst," is a saying that should still give us pause. (Of course, I do not advocate prayer to Christ.) But we are terribly shy of one another's souls.

Mr. Lummis calls to us earnestly to "work more, love more, think more, pray more." Why not the last as much as the first, if to us the Spirit is the Real? Free as we are to guide our steps as we will, I cannot regard as a reassuring symptom of the times the ever-diminishing inclination of our people to avail themselves of some social means of communion with the Most High.

H. M. Livens.

Brighton, Feb. 26.

Sir,—Cradled in Unitarianism—or what is, perhaps, even more—having rediscovered in this faith security from subsequent doubt, I can hardly claim to be as unprejudiced a critic as Mr. Lummis. Nevertheless, I confess that his strictures upon us impress me rather as unduly merciful than as too severe.

Underlying even our lack of week-day religion—which is his gravest charge—is our almost complete want of a Theology. In fact, whatever we may be as individuals, as a body we are possessed and stirred by no great idea concerning man's relation to God. Can such a body hope to be very great? Has there ever been in man's history a great religious movement without some dominating Theolgical thought, haunting men's minds with its power or beauty, and restless within them until expressed? And yet what wonder if we are as yet without it. Have we not cut ourselves adrift from all the old strongholds of orthodox Christianity—the dogmas which for nearly two millenniums expressed the highest aspirations of mankind? Have we not set ourselves the grand task of reading in the common things of life the Word of Infinity—and learning to interpret the Eternal Will through its revelations not in one book or one man, but in the measureless universe as it evolves itself in Time? What wonder if the Truth is still too new and too great for us to grasp and carry about to all the world.

And yet the very fact that our mission is so overwhelmingly great and important, involves us in all the more obloquy if we fail to take those ordinary and commonplace measures for success which our neighbours are generally alive to.

Mr. Lummis points to a number of these weaknesses, the most prominent being our lack of efficient organisation. We seem to have a radical misunderstanding of the true function of an organisation—which is to support and stimulate, not to check the vitality of each part. I suppose no body is more completely and minutely organised than the Society of Friends, and yet how very small would be the modifications necessary in their system to make every Quaker as entirely free as every member of our own churches is. True, most organisations do check the dear freedom we so rightly prize, and no gain in efficiency would compensate us for the smallest loss in individual spontaneity and freedom. But organisation for spiritual support and practical efficiency has no necessary tendency to limit personal freedom of thought and expression, and it is the imperative condition of visible success. Dr. Martineau, the most zealous champion of our free position, himself brought forward a most comprehensive and statesmanlike scheme for the organisation of our churches; but we could only be induced to swallow a very meagre fragment of that scheme.

It is far more this want of unity than any inherent timidity which makes all our undertakings so tentative and apologetic. We enter a town through a back street and hide ourselves in an upper chamber, till we have courage to set up an iron church and finally to built a brick one with even a timid little spire, warranted not to challenge attention. So long as we show so little confidence in ourselves, can we expect the busy street-going public to place much confidence in us?

But after all our real trouble is—let us be honest—that we do not feel any overwhelming confidence in the apostle who is to fill the church with our gospel. For the fact is—as Mr. Lummis again bravely shows us—we expect to pay a clerk's salary, and, I would add, we must not expect to get anything very superior to a clerk's services. In all solemnity I would urge that though Salvationism and Methodism and even Anglicanism itself can be upheld by very ordinary talents combined with earnestness, yet our work to be done as it should be requires in addition to true earnestness talents of a high order, and such moreover as command a high price in the intellectual market. Now if we were a people all aflame with some ready and perfected message we should require less talent to spread it; but ours is still the hard pioneer work which prepares the way for a great truth and we need the fittest workmen. Nor can we claim that ours is the only pioneer work of supreme importance for man's future. Imagine a young man of University honours, well read and travelled, with life and society open before him—if he is anxious to benefit his kind and enlarge or deepen its intellectual and spiritual wealth, is his choice entirely limited to the Unitarian ministry? If it were, then the meanest subsistence, sufficient to supply a pair of sandals and a rope-girt cloak, might induce him to relinquish the world for such a calling. But, to-day, when almost all the world offers opportunities for bettering man's lot in one direction or another, it is idle to suppose that the ablest and most earnest men—with a few exceptions here and there—will so much as consider the career of our ministry under its present depressing and, it must be confessed, growth-stunting conditions.

Nevertheless, more effective organisation could do much to economise such forces as are already at our disposal. It is such things as the terrible isolation of many of our bravest workers, the absence of recognised advising or overseeing bodies to help repair the misfortunes or blunders of others and to support enterprise and maintain a working efficiency; it is the demoralising haphazardness of promotion, and, above all, the complete exposure of congregations to the evil abilities of adventurers, or the incapacity of idlers, which wage life-sapping warfare upon our scattered forces.

It is, indeed, "Life" that we have to choose. It lies before us in greater fulness than ever before. We have learnt to-day that the whole universe is God's written word, and every soul His "beloved son in whom He rejoices." But if year after year we bring not forth the fruits of life we shall some day be cut down as a cumbrance to the ground. And of life there is no more characteristic manifestation than organisation, the co-operation of parts, and the mutual service of each for the whole, and the whole for each. "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of the body being many are yet one body, so also is Christ."

Padiham. Joseph H. Wicksteed.

Sir,—What first occurs to me to remark upon in Mr. Lummis's papers is the burden of woe of Chapter I.—namely, "We lack religion."

For my own part I do not think that this is true, neither do I think that it is true of our congregations. Religion I take to be a conscious relationship to God. Our relationship may perhaps be rather with the mind of God than with the emotional side of the Divine nature; it may be calm and quiet rather than tempestuous and stormy, a finding out of God's thoughts rather than a feeling of God's emotions. This, I think, is very likely true. But it does not result in a lack of religion, but in a religion that is thoughtful rather than emotional.

Mr. Lummis, I think, would do us more good if he first recognised the reality of our religion as we have it already than denied our religious consciousness altogether.

We are mindful of God. Perhaps we are not heart-full of God. Were this his criticism we might or might not agree, but should, I think, understand him better, and should feel, as we hardly can at present, that he understood us better.

I think also that many of our members are most markedly not alone mindful but also will-full of God: they will to do God's will and that with a sincerity of effort and practice that speaks more than many words. Still we may be mind-full and will-full of God, and yet not heart-full or soul-full.

Many worship God with all their strength and with all their mind; they both seek to discover His will, and then they labour to do His will. Yet in all their labour and in all their true perceptions they may lack heartiness of real love and the rejoicing spirit of gratitude that flows into praise or the sorrowing spirit of humility that casts itself down in prayer.

Many emotions appropriate to those who continually have God in mind may be lacking: much of the deep feeling of God appropriate to those who will His will rather than their own may be absent. Our religion may be growing in wiseness more than in graciousness, and in effective power and outward example rather than in inward favour with God and man.

If so, let us be told so; but let us not be told that we have no religion at all. Our religion may be criticised because it is there.

Wilfred Harris.

Bolton.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

WALES.

When the nineteenth century dawned upon Wales the Unitarians were found busy, with loins girt and sleeves well tucked up; though but a small band, they did their level best to spread the light that was in them, and, if we may judge from the great and persistent opposition they met, their efforts were not without some measure of success. Dr. Thomas Burgess, who was promoted to the bishopric of St. David's in 1803, was far from satisfied with the condition of his diocese—theologically. He found the leaven of heresy working everywhere, and, with a determination worthy of a nobler cause, he worked vigorously to stamp it out. Year after year he kept pouring from the Press tract after tract controverting his opponents' views, with all the assurance of a man that had truth on his side. These are a few samples of his savoury subjects: "A Letter to an Unitarian Lay Seceder, with a Postscript on the Anti-Socinianism of Newton and Locke"; "An Address (several) to Persons calling themselves Unitarians"; "The Challenge Answered; or the Baptismal Commission in St. Matthew's Gospel proved to be the Genuine Words of Christ, and an authentic Evidence of the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity"; "Reasons why a New Translation of the Bible should not be published"; "A Vindication of 1 John v. 7."

It was little, of course, that the Welsh Unitarians could do in face of such a Goliath; but they tried to do that little as effectually as they could, by bringing into the field Priestley, Lindsey, Belsham, Carpenter, Estlin and some others. These they rigged up in Welsh costume, and sent out broadcast preaching the Unitarian gospel in a language understanded by the people. Estlin was brought all the way from Bristol, in suo corpore, to Llangendeyrn, the Ultima Thule of the Bishop's diocese, and he preached for seventy-five minutes. The sermon was a noble vindication of Unitarian principles, and was probably understood by most of the ministers present, to say nothing of the immense congregation. It was subsequently printed, and a review of it will be found in the Monthly Repository of 1816.

And now we, a small survival of that past of which we are proud, who have been privileged to witness the dawn of the twentieth century, with its undreamt-of possibilities, feel that a call rests upon us too to bestir ourselves, to emulate those Unitarian ancestors, and to find out whether there is not something that we also can do to further the principles of religion among our people.

Last year we joined hands and worked unitedly and heartily on behalf of the London Bazaar; this year we want some new field of operation wherein our churches may again unite and work with their whole energies. In union there is strength. Hand in hand only can we hope to march to successful issues.

The Ymofynydd, our Welsh Inquirer, first issued in September, 1847, was sent out in January under a new editorial management and as the magazine of the S. W. U. Association. Clad in modern raiment of brilliant hue, and with an addition of new blood to its staff, it has received everywhere a warm welcome that promises well for the future. This, however, is not exactly our new venture for celebrating the advent of the twentieth century. That is more ambitious and is in the form of an appeal for a fund of not less than £3,000 for the support and spread of Liberal Christianity in Wales. We want every man, woman, and child, belonging to our Welsh churches to respond to the appeal, and to make their welcome to the new century a real and substantial expression of gratitude, by putting their hands into their pockets and bringing out therefrom according to the best of their ability.

The object of the fund, in the first instance, will be to help in the liquidation of chapel debts. The debts on some of our chapels — debts unavoidable — are literally crushing the spirits and the energies of the congregations. Those chapels which we have especially in view in this appeal are the two in the Rhondda and that at Trebanos, in the Swansea Valley. They were built at an original cost of £2,800, of which £1,200 still remains as a debt. All are deserving of every help that can be given them. Copies of the appeal may be obtained from the Rev. D. John Williams, 3, Bryntegterrace, Merthyr Tydvil.

Reference has been made in a former letter to the chapel at Lampeter, and the probability of its early collapse. It has now been condemned as dangerous, and the congregation now meet for public worship in the schoolroom recently built. Committees have met to consider the situation, and have come to the conclusion to rebuild as soon as practicable—three or four promising very handsome subscriptions. The chapel, which is situated almost under the shadow of St. David's College, was only erected in 1875-6, and despite the immense influence of the official religion, the church has proved a grand success. The minister is popular, and the congregation is large.

The congregation assembling at Twyn-yr-odyn Chapel, Merthyr Tydvil, has also, after much anxious thought, resolved to build a new chapel. The old one has fallen to a sad state of disrepair, and is now most inconveniently situated. A new site has been purchased in a central position, and plans have been prepared which provide for one building with a schoolroom underneath, at an estimated cost of £1,600. It is intended to commence building early in the spring, and it is hoped that, with the help of a sympathetic public, the chapel may be opened in due course free of debt. Members and friends, to the number of sixty, have already promised between them the sum of £557. The story of this church is a long and interesting one. It is traced back to the year 1620. It became tainted with the so-called Arminian heresy before 1724, and for many years it maintained two pastors—one a Calvinist and the other an Arminian. Its home in 1620 was at Blaencanaid, from 1660 at Cwm-y-glo. From here there went forth branches, in 1747 to Cefncoed; in 1749 to Ynysgau; and in 1751 to Aberdare. This year is the third jubilee of the last, and we hope to have a due celebration of the event before the year expires. Ynysgau was the direct Mother Church of Twyn-yr-odyn. In 1811 one Thomas B. Evans became minister there. He came of a family most of whom were reckoned as Unitarians. Previous to his ordination it is not known that his ministrations were otherwise than acceptable to the bulk of the congregation. This was the time when Merthyr underwent great developments. The new collieries and ironworks attracted hundreds from the country to the town, adding largely to its population. Zoar, a congregational chapel not far off, was licensed for preaching in 1804, and about this time the church grew rapidly, to the great detriment, it was supposed, of the cause at Ynysgau. The minister's preaching after this became more pronouncedly Calvinistic, and the older members were made uncomfortable. The relation between them and their pastor became more and more strained. Attempts were made to get rid of the minister. The case became a subject of litigation, and the minister, with the help of a majority composed almost entirely of these newcomers, won the suit. This was in 1814, when the old members—the trustees and deacons and the principal seat-holders who had worshipped there from childhood, the children and the descendants of those who had founded and supported the cause from 1749—were turned adrift to worship where they could, in upper rooms and other inconvenient places, with no proper religious home, until they went into their new chapel at Twyn-yr-odyn in 1822.

Our church at Wick is left again without a pastor. The Rev. David Evans, after a short but very successful ministry, has left for Cwmbach, where he has received a hearty welcome It is to be hoped, under the circumstances, that Wick is not going to be forgotten. It is somewhat inconveniently situated for supplies, perhaps; but it is to be hoped that one or other of our societies will keep an eye upon it. Highland-place, Aberdare, has also lost its minister, the Rev. E. Robinson Hughes having left for Devonport. There is a great dearth of suitable candidates for Welsh pulpits just now. It is said there are no fewer than twelve Welsh students at our colleges at present; but, unfortunately, while the grass is growing the horse is in danger of starving. How is it to be explained that there is so little missionary enterprise among our English students? It is no uncommon thing for a Welshman to pick up English and to offer his services to an English congregation; but who ever heard of an Englishman learning Welsh, and taking a Welsh pulpit? Why not? Let echo answer. Surely it cannot be altogether a question of money.

The following jottings from the Welsh field may interest some readers of The Inquirer:—Mr. Beriah Gwynfe Evans's book on "The Welsh Reformers," of which 20,000 copies have been sold, has been the occasion of a long and bitter controversy between the C. Methodists and the Congregationalists, and the subject of several pamphlets. The Drysorfa, a C. M. magazine, in four consecutive numbers at the end of last year published a very fair and interesting biography of Dr. Richard Price, the Welsh Unitarian who had a controversy with Dr. Priestley. The same magazine has also a favourable notice of Dr. Hastings's Biblical Dictionary, and following on the same page some severe strictures on a little book on the Old Testament Scriptures, by Dr. Witton Davies who teaches principles not materially different. There seems to be an inconsistency in this, but if the doctrine of esoteric and exoteric truth has been introduced into Wales, then Dr. Davies's mistake was to publish his book in Welsh, the language of the people.

But truth must ultimately prevail even in Wales. Offa's dyke cannot effectually prevail much longer against the working of Forster's Education Act. Henry Jones comes down from Glasgow to meet his fellow-countrymen at Carnarvon. He lectures in English, and tells them that the ultimate seat of authority in religion is not in any book, however sacred, but in human nature. This to a Welshman is no doubt a great heresy, but in a few days thousands of Welshmen read it in their vernacular. Dr. Fairbairn, reputedly orthodox, comes down to Aberdare and preaches an "eye-opening" sermon in the hearing of half the ministers of the district, and oh the fluttering amid the dovecotes! He says "Matthew did not write Matthew," but the prevailing sentiment is that the sermon was an "epoch" one in that hotbed of orthodoxy where it was delivered.

R. Jenkin Jones.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Bootle.—On Sunday week the Rev. J. Morley Mills gave the fourth part of his lantern lecture on "The Story of Religion in England," eloquently describing the progress of the Reformation in England and Scotland, and in conclusion drawing a lesson from the history. Religion, he said, was a spirit which had again and again been apprehended, but which always demanded of those who apprehended it that they should ever be leaving the things that were behind, and pressing on to that which was always ahead—the perfection of God. Their church was the most Protestant of all the Protestant churches. It had entered into the largest liberty of them all. But surely it had protested only that it might walk by the spirit which quickeneth instead of holding by the latter that killeth. Surely it had entered into the larger liberty that it might be free to live more largely, more perfectly, more purposefully, the life that was in Christ Jesus—the life of love to God and the life of love to men. He entreated all to open their minds to its inspiring message, to its heaven-born aspirations. Might they all enter into the true life which was alone worth living, the life

Of faith in God, and faith in man,
And faith in truth and beauty;
In freedom's might and reason's right,
And all controlling duty.

On the previous Tuesday a lantern lecture, by Mr. J. Kennedy, entitled "Mid Irish Hills and Valleys," had been given to the Literary Society, and on Thursday the Church-hall had been crowded at the annual Sunday-school concert, which included drill and short plays by the children.

Bury St. Edmunds.—On Sunday, Feb. 24, Mr. J. J. Lay, of Norwich, visited the Sunday-school and conducted evening service in the chapel.

Chatham.—At the annual meeting of the Unitarian Christian Church on Wednesday week, the chair was taken by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, who, in his address, referred to the meaning of "Unitarian" as applied to a church, and dealt fully with the courage and heresy of Canon Cheyne, as shown in the "Encyclopædia Biblica." For himself he could not accept the position of a Broad Churchman, and would choose rather the humblest pulpit of a Unitarian Church, where he was free from the fetters of Creed. Speaking later to a resolution of confidence in reasonable religion, the Rev. G. S. Hitchcock strongly deprecated the distinction between minister and layman. All, he said, were ministers of the Eternal Spirit. What was the work to which they had set their hands? He summed up the highest aim and aspiration of his own soul—and he believed it was the same as that of the congregation—that everything in this God's universe has a spiritual meaning, that if it was characteristic medievalism to separate heaven and hell, to separate the saved and the lost, to separate the holy and the profane, the spiritual monism which was their definition of Unitarianism, of modern thought, would see in everything—every particle of dust beneath their feet, as in every noble thought that kindled their souls—the expression of the One Eternal Wisdom who fashioned forth the world. Reports were then read, showing activity and progress in the churchwork, which included classes in French and Latin, and also in philosophy, conducted by the minister. There was an increase in the Sunday-school, which now had 117 names on the roll.

Dover.—On Feb. 19 a congregational tea was followed by the annual meeting of the congregation. Reports of various connected societies were read, and the balance-sheet was presented by the treasurer. The loss of several influential members by death and removal from the town was recorded with regret. The number of members has happily been maintained by the advent of new comers. The Sunday-school and Band of Hope have increased, and it is hoped that next year may witness a further improvement.

Dukinfield.—The result of the School Board election last Saturday was very satisfactory for the Nonconformists. Of the nine members elected six are Nonconformists, two Churchmen, and one Roman Catholic. Two Church candidates were defeated. Mr. J. D. Hibbert heads the poll; the Rev. H. S. Tayler, Vice-Chairman of the last Board, stands second. The first Church candidate elected was sixth, and the other at the bottom of the poll.

Exeter.—A Sunday-school has been recently opened in connection with George's Chapel, and is making gratifying progress. On Saturday the children were entertained at tea by Miss Brown, who for many years has taken a warm interest in the work of the church. Lady Bowring was present and addressed a few kindly words to the scholars. Musical selections and games followed, and a lantern entertainment, illustrating fairy tales was given by Mr. Goodland, of Taunton. The Rev. J. M. Connell, who has lately been appointed to share the ministerial work with the Rev. T. W. Chignell, for nearly forty years minister of the chapel, proposed a vote of thanks to Miss Brown and Mr. Goodland, which was heartily accorded.

Leeds: Hunslet.—The bazaar on Feb. 14 and 16 was a great success. It was opened on the first day by Mrs. F. J. Kitson, and on the second by Miss Lupton. There were very good attendances each day, and the gross receipts are now put down as £115 10s., the largest that has ever been taken. Warmest thanks are tendered to all friends for their kindly help.

London: Kilburn.—The annual business meeting of the Quex-road congregation was held on Tuesday evening, Feb. 26. The chair was taken by Alderman Pritchard. The report, copies of which had been previously posted to all the members of the congregation, was taken as read. It shows an increased average attendance at the services, a gain in the number of members, and although there is a small debit balance owing to the treasurer, arising largely from the 10 per cent. reduction in the grants from outside sources, the finances are in a healthy condition. This congregation supplied a stall at the London Unitarian Bazaar which realised a little over £138. During the autumn Mr. Stronge delivered a course of Sunday evening lectures on "The New Unitarianism," which attracted a number of strangers and aroused a considerable local interest, as was evidenced by the good demand for Unitarian literature. The Congregational Society has been very successful, and has done much to promote the social life of the congregation. A pleasing incident was the presentation of a high grade "Raleigh" bicycle to Mrs. Stronge as a Christmas gift.

London: Little Portland-street.—A public lecture, entitled "Building a New Social Order," was given at the Portland Institute on Feb. 22 by the Rev. J. Bruce Wallace, M.A., of the Brotherhood Church, Southgate-road. After referring to the evils of the present social system, the lecturer said that many who admitted the need for reform were content to await its coming in the future. But the evolution of a new social order should be conscious and voluntary, and therefore more rapid than cosmic evolution. On the strength of character and purpose of its pioneers would its progress depend. The "wage slavery" of the present time was rousing earnest men and women to strive for a realisation of the brotherhood of man, that all might "sit at the Father's table." What was wanted was a reorganisation of industry on fraternal lines, and this a minority could accomplish. The lecturer then went on to show that if one-tenth of the workers could be absorbed into an organisation to produce for their own consumption, and to use a system of barter notes which would represent the actual value of the labour expended, the power of the landlord and capitalist would be weakened, and a new social order would arise and gradually displace the old evil one. An interesting discussion on barter notes and their uses followed the lecture.

London: Peckham.—A concert was given in the Avondale-road Church Schoolroom on Tuesday last, under the direction of Mr. G. V. Carter, in aid of the Church funds. The entertainment was an admirable one, the attendance was excellent, and the result will be an appreciable addition to the fund for discharging debt to treasurer.

London Sunday School Society.—The annual meeting was held at Essex Hall on Saturday last. There were about 100 present, the majority of whom arrived in time to be received by the president and to enjoy a pleasant chat during the hour from 6 to 7 P.M., while tea and coffee were served. The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, the president, took the chair at 7 P.M., and after an opening hymn the various reports and financial statements were read. The motion as to the adoption of reports, &c., moved from the chair, was seconded by Mr. F. Talbot, and carried unanimously. The chairman then proposed that Mr. Howard Young, LL.B., should be president for the ensuing year. This was seconded by Mr. Harold Wade, and carried nem. con. Mr. Young, who was present, responded. Mr. H. Titford moved, and Mr. Thomson seconded the election of the officers and six members of the Committee as prescribed by the rules. This was also agreed to, and the chairman drew attention to the fact that Mr. Harold Wade, who had been obliged to resign the hon. secretaryship, which he had shared with Mr. A. Barnes for so many years, would still be available on the Committee as one of the six members elected at that meeting. An enjoyable programme of music, arranged by Miss Violet Preston, then followed, in which Misses Bailey, Hall, and Preston, and Mr. Bartram took part. A vote of thanks and the singing of a verse of "Auld Lang Syne" brought a pleasant evening to a close about nine o'clock.

Manchester.—By the kindness of Mr. J. Pitt-Hardacre, proprietor of the Comedy Theatre, the group of allied Cinderella Clubs in South Manchester was admitted free to the pantomime and afterwards regaled with buns and oranges last week. The three clubs are connected with the Clarion Cycling Club, the Labour Church, the Upper Brook-street Free Church, and together they have a membership of about 500, all of them selected from the most destitute children in the district. The clubs meet weekly, and the children are provided with a substantial meal, followed by simple instruction and entertainment.

Mossley.—A Sale of Work to raise funds for the church was held last Saturday in the Christian Sunday-school, Stamford-road, and was opened by the Mayor of Bury, Councillor Thomas Holt. Ald. John Lawton, J.P., presided, and there was a large attendance. The Rev. T. R. Elliott having conducted the devotional exercises, announced that the Mayor of Bury was an old Sunday-school worker, and last year he had received a medal for forty-four years' service. He was also pleased to say that three superintendents of the Mossley school had also received medals for forty-three years' service, and he had asked them all to bring their medals to that gathering. The Mayor of Bury, in declaring the sale open, said he remembered being told over forty years ago how flourishing the school at Mossley was, and he remembered Mr. Robinson, who took such a deep interest in the school and church. In 1873 he attended their annual Good Friday gathering, which was held at Mossley, and their own minister from Bury, the late Rev. John Wright, was the special preacher on that occasion. He expressed his pleasure in seeing the Mayor of Mossley with them. This showed to all of them the broad spirit of freedom which was growing throughout the country. This change he attributed to education. People now will read and think for themselves, and are thus in a position to decide for themselves what place they will attend. He then proceeded to urge the young people to attend the continuation classes and the technical classes. He was sorry to hear that trade in Mossley had not been so good of late, and therefore the friends connected with that place were appealing for assistance. In conclusion, the Mayor declared the sale of work open, with best wishes for its success. Votes of thanks to the Mayor and the Chairman were then passed. In the evening some excellent entertainments were given. The sale was well attended, and the receipts amounted to £86.

N. and E. Lancashire Unitarian S. S. Union.—The first quarterly conference was held at Rawtenstall on Saturday, Feb. 23. Representatives from Burnley, Burnley-lane Mission, Newchurch, and Todmorden were present. After tea the President, the Rev. A. W. Fox, of Todmorden, took the chair, and Mr. Thomas Graham, of Todmorden, read a thoughtful paper on "How we can strengthen our Churches and Sunday Schools." He contended that numbers as well as fitness should be aimed at, and that elder scholars should be induced to join the church. The Young People's Religious Union, found so beneficial in America, was mentioned with approval, and valuable suggestions were added as to the best way of increasing congregations. An interesting discussion followed, in which the President, Messrs. Peter Bibby, P. Hargreaves, W. Wadsworth, Emms, and the Rev. J. Shaw took part. A vote of thanks to their Rawtenshall friends for their kindly welcome, Hymn and benediction brought a helpful meeting to a close.

Nottingham: High Pavement.—Last Sunday evening the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas gave the first of a course of five lectures on "Social Aspects of Christianity," the subject being "Individualism and Socialism." The lecture was fully reported in the Nottingham Daily Express of Monday. It quoted with approval the Master of Balliol's contention that a healthy growing social life needs both Individualism and Socialism, and concluded with an earnest plea for the formation of an enlightened public opinion. The second lecture (to-morrow) is on "The Drink Problem."

Rotherham.—On Wednesday, Feb. 20, at a meeting of the Church of Our Father Literary Society, a lecture was given by the Rev. J. E. Manning, M.A., of Sheffield, on "Shelley." Having sketched the poet's life, and noticed the diversity of the critics' judgment, Mr. Manning said it was not easy to form a just estimate, because Shelley was an embodiment of such opposite characteristics. He was like Ariel or Puck—so imaginative, his words so ethereal, his thoughts so transcendent. He caught the spirit of the French Revolution, and was seized by a passion for liberty, political and religious. Any restrictions he denounced as tyranny. His whole life was a series of mistakes. His matrimonial blunders and others were not so much due to moral obliquity as to a fatal defect in his nature. He could not understand a fact. Shelley was really not an Atheist; he was a Pantheist. Speaking of his writings, the lecturer remarked that his lyrics were unsurpassed, and beautiful passages from these and other poems were read. The Rev. W. Stephens presided, and the meeting closed with a cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Manning.

Ulster Unitarian Christian Association.—The following resolution, adopted by this Association, was forwarded to the King through his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant:—"That we place on record our heartfelt sorrow at the great loss which the nation has sustained in the death of our beloved Queen, whose personal influence for good has been world-wide; and we desire to express our deep sympathy with His Majesty King Edward VII. and the rest of the Royal Family in their sad bereavement. We take this opportunity of assuring His Majesty of our strong loyalty and of our firm attachment to his Throne and person, and earnestly pray that Almighty God may grant him and Queen Alexandra a long, happy, and prosperous reign." The receipt of this resolution has been courteously acknowledged by the Lord Lieutenant, with an intimation that it would be forwarded to the Home Secretary for submission to the King.

Whitchurch.—On Feb. 20 the annual congregational meeting of the Church of the Saviour was held in the schoolroom, the chair being occupied by the Rev. W. F. Turland. The report and balance-sheet were read and adopted. Votes of thanks were heartily accorded Miss Dodd, Miss Lewis, and the Rev. W. F. Turland for their valuable services, and to others who had held office during the past year. Business being over, the rest of the evening was pleasantly taken up by games and social intercourse.

York.—Last Sunday Mr. John Wilhelm Rowntree conducted the service at St. Saviourgate. Mr. Rowntree is well known as the editor of Present Day Papers, and, like his father (the writer on Temperance), is a keenly practical worker, being principally responsible for an adult school and working men's club. He generously made a spontaneous offer to take a service at St. Saviourgate. His subject was "Evolution and Christianity," and his treatment of it was partly autobiographical. He explained the position he had reached after a period of doubt and inquiry. While recognising the merits of other religions, he found in Christianity that which met his deepest needs, understanding by Christianity, not the elaborate creeds of tradition, but a simple and living realisation of the Divine Love as manifested in Jesus. One of the "readings" was from Dr. Martineau, and instead of spoken prayer, there was a period of silence, prefaced by a few words explaining the speaker's personal feeling regarding prayer. There was a good attendance. A short time ago the colleague of Mr. Rowntree in editorship and practical work, Mr. H. B. Binns, conducted the morning service at St. Saviourgate.

Yorkshire Unitarian Sunday School Union.—On Saturday last, at the thirty-third Teachers' Conference, under the auspices of this Union, held at Pudsey, a paper was read by the President of the Union, Mr. Frederick Clayton, of Leeds, on "The True Aim and Object of the Sunday School." There was a very good attendance of teachers and Sunday-school workers. The Rev. C. Hargrove presided. Mr. Clayton, after dealing with the importance of being engaged in endeavouring to mould the lives of young children, offered words of encouragement to those who hesitated in undertaking the duty, urging perseverance, punctuality, and due preparation. He also strongly advocated regular and reverent Biblical instruction, especially explaining our simple Unitarian faith, in the lowest and highest classes, to the scholars, and carrying out the aim and object of Sunday schools by making life purer and sweeter, and by causing the scholars to grow up more Christ-like, and worthy sons and daughters of God. The Revs. J. Fox, J. M. Whiteman, C. H. Cook, the Chairman, and others took part in the discussion which followed. At the close Mr. Clayton was heartily thanked for his valuable paper.

The simultaneous mission of the Evangelical Free Churches has been not less successful in the great towns throughout the country than it was in London, and with very similar results. It appears to be generally admitted that the mass of the non-church-goers was not reached, and that the most valuable results will be found in the quickened life of the churches themselves, the enthusiasm and devotion thrown into the work having been of the highest order. The Village Mission is being held from March 2 to 6. The Christian World quotes the opinion of the Rev. Thomas Law, organising secretary of the E.F.C. Council, that the next mission must be in the theatres and public halls, and in tents pitched on all available open spaces.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, March 3.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Frederic Allen. 11 A.M., Boys' Own Brigade Service, "The Days of thy Youth"; 7 P.M., "Idols, Old and New." Monday 8.15 P.M., Evening Concert.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. Page Hopps.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. Marchant.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. Woods Perris.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Rev. Edgar Daplyn, 11.15 A.M., "The Foundation of Faith," 12.30, Communion Service, and 7 P.M., "The Temptations of Jesus." Children's Class, 12.30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Mr. T. Elliot.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Dawes Hicks, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Alexander Farquharson. Morning, "The Eternal Shadow." Evening, "The Whole Duty of Man."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. Carter.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. Farrington. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., Percy W. Ames, F.R.S.L., and 7 P.M., Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, "Our Duty to South Africa."

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M. Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., Rev. J. Toye, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. J. C. Pain.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M., Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Copeland Bowie.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. F. H. Vaughan, B.A.

Bedford, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. Rowland Hill.

Blackpool, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. David Davis.

Blackpool, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. Coe.

Bradford, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A.

Brighton, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. Livens.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M., and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Rev. F. H. Jones.

Deal and Walmer, Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. Shakspeare.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Burrows.

Eastbourne, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. G. St. Clair.

Guildford, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. Marten.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. John McDowell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Harwood, B.A.

Liverpool, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B A.

Liverpool, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. Klein.

Manchester, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. Shanks.

Newport, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Clement E. Pike.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E Carpenter, M.A.

Portsmouth, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-s treet, 6.45 P.M., Mr. Thomas Bond.

Portsmouth, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. Cosens Prior.

Rochdale, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M. and 6 P.M., Rev. T. P. Spedding.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Supply.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. Agar.

Sevenoaks, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. Harold Rylett. Stables in the grounds.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk

SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. HAMILTON VANCE, B.D.
WARRENPOINT, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.
SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION RELIGIOUS CONFERENCE at COLLEGE CHAPEL, STEPNEY-GREEN, E., SUNDAY, March 3rd, at Five o'clock. Subject, "The Brotherhood of Nations." Opened by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A. 7 p.m.—Address by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED on "Our Duty to South Africa."

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—Feb. 24th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The 'Decalogue'—Is it the Foundation of Morality? III. Taking the name of the Lord in vain."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—March 3, at 11.15 A.M., HERBERT BURROWS, "The Nineteenth Century"—"Broad Churchism to Freethought."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

HARMONIUM.—Very powerful Instrument in oak case (by Alexandre); 22 stops, 2 manuals, 2 knee swells. Suitable for Church or School use. Having pedal organ reason for disposal. Inspection invited.—Apply, ROBT. HALL, Unitarian Church, Lancaster.

JEUNE HOLLANDAISE, Institutrice diplômée et brevetée français (enseignement primaire et secondaire), ayant résidé en Suisse, cherche place dans un pensionnat ou dans une famille distinguée. Premières références.—Lettres sous chiffres A. Z., Office INQUIRER.

MANSFORD-STREET CHURCH and MISSION.

The ANNUAL MEETING of Subscribers and Friends will be held at the ROSSLYN-HILL SCHOOLROOM, HAMPSTEAD (entrance from Willoughby-road), on TUESDAY, March 5th, when the Chair will be taken at 8.15 by EDMUND B. SQUIRE, Esq.

The Meeting will be addressed by E. HOWARD, Esq., Rev. EDGAR DAPLYN, and others.

S. W. PRESTON,
J. CLASSON DRUMMOND, } Hon. Secs.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

DEATHS.

POTTER—On the 21st Feb., at Sidmouth, after a short illness, Ann Potter, in her 84th year.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor-road, S.W.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable Apartments, well situated midway between station and beach in sunny Felixstowe. Reasonable terms.—Apply Mrs. H. ROBINSON, Kimberley House, Ranelagh-road.

LAKE DISTRICT, furnished House; 3 entertaining, 6 bed (2 double bedded) rooms, bath, w.c.—Address, INQUIRER Office.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,
Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.
Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording
ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.
The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.
Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.
Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.
77 & 101,
SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.
Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.
Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.
Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.
LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.
Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.
FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

WANTED, by an elderly lady, a useful MAID. Unitarian, good reader and needlewoman, accustomed to illness, and an abstainer.—Apply, stating age, wages, and references to M. S., Peirce's Library, 50, High-street, Sydenham.

PUDSEY UNITARIAN CHURCH.

ADDITIONAL SCHOOL PREMISES, SCHOOL FURNISHINGS, AND NEW ORGAN URGENTLY NEEDED.

	£	s.	d.
Amount already acknowledged... ...	158	9	6
We wish to acknowledge with thanks the following further subscriptions :—
Sir James Kitson, M.P., Leeds	25	0	0
The Mayor of Pudsey (Alderman James Stillings, J.P.)	10	0	0
Henry Lupton, Esq., Leeds	10	0	0
Currer Briggs, Esq., Ambleside ...	5	0	0
Miss M. Verity, Pudsey	5	0	0
Mr. J. S. Jones, do.	5	0	0
Mrs. Ruth, London	3	3	0
Mr. and Mrs. Rushworth, Pudsey ...	3	3	0
Mrs. F. W. Kitson, Leeds	3	3	0
Mrs. Joseph Lupton, do.	3	0	0
His Honour Judge Greenhow, do. ...	2	2	0
Mr. and Mrs. W. Sutcliffe, Pudsey ...	2	2	0
Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Briggs, Leeds ...	2	0	0
Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Sheeton, do. ...	1	1	0
Mr. Simeon Hall, do.	1	1	0
Mr. John Sharp, Pudsey	1	1	0
Mr. Charles Stainer, Leeds	1	1	0
Mr. Joseph Briggs, Pudsey	1	1	0
Miss M. A. Binks, do.	0	12	0
Mr. B. Emsley, do.	0	10	6
Mr. Allan Nield, Leeds	0	10	6
Mr. Julius Hess, do.	0	10	6
Mr. James Boyle, do.	0	10	0
Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, do.	0	10	0
Mr. D. Mackintosh, do.	0	10	0
Master Lemuel Sutcliffe, Pudsey ...	0	10	6
Mr. H. E. O'Dwyer, Leeds	0	10	0
Mr. Gambles, Pudsey	0	5	0
Mr. James Binks, do.	0	5	0
Mr. Samuel Booth, do.	0	5	0
Mr. S. Boocock, do.	0	5	0
Mr. B. Ferro, Leeds	0	5	0
Mr. E. H. Boyle, do.	0	5	0
Miss Coulter, do....	0	5	0
Mr. A. J. Terry, do.	0	5	0

Subscriptions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Mr. JOSEPH TINDALL, Rose Mount, The Lanes, Pudsey.

WANTED a Lady as Companion to an elderly lady. Strong, and experienced in nursing, reading, and needlework.—BRATHAY, Thornton-road, Clapham Park, S.W.

WANTED, about April 16th, in neighbourhood of Newington Green, three good sized, and one small, unfurnished rooms, with attendance.—Apply E., 1, Compton-road, Highbury, N.

CAN any LADY recommend a trustworthy, respectable Nursery Sewing-maid? Two children, 6 and 9. Governess kept. Good sewer. To work with experienced lady's maid. One who has been where French is spoken preferred. Not under 19 years of age.—Apply in first instance by letter to Mrs. FRANK GALLSWORTHY, Araucaria, Harrogate.

ART and HANDICRAFT CLASSES Kirkby Lonsdale.—WANTED immediately YOUNG LADY to be trained as TEACHER. Instruction in drawing, painting, embossed leather work and wood carving in return for some assistance.—Apply Miss BARNARD.

HOUSE PARLOUR-MAID wanted,—North Finchley. Must be thoroughly trustworthy. Exceptionally comfortable situation. Two in family. No children.—Write full particulars, L. W., c/o Street's Agency, 30, Cornhill, E.C.

GAS STOVE, fittings complete, suitable small hall, £4.—KILBURN, 14, Abbott's Park-road, Leyton.

SWEET PEAS.—The best and newest varieties at lowest prices. Catalogue free. Choice mixed varieties 6d. per oz, 4 ozs. 1s. 6d.—F. ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston.

WALMSLEY SERMONS, June 30, 1901.—Preacher, Rev. L. P. JACKS, M.A., of Birmingham.

Schools, etc.

CHANNING HOUSE, HIGHGATE,
HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
AND BOARDING SCHOOL.

For the daughters of Unitarian Ministers and others.

London Matriculation, English, Latin, French, German, Mathematics, Science, Elocution, Greek, Drawing, Class Singing, Dressmaking, Cookery, Calisthenics, Playground, Swings, Cricket, Garden, Outside Sanatorium, Laundry at home. Outside Examiner.

Fees per Term :

Boarders, £10 13s. 6d. or with Music, £12 5s. Extras : Violin, Solo Singing, Painting, £2 2s. Shorthand, Dancing, 10s. 6d. Day scholars, 3 to 5 guineas, with Music extra. Kindergarten, 2 to 2½ guineas.

Manager—Miss MATILDA SHARPE.

The HALF TERM begins MONDAY, March 4.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,
Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. (Established 1893).

PUPILS prepared for the Universities ; resident gymnast and French mistress ; healthy conditions of life ; hockey and tennis.

Prospectus on application to Miss MACRAE MOIR, Lingholt, Hindhead.

Station, Haslemere.

THE
HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

(Founded by Miss J. F. GRUNER, May, 1897).

BOARDERS are received by the Misses GRUNER at Moorcroft, Hindhead, Haslemere, from whom prospectuses and further information may be obtained, the School being carried on at the HINDHEAD HALL as heretofore.

SUSTENTATION FUND

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

Secretaries of Congregations desiring Grants from this Fund for the year 1901-2 may obtain the needful Forms of Application by writing before March 31, 1901, to A. W. WORTHINGTON, The Hill, Stourbridge.

HARRY RAWSON,
A. W. WORTHINGTON, } Hon. Secs.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY

THE COMING DAY.

ENLARGED. PRICE THREEPENCE.

Contents for MARCH.

In Memory of the Queen.
National Righteousness or National Ruin.
Herbert Spencer's Reconciliation.
Science and Religion.
"A Fight to a Finish."
The German Emperor Squared.
English and Colonial Devils.
A Disloyal Plot that Failed.
Our Pillory.
Notes by the Way.
Two Memos.—"Poems from Tommy Atkins to the Plutocrat's Poet, Kipling ; and from Tommy Atkins' Brother Bill to a Jingo Editor."

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford :
WILLIAMS and NORGATE, and all Booksellers.

NOW READY FOR MARCH.

Price One Penny.

YOUNG DAYS.

Edited by J. J. WRIGHT, F.R.S.L.

CONTENTS :—Robbie's Victory ; Isn't this the Reason (Poetry) ; The Story of Alcestis ; Children of Ancient Greece (Picture) ; Joan's Strange Adventures in Gnome land and Sylph-land—Chap. III. ; King Edward VII. (Portrait) ; Queen Alexandra (Portrait) ; The Queen and her Dogs (Picture) ; Guild Work ; Our Temperance Picture Gallery—III. Nansen (Illus.) ; Viking's Deed : a Noble Dog ; Aunt Amy's Corner ; A Voice from the Ventilator ; But they don't increase the Fare ; Blow, Blow ! (Poetry) ; Puzzles ; Editor's Chat, &c.

Published by THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. Manchester Agents : H. RAWSON & Co., 16, New Brown-street. Liverpool Agents : THE LIVERPOOL BOOKSELLERS' Co., Ltd., 70, Lord-street.

Annual Subscription by Post, One Copy, 1s. 6d.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

Every Sunday School Teacher should possess a copy of

THE HELPER, 1901.

A Handbook for Sunday School Teachers & for Parents

Edited by W. G. TARRANT, B.A.
Price 2s. 6d. net. (Postage 4d.)

With Frontispiece—"Alfred the Great"; and many Illustrations of Beautiful Natural Objects—Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Insects, &c.

CONTENTS.

Introduction : Sunday School Teachers whom have Known. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
A Message for the New Year. J. PAGE HOPPS.
Alfred the Great. FRANCES E. COOKE.
From Josiah to Jesus. Sixteen Lessons. EDITOR.
Parental Help in Religious Training, with Suggested Talks. I. M. R.
Nature Lessons from Ruskin. Crystals, Moss, Grasses, Leaves, Flowers, &c. LUCKING TAVENER.
Jesus at Jacob's Well. FRANK WALTERS.
Bible Homes. Eight Sketches. J. RUDDLE.
Some New Testament Churches. A. HARVIE.
How Teachers and Scholars may know one another. ION PRITCHARD.
Nature Sketches. C. ROPER, B.A.
"My Pond." (Illustrated). Dragon-fly and Knat. T. ROBINSON.
How I Prepare (with outline lessons). Confidential Notes to the Editor by Teachers.
How to Teach. FELIX TAYLOR, B.A.
Sunday Schools at Home and Abroad. American, MARIAN PRITCHARD. Welsh, W. TUDOR JONES, Scottish, A. E. PARRY. Irish, R. LYTTLE. A French Sunday School Fete.
Summer Session (Oxford) Papers : What Sunday Schools may learn from Day Schools (from lecture by A. J. MOCKRIDGE). Child Study, EDITOR. Wanted, Men and Women, J. L. HAIGH. What the Average Teacher may do, J. J. WRIGHT.
The Boys' Own Brigade. J. C. BALLANTYNE.

London : THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, W.C. Manchester : H. RAWSON AND Co., 16, New Brown-street. Liverpool : THE BOOKSELLERS' Co., 70, Lord-street.

The Bible in the Nineteenth Century.

A COURSE OF LECTURES by
PROF. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
(of Manchester College, Oxford),
at BOLTON, LEEDS, and LIVERPOOL.

VI. The Bible and the Church.

BOLTON : Spinners' Hall, St. George's-road.
Tuesday, March 5th, at 7.30 P.M.
LEEDS : Philosophical Hall.
Wednesday, March 6th, at 8 0 P.M.
LIVERPOOL : Liverpool Institute, Mount-street.
Thursday, March 7th at 8.30 P.M.

Admission Free. A copy of the Syllabus will be sent on application to the Rev. C. J. STREET, Maythorn, Heaton, Bolton ; the Rev. C. HARGROVE, 10, De Grey-terrace, Leeds ; or C. W. JONES, Esq., 39, Drury Buildings, Liverpool.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Information concerning the History and Growth of the Bible.

Collected, condensed, and arranged
by BERTRAM TALBOT for
SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS & OTHERS.

This little book is the outcome of a free enquiry. It consists largely of verbatim quotations from many sources worked up into a connected whole, and for nearly every statement a reference is given to the page of the authority which supports the statement, or from which, if a quotation, it is derived.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Price Sixpence net, post free.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13th, at 8 P.M., when Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., will preside, supported by the Rev. FREDERIC ALLEN (the Minister), the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, C. F. PEARSON, Esq., S. S. TAYLER, Esq., and other ministers and laymen.

Tea (to which friends are cordially invited) will be provided at 7.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS
2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS
2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES
Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 6 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 2, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3063. NEW SERIES, No. 167.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 145
LITERATURE :—
Articles in the Reviews 146
Publications Received... 146
Ritschl's "Justification and Reconciliation" 147
Haeckel's Riddle of the Uuiverse 147
Ethical Essays... 148
The Jewish Problem in East London ... 149
CORRESPONDENCE :—
The Religion of the Incarnation 149
South-Eastern Province 150
Interest in Local Associations 150
Politics and Religion 150
Is Nature Cruel? 151
The High Peak Chapels 151
Smoking by Boys 151
A Living Church 153
New Century Meetings 156
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 151
LEADER :—
What is Christianity? 152
MEETINGS :—
Mansford-street Church and Mission ... 154
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
Ireland 156
POETRY :—
Evening 157
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 157
ADVERTISEMENTS 158

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE annual meeting of the Mansford-street Church and Mission, of which a report will be found in our present issue, calls attention to a religious work of the very highest kind, and makes an appeal for further help, both in personal service and in financial support, which we trust will not go unregarded. We have been told lately that "we lack religion," and is there anyone among us who will say that we are as religious as we ought to be? But for those who are honestly hungering for some fuller life and firmer confidence in the things of the Spirit, here is an open way, and the most direct, to that end. Go, and begin to do something in friendly service for those whose need is greatest. For women of leisure the Monday's visiting for the Provident Society offers an occupation full of interest, into the straight-forward and unassuming business of which may come endless opportunities for the most helpful ministrations of personal friendship; and for young men Mr. Classon Drummond's appeal points to a method of service no less fruitful of good. To all alike we commend the spirit of Mr. Howard's admirable address.

MANSFORD-STREET is, happily, only one among several of our missions, and on Wednesday evening next the annual meeting of the Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel is to be held. That is another centre of most active beneficent work, under the charge of the Rev. Frederic Allen, in one of the poorest quarters of South London, and, as in the East (and indeed the West also), there is here the same need of further help. On the evening of the annual meeting, friends are invited to tea at seven o'clock, and the chair is to be taken by Sir J. T. Brunner, Bart., M.P. The Mansford-street meeting at Hampstead was not so largely attended as had been hoped. May Stamford-street have an overflowing meeting!

THE overwhelming victory of the Progressive party at the London County Council election last week we take to be an event of the happiest augury for the future of this great community. It is at least a decisive answer to the attempt to introduce the dividing lines of party politics into the contest, and we are glad to think that many Conservatives and Unionists took a higher view of their duty, and voted for the men they judged to be the best fitted to care for the welfare of London. The Guardian, strongest of Church papers, and strongly Conservative in politics, in an article this week on the election, makes the following declaration :—

Without asserting that the Progressives had any monopoly of interest in social questions, it is difficult not to recognise that among the Progressive candidates there were more advocates of social reform than in the opposing ranks, and that the Progressive policy holds out the best hopes of improvement. The United Temperance Council issued an appeal (signed by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Rochester among others), which, though it avoided the appearance of partisanship, was in reality an earnest invitation to the electors to give a new lease of power to the existing majority for fear that their Temperance policy should be reversed. As regards such moral questions as the control of the music-halls and the state of the streets more is to be hoped from the Progressives than from their opponents. If a vote could be taken of the London clergy who have shown themselves most eager for the moral and material improvement of the condition of their parishes, we have little doubt that in most cases they would have declared themselves on the Progressive side, nor is it unfair to surmise that the influence of the publicans and the owners of insanitary house property has generally been given to the Moderate party.

It will be remembered how high a tribute on a recent occasion, quite apart from the conflict of this election, the King paid to the work of the County Council. But if Church and King approve, who are we that we should not be glad?

A VIGOROUS protest on behalf of freedom of teaching in the National Church of Denmark has recently been made at Copenhagen. The Rev. Anton M. Jensen, a young clergyman of Harboóre, having preached openly against the doctrine of eternal punishment, was reprimanded by his bishop, and when he refused submission and continued his heretical teaching, was deprived of his living. Much public discussion followed, and indignation was expressed, particularly at a declaration of the Court of Bishops to their clergy, that whereas it was permissible privately to cherish the hope of final salvation for all, this must not be publicly taught, since the doctrine of hell was part of the creed of the Evangelical Church. Four hundred of Mr. Jensen's congregation petitioned the Minister of State that their clergyman might be restored to them, but without avail. A little book by Mr. Jensen, "Christianity for Me," in a month ran through three editions, and other liberal clergy have supported him in his position; but hitherto, so far as the Church is concerned, the bishops have had their way.

THE members of the Free Church Union, formed at Copenhagen some time ago through the efforts of Mr. Theo. Berg, and which is now under the pastoral care of the Rev. Uffe Birkedal, determined on this to make a public protest. A great meeting was held on Feb. 6 in a public hall, at which 1,600 people were present. Eloquent addresses on free teaching in religion and the true spirit of Christianity were given by Mr. Birkedal and Mr. Jensen, and discussion followed which lasted "far into the night." It seems to have been calmly conducted, but the heretics were assured that they were not Christians. Ultimately the following resolution was passed by an overwhelming majority :—

Whereas this meeting holds that the Christian Church, as the Church of the People, must be broad enough to include all people, whose religious aim it is to live in the spirit of Christ and in loyalty to his teaching, and that such loyalty can be perfectly truthful only when every member of the People's Church is free to interpret for himself both the spirit and teaching of Christ;

Whereas, further, this meeting holds that every variety of such interpretation must have the right to be heard in the religious teaching of the People's Churches, so long as confidence between the clergyman and his people is maintained,—

The meeting declares its wish that the present terms of subscription for the clergy (priest's vow) in the People's Churches may be changed so as to require the clergy simply to teach Christianity according to their own best judgment.

"A SAVIOUR OF MEN" is the title of the Rev. C. Hargrove's sermon in this month's Mill Hill Pulpit, bearing as motto on the title-page the following concluding sentences of "Ecce Homo":—

The enthusiasm of humanity was shown to men in its most consummate form in Jesus Christ. From him it flows as from a fountain. How it was kindled in him who knows? "The abysmal depth of personality" hid this secret. But since he showed it to men it has been found possible for them to imitate it, and every new imitation, by bringing the marvel visibly before us, revives the power of the original.

Asking how it is that Jesus has exercised such transcendant influence over men, Mr. Hargrove finds that the popular answer, "He must have been God," immeasurably increases the difficulty, going so far beyond the facts to be accounted for, and showing such disappointing results, supposing there to have been such an intervention of the Almighty as the doctrine supposes. The real answer he finds in the power Jesus exercised, and continues to exercise, of saving men from sin. He was the saviour of his people, of all who came into contact with him, understanding the truth he taught and feeling the influence of his personality. "He spake as one having authority. He spake as never man spake." "If," says Mr. Hargrove, "such things were not said of him while he lived, they were literally true after he died, and they have been true ever since."

They are true to-day; his words have still "authority." They are as no other man's; they bear life and power to the listener. They are pregnant of sympathy, of encouragement, of help in the weary struggle against infirmity and passion. They are seeds which never lose their vitality, not sparks which shine and die as do our words.

It is not fancy or doctrine of mine this. I speak of facts of the spiritual life, real as any facts of history and witnessed to in every age by tens of thousands who have made experience of them. About the full contents of the Gospel of Christ, men have always differed, and I suppose always will differ; but that it is in its simplicity and essentials what Paul said of it 1,800 years ago, "the power of God to save men"—that is what all agree about. From St. Francis, the begger preacher of Assisi, to Francis Crossley, Gas Engineer, of Manchester—from St. Augustine to General Booth—from Dr. Pusey to Dr. Channing—from Mr. Balfour to Count Tolstoy, there is unanimous testimony to Jesus of Nazareth, as Saviour of men—Saviour not of Catholics or Protestants, or Anglicans or Evangelicals, but of all who take him for Lord and Master, believe as he taught, and make his example the ideal of life.

The March number of the Yr Ymofynydd opens with an article on Colenso, as one of the heroes of last century. The Rev. R. J. Jones, M.A., follows with the first part of an article "On the Threshold," which from the names and dates apparent to English eyes, seems to be biographical or historical in character. Mr. Gwilym Evans, of Manchester College, Oxford, continues his study of Francis of Assisi, and the Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans writes on "The Century's Gains." These all in Welsh. Principal Evans continues some English notes on Carmarthen College, telling of Thomas Lloyd, who died in 1789.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

This month's Contemporary contains the lecture on "The Making and Reading of Newspapers" recently given at University College by the Right Hon. L. Courtney, as President of the Social and Political Education League. As the lecture was delivered entirely without notes, with only occasional promptings from a willing help-meet on the platform, there is a special interest in seeing how very closely it followed the printed copy—if indeed it was not given memoriter. It is as pleasant and instructive to read as it was to hear.

Mr. W. T. Stead contributes an interesting study of "The Crown and the Constitution," and Mr. Yoxall, M.P., writes with knowledge of the shameful dearth of training-colleges for teachers in this country, contrasting England with France in this matter, very much to the disadvantage of the former. The Rev. J. J. Lias, considering the "Outlook for the Church of England," points to a growing indifference on the part of the laity and the extreme difficulty of raising funds for Church purposes, so different from the way in which the Wesleyans have nearly raised their Million Guinea Fund, and attributes it to the fact that they are so largely left out in the cold by the clergy. In proper discipline and a real share in Church affairs given to the people, he sees hope for the future, and pleads also for a more reasonable and friendly attitude towards Nonconformists. Professor Ramsay contributes a long article on "The Statesmanship of Paul," and Mr. John Macdonnell a short but pointed article on "Looting in China," a matter as to which the barbarians of Europe have little cause for pride.

In the Nineteenth Century and After, the Bishop of Hereford writes, as one who does not "make a fetich of Establishment" on "Church Reform; Why not begin with the Parish?" The reason for beginning there is that in the parish the shoe first pinches, where the laity are left without any adequate share of influence in the affairs of the Church and in regard to the worship provided for their benefit—a position which an educated laity cannot long continue to occupy if they are to retain respect for the Church and an active interest in its welfare. The Bishop formulates an interesting scheme for curtailing the despotic power of the parish priest. In the same review, Dr. Grieg writes a modest but warmly appreciative notice of Verdi, as "side by side with Wagner," "on the whole, the greatest dramatist of the century." Of "Aida," so remarkable for the growth it showed in Verdi's inner life, he says that "it stands upon the shoulders of the art of all time"; and "Otello" marked a yet further step of progress.

In the Monthly Review, Mr. J. A. Fuller-Maitland writes a more systematic account of Verdi's works. The chief illustrated article is again archæological, on "The Palace of Minos," and there is a poem by Mr. George Meredith, "A Reading of Life," which concludes:—

A sun goes down in wasted fire, a sun
Resplendent springs, to faith refreshed compels.

Mr. R. A. Streatfeild, writing on "Two Poets of the New Century," dismisses the elder generation as having done their best work, and in Mr. Stephen Phillips and Mr. Laurence Binyon sees two young writers capable of producing great poetry. The chief editorial article is on "Loyalty." Of Queen Victoria it is said in this article that she has achieved "the great work of founding a tradition of the English Crown more loyal even than the tradition of the English people."

To do this was to be Queen indeed, and the greatest of conquerors, for vast as was the material increase of her Empire, she extended in a still more wonderful manner the dominion of the ideas and emotions which gathered about her. The interaction of her own feeling, and that of her people, concerning the duty and destiny of the English race, kindled into flame the passion which will henceforth answer to the name of loyalty. It is new rather in degree than in kind, but it is none the less a noble and permanent part of national life. It has nothing to do with caste or the worship of rank, little with self-interest; reverence is a part of it; but beyond this it is sympathy in a great cause, a right pride, a splendid hope.

No one, it is added, had a clearer and loftier view of the position of England in the world than the Queen, and we, perhaps, do not yet know how much of our own conception of duty towards our fellow-subjects, white, black and yellow, we owe to her.

There are, no doubt, among us too many who admire and covet wealth and dominion for their own sake, but the conscience of the nation knows well that power of any kind, if not used for great and unselfish ends and in accordance with the Divine Will, is both the disgrace and the destruction of those who wield it. If we have become, as we have, a great corporation or company, with almost unlimited capital, vast estates, and armies of servants, all over the world, it is not that the shareholders may nourish a vain and insolent self-satisfaction, nor even that they may devote their whole energy to the making of lawful gain: it is that they may help more than others to make straight the paths of mankind and in so doing forget the meaner part of themselves. If this great company has received, as we believe it has, a privileged charter from the only Power in whom it lies to make such grants, it is no fee simple, but a gift in trust, with penalties for mal-administration, the least of which is forfeiture.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

To Publishers.—[All Books, &c., sent to The Inquirer will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review].

What is Christianity. By Adolf Harnack. 10s. 6d. (Williams and Norgate.)

L. Annaeus Seneca: I. Tranquillity of Mind, II. Providence. Translated by W. B. Langsdorf, Ph.D., Litt.D. 3s. 6d. (Putnam.)

Is Christ Infallible and the Bible True? By the Rev. Hugh McIntosh, M.A. 9s. (T. and T. Clark.)

Travel and Life in Palestine. Lectures I. and II. By J. T. Sunderland, M.A. 3d. each. (Sunday School Association.)

Scribner's, Strand, Sunday Strand, Wide World, Captain, Contemporary, Expositor.

Our readers are already aware that the Rev. J. T. Sunderland, M.A., is settled as minister of the Unitarian Church in Toronto. His many correspondents in this country, and in India, will be glad to note that his address now is 650, Ontario-street, Toronto, Canada.

LITERATURE.

RITSCHL'S "JUSTIFICATION AND RECONCILIATION."*

There are abundant signs that interest in Ritschlian literature is growing in this country. It is only the other day that Mr. Garvie gave us his admirable exposition of the Ritschlian theology, a great advance in sympathetic appreciation on Dr. Orr's little book which was far too hostile to serve as a useful introduction to the subject. And now Messrs. Clark present English readers with a work which will enable them for the first time to study the main lines of this great theologian's thought in his own words. This is a translation of the third volume of his greatest book, "Die Christliche Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung," "The Christian Doctrine of Justification and Reconciliation." The first and second volumes treated of the history and the Biblical material of the doctrine, the present volume introduces us to the positive features of Ritschl's own interpretation of it. The translation has been executed by several hands, and with such admirable uniformity of style that any impression of composite workmanship escapes the most attentive reader.

There is much in Ritschl's attitude of mind that should commend him to Englishmen with their strong sense for the practical in religion. Ritschl is nothing if not ethical, and his subordination of the speculative to the practical interest in religion ought to offer many points of attraction to people of whom it has been said that they seldom move easily in the region of "mere ideas." To him ideas about God are no revelations of God. Nothing justifies itself as a revelation until its effects are seen to be revealing. Conceptions of God as infinite Being, or as quiescent Character, do not lead us, he says, to a God at all. God is not revealed to us because we can hold a consistent image of Him in thought and passively regard it as any other object of knowledge. He is revealed to us only when the whole activity of our spirit, in which feeling, knowing and willing combine, is conditioned by the revelation. It is as ruling our whole practical behaviour that we know Him. Of the nature of God beheld as something detached from us as active beings we know nothing. It is thus incorrect to say that we must first know the nature of God and Christ before we can ascertain their worth for us. The truth rather is that we know the nature of God and Christ only in their worth for us. "The nature of God and the Divine we can only know in its essence by determining its value for our salvation."

Now, while we are parts of the world of nature, we are also spiritual personalities and, as spirits, are moved by the impulse to dominate nature and preserve our independence over against the world. We realise our personality in proportion as we achieve lordship over the world. The attainment of this "self-feeling that the worth of his spiritual personality transcends that of the whole system of nature" is man's redemption. Redemption, therefore, cannot be understood as anything that takes place outside our spirits, or as anything that fails to impress their whole practical activity. No great external transaction, without relation to anything we ourselves experience, can redeem us; as little can any enlightened instruction which exercises the intellect but leaves the will unmoved. Accordingly, nothing can be said to be a revelation to us which does not realise itself in our redemption. God is not revealed to us except in the experience of being redeemed by Him. Possessing a trust in Him as our highest good, which is an active trust embracing the whole personality, we attain lordship over the world.

The Christian religion provides us with the means of rising into this active trust in God. For the heart of the Christian religion is the Forgiveness of Sins. It is only when through Christ we feel at once the separation from God which our sin creates, and the removal of that separation by faith in His loving will towards us, that we become aware of the transcendent worth of our spiritual personality and are enabled to maintain it in independence of the world. We discover the worth of our personality in finding ourselves the objects of Redeeming Love; no other experience can convince us of our superiority to the world, and make us in our whole practical activity masters of it. But this experience is historically conditioned. It arises within a community of believers in an historical person, the Founder of the community. Their belief in him is the response to his work upon them whereby they become aware of their redemption, and are moved to service in the Kingdom of God. Christian truth has no meaning apart from this fellowship of believers in Christ. "A man always finds the community existing when he arrives at faith, nor does he attain this end without the action of the community upon him." Thus the experience of the individual is conditioned by the experience of the historic Church.

Faith in Christ, then, is the Christian's acknowledgment of what Christ does for him, of the value of Christ's whole redemptive work (including, of course, the founding of the community). Except as acting upon him and his brethren in the fellowship of believers, the Person of Christ is without religious significance for him. What precise place in the scale of being belonged to Christ, whether his nature was undivided or a union of two natures, how he came to be what he succeeded in becoming, these are questions which have no points of connection with the Christian's present inner experience, and therefore leave him without means of learning anything about them. "The origin of the Person of Christ—how his Person attained the form in which it presents itself to our ethical and religious apprehension—is not a subject for theological inquiry, because the problem transcends all inquiry." Accordingly, Christ's divinity is a moral and religious divinity. He has for us "the religious value" of God. "The thought of Christ's Godhead is never other than the expression of that unique acknowledgment and appreciation which the Christian community yields to its Founder."

This cardinal principle which insists that Christ is to be interpreted by the worth he possesses for our whole present activity, while it excludes traditional doctrines respecting his nature and rank, pronounces others equally inadmissible. Our faith in him is not faith in him as "one who was." It is not assent to his sufficiency as a moral instructor or external example, removed from us by intervals of time, whose access to us lies only in the records. It is response to a present redeeming power which we feel to be exercised upon our lives through him, a power which is no less real because we cannot give a scientific explanation of it, and can only say, "It is not I that live, but Christ that liveth in me." "Our practical behaviour," says Ritschl with profound truth, "is often ruled more by obscure ideas than by those which are clear."

Of the wealth of suggestion which this great treatise contains for the modern mind in its efforts to reconcile the truths of reason and the truths of experience, of its illuminating deliverances on the central realities of the Christian religion, its searching analysis of the conviction of guilt and the assurance of pardon, its treatment of so helpful a conception of Christ's work as that of an ethical vocation, its penetrating judgments on the fatal consequences of the dominance of the speculative interest in religion, which even when they fail to persuade us provoke and assist our thought, it is impossible in a few lines to give any idea. All that can be done is to commend the underlying principle from which the whole Ritschlian movement takes its start—namely, that that only is true in Christianity which finds its verification in the spiritual history of Christian believers.

In a world where another principle of verification is predominantly followed, and metaphysics is exalted at the expense of experience, where so many of those who accept and of those who reject these truths alike make use of an irrelevant criterion, where, moreover, many an earnest inquirer is bewildered by invitations to embrace ideas, on the ground that they are speculatively attractive while their sterility in practical results is conceived as an accidental accompaniment, there is a place waiting for such a conception as that which Ritschl offers us and the day of its inheritance is to come.

Ambrose Bennett.

* "The Christian Doctrine of Justification and Reconciliation." By Albrecht Ritschl. "The Positive Development of the Doctrine." English Translation edited by H. R. Mackintosh, D.Phil., and A. B. Macaulay, M.A. Messrs. T. and T. Clark. 14s.

HAECKEL'S RIDDLE OF THE UNIVERSE.*

Professor Haeckel's views have been before the world for many years. In 1866 he published a large and elaborate work on the General Morphology of Organisms, which was followed by others, more popular in character, and having a wider circulation, but all devoted to the illustration and defence of the same fundamental principles. It is interesting, therefore, to have in one compact volume a concentrated statement of these principles; and none the less so because that statement illustrates once more a familiar yet melancholy fact—how incompetent a great investigator may be, when he leaves particular problems, and essays solutions of the "riddles of the universe."

* "The Riddle of the Universe at the Close of the Nineteenth Century." By Ernest Haeckel, Professor at the University of Jena. Translated by Joseph McCabe. Issued by the Rationalist Press Association (Limited). Pp. xvi., 398. London: Watts and Co. 1900. 6s. net.

Professor Haeckel complains with much justice that philosophers are so frequently ignorant of science, and scientific men under-estimate the importance of unity and consistency in knowledge; but we fear that his own "scientific monism" pays too high a price for the appearance of "unity." The suggestion of dogmatism is painfully frequent, though the author is entirely unconscious of it; and in working out his system he betrays little or no appreciation of what his "riddles" mean from the standpoint of philosophy. The book is, in short, neither scientific enough nor philosophical enough to win conviction.

The following quotation sums up Haeckel's position:—

Towering above all the achievements and discoveries of the century, we have the great comprehensive "law of substance," the fundamental law of the constancy of matter and force. The fact that substance is everywhere subject to eternal movement and transformation gives it the character also of the universal law of Evolution. As this supreme law has been firmly established, and all others are subordinate to it, we arrive at a conviction of the universal unity of Nature and the eternal validity of its laws. From the gloomy problem of substance we have evolved the clear law of substance. The monism of the cosmos which we establish thereon proclaims the absolute dominion of the great eternal iron laws throughout the universe. It thus shatters, at the same time, the three central dogmas of the dualistic philosophy — the personality of God, the immortality of the soul, and the freedom of the will. (p. 388.)

Concerning the "problem of substance," Haeckel confesses that we are as far from understanding "the innermost character of nature" as were the earliest philosophers of Greece. But in another place we find the following:—"The two fundamental forms of substance, ponderable matter and ether, are not dead and movable only by extrinsic force, but they are endowed with sensation and will (though, naturally, of the lowest grade)." (p. 224.) This is a speculation as to the nature of substance, not a "law." And to appeal to physical and chemical experiments, and to our feelings of mass and weight, in order to prove the existence of a ponderable matter which is made up of atoms "endowed with sensation and will," is a curious irrelevancy. The reader will hardly need to be reminded that this remarkable theory of matter as endowed with some kind of feeling—which has found considerable acceptance in recent years—was conceived to remove the difficulty of supposing that dead atoms, subject only to mechanical laws of motion, can combine so as to produce consciousness and thought. But in our opinion Dr. Martineau's magnificent essays on "Modern Materialism" remain, to-day as when they were written twenty-five years ago, unanswered and unanswerable.

Whenever Professor Haeckel has to summarise the progress or results of such sciences as physiology, anatomy, zoology, we see the touch of a master-hand—these are the regions where his authority is universally acknowledged. But in the more speculative problems of physics and chemistry—e.g., the relation of mechanism to life, and the meaning of "laws" in Nature—he betrays the antiquated and dogmatic metaphysical bias by which descriptive laws and working hypotheses are transformed into active and even creative powers, endowed with "eternal validity." The "Law of Substance" is the supreme God, corresponding to "the Father" in the orthodox Trinity; the "Law of Evolution" corresponds in some respects to the position of "the Son"; while other "Laws" represent numerous subordinate divinities. The distinguished author seems to have failed to see that to imagine a law as an active power is every whit as "anthropomorphic" as to imagine a God of manlike form and feeling. In his evolutionary theory, Haeckel's system compares unfavourably with that of Spencer. Spencer, in dealing with what Dr. Martineau called the "hitches in the evolutionary deduction"—the first dawning of life, of sentience, of thought—is able to fall back upon "the Unknowable" whenever he is driven to admit that previous evolutionary conditions will not account for a subsequent and higher form of existence. For Spencer, the Unknowable, manifested in all phenomena, can guarantee the possible inexplicability of certain phenomenal transitions. But Haeckel has no such refuge; for him "Evolution" and "Substance" have to do the whole of the work.

It is impossible to comment on all the details which call for critical remark in a compact volume which deals with everything that exists. We have endeavoured to estimate the worth of the author's "philosophical" principles; and we will quote, in conclusion, his opinion of "Liberal Christianity":—

The climax of the opposition to modern education and to its foundation, advanced natural philosophy, is reached, of course, in the Church. We are not speaking here of Ultramontane Papistry; nor of the orthodox Evangelical tendencies, which do not fall far short of it in ignorance and in the crass superstition of their dogmas. We are imagining ourselves for the moment to be in the church of a Liberal Protestant minister, who has a good average education, and who finds room for "the rights of reason" by the side of his faith. There, beside excellent moral teaching, which is in perfect harmony with our own monistic ethics, and humanitarian discussion of which we cordially approve, we hear ideas on the nature of God, of the world, of man, and of life, which are directly opposed to all scientific experience. It is no wonder that physicists and chemists, doctors and philosophers, who have made a thorough study of Nature, refuse a hearing to such preachers. Our theologians and our politicians are just as ignorant as our philosophers and our jurists of that elementary knowledge of Nature which is based on the monistic theory of evolution."

We fear that the title of the book is an anachronism. It should be, "The Riddle of the Universe in the Middle of the Nineteenth Century." Among the present generation of scientific investigators this dogmatic materialism is falling into deserved disrepute. They will tell us that it is not the business of science to solve Welträthsel, but to analyse our experience of things in time and space. A recent writer has well said that "there are many who, while bowing to Professor Haeckel's great scientific authority, will prefer Kant or some other as their philosophical guide."

S. H. Mellone.

Every lot is happy to a person who bears it with tranquillity.—Boëthius.

ETHICAL ESSAYS.*

In reading through the essays which fill the first of these two volumes, one has a sense of hearing a great many reasonable and some very striking utterances, but begins to wonder whither they tend. It is well to understand the supreme importance of character and conduct, but what type of character and what kind of conduct should be our ideal? Just as after hearing a sermon in which the continuousness of Divine inspiration has been insisted upon, and in which it has been eloquently set forth that the Holy Ghost is not the inspirer of the dead but of the living, the hearer is inclined to ask for some specimen chapter or at the least half-a-dozen verses which shall serve as a sort of advance-sheet of the Bible now in making; so when one has read a number of these Essays on Ethics, on Ethical Fellowship, on Ethical Religion, and kindred themes, one confesses that it is all very excellent but a little vague. If there is to be a new movement, the old movements have been inadequate; if a new commandment, the old commandments are insufficient; if only a more perfect application of the old commandments is asked for, still let us know where, and what, or how?

A new society that is going to be on excellent terms with Christianity, and expects to have its friendly compliments returned by Christianity's representatives, but which, meanwhile, is independent of Christianity, and would have no reason for existence if Christianity could and would give to mankind the moral help which the society hopes to furnish—such a society will surely be asked to define with some precision the work it intends to do. Does it accept the Christian morality but place it on a sounder basis; or is the Christian morality, even at its best and purest, defective; and shall we have a higher ideal placed before us? Again, is the Ethical Society neutral in regard to Theology? Does it make no difference as far as the Ethical Society is concerned whether a man is optimist or pessimist; whether he believes in Heavenly influences and in a life beyond the grave, or whether to him life is prayerless and death hopeless? In short, will the Society justify its existence by resolving some of the problems that perplexed us, or by urging us to the work which we have neglected? And in either case let us have some definite direction. Such is the state of mind provoked by reading one after another five or six of these essays.

Before the volume closes some answer is given to this demand. Leslie Stephen utterly renounces the priest and the belated dissenting minister, and the doctrines for which they plead. As far as he represents the new movement it is clear that it has no sympathy with popular Christianity. Further, he does not consider that the modifications of popular Christianity which have been made by the more thoughtful Christian apologists need detain a sensible man many moments; to explain away is not to defend, and it would be simpler to say these doctrines are not true. Hence we see that Ethical questions are to be studied with no foregone conclusions derived from the prevalent

---

* "Ethics and Religion: a Collection of Essays." Swan Sonnenschein. 5s.

"Ethical Democracy: Essays in Social Dynamics." Edited by Stanton Coit. Grant Richards. 6s.

Religion. To parody an expression which though abused had truth and sense in it we are to have Ethics for Ethics and not for Christianity or any other form of Religion.

Having got so far we may ask Bernard Bosanquet to tell us what moral ideas are and how they are to be communicated. In a very delightful essay he tells us—very little. Mainly this, we are to live out our own lives thoroughly and intelligently. (It is the very thing that most of us find it so difficult to do.) Do not let us preach much, for preaching is akin to bad manners. Do not let us hold convocations, for the authority of councils presses hurtfully upon the freedom of life. But let us live rightly and bravely and affect others by the contagion of example. I think I have seen similar advice but more detailed in a work bearing the name of Matthew. The essays in the first-named volume, interesting as they are, do not carry us much further than I have indicated.

The second volume, named "Ethical Democracy," may not be more able or more interesting than the one just described, but it is more vigorous, it is more ambitious. It deals with morality in detail. It discusses Democracy, Industrialism, the Family, Women as Citizens, and kindred themes; one feels that the writers perfectly well understood that it is as useless to tell people to be natural or to be philosophical as to tell them to be good.

The man who says, "Tell me what you think of some of the problems that perplex me," or "tell me what kind of life you consider worthy of an enlightened man," finds here some serious attempts to give him an answer. The answer may not always please him, but it will do what such an answer should—it will interest him, awaken him, compel him to think. It is not expressing the matter too strongly to say that this volume abounds in healthy stimulating soul-stirring essays. The essays differ in style and in value. In Mr. Hobson's lecture on the Ethics of Industrialism, we are compelled to face and to wrestle with some of the most awkward and embarrassing problems that a reformer can grapple with; those, namely, which are concerned with the organisation of industry, and the distribution of its products; in the essays on Moral Instruction and the Ethical End in Education, the latter by a lady, we have suggestions intensely interesting and for the most part practical for the management and instruction of children; elsewhere politics, literature, social life are all discussed with earnestness and freedom. The last essay, that by the editor on the Dynamics of Democracy, is one of the most questionable; questionable as regards the ideals set forth, and as regards the means suggested; but it is a fine intelligent hopeful utterance, full of freshness and vigour, and we put down the book promising ourselves to take it up again, and resolving not to lose all the benefit of the lessons therein contained.

J. Ruddle.

To Correspondents. — Letters, &c. received from the following:—B. C.; E. E. C.; J. E.; T. E. M. E.; M. G.; R. M.; E. P.; W. E. R.; G. J. S.; A. A. T.; T. A. T.; E. L. H. T.; C. H. W.; H. W.

THE JEWISH PROBLEM IN EAST LONDON.*

Mr. Fisher Unwin has recently published a work on "The Jew in London," by C. Russell, B.A. (now a Professor in the Presidency College, Calcutta), and H. S. Lewis, M.A., a resident in Toynbee Hall. The following notice of the work appears in the January number of the Calcutta University Magazine, written at the Editor's request by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams:—

To say that these essays are interesting is to say too little. They are instructive: they contain information with regard to the Jewish population in London, which will be new to most Englishmen. They communicate facts of value, whatever deductions may be drawn from the facts. They are of importance to all interested in industrial and sociological questions, and to all religious thinkers whose minds are large enough to consider other forms of faith than their own, that is to say, to all liberal minds. They are suggestive on the future of the Jewish community in London. Will they assume the nationality of their adopted country? Or, will they in religion, in character and habits, in social and industrial organisation, continue those peculiarities which clearly mark them off from their neighbours, and give them the solidarity that holds them together as a race?

This is the central theme discussed by the authors of these two essays. On a superficial view it may seem a simple problem; but when one comes to study it one finds that it is full of complexities and spreads itself over an immense range. It contains a number of questions, and, as Canon Barnett puts it in his Introduction to the book, "opens up a field of inquiry in which racial, industrial, and religious questions are bound up with one another, and refuse to be dissociated." It has been intensified by the influx of Russo-Jews into London, who have found there the liberty, safety, and security denied to them under the rule of the Tsar, and the social place denied to their countrymen by the bigoted and virulent Anti-Semitism of France and Germany. It is true that their presence in increasing numbers in the East-end of London provoked some jealous hostility on the part of the English working classes, but it produced no crisis, and whatever antagonism was excited has practically died down. The effect of the rush of immigration has generally been regarded from the economic side; but Mr. Russell and Mr. Lewis see beyond that limit, and treat it from a larger point of view, the economic side being only one feature of a huge problem. Mr. Russell considers it in the three aspects into which it is naturally divided—the social, the industrial, and the religious. It is in these three chapters that he has made a most valuable contribution to the subject; and we commend them heartily to all who are interested in what is not simply an English, but a European question. It is impossible within the brief space at our command even to fairly summarise them; but they should be read and pondered by all students of European international problems.

The conclusion Mr. Russell draws from his study is that the present condition of Judaism in London, even from a Jewish standpoint, is unsatisfactory. "It is beginning to be realised that communal affairs are getting into a parlous state, and it can hardly be disguised that religious orthodoxy is steadily losing hold upon the community." What is the remedy? Mr. Russell's answer is, Reform or Zionism, that is to say, either assimilation with and absorption in the English race, or the re-establishment of Jewish nationality in Palestine. The majority of English Jews do not favour either of these courses: "the one is shunned as dangerous, and the other as retrogressive." Nevertheless, Mr. Russell holds that, "on the whole, the present tendency is strongly in the direction of absorption." He brings forward some striking evidence of "the process of transformation which is taking place," and it is easy to see that in his judgment—and it is the judgment of a competent, painstaking observer and careful thinker—the losses of assimilation would be more than counterbalanced by the gains.

Mr. Lewis, who is himself a Jew and has the distinction of being a Wrangler, and an Oriental Scholar, speaks with ample knowledge and authority. He differs from the conclusions of Mr. Russell. He maintains that the principle of Jewish nationality will remain, though, not perhaps, in the form of Zionism: "political Zionism may be a passing phase; but the ideas on which Zionism is based are eternal." He holds that "the growth of Jewish national feeling is not out of harmony with the claims of English citizenship." He sums up his opinion by saying: "If absorption comes it will only be through indifference: by cultivating active and elevating ideals of national and religious life, we shall avoid all risks of mere selfish isolation and make our race indeed "a blessing in the midst of the earth." Mr. Russell and Mr. Lewis, though differing in the results of their studies, furnish a body of materials for forming a judgment on the problem of which they treat; and their work will prove extremely helpful to all who care for the study of social and industrial phenomena.

* "The Jew in London: A Study of Racial Character and Present-day Conditions." Being two Essays prepared for the Toynbee Trustees by C. Russell, B.A., and H. S. Lewis, M.A., with an Introduction by Canon Barnett and a Preface by the Right Hon. James Bryce, M.P. With a new map specially made for this volume by G. E. Arkell. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.

THE RELIGION OF THE INCARNATION.

Sir,—As Dr. Warschauer very naturally defends his use of the term "Incarnation" which I deprecate, may I be allowed to state the grounds of my objection more fully.

Dr. Warschauer thinks I am too absolute in laying down "what the Incarnation really is," but I have always been taught that the "Incarnation" has as exact and definite a meaning in theology as a "parallelogram" has in geometry. I quoted one Catholic and one Protestant authority to show what the accepted meaning is, and I think I might have quoted every recognised authority in Christendom to the same effect.

As far as I expressed the doctrine in my own words, I limited myself to the simple formula "that the Son, the Second Person of the Trinity, became man." This does not necessarily imply a miraculous or virgin birth, but it implies something very different from an indwelling spirit. The original Nicene Creed says, "the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God . . . for us men and our salvation came down, and was incarnate (or was made flesh) and became man." This implies a succession of events and a definite act or process to which the theological term Incarnation is exclusively applied. Thus Mr. Moberly, in his essay on the Incarnation as the Basis of Dogma in "Lux Mundi" speaks "of the crucial doctrine of the Incarnation, that is, of the eternal Godhead of the Man Christ Jesus." I may remind Dr. Warschauer that it was "Lux Mundi" that gave currency to the phrase "the religion of the Incarnation."

The quotations from the Fourth Gospel prove nothing, as the question at issue between us is whether the union of the Divine and human there implied can properly be described by the term "Incarnation" in its doctrinal sense.

Nor does it affect my position to say that Archdeacon Wilson, Professor Percy Gardner and J. B. have recently chosen to depart from established usage, and wrest a well-known and, theologically speaking, scientific term from its proper meaning; they are only instances of the fault I condemn. Archdeacon Wilson's language is ambiguous, but perhaps he can reconcile it with the creed of his Church. Professor Gardner's definition of the Incarnation, as the harmony of the will of Jesus with that of his Father in Heaven, is quite different from Wilson's, and has no warrant. But Professor Gardner does not profess to be a theologian, and Mr. Gow says, in his review of the book from which Dr. Warschauer quotes, "that it has no clear definite teaching and comes to no satisfactory conclusion." J. B. confuses Incarnation with Immanence. So that these three "authorities" are not agreed among themselves as to what Incarnation means.

Dr. Martineau's phrase "perpetual incarnation" and his teaching in his sermons on "Christ the Divine Word" have nothing to do with Church doctrine, and Dr. Martineau was too accurate in his use of language to say that his views represented the doctrine of the Incarnation.

There is no analogy between the use of the word "Father" and Incarnation. We speak of God as our Father in the same broad sense that Jesus himself did, and we are not deprived of the right to do so because in the Creeds the word Father is used in a narrower sense.

Dr. Warschauer says that I contend that Unitarians must not hold the doctrine of the Incarnation in a spiritual form. I say nothing of the kind, I only urge that things should be called by their right names.

I can understand some of the clergy of the Church of England, who by the exigencies of their position are still compelled to use terms which they have emptied of their contents, illicitly attaching a sense of their own to them; but I see no reason why we, who are under no such obligation, should countenance the practice. I may quote again the very pointed remark of Mr. Beeby, "A practised ambiguity of speech has with some divines become a fine art." It is against this ambiguity I protest, and I think every Unitarian should avoid it. By "the Incarnation" Dr. Warschauer does not mean what all Christendom would understand him to mean; why, then, use the term?

In conclusion, let me assure Dr. Warschauer that I do not object to his doctrine—it is possible that there is no more than a shade of difference between his and mine—I only object to it being described by a word which means something different.

Walter Lloyd.

Gloucester, March 5.

SOUTH EASTERN PROVINCE.

AN "EXCHANGE SUNDAY" AND UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICE.

Sir,—I am asked by the Committee of the South Eastern Provincial Assembly to call attention, through your courtesy, to some arrangements which have recently been made in connection with this Province. The first relates to a proposed "Exchange Sunday," when ministers might do duty for each other and bear in their own person the good wishes of their congregations to neighbours in the province. One of the burdens we have to carry is the feeling of isolation, and if anything like a general movement of the kind takes place amongst our churches in the south-east it will do something, we hope, to lessen this evil.

The Committee are well aware that difficulties stand in the way, but they would urge their brethren, both in the pulpit and pew, to set these aside as far as possible and to work together in the cause of that brotherhood which is half our gospel. The Sunday suggested for these pulpit interchanges is March 24 (whether for the whole day or half is left at discretion), and our treasurer will cheerfully defray the travelling expenses incurred on this occasion.

It has also been arranged to hold a United Devotional Service at Little Portland-street Chapel on Tuesday evening, March 26. This service, the special aim of which is to draw us closer together in the spirit of gratitude and aspiration as the new era opens around us, will be conducted by several of our ministers, and it is hoped that all our metropolitan congregations, at least, will be represented on this occasion. Full particulars will be advertised later.

W. G. Tarrant, President.

March 5, 1901.

INTEREST IN LOCAL ASSOCIATIONS.

Sir,—Some paragraphs in your last issue referring to a paper read by the Rev. J. A. Pearson greatly interested me. I was going to remind you that the blow to the cause of liberal Christianity suffered by the discontinuance of the New World was even worse than your article implied, because the New World was the successor of the Unitarian Review, issued for so many years under the able editorship of the late Rev. Joseph Henry Allen. It thus means that if the defunct Review has not a speedy successor our American friends will not be in the state they were nine years ago, but worse off than they have been for a much longer period. The connection of this fact with the heading of my letter is not far to seek. It is more interest that we want. A more vivid interest in our cause would soon make itself felt in all our institutions. But, to be practical, what can be done to excite this interest? To limit the question to our Associations how can they be made more interesting? How can the long distances which we suffer so much from in the South be overcome, and a closer corporate life developed? In the case of the S.U.A. the railway expenses of delegates are paid by the Association, but this only affects the members of the Committee who are already interested. What we want to do is to interest the subscribers who are not on the Committee, and I believe this might be done if meetings were occasionally held of all the subscribers to the Association belonging to each church who could conveniently attend.

The meeting might be a very small one, and a very informal one, but it would give an opportunity of letting each subscriber know what was being done, and it would secure that the annual report should be read before being consigned to the waste-paper basket. Experience of two meetings of the kind here makes me think that the suggestion would do good if it were more widely adopted. Clement E. Pike.

Newport, Isle of Wight.

POLITICS AND RELIGION.

Sir,—Is there not something saddening in Mr. Tyssen's letter? Out of several depressing suggestions I select one. He says: "Every minister should pledge himself not to employ for political purposes the position of influence which is accorded to him for religious purposes." He does not say "the pulpit," but "the position of influence." Now a minister cannot possibly separate himself from his "position of influence." He is what he is. It therefore follows, according to Mr. Tyssen, that while he is a minister he ought never to take a side in politics, and that he ought to "pledge" himself to this circumcision.

It is especially saddening because these repeated calls upon ministers to cease to be men seem to come more from Unitarians than from, say, Baptists: and yet we claim to be exceptionally free! I know it is a difficult subject, but Mr. Tyssen's solution is a bid for insipidity or hypocrisy, though he wants neither.

J. Page Hopps.

Sir,—I notice that you comment briefly upon Mr. Tyssen's letter in your last issue, but I feel that this is essentially a case where you would like the views of your readers.

I fear that Mr. Tyssen has got hold of the wrong end of the stick in his suggestion as to how we are to promote the prosperity of our Unitarian cause in the new century. Does he think that we can do so by making less intimate the connection between our religion and our life, by making religion less practical? I think this is the one point of all others in which we Unitarians ought to show the reality of our religion, and I for one do not want a denominational paper that will hesitate to speak out when it sees an opportunity of striking for a purer and better life. I think if Mr. Tyssen will look beneath the surface he will see that he has selected two subjects which in their evolution may produce an enormous influence upon the lives of the people. Is not "cleanliness next to Godliness?" Does not the tax on ground rents closely affect the housing question, and is not the present housing of many of our people one of the greatest barriers to morality?

We cannot separate our religion from our politics—if we could, I do not think either of them would be of a type that should satisfy our aspirations.

As for myself, I cannot imagine that a stockholder who would be deterred from joining the Unitarian body because THE INQUIRER supports the Progressive party would be very much gain to the body if he did join it; and if I understand aright the essentials of Unitarianism, I think he would scarcely feel at home among us, for he evidently would not understand us.

I could have hoped that we had outgrown even the suggestion of such open "bowing of the knee to Baal."

HAROLD COVENTRY.

Liverpool, March 5.

IS NATURE CRUEL?

SIR,—It seems to me rather a curious way of proving that Nature is not cruel to have to substitute "the butcher's axe" for Nature's own method. Am I to assume that nature would be proved cruel if domestic animals had to be left to "perish by slow decay"; or does Mrs. Bernard believe that the "butcher's axe" was a part of the Creator's scheme of things designed from the beginning? If the latter, then is all the nameless horror of the cattle ship also a part of the divine plan, and does it also enter into the domestic animals' preference for "the butcher's axe" over "slow decay?" And what about the "domestic animal" man? He is left to perish by "slow decay." Is that cruel, or would Mrs. Bernard suggest the extension to him also of the beneficent "butcher's axe"? For my part I believe that nothing tends so much to hide the love of God from our eyes as the way in which we men make ourselves outlaws in His fair world, preying on all the other animals to satisfy our vanity, our love of "sport," or our appetites.

CHARLES PEACH.

THE HIGH PEAK CHAPELS.

SIR,—As the writer of the article on the above, I have to thank Mr. Birks for kindly pointing out the mistake into which I have fallen. In writing the article I depended entirely upon my memory, and, apparently, that has retained the impression of the one grave in the little chapel yard more clearly than that of any mention I may have heard in my many visits to Flagg of any ministers other than Mr. Birks' father. CHARLES PEACH.

SMOKING BY BOYS.

SIR,—Can any of your readers recommend a short pamphlet setting forth in simple and, above all, temperate language the reasons why young people should not smoke?

Few fathers and still fewer mothers approve of their boys smoking, and, I am sure, many would welcome a rational paper on this subject. Unfortunately every treatise I have seen is hopelessly vitiated by extravagant and highly sensational treatment, which—the exaggerations being patent to even a boy of less than average intelligence—defeats the worthy object in view.

BERTRAM TALBOT.

86, Cromwell-avenue, Highgate, N.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

Among Our Birds in Winter.

THIS is a good time, especially for those of you who live in the country, to watch the birds. Even those living amid the smoke and work of the towns sometimes make visits to the country, and are able to gain some knowledge of our bird friends. Not only are the trees and hedges bare, so that we can see them where in summer they are able to hide themselves from view, but they become much tamer by reason of hunger, and approach our homes somewhat fearlessly in search of food.

There is a wonderful amount of pleasure and interest to be obtained in observing the habits and in listening to the songs of our various birds. Have you ever thought what gladness we should miss if there were no birds to cheer us? We who live among them become so used to their presence that we perhaps do not pay that attention to them which they deserve and which they would certainly repay.

I wonder how many birds you know by their names. It is always more interesting to know something of the varied and beautiful things around us in the country; and the birds are ever in sight as we walk through the meadows and along the winding lanes. They invite our attention by their sweet singing and pleasing habits. Have you ever made a list of the different birds you have seen in your neighbourhood? It is a good plan to do so, and to get to know as much about each one as you can. Ask your friends to tell you those you do not know, or obtain a book on birds and increase your knowledge in that way. Most of our Sunday-school libraries will have such a book.

Every bird has some attractive ways which we may watch and take pleasure in. Those which left us in the autumn will soon be returning, so we must keep our eyes and ears open and note the days when the familiar ones make their first appearance. The cuckoo is the one that receives most notice probably, and he begins his call about the middle of April. Some, however, will arrive even in March, one of the earliest being the chiff-chaff, so called from his cry. In contrast to these there are several birds which come from the north of Europe and spend the winter with us, returning again at the approach of spring.

One of the chief joys of spring is to listen to the songs of the birds, but during the winter we have few feathered songsters. The chief among them are the well-known robin, the missel thrush, the starling, and the blackbird, though if there happens to be any bright days we hear two other sweet songsters, the throstle and the lark. As I am writing this I hear the throstle's beautiful song from the oak tree close to the house. Our bird-minstrels naturally receive more notice than the others, and justly, for they make the dreariness of winter more bearable.

The birds need food provided for them during the time of the frost and snow, when they can get little for themselves, and when, alas, many die from cold and hunger. During the recent severe weather I have fed them daily, putting down for them bread-crumbs, chopped fat, oatmeal (or porridge), cooked potatoes, and half-bad apples. I have had many visitors to share the feast, and it was pleasing and even amusing to watch them at it. There were blackbirds, thrushes, starlings, sparrows (no fear of these missing it!), robins, blue tits, great tits, chaffinches, and a solitary fieldfare; I saw also quite close to, though not actually feeding with the others, bullfinches and wrens. One of the male blackbirds, who thought he owned the garden, was of a very selfish and quarrelsome disposition, driving away most of the other birds, though they later gained more courage; but the tables were turned when the fieldfare came upon the scene and he himself was driven away. It, of course, served him right. I have very likely kept some of the birds alive that would otherwise have perished, and as a result the air will be filled with greater melody in the coming spring and summer.

A. H. MATTHEWS.

MR. BERTRAM TALBOT, to whose paper on "The Influence of Thought on Character" we referred last week, has also published a useful little book of "Information Concerning the History and Growth of the Bible." (Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C. 6d. net.) The aim is to give to teachers and others in a condensed form the results of recent scholarship with regard to the date, contents, and external history of the books of the Bible, as embodied in such works as the "Encyclopædia Britannica," the Oxford "Helps," the Cambridge "Companion to the Bible," Adeney's "How to Read the Bible," and Sunderland's "The Bible: Its Origin, Growth, and Character." Of this last Mr. Talbot makes constant use, and to its author expresses his special indebtedness. There is a list of these and other books used, and Mr. Talbot's plan is to make his statements chiefly by means of quotations from his authorities, with constant references, which make of his pages a mosaic somewhat difficult to read, but very useful for reference. Many teachers and others interested in the study of the Bible will, we feel sure, welcome the information thus carefully provided in so handy a form. We notice that on the cover of this little book Mr. Elliot Stock offers to send to any part of the United Kingdom, carriage free, for half-a-guinea the following books, the published prices of which amount to just that sum:—

"The Bible: Its Origin, Growth, and Character." By J. T. Sunderland, M.A. 6s.

"The Cambridge Companion to the Bible." 1s.

"How to Read the Bible." By W. F. Adeney, M.A. 1s.

"Lessons on the English Bible." By F. E. Millson. 6d.

"The Three Stages of a Bible's Life." By W. C. Gannett. 6d.

"The Story of the Bible from the Standpoint of Modern Scholarship." By W. L. Sheldon. 1s. 6d.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
In Tins
And Packets.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Tins 1lb.
And 3lbs.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Packets 1lb.
And ½lb.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Sold by Grocers,
Export Oilmen.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, MARCH 9, 1901.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

THIS question Dr. ADOLF HARNACK, Rector of the University of Berlin and Professor of Church History, undertook to answer in a course of sixteen popular lectures delivered in the University during the winter of 1899-1900. The lectures were given extempore to a class of some six hundred students drawn from all the faculties, and awakened the utmost interest both at the time of delivery and afterwards, when they were published in book form. For happily the lectures were taken down in shorthand by one of the audience, and needed very little revision from the author before they were ready for the press; and now they are offered to us in a most readable English version, included in Messrs. WILLIAMS and NORGATE'S Theological Translation Library.*

No gift could be more welcome, in the present state of religious thought in this country, than such a book by the author of the great "History of Dogma," a teacher who holds a place so pre-eminent among Protestant theologians and historians of Christianity. In a brief preface to the English translation of his lectures, Dr. HARNACK says :—

Whether there is as great a need in England as there is in Germany for a short and plain statement of the Gospel and its history, I do not know. But this I know: the theologians of every country only half discharge their duties if they think it enough to treat of the Gospel in the recondite language of learning and bury it in scholarly folios.

Dr. HARNACK will be abundantly assured by the reception of his book in this country how great the need has been for it, and we may thankfully acknowledge in what a masterly manner he has met the need.

The lectures are divided into two parts, the first dealing with the Gospel as it was in the life and teaching of JESUS himself, the second with the Gospel in history, as it was developed under the forms of Catholicism, Greek and Roman, and of Protestantism. In the present article we propose to deal only with the first of these two parts.

The great value of the lectures, as it appears to us, is that they show with a master's clear and forcible statement, what recent criticism and historical study have done to sift the New Testament and other early Christian literature, to separate the kernel of truth from the temporary husk. They fearlessly proclaim what may appear to many readers in this country startling and radical results, but no less powerfully set forth the eternal verity of the Christian Gospel. If any readers should be pained at finding their cherished prepossessions ruthlessly stripped away, we would urge them patiently to read on, and earnestly to consider the result of Dr. HARNACK'S exposition as a whole, and they will be led, if we mistake not, to a new depth of conviction and joyful confidence in the religion of JESUS, as "something simple and sublime," the profoundest truth of the life with GOD, life with the FATHER as it was revealed in JESUS, truth which cannot be moved, and from which the humblest disciple in his trust and faithfulness cannot be moved. "Christianity," says Dr. HARNACK, "had a founder who himself was what he taught."

To steep ourselves in him is still the chief matter; but to restrict ourselves to him means to take a point of view too low for his significance. Individual religious life was what he wanted to kindle and what he did kindle; it is, as we shall see, his peculiar greatness to have led men to God, so that they may thenceforth live their own life with Him.

And in other passages towards the conclusion of the first part of the Lectures Dr. HARNACK makes it quite clear that while JESUS felt himself to have a special relation to the FATHER, to which no other man had yet attained, and that his mission was to reveal that new and more perfect religious consciousness to the world, yet he completely identified himself with his fellow-men, praying to the FATHER, submitting to His will, acknowledging Him alone as good. In the teaching of the Gospel there was no need for a "Christology." The first and greatest need was to live as CHRIST lived, and to say that a man must first have a right theory concerning CHRIST was to put the cart before the horse.

No! his message is simpler than the churches would like to think it; simpler, but for that very reason sterner and endowed with a greater claim to universality. A man cannot evade it by the subterfuge of saying that as he can make nothing of this "Christology," the message is not for him. Jesus directed men's attention to great questions; he promised them God's grace and mercy; he required them to decide whether they would have God or Mammon, an eternal or an earthly life, the soul or the body, humility or self-righteousness, love or selfishness, the truth or a lie. The sphere which these questions occupy is all-embracing; the individual is called upon to listen to the glad message of mercy and the Fatherhood of God, and to make up his mind whether he will be on God's side and the Eternal's, or on the side of the world and of time. The Gospel, as Jesus proclaimed it, has to do with the Father and not with the Son. This is no paradox, nor, on the other hand, is it "rationalism," but the simple expression of the actual fact as the evangelists give it.

But at the same time the person of JESUS is of the utmost importance, for he was the personal realisation of his Gospel, and essentially the Revealer.

Fire is kindled only by fire; personal life only by personal forces. Let us rid ourselves of all dogmatic sophistry, and leave others to pass verdicts of exclusion. The Gospel nowhere says that God's mercy is limited to Jesus's mission. But history shows us that he is one who brings the weary and heavy laden to God; and, again, that he it was who raised mankind to the new level; and his teaching is still the touchstone, in that it brings men to bliss and brings them to judgment.

In asking where we are to look for a trustworthy account of the life and teaching of JESUS, Dr. HARNACK decisively sets the Fourth Gospel on one side, as not emanating or professing to emanate from the apostle JOHN, and not to be taken as an historical authority in the ordinary meaning of the word. "The author of it acted with sovereign freedom, transposed events, and put them in a strange light, drew up the discourses himself, and illustrated great thoughts by imaginary situations." The great value of that Gospel is in its vivid presentment of a view of JESUS which grew out of the Gospel at a later time, and its record of religious experiences thus produced; but for history we must go to the first three Gospels. In them also Dr. HARNACK shows the true method of dealing with the miraculous element, describing the various causes which gave rise to it, separating the credible from the incredible, and bringing out the solid residuum of fact and the vital elements of religious truth, which have borne the test of the severest analysis.

The teaching of JESUS is grouped under three heads, "each of such a nature as to contain the whole, and so it can be exhibited in its entirety under any one of them."

Firstly, the Kingdom of God and its coming.
Secondly, God the Father and the infinite value of the human soul.

* "What is Christianity?" Sixteen Lectures delivered in the University of Berlin during the Winter-Term, 1899-1900, by Adolf Harnack, Rector of, and Professor of Church History in, the University, and member of the Royal Prussian Academy, Berlin. Translated into English by Thomas Bailey Saunders. Williams and Norgate. 10s. 6d.

Thirdly, the higher righteousness and the commandment of love.

Of these elements of the teaching Dr. HARNACK gives a lucid exposition, and proceeds to deal with the attitude of JESUS towards asceticism, the social question, public order, and civilisation. The Beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount, he declares, contain both the ethics and the religion of JESUS, "united at the root, and freed from all external and particularistic elements."

A LIVING CHURCH.

SIR,—As you invite discussion on the questions raised by Mr. Lummis, may I add a word. There is much in his lament with which we must all sympathise. Thirty years ago, a convert not from orthodoxy but from apathy and ignorance, I was myself overwhelmed with the sense of the gulf between our intellectual position and our lack of enthusiasm, and often poured out my Jeremiads much as Mr. Lummis has done now. Yet, looking back over those thirty years, I am convinced that wonderful progress has been made. Then, we were in the transition stage between the old literal acceptance of the Bible and the newer and more spiritual view now almost universal amongst our churches. Then, Theodore Parker was a bogey, Science a doubtful boon, Materialism a growing nightmare, bald Atheism a terror. Now, none of these things can appal us. Our faith rests on universal foundations; religion is as wide as humanity, the Bible no longer an insoluble problem, but a record of spiritual evolution, and Agnosticism, which has banished Atheism, is more and more becoming mere reverent humility in face of the Eternal. What wonder if, with such sweeping changes going on in our attitude towards religious questions, we were not enthusiasts?

Take as an analogy an ocean-going steamer. The furnaces and boilers are generating steam, but the engineers see that it is not doing its proper work. Something is wrong in the machinery. Axles, cranks, packing, bearings have all to be overhauled and set right. The engineers have no time to be rushing on deck to ask captain or steersman which way her head lies, or exactly what spot on the chart they have reached. Enough that the captain is in charge above; their task is in the engine-room, getting all in order there.

And so, we have been busy straightening the crooked, simplifying the cumbersome, easing the overtight, and tightening the overslack in the mental machinery of religion, but all the time in full faith that the furnaces and boilers were doing their part in generating the steam. Every now and then some impatient worker does rush on deck and challenges captain, steersman, crew and passengers to know exactly where we have got to and which way we steer, but most of us grub on, down below, content to do our work in our own department, in sure confidence that without us the great ship would not speed on her way as safely or as swiftly.

Now, however, there is a growing consciousness amongst us that, having righted our machinery, more steam is wanted. Every improvement in one direction creates a demand for a corresponding improvement all round. Some suggest new boilers. Organise! they say. Combine your scattered congregations into a Tubular Boiler, with a strong outer casing of ecclesiastical unity. Take out a patent, under a copyright name—Philalethian, for example. The boiler is sure to act then. Well, it would beyond question be a vast gain if we could create a sense of corporate unity, of true Church life. But until that unity grows out of true common sympathies, and until it is church life, not church machinery only, nothing will come of it. Christian discipleship and brotherly love preceded even the scattered congregations of Greece, Asia Minor, Rome and Jerusalem. When these waxed feeble, organisation came in, and the Church usurped the place of love and brotherliness.

Sir, I welcome Mr. Lummis's earnest appeal, and all similar manifestations of divine discontent; but I have lost faith in panaceas. By all means let us improve boilers and machinery to the best of our ability; but it is the Fire that generates the steam. "I believe in the Holy Ghost." This is the clause of the creed which, next to "I believe in One God, the Father Almighty," is the key to the question. Can we generate Holy Spirit by names and organisations, or do not these grow naturally out of the indwelling of the divine enthusiasm? Can we command a Pentecostal outpouring? No! but we can meet in our upper chambers, and pray and sing and wait on God, who gives Holy Spirit to them that ask. We shall never be a Church until the units believe in worship, prayer, and fellowship. The real question before us is, "How shall we inspire the hundreds, aye, thousands, of nominal Unitarians, who have no zeal for their Zions, who have no longing for fellowship in divine things, who have no sense of spiritual worship, who have no self-denial on behalf of organised religion—how shall we inspire these with a living Faith, an Eternal Hope, and a Love that burns but is never consumed?

Will it be given to those of us who are growing elderly to sing our "Nunc dimittis," having seen the Salvation of God?

H. W. HAWKES

Waterloo, Liverpool.

SIR,—Because Mr. Lummis sees, and sees rightly, that there are some things among us which need mending, he speaks with needless severity of our condition as a whole. Those—and there are some in every congregation and every district—who are doing good work in a genuinely religious spirit are not likely to be helped by being told of "our miserable plight." Those—and there are also a good many—who have not yet realised their spiritual heritage and their practical opportunities, will scarcely be drawn into closer fellowship by being scolded.

It is much harder so to present the loveliness of religion and the inspirations of Christian service as to make men and women and the young souls in our midst feel that they must enter into them more closely than to hit out all round. Mr. Lummis's sermon somehow lacks this quality of winsomeness, just as it contains very little recognition of the faithful work which is being done among us, and very much of denunciation and the dismals.

On the whole, therefore, and in spite of his undoubted earnestness, Mr. Lummis seems to me to be on the wrong tack.

Earnest ministers and earnest laymen have their disappointments. Has that not been so with faithful toilers in every age? But I for one decline to denounce or to be dismal. Nor do I wish to be drawn into any discussion about names. On that matter we shall not yet be all of the same mind. I have wonderful visions sometimes of what our congregations, our Sunday-schools, our various branches of activity, our share in common work beyond our own borders, our general place in the onward march of things, would be like if we all, both laymen and ministers, always did everything that is possible to us, and did it in the highest, most devoted, and most loving spirit. The glory that shall be is not the glory of to-day. Only let us not lose heart. We are not apostles of a dying cause.

DENDY AGATE.

Altrincham, March 4.

SIR,—Mr. Lummis has done well to tell us plainly that if we go on as we are going, the beginning of this new age will be to Unitarianism the beginning of death. It is on record that the cynic has said, "Unitarianism will last your time and my time, and that is the best and the worst that can be said of it." How can we convert the cynic into a prophet?

First of all by following Mr. Lummis's lead and making a "clean-breast" exposure of our defects, and then "mending our manners."

With the main burden of Mr. Lummis's message I enthusiastically agree. Our cause is indeed the Gospel of Truth—truth of intellect, truth of will, truth of feeling, truth of expression and conduct and life.

1. And here is the first defect of our supreme virtue—the love of truth. "No man has a right to believe anything on inadequate evidence," says Mr. Lummis. "It is wrong always, everywhere, and for everyone, to believe anything upon insufficient evidence," said Professor Clifford. Probably Mr. Lummis and Professor Clifford meant different things; but the mass of Unitarians will cordially cry out "Bravo!" to both. That is the first defect—our insistence on proof and demonstration in spiritual things, our incapacity to preserve constantly before our minds the difference between belief without evidence and belief against evidence, our greater tendency to suspect and disbelieve than to trust and have faith, our inability to seize with the passionate eagerness of romantic devotees those "mysteries of light" which Mr. Fripp a little while ago so impressively distinguished from the "mysteries of darkness." It is hardly an exaggeration to say that every creative belief, every belief that is a genuine Gospel or Faith, is in the last resort a belief without evidence. The deeper mysteries of the spirit must be believed first and verified, if at all, afterwards by their own self-attestation. Unitarians have yet to learn the meaning and the legitimate scope of the Will to Believe, so vigorously and convincingly defended by Professor William James in his little book bearing that title.

2. The next defect I would notice is our inverted hypocrisy. We pretend to be less religious than we really are; and this in a body that "lacks Religion" is a serious drawback. We lack Religion indeed, but we also lack the courage to express what Religion is ours. Meetings held exclusively for prayer and worship,or for mutual help in the culture of the devout life, are not encouraged among us. Natural, spontaneous expression of fervent spiritual feeling is apt to be regarded as demonstrative, methodistical,vulgar and—horror of horrors!—un-English. But without exercise, even public exercise, the devout life, like the physical life, must become feeble and faint. Perhaps the burden of this fault rests mainly upon the ministers whose studies in philosophy, criticism, scientific theology, &c., have a tendency to dry up the emotional and spiritual nature. But the fault is not entirely ours, and I know more than one minister who has said to me: "I used to be able to pray extempore in public, the sense of the Presence of the Unseen was sufficient to move the lips to prayer; but the congregation has chilled me, and I have now to prepare my prayers." How many ministers have thus sought in vain for a compelling atmosphere of devotion, and found themselves beating their luminous wings in the void!

3. Then there is our inverted superstition. By this I mean a dread, amounting to a kind of angry awe, when we are confronted with the habiliments and externals—the "scenic apparatus of divine worship." A white surplice, of course, makes a priest; a crucifix would make a Jesuit of the most puritan minister; the sign of the cross would be too terrible to contemplate. Not that I advocate these things, but they illustrate what I mean. This superstitious fear of superstition has deprived us of the potent suggestion of symbolism. We believe in self-sacrifice, but the cross, the symbol of self-sacrifice, rarely appears on our communion-tables. You may, perhaps, find it inadvertently not omitted somewhere on the roof. What little use is made of symbolism is made as a concession to ancient prejudice, or, as is often the case with the rites of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, as an unthinking acquiescent perpetuation of long-established custom, not as a conscious irresistible, inevitable expression of a living religious faith.

We believe in the beauty of holiness, and set over against it as a foil material ugliness. Except in our own drawing-rooms we show little sign of belief in the holiness of beauty. We may say what we like about "sensuous" religion, but the truth is that men and women will continue to go to those churches that satisfy their souls with a stately and dignified worship, with moving and impressive music, with a "finely rendered" liturgy, and this although the sermon may go in at one ear and out of the other like the tintinnabulation of the bells. There is much to be said for the old woman who asked indignantly, "Unless there is summat as I can see, and summat as I can hear, and summat as I can smell, why go to church?" People desire, and justifiably desire, a certain amount of form and ceremony. Whatever we may think of this, we shall all agree that there ought to be at least an outward appearance of reverence. Many Unitarians, however—others also, of course—never kneel on their knees during prayer. They come before God like "gentlemen unafraid," and lounge during the most solemn act of their lives. They come late and retire in a hurry; they frequently chatter and talk during the services; they never dream of using their church for private devotion during the week. In a sentence, there is among them a conspicuous and unpardonable neglect of the recognised observances of reverence for time, for place, and for function.

4. Mr. Lummis has truly said that "all the problems of wealth and poverty are to be faced, and the church that dare not face them is no true church of Our Father." It would be interesting, nay, thrillingly exciting, to watch the result if all our pulpits began a "Forward Movement" on Social Questions! We ought to do it; but when it is done let us be prepared to hear the carriages rumbling off to the parish church. That is the cost, but it ought to be paid without grudge or regret. The Christian Social Union and Canon Gore's "school" can do it, and they do it right well; but let us remember that the Church of England clergy have "security of tenure" and the prestige of a National Church at their back; and having remembered, let us set our teeth together, and, forgetting the cost, go and do likewise.

5. Mr. Lummis has also dealt with our need of a name. There is (pace Shakespeare!) much virtue in a name. In this matter, I think I am quite at one with you, Mr. Editor. There is only one possible name, and that is Free Catholic. But for the time being that is impossible, because it offends most of our laymen and many of our ministers. It would, therefore, be a disastrous blunder now to force the issue. When, however, our religious ideal has become clearer, and, as it were, self-conscious in our mind, when we come to see that after all what we stand for, and have been standing for, is not Unitarianism but undogmatic, though not undoctrinal, religion, a Catholicism that is neither Roman nor Greek nor Anglican, but Free—then the term Free Catholic will be accepted as the one possible unifying and inevitable name. When it is adopted, we shall find ourselves no longer, as now, sporadic congregations, weak and vacillating in purpose and in policy, but as one corporate Church, animated by one common ideal, and fused together by a passionate intensity of enlightened Churchmanship.

But enough of criticism—what practical steps shall we take? To remove these defects we have first to acknowledge their existence and their gravity, and then we have to set about rectifying them. To do this we need, before all things, the grace of God, a revival, a Pentecost, a simultaneous call from the pulpit to self-examination and prayer. There must be a deliberate effort to dig the wells of life anew, and a waiting upon God to fill them. We cannot obtain to order a fresh influx of spiritual life, but we can put ourselves in the way of getting it. If at the suggestion of the Conference Committee all our churches were to set apart simultaneously some Sundays and week-nights for special prayer and exhortation to piety, they would, I am confident, be richly blessed. Even a temporary stimulus of this kind might result in our acquiring, individually and collectively, life-long habits that would open a whole new world to our congregations.

With regard to ecclesiastical politics, a great reformation is needed, especially affecting the sacred office of the minister and the no less sacred status of the Church member, but for the present I think the line of true statesmanship is to do all we can to increase the power, the efficiency, and the authority of our National Conference. This must be done without any antagonism to the B. and F.U.A. But the functions of that doctrinal Association, which is doing its excellent work in a most catholic spirit, should be more rigorously defined. It might well be asked to confine its efforts to the work of publishing a certain class of books and tracts, to sending out lecturers, starting reading circles, making grants to missionary movements up to the point where those movements become "Churches," when they should be encouraged to transfer their allegiance to their respective Provincial Assemblies and the National Conference. The Conference should proceed to amass funds, acquire permanent offices and officers. It ought to meet at least once annually; it should proceed to issue a Book of Common Prayer and a Hymnal which congregations, as a matter of loyalty, should be urged to adopt. It should, moreover, publish periodically a representative organ, and generally rise to a sense of its greatness, and become constituted as our one central Church organisation, acting with increasing authority through our Provincial Associations.

There are, and will be, difficulties of detail: but let us see if we can get at some understanding respecting general aims. In conclusion, let me urge you to keep your columns open, for only by a frank but forbearing public discussion shall we be able to mature our ideas and our plans. J. M. Lloyd Thomas.

Nottingham.

[We were prepared to reserve space for a full discussion of Mr. Lummis's paper, the interest of which seems to us as yet by no means exhausted, and we shall be glad, at any rate for the next two weeks, to receive further contributions; only we must ask now that they shall be short and to the point. Then, in our issue of March 30, we propose to offer Mr. Lummis the opportunity of saying anything further that he may wish to say on the subject.—Ed. Inq.]

MANSFORD-STREET CHURCH AND MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, was held in the school-room of Rosslyn Hill Chapel, Hampstead, on Tuesday evening, Mr. E. B. Squire in the chair.

The Chairman in opening the proceedings recalled the past history of the mission, from the old days in Spicer-street, when it was in Mr. Corkran's charge, and spoke of the changes in the neighbourhood which had led to the removal to Mansford-street. The experience of the past eleven years had fully justified that step, and the earnest wish of Dr. Sadler and Dr. Drummond and their friend Mr. Stanton Preston, that such a religious home of the people should not be abandoned. The reports to be presented that evening showed how the good work was prospering.

Mr. Stanton W. Preston then read the Committee's report.

The report dwelt with satisfaction on the active part taken by the Committee of the congregation and its officers, who were represented on the General Committee of the Mission, and asked for more helpers to take part in the work of collecting for the Provident Fund. During the year 800 accounts had been opened and £635 had been collected. There was great scope for the extension of this good work if more helpers could be found.

The Chapel property, purchased in 1889, with subsequent additions, had now been vested in Trustees. To meet the heavy charge for ground-rent, the Permanent Chapel Building Fund had offered £500, and an additional sum of over £900 had been received in donations, of which it was very gratifying to note that the congregation had volunteered a contribution amounting to £18 7s. The Fund was not, however, yet sufficient to produce the whole income required to cover the ground-rent, and the Committee hoped that further donations would be received. The work of the Mission was admirably maintained by Mr. Cadman and the members of his family and other faithful helpers, but the General Fund showed a serious need of new and increased subscriptions.

Miss L. JONES, as treasurer, then presented the accounts, which showed the receipt of subscriptions amounting to £271 8s. 6d; donations, £37 19s.; grants from London District and B. and F.U.A., £50; chapel collections, £33 16s. 8d.; making with other small amounts a total of £398 14s. 11d. The year opened with a deficiency of £15 0s. 11d., and the expenses, which included £20 for repairs, amounted to £440 12s. 2d., which left a total deficiency of £56 18s. 2d. Two years ago a special appeal had produced a large amount in donations, which had not been repeated, and the annual collection at Rosslyn Hill also showed a falling-off, but there was a slight increase in the subscriptions.

The Rev. W. G. CADMAN read the Minister's Report, which opened with the following passage: — "In writing an annual report of the work of the Mansford-street Church and Mission one is always more impressed and humbled by the thought of what still needs doing than elated by the consciousness of what has been already done. Upon the dense mass of population that surrounds us the impression we make is apparently so slight. A few hundred families are, more or less, intimately known to us, and from most of these, children or adults, sometimes both, are brought under the influence of the Mission through its week-night institutions, its Sunday-school, and religious services; but it is the smallest fraction of the whole that we are able to reach. Nevertheless, it is easy to see that were the influence of the Mission, and of similar centres of light and healing, withdrawn, the consequences would be most disastrous. For this reason we are encouraged to go on, resolved that no opportunity shall be lost of scattering the seed of the kingdom.

"Statistics, when taken over a sufficient number of years, are useful as indicating the direction in which organised movements are tending. But statistics can never tell the whole tale of true missionary effort. Nor can any report describe what influences for good result from such quiet ministrations as take place at the bedside of the sick, or are rendered in other times of trial and difficulty. It is, however, one of the privileges of a protracted ministry to come across instances where the good results are beyond doubt; as when, for instance, the intemperate man has been permanently cured of his failing, and has not only begun but continued in the better way, so that the once wretched home has again become the abode of harmony and happiness; or when one sees families that had no good example set before them in the home, and others that were deprived of a father's care at the time when that care was most needed, growing up in respectability and honour and becoming, perchance, humble helpers in the Mission that gave them hope and encouragement and faith when the horizon was clouded and the way was lonesome. Instances such as these are the recompense most welcome to every earnest worker in the cause of social amelioration and of righteousness, and they are never wanting."

The report then referred to the difficulty of maintaining a regular congregation at the Mission Church, removals from the neighbourhood, and especially of the most thrifty and respectable residents, being so constant. At present no less than thirty of the registered members, including some of the most regular helpers, had to come by train. There had, however, been growth, and great stress was laid on the union of all the workers in common worship. Particulars were given of the admirable work of the Bethnal Green Provident Society, and clubs and other activities connected with the Mission. Continued help was asked in carrying out the useful convalescent work, and a special appeal was made for contributions to the Poor's Purse, which was empty, and for hospital letters, particularly for the German Hospital, Dalston, N.E., and out-door letters for the N.E. Hospital for Children, Hackney-road, which, with the Victoria Park Hospital, were the most useful for that neighbourhood. Male help for the Sunday-school was another special need.

Mr. W. J. CLARKE read the chapel Committee's report, and Mr. J. G. FOSTER presented the chapel accounts, both showing very satisfactory results.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the reports, having spoken of the finances as always a matter of anxiety and of the need of men teachers on Sunday, said that on the whole question of Domestic Missions the writings of Dr. Channing were most inspiring. His addresses in connection with the ministry to the poor in Boston were noble utterances, which must stimulate the desire to take part in such work. He expressed the earnest hope that some of their young men might be induced to go down to the mission, where, under the direction of Mr. Cadman, they would find no difficulty in entering upon the work in one or other of the many directions open to them.

Mr. J. CLASSON DRUMMOND, in seconding, said that to a casual observer it might appear that the educational work formerly done at the mission had suffered by the considerable growth of their social work. But that was a natural result of the development of the work of the School Board with its continuation classes. They now encouraged their scholars to stay at the Board-schools, where the work was so admirably done, and they themselves were able to attend more to the social side of their work. Whoever knew the dreary circumstances of the people amid miles of monotonous streets, obliged to go out of their homes, if they were to have any recreation, understood how essential the work of such a mission was in guarding against mischievous influences and corrupting habits. Through the wholesome recreation they provided they got hold of the people and helped in the formation of character. Their club work among the boys and girls was of the very highest kind. In the Preston Club they had from thirty to forty lads, of whom the greater number were about the age of twenty, at work in the world, being trained in business, and they had a great opportunity of influencing the formation of their character for good. Such work could only be done by personal contact, and the more helpers they had the wider the influence they could exert. It meant giving up one evening in the week, and he appealed for volunteers. The work would be found of great and growing interest. He also emphasised the need of contributions to the poor's purse, which, in addition to meeting many temporary needs, had to furnish several small pensions for deserving old people who were thus kept from the workhouse.

The resolution having been passed, the Committee and officers were appointed, on the motion of the Rev. J. E. STRONGE, seconded by the Rev. V. D. DAVIS, Miss L. Jones being re-appointed treasurer and Messrs. S. W. Preston and J. C. Drummond secretaries.

Mr. E. HOWARD then moved a resolution of confidence in the work of the mission, and appealing for personal help and funds to carry it on with increasing success. From his own experience during the past few months of work down at Bermondsey, he earnestly declared his conviction that such work was worthy of the support of the religiously-minded people of London. In Mansford-street he had seen the great Board-school opposite the church, and while they knew the good work done by such a school, it seemed to him that the mission did a greater, as it stood for higher things—the things spiritual and eternal. It set the Christian principle of giving in place of the great worldly principle of getting. Such thoughts should animate all their workers, and should take greater possession of people living in comfortable quarters in London. They must recognise the great void in the lives of those who lived in out-of-the-way and dilapidated parts of London, and be eager to help. Great stress was to be laid on getting hold of the children, who were readily attached to the Sunday-school. He sometimes thought what London would be like if all those mission outposts, established by all the Churches, were swept away, and their great antiseptic work, checking blasphemy, drunkenness, and immorality of every kind, came to an end. They seemed to him like the small Spartan army at Thermopylae, holding in check the Persian hosts, standing against the terrible forces of barbarism, which otherwise would sweep over their city. It was impossible to measure the greatness of the moral influence exerted by their schools and clubs. The very buildings themselves, kept clean and beautiful, were a constant influence for good. He believed there was a great future for such mission work, and especially when carried out in the spirit of their own missions. Nothing could take the place of such personal contact with the poor. But there must be a new resurrection among their people, a deeper sense of responsibility for such service. God had given them a revelation of Himself, which would be made known to others only through personal contact, and there must be the true spirit of self-sacrifice in such work.

The Rev. Edgar Daplyn seconded the motion, and spoke especially of what they owed to the minister, who gave his life to that hard and lonely work with all kinds of disappointments, living among the people—a work in the directest line of the teaching of Christ. The service of personal friendship by those resident among the people was the best of all, and Mr. Cadman and his family were deserving of the warmest sympathy and the amplest support.

The motion having been unanimously carried, a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman, moved by Mr. Edmund Grundy, and seconded by Mr. S. W. Preston, brought the meeting to a close.

NEW CENTURY MEETINGS.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, AND THE INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF UNITARIANS AND OTHER LIBERAL RELIGIOUS THINKERS AND WORKERS. MEETINGS IN LONDON, MAY 25th TO 31st, 1901.

Sir,—We have great pleasure in announcing that a series of most interesting and important meetings will be held in London during Whit-week, May 26 to May 31, 1901, and we shall be glad if you will give publicity to this notice in the columns of The Inquirer.

The preliminary programme published this week will indicate something of the extent and variety of the proceedings. Your readers will be interested to learn that addresses or papers by the following are already promised for the meetings of the International Council :—

Rev. Tony Andre (Florence), "The Liberal Movement in Italy."
Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A. (Liverpool), "Religious Thought in England at the close of the Nineteenth Century."
Professor G. Bonet-Maury, D.D. (Paris), "The Contribution of France to Religious Progress."
Professor G. Boros, D.D. (Kolozsvár) "Religious Problems in Hungary."
Rev. Samuel S. Crothers, D.D. (Cambridge, U.S.A.), "The Faith of a Free Church."
Rev. James Drummond, M.A., LL.D. (Oxford), "The Spiritual Factor of Life and the Materialism of the Time."
Professor B. D. Eerdmans (Leiden), "Liberal Religious Thought in the Dutch Reformed Church."
Rev. James Hocart (Brussels), "The Struggle with Catholicism in Belgium."
Rev. Kristofer Janson (Christiania), "Religious Liberalism in the Life and Literature of Scandinavia."
Professor Otto Pfleiderer, D.D. (Berlin), "The Social Activities of the Age and their Religious Significance."
Professor Jean Reville, D.D. (Paris), "The Mission of Liberal Protestants among Catholic Peoples."
Mr. V. Tchertkoff (friend of Count Tolstoy), "Liberal Religious Thought in Russia."
Mr. Zennosuke Toyosaki (Tokio), "Religious Liberalism in Japan."
Mr. Graham Wallas, M.A. (London), "Religion and Empire."
Mrs. Humphry Ward, "The Preservation of the Christian Ideal amid Changing Forms of Thought."
Rev. C. W. Wendtè (Boston, U.S.A.), "The Unitarian Message and Work."
Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, M.A., "The Opening Century viewed in the Light of the Great Poets."
Rev. Joseph Wood (Birmingham), "The Opportunities of the Young in the New Century."

There is reason to anticipate that the meetings will be unprecedented as to numbers and influence. We trust that ministers and delegates from congregations, Sunday schools, and choirs, from all over the country will attend, and we hope that many others will also be able to be present.

In regard to railway fares, the Whitsuntide excursion tickets will be available in many instances ; and if the Committee are informed before the end of April that a large number are coming from any one district, they can then approach the railway companies and endeavour to secure special facilities for those attending the meetings.

Owing to the very large number of delegates who are expected and the great inconvenience and waste of time in which they would be involved if hospitality were provided for them in distant suburbs, the Committee, if requested, will make arrangements for lodgings or hotels in the central parts of London. Bed and breakfast will cost from 4s. a day, or from 20s. for the week, according to the accommodation required. In the case of ministers of congregations, hospitality will be provided as far as practicable, if early application be made to the secretary.

John T. Brunner (President of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association),
H. Enfield Dowson (President of the Sunday-school Association),
J. Estlin Carpenter (President of the International Council).

March 5.

P.S.—All communications should be addressed to the secretary, Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, at Essex Hall, London.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

IRELAND.

The opening year of the new century finds the Free Churches on the Irish side of the channel at peace within themselves, at peace with one another, and nowhere undergoing violent assault from the forces of orthodoxy. So far as is known to the writer of this letter, our churches are going quietly forward with their worship and their work; and we seem to have generally agreed among ourselves that that is the best thing we can do, or the next best, at any rate, to helping one another and working together in a common cause.

It will depend upon ourselves, however, whether the calm that now reigns shall bring us renewal of strength or whether it shall mean the beginning of our break up and decay. If I am rightly informed, the decline in the total population of Ireland has now ceased; and one of the churches, at least, the energetic and wide-awake Methodist Church, has even been growing and increasing in numbers among us. I am one of those who believe that, if we have but the courage to embrace them, there are opportunities now open to us for the proclamation of the better faith; and if we will pull together there is common work awaiting us here which we shall ourselves be all the better for doing. Must I be more definite? The summer season will soon be upon us, and our people will be "down at the shore" for their usual month. Is there nothing to be done at Bangor? Nothing at Portrush? Have we no organisation that could take the work in hand?

May I venture to sound a note of warning, since the question of our numbers is an important one, as to what may be said of us when the forthcoming census returns are issued? We in Ireland are to be asked to say what religious body we belong to. We have exactly the same difficulty on this side of the water as exists in England, in answering any such question; and our difficulty is even increased by the fact that many of us like best of all the name "Non-subscriber"—a name which English people do not understand, but which Irish people both understand and honour. But when it comes to describing ourselves in a census-paper, what are we to say? At a ministers' meeting here, a little while ago, some one proposed that our people should be urged to adopt for the nonce a common designation. "I don't care what name we take," said the speaker, "so long as we agree about it." Just so! We always give it up exactly there. We should not and could not be brought to unite in favour of any common designation. And if I am right in thinking that the liberty, or, if you like, this wilfulness has largely increased among us of late, then our members, when the census-clerks reckon them up, are likely to show a considerable falling-off from the figures of ten years ago. So that if—or rather when—the decline is quoted against us, it will be well for our own people to understand it, that they may not be "afraid with any amazement."

There is a death-like stillness throughout the land just now as to the question of founding a Catholic University here. It is a silence that may at any moment be broken by the roar and rattle of an earthquake. When the best minds of a country confess themselves profoundly dissatisfied with existing arrangements for the most important thing of all in the nation's life; when party leaders have schemes of reform almost ready for publication; when politicians are sent to Parliament on the clearly understood condition that they shall not, for the time, either speak or write in favour of what they have declared to be a measure of public justice; when the most trusted friends and advisers of a people pledge themselves, one after another, to support a cause "when the moment arrives"—then the conditions are what you call "Electric," and change is in the air. Of the day and the hour, of the man and the method, who knows? But that it is coming and will come is just as certain as that the sun will rise to-morrow. For our own people the question which presses is whether we are quietly, thoughtfully, conscientiously, making up our minds as to the line we shall take. I hope we are, though I doubt it.

Meanwhile signs of unrest multiply upon us. The Royal University of Ireland stands in Ireland for what the University of London represents in England; Cuncti adsint; it is non-theological and non-political; it was planned "after the model" of London. What more do we want? Could anything be fairer or more open? But hear what was said publicly, only a few weeks ago, by a member of the governing body of the Royal: that "the odious distinction of religious creed . . . prevailed in it from the bottom to the top, from the porter who stood at the door to the Chancellor who sat in the supreme chair. They had this fact staring them in the face, that chancellors, fellows, examiners, and all sorts of officials must be elected not alone on the broad academic grounds which only should be regarded in an academic body, but that their religious creeds must be taken into consideration at every step." What was meant was, of course, that the Senate of the University tried to give each sect a lift in turn, not unfairly favouring any one of them to the neglect and wrong of any other. But is that what we mean by "open," "broad," "unsectarian," and other favourite words of ours? Is that what we desire, and knew of, and were content with? Or does it go to convince us all the more that we have got this thing wrong, and the reform we need will have to begin farther back and be more thorough than we at first thought? No wonder that, a fortnight ago, the Senate came to the unanimous resolution: "That the relations of the University with its own colleges and students, and with other colleges and students, are unsatisfactory," and asked for the appointment of a Royal Commission to consider the position of the University towards "the educational needs of the country at large."

There the great question is, and by all the tokens it will demand ere long its serious answer. We say, and truly say, "There is no scheme before us at present." And we say, less wisely, "Produce your scheme, and then we will judge it." With all respect, our people have not yet resigned their place among the formers and creators of public opinion, or consented to follow merely where others lead the way.

To close this letter, may I use the opportunity it gives me to make a request? I want to gather together, if I can, complete sets of our Irish Unitarian magazine literature. So far as I know, no library here thought it worth while to keep such magazines together, and bind them up and put them on its shelves for future use; yet now without them the history of our churches is difficult to get at. There was the Bible Christian. It ran, in a first series of monthly parts, from 1830 to 1835, in a "new series" from 1836 to 1838, and in "a third series" from 1839 to 1845, when it was merged in the Irish Unitarian Magazine, with which Dr. Montgomery had a good deal to do, and in which he wrote the first chapters of his history of Presbyterianism in Ireland. There were two volumes only of this magazine, dated for 1846 and 1847. Then came the Christian Unitarian, edited by the Rev. C. J. M'Alester, of Holywood. It ran through five volumes, from February, 1862, to January, 1867. At the time the Non-Subscriber was still appearing, following upon the Beth Birei Magazine," which was specially the organ of the York-street Church, Belfast. Lastly came the Disciple, under the guidance of the Rev. Alexander Gordon as editor-in-chief, its three volumes being dated for 1881, '82 and '83. Friends have helped me to gather together complete sets of the most recent of these magazines, and I should be very grateful for further assistance. Any odd numbers, even of the Bible Christian, the Non-Subscriber, or the Beth Birei, would be helpful to me.

DOUGLAS WALMSLEY.

EVENING.

HOMEWARD now the weary wend,
While the deepening shades descend;
Home again! the evening bell
Bids another day farewell.

Happy day, whose setting sun
Sees the task appointed done,
Brings the toiler full release—
Outward rest and inward peace!

Happy be our song of praise
To the Lord of happy days,
Happy most when most we know
Who it is that makes them so.

His the love that cures our care,
Lifts the burdens that we bear,
Ends the blessing of the light
With the sweet "Amen!" of night.

Keep us, Lord, until the morn
Brings us back to life new-born,
Free from guile and pure from stain,
Glad to live and love again.

W. G. TARRANT.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Belfast: Domestic Mission.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held on March 4, the Rev. Douglas Walmsley presiding. Miss Bruce presented the Committee's report, the Missionary (Rev. G. J. Slipper) read the record of his work for the year, and addresses were given by Mr. James Davidson, Mr. Robert Dickson, and the Revs. Dr. Mellone, T. Dunkerley, Richard Lyttle, and Alfred Davidson. The Rev. Dendy Agate, of Altrincham, was cordially thanked for the services he had rendered to the Mission on the preceding day, when he had preached on its behalf at the First Presbyterian Church in the morning and at All Souls' Church in the evening. Mr. Agate replied in a helpful and cheering speech. The Mission has had serious losses of late by the death of not a few of its staunch supporters, and a special effort is being made at the present time to gain for it increased financial and practical help. Mr. Slipper is working well and faithfully; he has the esteem and confidence of the Committee, and his work steadily prospers. Already, therefore, the movement to strengthen the Mission promises to be successful, and a very hopeful and earnest spirit animated all who were present at the annual meeting.

Chatham.—On Wednesday week a reception to the congregation was given by Mrs. Wood and Miss Tribe, supported by Mr Seaton and the officers of the church. The programme included songs and instrumental music and recitations by the Rev. G. S. Hitchcock and Mr. Seaton. The Ladies' Working Society helped in the arrangements for a very pleasant evening.

Edinburgh.—The Rev. A. Ernest Parry, of Kirkcaldy, lectured at St. Mark's Chapel, under the auspices of the Literary Society, on Monday evening, taking for his subject "Richard Jefferies, the Prose-Poet of the Fields." The lecture was warmly appreciated, and at its conclusion Mr. Drummond, alluding to Mr. Parry's approaching departure from Kirkcaldy, expressed on behalf of the Edinburgh congregation, the universal regret which is felt. Mr. Parry, in a few words, feelingly replied. The proceedings were brought to a close with the customary votes of thanks.

Ipswich.—At a meeting on Monday evening of the Girls' Social Circle, in the Unitarian Schoolroom, the Rev. Lucking Tavener in the chair, Dr. Mawer gave a lecture on "Crystals," abundantly illustrated by skeleton models, as well as by specimens of sapphires, emeralds, beryl, and other minerals in the conditions in which they were found in nature.

Lancaster.—A new organ, built oy Mr Albert Keats, of Sheffield, has just been opened, and the chapel has been painted and decorated, and electricity substituted for gas, the whole having cost between five and six hundred pounds. The opening services, conducted by the minister, the Rev. J. Channing Pollard, the organ recitals, and sacred concerts, have been most numerously attended. Lengthy and gratifying reports have appeared in the local Press.

London: Stepney.—The third of the series of monthly conferences on "The Religion the Age Wants" was held last Sunday afternoon, Miss Florence Hill in the chair, when the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed gave an earnest and spiritual address on "The Brotherhood of Nations." He quoted with effect his favourite poet, Dante, who had declared that no one should engage in politics unless he had first satisfied himself as to the real goal of civilisation. Without this knowledge and idea as a guiding ideal mistakes and disasters are inevitable. The ideal which the lecturer then unfolded was the lofty one of the universal brotherhood of the human race, the advance and elevation of every individual. He stated that the sentiment of nationality was only useful when it enabled us to sympathise with the like aspiration of others. He illustrated the right and the wrong attitude towards "foreigners" by a lively description of the conversation and manners of travellers on the Continent. There was a large attendance and animated discussion. In the evening Mr. Wicksteed preached in College Chapel on "South Africa." He sketched the history of the last 300 years, the acquisition of the Cape by the British, the great treks, the discovery of diamonds and its unhappy consequences, the bankruptcy of the Transvaal and the British occupation and subsequent withdrawal, the discovery of gold and the influx of adventurers, and finally the Jameson Raid, beginning the recent policy of Lies. He drew a lurid picture of the wickedness of British policy, and in conclusion urged national repentance.

Rotherham.—The annual meeting of the congregation of the Church of Our Father was held on Monday evening, Feb. 25. The chair was taken by the Rev. W. Stephens. The treasurer's balance-sheets of the Committee and of Fisher's Bequest Trustees and the Fellowship Fund, with the report as printed and circulated, were confirmed. Nine members were appointed on the Committee. Mr. Thomas Cocker was appointed secretary and Mr. Andrew Thomson treasurer for the ensuing year, both to act in the capacity of churchwardens. The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman. The report contained a list of the ministers of the congregation, beginning with a son of Oliver Heywood's of the same name, including the Rev. W. Allard (Ebenezer Elliott's "Parson Allard," and concluding with Jacob Brettell (1816-61), William Blazeby (1861-94), and William Stephens, who has been minister since 1894. The Old Chapel in Downs-row, now used as a Sunday-school and lecture-room, is to be renovated and enlarged by the addition of class-rooms.

Yarmouth.—On Thursday last a very successful entertainment was given by the Old Meeting Band of Hope. The programme consisted of music, songs, recitations, and a play called The Lost Umbrella. The history of the Band of Hope during the season has been a chequered one. At the commencement it was very small and select. A largely attended lantern entertainment raised the number to about fifty. But it was not found practicable to secure order with so many newcomers, who were not very amenable to discipline. It was therefore necessary to make a selection for a start, and only admit new members gradually. The result has been satisfactory.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk

BIRTHS.

WOODALL.—On the 6th March, at 13, Embankment-gardens, Chelsea, the wife of Henry Woodall, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

BROOKS.—On the 28th Feb., at Elm Hirst, Wilmslow, Cheshire, Mary, wife of James Howard Brooks, aged 61 years.

LAWFORD.—On the 6th March, at 23, Carlyle-mansions, Chelsea, suddenly, Edgar Charles Lawford, eldest son of the late George Lawford, aged 48 years.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, March 10.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Frederic Allen. "The Permanence of Jesus." Monday, 8.15 P.M., Lantern Pictures, "Rochester, its Cathedral and Castle," Rev. Frederic Allen. Wednesday, 13th, Annual Meeting, Sir John T. Brunner, Bart., M.P., presiding, 8 P.M.; tea at 7.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M., Rev. G. Davies Hicks, M.A., Ph.D., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. Page Hopps.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. Marchant.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. F. K. Freeston, and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Dawes Hicks, M.A., Ph.D.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. T. Elliot.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Rev. Edgar Daplyn, 11.15 A.M., "Ecce Homo," and 7 P.M., "Zaccheus." Children's Class, 12.30. Collections for Mansford-street Mission.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. Rev. F. W. Stanley, and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M., "Will Religion Die?" 7 P.M., "The Christ of Dogma, and the Jesus of Fact," Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church, High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Mansford-street Churchand Mission, Bethnal Green 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. G. Carter.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. Farrington. Service for Children, 3 P.M.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., and 7 P.M., P. W. Ames, F.R.S.L.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M. Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church, 11 A.M., and 6.30 P.M.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. T. E. M. Edwards.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. R. A. Andreae, of Manchester College.

Bedford, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. Rowland Hill.

Blackpool, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. David Davis.

Blackpool, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. Coe.

Bradford, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A.

Brighton, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. Livens.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M., and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Rev. F. H. Jones.

Deal and Walmer, Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. Shakspeare.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Burrows.

Eastbourne, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. G. St. Clair.

Guildford, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. Marten.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. John McDowell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Harwood, B.A.

Liverpool, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A.

Liverpool, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M.

Manchester, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. Shanks.

Newport, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Clement E. Pike.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A.

Portsmouth, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. Thomas Bond.

Portsmouth, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. Cosens Prior.

Rochdale, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M., Rev. T. P. Spedding, and 6 P.M., Rev. A. W. Fox, M.A.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Priestley Prime.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. Agar.

Sevenoaks, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. Harold Rylett. Stables in the grounds.

Southend, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. Dear.

Southport, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved.

Torquay, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'Connor.

Tunbridge Wells, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

York, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. Rawlings, M.A.

IRELAND.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. G. Hamilton Vance, B.D.

Warrenpoint, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 noon, Rev. W. E. Mellone. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

Cape Town, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. Balmforth.

Sydney, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Walters.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—March 10th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The 'Decalogue'—Is it the Foundation of Morality? IV. The Sabbath."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—March 10, at 11.15 A.M., JOHN M. ROBERTSON, "The Nineteenth Century."—"Modern Science: Its Moral and Philosophical Outcome."

MANSFORD-STREET CHURCH and MISSION.

RESOLUTIONS passed at the Twelfth Annual Meeting, held at Rosslyn Hill, Hampstead, on Tuesday, March 5th, 1901, E. B. Squire, Esq., in the Chair :—

1. Moved by the Chairman and seconded by Mr. J. C. Drummond—

"That the reports now read be received, adopted and printed for circulation, under the direction of the Committee."

2. Moved by Rev. J. E. Stronge, and seconded by Rev. V. D. Davis—

"That the following Ladies and Gentlemen be the Committee and Officers for the ensuing year :—Mrs. E. B. Squire, Miss E. G. Baily, Rev. Dr. Herford, Sir E. Durning-Lawrence, Bart., M.P., Rev. E. Daplyn, Messrs. T. Adams, W. J. Clark, J. G. Foster, E. F. Grundy, J. R. Grundy, F. W. Lawrence, H. B. Lee, and E. B. Squire; Treasurer, Miss L. Jones; Secretaries, Mr. S. W. Preston and Mr. J. Classon Drummond; Auditors, Mr. E. B. Squire and Mr. Heald."

3. Moved by Mr. R. E. Howard, and seconded by Rev. Edgar Daplyn—

"That this Meeting desire to express their conviction of the value of the work done at Mansford-street as shown by the reports read, and to urge all those who are interested in mission work to give personal help and supply funds to enable it to be carried on with increased success."

4. Moved by Mr. E. F. Grundy, and seconded by Mr. S. W. Preston—

"That the best thanks of the Meeting be given to Mr. E. B. Squire for his great kindness in taking the Chair this evening."

S. W. PRESTON, J. CLASSON DRUMMOND, } Hon. Secs.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL on WEDNESDAY, MARCH 13th, at 8 P.M., when Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., will preside, supported by the Rev. Frederic Allen (the Minister), the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, C. F. Pearson, Esq., S. S. Tayler, Esq., and other ministers and laymen.

Tea (to which friends are cordially invited) will be provided at 7.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

SIMULTANEOUS COLLECTIONS

in support of the Work of the Association will be held on SUNDAY, March 17th, at the following places of Worship :—

Liverpool	... Ullet-road Church.
"	Hope-street Church.
"	Ancient Chapel of Toxteth.
Southport	... Portland-street Church.
Birkenhead	... Charing Cross Church.
Chester	... Matthew Henry's Chapel.

Collections at Warrington and Gateacre will be held later in the year.

L. B. deKLEIN, President.
R. ROBINSON, Treasurer, 11, Old Hall-street.
B. P. BURROUGHS, Secretary, 19, Sweeting-street
Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, Missionary.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE, THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss Jessie Baker (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

TRAINED TEACHER desires Re-engagement as non-resident GOVERNESS in family in a London. Matriculation (First Division). Teacher's Diploma (Cambridge). Good English, Languages, Mathematics, Elementary Science. Three years' experience. Age 24.—F. G., Inquirer Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, Situation as NURSE-ATTENDANT, either Lady or Gentleman. No heavy lifting. Good references.—Address, Miss Johnson, The Croft, Gt. Bealings, near Woodbridge.

WANTED, by an elderly lady, a useful MAID. Unitarian, good reader and needlewoman, accustomed to illness, and an abstainer.—Apply, stating age, wages, and references to M. S., Peirce's Library, 50, High-street, Sydenham.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE, E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

Directors.

Chairman—Sir H. W. Lawrence, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.

Deputy-Chairman—Mark H. Judge, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.

F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.

Miss Orme, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.

Stephen Seaward Tayler, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and

Mrs. Henry Rutt, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people ceived in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor road, S.W.

BOURNEMOUTH —Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable Apartments, well situated midway between station and beach in sunny Felixstowe. Reasonable terms.—Apply Mrs. H. ROBINSON, Kimberley House, Ranelagh-road.

LAKE DISTRICT, furnished House; 3 entertaining, 6 bed (2 double bedded) rooms, bath, w.c.—Address, INQUIRER Office.

BOURNEMOUTH. — Board-residence. High position, facing South, with balcony and good garden. Suitable for Open-air Treatment. Close to sea, sheltered by pines, and adjoining the car-route to all parts.—D., Cliff House, 1, Westminster-road, Branksome Park.

TWO or Three FURNISHED ROOMS, Ground floor, Bath h. and c. Nice neighbourhood. Near Free Church, Park, Terrace Gardens and Rail. Good attendance. Moderate terms.—21, The Hermitage, Richmond, Surrey.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.

Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

SWEET PEAS.—The best and newest varieties at lowest prices. Catalogue free. Choice mixed varieties 6d. per oz., 4 ozs. 1s. 6d.—F. ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A. Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. (Established 1893).

PUPILS prepared for the Universities; resident gymnast and French mistress; healthy conditions of life; hockey and tennis.

Prospectus on application to Miss MACRAE MOIR, Lingholt, Hindhead.

Station, Haslemere.

BABBACOMBE, TORQUAY.—HOME TUITION in FRENCH and GERMAN.—Rev. A. E. and Mrs. O'CONNOR would receive, for special instruction, two boys or girls as Boarders. Educated in Germany, he resided there long; and in France. Mrs. O'Connor is a native of France. Reference—W. H. Herford, B.A., Paignton.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

MISS JARVIS and MISS CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH, (BARKER FOUNDATION.)

HEAD MASTER, GUY LEWIS, M.A., Oxford.

ASSISTANT MASTERS—Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and Manchester College, Oxford, and H. L. JONES, B.A., Merton College, Oxford.

Visiting Masters for Science, Music, Drawing, Gymnastics and Manual Instruction.

Next Entrance Examination, April 10th.

There are a few Vacancies on the Foundation. For Prospectus and particulars, apply to the Headmaster, or to the Clerk to the Governors, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

THE NEW KINGDOM.

AN

ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY.

ONE PENNY. Post Free, 1s. 6d. per Annum.

Contents for MARCH.

Queen Victoria: A Lament (Verses). W. R. Shanks.
Queen Victoria: Some Manchester References. Ald. Rawson, Principal Gordon, Revs. Barrow, Shanks, Reynolds, Prime, Taylor. Hall.
Queen Victoria: Her Religion. R. B. Drummond, B.A.
Sunday in the Sahara. Andrew Chalmers.
My Mother (Verses). From the Danish of Harold Olstad, by Eph. Turland.
The Watch-Tower: Liberal Nonconformity; A Contrast. W. R. S.
Municipal Government (concluded). J. M. Bass, M.A.
My Early Days. Chap. III. Walter Ferguson.
In the Field.

To be had from the Publishers, Messrs. WM. HOUGH and SONS, Manchester; RAWSON and Co., 16, New Brown-street, Manchester; ESSEX HALL, London; and all Newsagents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Information concerning the History and Growth of the Bible.

Collected, condensed, and arranged by BERTRAM TALBOT for

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS & OTHERS.

This little book is the outcome of a free enquiry. It consists largely of verbatim quotations from many sources worked up into a connected whole, and for nearly every statement a reference is given to the page of the authority which supports the statement, or from which, if a quotation, it is derived.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

Price Sixpence net, post free.

SUSTENTATION FUND

For the Augmentation of Ministers' Stipends.

Secretaries of Congregations desiring Grants from this Fund for the year 1901-2 may obtain the needful Forms of Application by writing before March 31, 1901, to A. W. WORTHINGTON, The Hill, Stourbridge.

HARRY RAWSON,
A. W. WORTHINGTON, } Hon. Secs.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

ZEBRA

Grate Polish

No Hard Work.

The British & Foreign Unitarian Association,
The Sunday School Association
AND
The International Council of Unitarians
And other Liberal Religious Thinkers and Workers.

THE NEW CENTURY MEETINGS.
LONDON, MAY 25th to 31st, 1901.

PRELIMINARY PROGRAMME.

SATURDAY, MAY 25th.

4—6.—Tea and Coffee at Essex Hall. Arrangements about Lodgings, Excursions, &c.

SUNDAY, MAY 26th (Whit Sunday).

10.—Visits to Schools and Churches in and near London.

3.30.—Gathering of Elder Scholars at Essex Hall: Religious Service and Address.

5—6.—Tea and Coffee at Essex Hall for Teachers and their friends.

7.—Service for Sunday School Teachers and Church Workers at Little Portland-street Chapel.

MONDAY, MAY 27th (Bank Holiday).

10—4.—Conducted Parties will visit Places of Interest: Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's, British Museum, Crystal Palace, National Gallery, South Kensington Museum, Tate Gallery, The Tower, Wallace Collection, Zoological Gardens, &c.

4—6.—Afternoon Tea at Essex Hall. Evening free for Social Intercourse and Entertainments.

7—9.—Annual Meeting, Temperance Association: President, The Earl of Carlisle.

TUESDAY, MAY 28th.

9.—Breakfast, Sunday School Association, King's Hall, Holborn (entrance from Newton-street).

10—1.—Annual Meeting, Sunday School Association. Welcome to Sunday School Delegates. Addresses on "Retrospect," and on "Outlook."

2.—Conducted visits to Places of Interest.

2.30.—Annual Meeting Postal Mission and Unitarian Workers' Union.

3.30.—Committee of Triennial Conference.

4—6.—Afternoon Tea at Essex Hall.

6.45.—Communion Service at Little Portland-street Chapel.

8—9.30.—United Religious Service: British and Foreign Unitarian Association, Sunday School Association, and International Council, at St. James' Hall, with Choir from all parts of the country: Mr. John Harrison, Hon. Organist.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 29th.

9.30.—Devotional Service at Essex Hall.

10—1.—Annual Business Meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association.

2.—Conducted visits to Places of Interest in and about London.

2.30—4.—Conference of Presidents, Secretaries, and Treasurers of Unitarian Societies.

4—6.—Afternoon Tea at Essex Hall.

8—11.—Conversazione and Reception by Sir John T. Brunner, Bart., M.P., President of the B. and F. U. A. Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, Piccadilly.

THURSDAY, MAY 30th.

9.30—Devotional Service at Essex Hall.

10—1.—International Council of Unitarians and other Liberal Religious Thinkers and Workers. Address by the President, Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, M.A. Welcome to Foreign Delegates. Resolutions and Papers.

1.30.—Luncheon to Delegates of Sunday School Unions, followed by a Conference.

2.30.—Inaugural Meeting of the Young People's Union.

4.—Meeting of Ministers, with Paper by Rev. C. W. Wendté.

4—6.—Afternoon Tea at Essex Hall.

8—10.—Great Public Meeting. Speeches by Representative Speakers on Present-day Religious Thought and Life. Westminster Town Hall, Caxton-street, Victoria-street.

FRIDAY, MAY 31st.

9.30.—Devotional Service at Essex Hall.

10—1, and 2—3.30.—International Council of Unitarians and other Liberal Thinkers and Workers. Short Papers on Questions of Religious Thought and Life by Representatives from America, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Holland, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Russia, Scandinavia, and Switzerland.

4—6.—Reception at the Mansion House by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor of London to the Representatives from Abroad and the Delegates of Congregations and Sunday Schools.

9—11.—Reception by Sir Edwin and Lady Durning-Lawrence at 13, Carlton House-terrace.

Invitations have been forwarded to the Secretaries of Congregations, inviting the attendance of Ministers and Representatives of the Church, the Sunday School, and the Choir. The Secretary, Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, will be glad to receive the Forms duly filled up as soon as possible, so that the necessary arrangements may be made about Lodgings, Hotels, Excursions, and Receptions.

Essex Hall, London, March 7th, 1901.

Printed by Woodfall & Kinder, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. Kennedy, at the Office, 3, Essex-st., Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, John Heywood, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday, March 9, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3064. NEW SERIES, No. 168.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 161
ARTICLES :—
Theodore Parker 163
Guilds 166
The King's Accession 169
Salvationists & Unitarians Worship Together 172
CORRESPONDENCE :—
New Century Meetings 164
A Living Church 170
MEETINGS :—
Khasi Hills Unitarian Union 164
Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-st. Chapel 171
OBITUARY :—
The Rev. C. L. Corkran 165
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 167
LEADER :—
What is Christianity ?—II. 168
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
London and the South Eastern Counties ... 172
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 173
ADVERTISEMENTS 174

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE London and South Eastern Provincial Assembly is earnestly mindful of its new century duty and opportunity. As already intimated by the President, in a letter which we published last week, simultaneous exchanges amongst the ministers in the province will take place on Sunday, March 24, and in some cases the annual Assembly collection will be fittingly taken on this occasion.

We are also glad to learn that a United New Century Service has been arranged to take place on the following Tuesday, March 26. This service will be held in the renovated Little Portland-street Chapel, at 7.30 P.M., and the chapel choir will lead the singing. It will be chiefly devotional in aim, but brief addresses will also be given by the Revs. W. G. Tarrant and F. K. Freeston. Ministers and secretaries of our London churches are asked to make this service known at once to their congregations.

TO-MORROW (Sunday) morning the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke is to preach in Little Portland-street Chapel, concluding the present series of sermons there. Our readers will remember that at the opening of the renovated chapel it was announced that the congregation proposed to erect memorial tablets to the Revs. John James Tayler and Dr. Martineau, containing medallion portraits, to be placed on the wall on either side of the Communion table, over which is the memorial to the Rev. Edward Tagart, the first minister of the chapel. On Sunday morning we understand that there is to be a collection to be devoted to the Memorial Fund.

A FEATURE of special interest in the annual meeting of the Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, of which a report will be found in another column, was the resolution authorising the purchase of a house and garden adjoining the chapel in Stamford-street. The premises, which are freehold, are to be had for £700, the opportunity of the purchase having been secured through the watchful care of Mr. S. S. Tayler. Towards the purchase-money legacies amounting to £150 are available, and another £150 has been given by Sir E. Durning-Lawrence, Lady Lawrence, and Miss Durning Smith, while Sir John Brunner, who presided at the meeting, said that he would follow the example of his friends, and make a similar donation. There is therefore now an opportunity for the friends of the good work to come in and make up the amount. The house will be available as a residence for the minister or other workers at the Mission, and there can be no doubt that such a settlement of workers, who will live in constant contact with the people they desire to befriend, would immeasurably strengthen the beneficent influence of the Mission.

THE annual meeting of the Evangelical Free Church Council opened at Cardiff on Tuesday. The Rev. C. H. Kelly, the retiring President, preached a sermon on "Experience, an Essential of True Religion," which will be found in this week's Christian World Pulpit. The new President, the Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., then delivered his address, the subject of which was "The Unifying Forces of the Times." As to Imperialism he said that Empire did not mean to them aggrandisement, but power and opportunity for righteous ends. Between Rome and Gospel religion the great gulf remained fixed, and endowed clericalism was a great obstacle, yet the tide of growing unity among religious bodies swept on. It was Christ and Christ alone who would unite the Churches. For fifteen centuries they had been fighting for "isms": the Church of the Twentieth Century was going to fight for Christ.

Subsequently a resolution, recognising that there were differences of opinion as to the war in South Africa, but expressing a passionate desire for peace, was moved by Dr. Mackennal, seconded by a gentleman who believed the war to be a necessary one, and unanimously passed.

WE are glad to quote from this week's Christain World the following timely note: —"The Church Times proposes (metaphorically) to stone the Bishop of Hereford, because he has written the preface to a volume of 'Christian Conference Essays,' in which one of the contributions is by Dr. Brooke Herford, the well-known Unitarian minister. This High Church organ asks whether the Churchmen of Dr. Percival's diocese are content to see their Bishop in such company. It asserts that 'the leading Dissenting sects refuse to recognise the Unitarian body as a Christian society.' It considers that it is 'grossly unseemly' to call a conference Christian in which a Unitarian expounds his views. Finally, it asserts: 'A little mild playing at Popery is far less harmful than a serious conference on a common footing with non-Christians.' It seems to us that it is 'grossly unseemly' and presumptuous for The Church Times to dogmatise about the views of Free Churchmen. Profoundly as the mass of Evangelical Free Churchmen may differ from the Unitarians, they are not prepared to brand them as 'non-Christians.' To them Christianity is, above all, a spirit and a life, and they honour men of such devout life and inspiring influence as the late Dr. Martineau as pre-eminent Christians. The last statement we quote from The Church Times is a revelation. The High Churchmen, then, are 'playing at Popery'; it is well to have that frankly admitted. 'Playing at Popery': are, then, the Anglican 'Masses' and confessionals, with all the tremendous claims attached to them, merely play?"

DR. WINNINGTON-INGRAM, who in 1897 became the second Bishop of Stepney, the Suffragan Bishop for East London, is to be the new Bishop of London, in succession to the late Dr. Creighton. Dr. Winnington-Ingram is a young man, younger even than Dr. Ryle, the new Bishop of Exeter, and is unmarried. Born in January, 1858, he was educated at Marlborough and Keble. In 1889 he became the head of Oxford House, Bethnal-green, and six years later rector of Bethnal-green. Of the quality of his work in the East-end his little book on "Work in Great Cities" bears witness, consisting of six lectures on "Pastoral Theology," delivered in the Divinity School at Cambridge in 1895. As to the feeling in the diocese on the Bishop's appointment, the Times says:—

It may be stated quite freely that though the Evangelicals in his district are as devoted to him as any of his clergy, the sympathies of the Bishop are with the High Church school. But he was in constant consultation with the late Bishop, whose last years were devoted to a fairly successful effort to keep things within the four corners of the Book of Common Prayer. Moreover, the new Bishop can make a stronger personal appeal to the recalcitrants in that he has worked hard among them as one of themselves. Indeed, it is in this personal aspect of the appointment that its strength rests. It means that the diocese will be under a man who is not intellectually great, but whose individuality has already done much to make fashionable people take a more serious view of their responsibilities, to brighten the lives of the dwellers in the overcrowded parts of East London, and to induce men to enter the somewhat depleated ranks of the Anglican clergy.

The Archdeacon of London, preaching in St. Paul's on Sunday afternoon, said that it was his privilege to give the first public welcome to the new Bishop, and then proceeded (as reported in the Guardian) as follows:—

If ever there was a man who lived by the power of Christian sympathy it is he. The whole diocese will rejoice to have as their leader and ruler one so whole-hearted. What has given him his rapidly acquired influence over the educated people in the west of London? What has obtained him his present power over the East-end population? What has attracted the enormous crowds who have come to hear him preach at St. Paul's? It is the earnestness of his single-minded belief, the self-consecration to his work, the consistency of his life, the simplicity of his devotion, and the absolute sincerity of his affectionate sympathy for every sort and condition of men with whom he has had to do, from the highest to the lowest. With a guide of such primitive faith and zeal, such plainness of life, such happy unworldliness, such cheerful optimism, such unflagging energy, such fresh and open and attractive friendliness, such unruffled good humour, we look forward, under God's blessing, to prosperous and progressive days for the Kingdom of Christ in this mightiest and most perplexing of all the dioceses in the world.

The Holy Synod of the Orthodox Church of Russia has at last published the excommunication which has long been hanging over Count Leo Tolstoy, denouncing his anti-Christian and anti-ecclesiastical teachings. The excommunication, which is signed by the Metropolitans of St. Petersburg, Kieff, and Moscow, and other ecclesiastics, is couched in mild and benevolent terms. It states that as the Count could not be persuaded from his open teaching, he can no longer be considered a member of the Orthodox Church, until he repents and is reconciled. "We, therefore, place on record his apostacy from the Church, and we pray that the Lord may restore him to comprehension of the truth. We pray thee, therefore, O merciful God, who desirest not the death of a sinner, hear us, and have mercy on him and restore him to thy Holy Church. Amen." The March Bookman is a Tolstoy number, with illustrated articles on "Tolstoy as a Writer," by G. H. Perris, and on his place in European Literature by Edward Garnett. As a supplement there is also a fine full-page portrait.

Mr. Carpenter's course of six lectures on "The Bible in the Nineteenth Century," delivered on successive days at Leeds, Bolton, and Liverpool, was concluded last week, and was throughout eminently successful, both in point of the numbers attending and the public interest aroused. That the attendance at Leeds was the smallest of the three by no means shows that the lectures were not warmly appreciated there. In Liverpool, as we have already recorded, the audience was very large, for such lectures, being estimated at from 400 to 450, while the last lecture was, if anything, more largely attended than the first, and the local papers kept the subject well before the public. At Bolton we hear that Spinners' Hall was filled each evening, and one of the most gratifying features was the attendance of several clergy and ministers of other denominations, as was also the case in Liverpool. At the close of the last lecture at Bolton the Rev. C. J. Street took the chair and a cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Carpenter was moved by the Rev. J. A. Lauria, vicar of Ainsworth, and seconded by Mr. Godfrey Woodhead, a member of the Society of Friends. There is no question that much good has been done by this experiment, and many of the regular attenders at the lectures, not Unitarians, have expressed a strong wish that it will be repeated next winter.

On Tuesday afternoon Lord Rosebery opened the Whitechapel Art Gallery, which has been built at a cost of some £16,000, next to the Whitechapel Free Library and Museum, in the great thoroughfare, not far from the corner of Commercial-road. The Free Library is one of the munificent gifts of Mr. Passmore Edwards, who has been also one of the chief contributors to the cost of the Art Gallery. This admirable building is really the outcome of those annual loan exhibitions of pictures which Canon Barnett has held at Easter for nearly twenty years in his school-room at St. Jude's. It is now proposed in these larger premises to have a series of such exhibitions throughout the year, of crafts as well as arts. The present exhibition is to be opened for five weeks, and will be succeeded about Whitsuntide by an exhibition of Chinese Art.

The collection of pictures now in the Whitechapel Art Gallery is of the greatest interest. Both on the ground floor and in the spacious, well-lighted room above, and in the smaller ante-room, there are treasures of the highest value, old masters, such as Vandyke's "Sir Edmund Verney," Romney's "Mrs. Glynn," and Gainsborough's "Shepherd Boy," a number of fascinating Prae-Raphaelite pictures by Madox-Brown, Millais' "Carpenter's Shop," Rossetti's "Monna Pomona," and a number of works by the most popular of recent painters, such as Peter Graham and Leader. In the larger rooms the public are warned by a cord not to go too near to the pictures; but in the ante-room there is a Turner hung, entirely without protection, on a level with elbows and irresponsible umbrellas, which, in a crowd, might easily do irreparable mischief. The Director has no doubt already been warned of the danger.

In a letter which appeared in the Liverpool Daily Post of Thursday, the Rev. R. A. Armstrong recalls a series of lectures delivered in Hope-street Church on successive Sunday evenings in 1892, when ministers of the Baptist and Congregational bodies and the Society of Friends expounded the principles of their own religious community, and Mr. Armstrong was able to read letters from clergy of the Roman and Anglican and Presbyterian churches, written to him for the same purpose. Turning now to other communities "more remote, perhaps from the current forms of Christian orthodoxy, but all contributing in their measure to the higher life of our country," Mr. Armstrong announces for to-morrow a lecture by a Swedenborgian minister, who is to be followed on March 24 by Mr. Albert Crompton, of the "Church of Humanity." On Monday evening the Rev. S. Friedeberg, of the old Hebrew congregation, is to lecture on "The Truth and Principles of Judaism."

After these expositions, Mr. Armstrong himself will lecture on Sunday evening, March 31, on "The Faith and Principles of Unitarian Christianity"; and referring to the whole matter he writes:—

My purpose in arranging this series of discourses is the same as that by which I was actuated in organising the previous course in 1892. I believe that no higher service can be done to our common religious life than to mitigate the prejudices and modify the misunderstandings which hold religious men of different schools aloof from mutual sympathy and fellowship. I well know that our intellectual interpretation of religion cannot be uniform, that the intellect divides and leads men to different philosophies and divergent theologies, or no theology at all. But I believe that the religious sentiment itself is kindred in all good men; that the like love, and aspiration, and awe, and longing for the good, forms, at any rate, a large part of the religion of us all. And I am certain that we are making for the Kingdom of God if we get to understand each other's thoughts on the highest themes better than we can while we all hold utterly aloof from each other. Nor is it from any indifference to truth that I open my pulpit to men from whom I differ widely in conviction, but because I believe that the cause of truth is itself best served by such mutual tolerance and consultation.

In conclusion, Mr. Armstrong expresses the wish that such a function were not thrown on "a small church, itself excluded from the general communion of Christian men," but since the ministers of the larger and more popular churches will not take the lead in this endeavour, he glories in the freedom of his own Church, which renders it possible; and he adds the wish that in Liverpool instead of aiming at a Cathedral which is to be only for the "dominant denomination," a temple more spacious and glorious might be erected which might embrace all the varied religious life of Liverpool, and "be at the occasional service, under due regulation, of every religious group in our midst, and symbolise the blessed unity of spirit under many divergent creeds."

Dr. Carter, Professor of Therapeutics in the Liverpool University College, lectured on Wednesday evening in the Hope-street Church Hall, on "The Physiological side of the Temperance Question," the Rev. R. A. Armstrong in the chair. Dr. Carter showed how, like the once-cherished ideas about periodical bleeding and coddling in a warm room as a cure for cold, the belief regarding alcohol as a means of vigour and longevity had come to be exploded in the light of careful statistics. Citing the quinquennial returns of the Temperance and General Provident Institution, he said these had repeatedly proved that the total abstainer had a much better chance of long life than even a moderate drinker. The lecturer was cordially thanked, on the proposition of the chairman, seconded by Mr. Philip Holt. On the motion of Mr. Harold Coventry, seconded by Mr. J. H. Burroughs, the meeting enthusiastically adopted a resolution in support of Mr. J. W. Crombie's Bill for prohibiting the sale of drink to children under sixteen years of age.

Correspondents are requested to note that to be sure of insertion the same week, news must reach the Office by the first post on Thursday at latest, and the earlier in the week the better.

THEODORE PARKER.

BY THE REV. CHARLES G. AMES.*

THEODORE PARKER cannot be named among the creators of systems or the founders of institutions. It was not given him to establish even one permanent religious society. His work was not chiefly that of the architect. In the wilderness of Orthodoxy, of hesitant Liberalism, and of a half apostate republic, he was a Voice—a clear ringing Voice—crying, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight!"

This was his mission and message—to demand, in God's name, the straightening of the ways. First, by the rectification of religious thinking, in the interest of simplicity and sincerity. Next, by the rectification of conduct—personal, social, and public—in the interest of honesty, justice, humanity. Like John the Baptist, he drew after him much people. That Voice was heard across the land, as if a son of thunder had spoken. Whether men heeded or hooted, they were compelled to hear. Like the preaching of Savonarola, this austere and fearless call to a true way of life reached many a prepared heart and stirred many a hearer to re-examine his professed beliefs, the rectitude of his acts, and the righteousness of public laws and their administration.

In every present demand for honest speech, for the revision of creeds, for social justice, or for a return to the national standard of impartial liberty and impartial law, in every rebuke of cowardly silence or corrupting compromise, we may still hear the Voice that sounded more than half a century ago in Music Hall.

A Grateful Acknowledgment.

I could acknowledge a large personal debt to Theodore Parker. One printed sermon, which found its way to Minnesota in 1855, shamed me out of that intellectual dishonesty and moral cowardice which dares not face a doubt nor listen to evidence against cherished traditions. It is true that, in the very act of breaking my chains, he hurt and angered me by the rough handling of his big, thundering hammer; but, perhaps, the shock which tortured every spiritual nerve was like electrical treatment for partial paralysis. I still think, however, that Samuel Longfellow was right in saying that Parker "lacked reverence for other men's reverence." In writing on some subjects, he used a stick of lunar caustic for a pen—as if he scorned rather than pitied what Charles Reade calls "the darkness of the professional mind." He had not outgrown the old assumption that reverence for idols is irreverence to God; or, in some moods, he may have forgotten that the true God draws men to himself through illusions, errors and superstitions. Or shall we say that these limitations of his outlook served like the walls of a gun-barrel to give directness and intensity to the discharge?

One can speak any truth; but the mode of his speaking and the personal mood in which he speaks must not be mistaken for a part of the truth. Something of this purport has been said by Richter, and it might be repeated to edification as often as once a year.

Not Discerning Others' Thoughts.

David A. Wasson, who knew Parker well and loved him much, yet says that he seemed incapable of understanding or allowing for the force of motives in other men who disagreed with him in matters of opinion or conduct; that "it never seems to have occurred to him that there might be some truth in the doctrine he attacked"; and that he could rarely state the views of an opponent in terms which the opponent would accept as his own, so strong was the tendency to caricature.

Holding a lenient, if not a lax view of sin in general, he was disposed to bear down hard on particular sinners. Like a man I heard of in the West, he apparently "believed in the nobility of the human race as a whole, and in the total depravity of the individual."

A Baptist minister once boasted to me of a deacon in his church who was "violently all right." We have had more than one noble moral leader who was deficient in that judicial sense which discriminates between varying shades of good and ill, so that all things appear either white or black. This is not so bad as the blindness which confounds right and wrong; yet it may involve some measure of hardship and injustice, and it generally rubs the fur the wrong way. "He that winneth souls is wise." "Let two men teach the same truth, both with unflinching courage: one shall be mobbed, and the other applauded." Yet how was it in Judea? There may be a devitalising tameness which is one of the powers of darkness, as fatal as falsehood and treason.

His Tender Love.

But Parker's sharp personal arraignments and castigations cannot be referred to malice or bitterness of spirit. He simply could not measure the sensibilities of other men, and may be acquitted of cruelty like the Michigan schoolmaster, who "unduly estimated the thickness of a boy's pantaloons." At heart, Parker was of womanly gentleness. Wasson testifies that "warm, generous, abundant springs of human love wandered through and watered all the wide territory of his soul."

The Passion of his Pity.

His hatred of hurtful errors and practical wrongs was kept at high heat by his genuine love of mankind. He did not look on oppression, fraud, and misery as abstractions, to be contemplated with philosophic calmness. He saw living men, women, and children exposed, suffering, and degraded, and he leaped to the rescue.

He could never lift his hat to that cold-blooded respectability which is another name for selfishness and inhumanity, and which in his time served as a buttress to oppression. How he stripped the mask of piety from the priests of Mammon! How he dragged hypocrisy from its comfortable hiding-place under the altar-cloth! How he pricked into sensibility a benumbed public conscience!

Champion of Truth and Right.

He came to the front at a time when an irrepressible conflict had broken out between the Religion of Tradition, which rests on the basis of a Supernaturalism and shows its teeth when asked to show its credentials, and the Religion of Humanity, which rests on faith in the present divinity, and claims every good thing on earth and in heaven as the rightful inheritance of the least of our brethren. Into that conflict he flung himself with knightly abandon, clad in the double panoply of knowledge and courage; and, gathering the sheaf of hostile spears into his own breast, he died with the cry on his lips, "Make way for Liberty!" He was a warrior who could give and take hard blows; and his words, like Luther's, were "half-battles."

Nothing in his word or example can be worth so much to us as his indomitable moral courage. His work was done at a time when pulpit timidity appeared to be the rule, as perhaps it always is. His outspeaking fidelity should brace the spirit of each succeeding generation, like those stirring lines of Lowell:—

> They are slaves who fear to speak
> For the fallen and the weak;
> They are slaves who will not choose
> Hatred, suffering, and abuse
> Rather than in silence shrink
> From the truth they needs must think;
> They are slaves who dare not be
> In the right with two or three.

Still the Same Need.

Heaven knows what need we have in soft and accommodating times of that sturdiness of heart and spirit which can make itself good against social pressure or the love of ease; and just now, in resistance to that powerful and arrogant syndicate of commercial, political, and military interests and influences, which blood-poisons civilisation, and threatens to seduce the children of the Cross into alliance with Antichrist!

There has been a man among us with nerves in his intellect, with red blood in his moral passion, with iron sinews in his will, with elemental energy kindling and throbbing in his soul; and all these dedicated, all laid as an offering on the altar of the religion we profess, the religion of love to God and love to man. Putting aside all his other qualities, all his virtues and defects, has he not left us as his bequest and our inspiration this priceless example of moral heroism?

The Inspiration of his Heroism.

Without this, what avail our organisation and mobilisation of forces? Without this, what is our scholarship, our philanthropy, or even our piety? Nay, without this, what a poor and lifeless thing is the sacred trust of God's own truth and grace which we sometimes call our gospel? Can we not see that our very moderate success is due to our moderate zeal? Can we not see that all worthy achievement or possible service in the grand opportunities of the new century must depend on soundness and power at the centre?

If the spirit-image of Theodore Parker could be disengaged from all that was local, temporary, and secondary in his character and career, I think it would fill a niche of peculiar honour in our pantheon. He is already canonised in the hearts of the men and women who are impatient with "poor and loveless creeds," or who abhor bigotry and pretence, or who are impressed by Carlyle's solemn warning that "lying means damnation in this universe." His name will be a scourge of small cords to drive from the sacred precincts the clamorous dealers in goods of old and defective patterns, the traffickers in obscurantists who willingly find their profit in the arrested development of mankind.

*From an Address at the seventy-fifth anniversary of the American Unitarian Association, May 15, 1900.

And, so long as Christendom harbours in its bosom that baptised barbarism which calls every day, in many forms, for the sacrifice of more victims than were offered to Moloch in a century, so long the ears of the morally sensitive will hear this later "friend to all the sons of men" crying amid the hustling crowds: "Sirs, ye are brethren! Why do ye wrong one to another?"

He has helped to bring forward and prepare for discussion those grave social problems which are yet to be settled, not only by discussion, but by the growth of wisdom and justice, or the evolution of a higher humanity. Like Jesus, he has taught us to recognise and reverence the Father in the least of His children. Thus he has quickened the activity of that principle which must at last determine our methods of education, the uses and abuses of property, the relations of employer and employed, the rights and duties of men and women, and the whole mighty process of "levelling upward."

Parker's Distinctive Place.

Each man has his place and part, like each instrument in an orchestra. Parker could not have done the work of Channing, of Emerson, or of Martineau. Neither of these could have done the work of Parker. He compares with them as Vesuvius to the Apennines, his tongue of fire leaping from the burning core below, while they stretch their sunny ranges aloft in peaceful grandeur, drawing the uplifted eyes of millions, and "pouring many a cheerful river."

We are not merely building sepulchres and weaving halos. We invoke the "departed spirits of the mighty dead," and conjure with their blessed names, not in backward-looking homage to the yesterdays, but because

> All of good the Past hath had > Remains, to make our own time glad, and because, where others have laboured, we would reap of their sowing, and then sow bountifully in turn for future harvests. We follow the great forerunners, and share the toil of all who have wrought

> To build the Universal Church,
> Lofty as is the love of God,
> And ample as the wants of man.

We have yet to accomplish, even for ourselves, the transfer of emphasis from open questions of doctrine to conduct and character. The "sovereignty of ethics" must yet mean the doing of God's will on earth as in heaven; and this will mean that men must learn to live together in that love and wisdom which make the sweet reasonableness of angel life.

Let us imagine, then, that on some future Sunday morning the members of Christian congregations in city and country should rise to their feet, and, after joining in a sincere confession of faith, should repeat, with uplifted hands and beating hearts, the great oath of social justice, "By the Eternal, no one shall be hurt, and every man shall have his own!"

If from the balconies of heaven Theodore Parker could look on such a scene, I think he would see the travail of his soul, and be satisfied. To the clarified vision of mortals reconciled to God and each other, a new radiance would beam from the sky, and in the happy hush of selfish passion we should almost hear the Father of mankind pronounce the benediction of His own holy peace.

NEW CENTURY MEETINGS.

Sir,—I am desired to follow up the letter which you inserted last week from Sir John T. Brunner and the Revs. H. E. Dowson and J. E. Carpenter, and to call special attention to two or three matters.

(1.) The advertised programme speaks for itself as regards both quantity and quality. But without interfering with the chief object of the meetings we intend to provide ample opportunity for the renewal of old friendships and the formation of new ones, which we trust will make the occasion pleasant as well as profitable in other respects.

(2.) This will be an excellent opportunity for many persons to visit London who are not able to go to expensive hotels. We are organising arrangements for securing accommodation for those who desire it at good and convenient boarding-houses, on moderate terms. Early intimation should be given by those who desire rooms to be secured, singly or in parties. Already we hear of more than one of our congregations and schools which are sending up large parties, and we hope others will do the same—especially as there is to be no Sunday School Teachers' Session at Oxford this summer. May we request ministers and others who issue monthly calendars to make the meetings widely known as soon as possible?

(3.) We are anxious to have some good congregational singing, and would like as many congregations as possible represented in the choir, which will lead the musical portion of the services.

(4.) I may perhaps be allowed to mention that Miss E. M. Lawrence and Mr. Ion Pritchard are our treasurers, and will be glad to receive donations to meet the considerable expenditure which the meetings involve.

James Harwood, Chairman of the General Arrangements Committee.
March 13.

NEW CENTURY MEETINGS.

ASSOCIATION OF IRISH NON-SUBSCRIBING PRESBYTERIAN AND OTHER FREE CHRISTIANS: SUNDAY SCHOOLS DEPARTMENT.

Sir,—Will you allow me space to intimate to ministers of Irish churches and superintendents of Irish schools that, in accordance with the wishes of my committee, I am endeavouring to make arrangements with steamboat and railway companies to grant special facilities for members of our Irish churches, teachers, &c., attending the New Century Festival Meetings in London at the end of May next, and that I hope to send to each school the result of these negotiations at an early date. There is already promise of a considerable number from Ireland, and if possible it is desirable the Irish contingent should travel in company, and this is being aimed at. Perhaps Irish friends will await my forthcoming circular before making other plans. You will spare me much correspondence if you allow this short note to appear in The Inquirer.

Alex. Ashworth, Convener.
41, Ashley-avenue, Belfast,
March 7.

[Further correspondence is held over until next week.]

KHASI HILLS UNITARIAN UNION.

NONGTALANG CONFERENCE.

The Nongtalang Unitarian Conference took place on Dec. 29, 30, and 31, 1900, in the newly-built church.

The new Unitarian Church is situated in the heart of the village, and has been very substantially built and roofed with corrugated iron. It was built entirely by the members themselves, who began collecting material, felling trees and converting them into timbers in October, 1899. In January, 1900, the actual building commenced and was vigorously pushed forward, night and day, light being used during night to enable these self-made peasant carpenters to work on. The corrugated roof was completed in May. The only materials purchased were iron sheets and nails. The building was formally opened for public worship on June 25, 1900, by Mr. Kissor Singh and Khro Shyrmang, of Jowai. Although fit for use, the building still requires windows and ceiling. The Unitarians of the place and of all other churches in the Khasi Hills have raised contributions for this church, and still more is needed. Is there any among the readers of these lines willing to help these brave peasant Unitarians to provide their church with windows and ceiling, and make them feel that they have sympathetic friends in England? Any amount for this purpose may be sent to Mr. Hajom Kissor Singh, care of the Secretary, British and Foreign Unitarian Association, London.

On Saturday evening, Dec. 29, 1900, there was a welcome service conducted by U. Kat Pohrmen, of Nongtalang. Sunday was begun with a devotional service, early in the morning. Then there were two meetings with sermons when Mr. Mar Singh preached on the necessity of laying our foundation on the rock, that is in the One True God. U Khro Shyrmang, of Jowai, taking Matt. xxi. 28-30 as his text, said that we should justify our words by our actions. Mr. Kissor Singh spoke on the work of the Liberal faith in the Khasi Hills during the closing years of the nineteenth century and on the need of training our children in the faith we hold so dear.

At 5 P.M. there was a singing procession and preaching through the thoroughfares of the village, and a large concourse of people came to hear us. In the evening there was a Board meeting of the Union.

On Monday morning there was a business and farewell meeting. Amongst several resolutions passed one was to request the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to send a European or American missionary to the Khasi Hills to reside in one of the mission stations, to be a teacher, leader, and helper of the Khasi people.

In the evening a special meeting of the Nongtalang Unitarians was held, in which three women were formally received into the membership of the Union.

On Saturday, Feb. 3, a memorial service for Her Gracious Majesty the late Queen-Empress Victoria was held in the Unitarian Church at Jowai. Mr. Kissor Singh spoke on the life of the Queen and the lessons it teaches us, and Mr. U Khro Shyrmang contrasted the state of the Khasi Hills before the British occupation with that of the reign of the late Maharani, and dwelt on the progress made by the Khasi people during her prosperous reign. He said that the Unitarian movement was introduced into the Khasi Hills during her benign rule.

The field is large, but the labourers are few, yet we do firmly believe that a day will come when every knee shall bow before the One true God and all kinds of false beliefs will pass away, that all strife and wars and selfishness shall come to an end, and a reign of peace and love and wide human sympathy shall prevail. We believe that it has been given to us, as Unitarians, to herald the coming of that age.

I have a great hope that the twentieth century, which is dawning now, will witness the triumph of the Liberal Faith everywhere, and therefore it is incumbent on every one of us to do our part bravely and faithfully and do all we can to further the work of our organisation, because in unity there is strength.

Hajom Kissor Singh.

OBITUARY.

THE REV. C. L. CORKRAN.

A long life of strenuous and faithful service, followed by a peaceful and happy old age, closed last Sunday with the death, shortly after noon, of the Rev. C. L. Corkran. For many years his home had been at 45, Mecklenburgh-square, and it was there that the summons came to him. Three weeks ago, a cold laying hold of the old man of eighty-seven years reduced him to extreme weakness, and a painful complication setting in there was only one release. His mind was clear to the last, he was watched by devoted relatives and friends, and when the end came for him it was in peace.

Charles Loftus Corkran was born in August, 1813, at Dublin. As a youth he was strongly drawn to Methodism, and from the early impressions he then received of the desolation of sin and the meaning of deliverance from its thraldom, the bent of his mind was set in the clear conviction of moral responsibility and the vital importance of loyalty to conscience. For a time he was a very ardent Methodist, and then another quickening influence came into his life through his connection with Father Mathew, the great apostle of Temperance. The marvellous scenes which attended the Father's work among the people made a deep impression on young Corkran, and he became himself an ardent advocate of the cause and an enthusiastic worker. In 1840 a gold watch was presented to him by the Total Abstinence Societies of Ireland in recognition of his "unwearied zeal and exertions in their cause."

Shortly after this he came to London, and threw himself heart and soul into the agitation for the repeal of the Corn Laws. He was on the staff of the League newspaper, and in his eagerness overtaxed his strength, so that his health broke down. To obtain the needed rest he paid a visit to his brother, Mr. John Fraser Corkran (the father of Miss Alice Corkran), who at that time, recently married, was acting as Paris correspondent to the Morning Herald and the Standard. For about a year Charles Corkran remained in Paris, and then returning to this country went to Norwich, where he resumed his journalistic work on the staff of the Mercury. What he found there at the Octagon Chapel (for Methodism no longer held his allegiance) his old friend Mr. I. M. Wade tells in a welcome contribution which follows this. His passion of sympathy for the poor, the neglected, and the sinful was drawing him away from his profession, and he thankfully embraced the opportunity which opened to him in January, 1848, when he entered upon the work of the London Domestic Mission, in succession to the venerable R. W. Philp, at the Spicer-street Mission in Spitalfields. For thirty-one years Mr. Corkran laboured there, devoting his whole life to that service among the neglected poor with keen insight into their needs, and manifold resource in helpfulness.

Of that work Mr. Wade and also Mr. P. M. Martineau tell, and how, even after his retirement in 1879 from the charge of the Mission, he still worked on in other ways, with interest never flagging and warm sympathies unquenched.

At the annual meeting of the Domestic Mission Society in the year of Mr. Corkran's retirement, a special resolution of regret was moved by Dr. Martineau, who, in the course of his speech (as reported in The Inquirer of May 17, 1879), paid the following tribute to his friend:—

> The breadth and balance of Mr. Corkran's sympathies excluded almost all the sources of weakness in Christian missions. Neither the mere almoner nor the narrow proselyter, he attracted no pauperism and repelled no intelligence. Resorting to all useful organisations for self-help, for culture and recreation, and occasional charity—valuing for himself, and respecting in others distinct Christian beliefs—touched, in short, by all that is human, he yet had looked upon life from a point above it, and could bring thence a divine light to relieve its darkness and consecrate its sorrows; his supreme interest being ever in the simple spiritual truths and trusts, the Christian allegiance and reverence, which are exclusive of no theology and deeper than any. Unlike many a professional visitor of whom the poor say, as he closes his Bible and departs, "What does he know about us?" Mr. Corkran, it had been said, entered, with the penetration of true benevolence, into the smallest details that bore upon his people's wages, work, or life, and so discussed them that they were apt to say, "Well, to be sure, he might have been a boot-closer, or a shirtmaker, or a match-dipper all his life!" It was a part of the same sympathetic habit which harmonised in tone equally with the light upon the child's days, and the shadows on the years of age.
>
> . . . .
>
> If to have opened to distinct knowledge and sympathy a district of London most in need of some lifting agency, to have watched over a whole generation, training not a few of the children to manhood, and befriending the parents to old age—to have broken down in the poor, the distrust of those who labour on their behalf, and in the local sects their mutual hostility—to be remembered in the neighbourhood with only reverence and gratitude, and be regarded by a numerous band of friends with a rare trust and affection—to be taken by successors as a model of what the steward of a Christian commission ought to be; if this can crown the latter years with any consolations, then in accepting their minister's retirement, they left him a retrospect as peaceful as his trust and hope were bright. He moved the resolution with heartfelt respect and attachment towards Mr. Corkran.

For Dr. Martineau Mr. Corkran had a passionate reverence, and this brief notice of his beneficent life could not close more fittingly than by recalling those beautiful words.

REMINISCENCES BY MR. I. M. WADE.

It is now nearly sixty years since I first knew this good and loyal soul, who has done so much to prepare others for the Higher Hope he has just been called himself to realise. He came to Norwich at that time to act as sub-editor to the Mercury, then and now the oldest paper in the city. Soon after his arrival he found his way to the Octagon Chapel, and liking what he heard and saw he became a regular attendant. He had not been there long when the late Mr. John Withers Dowson, who never lost a chance of securing a member for the church, or a teacher for the Sunday-school, invited him to both. It was not in Mr. Corkran's nature to resist an invitation coming from such a quarter. For about four or five years he attended the teachers' meetings, studied German under Mr. Dowson at his early morning class—French he was already familiar with—and was the genial life and soul of the young people amongst whom he freely moved, and who loved the man and found his Irish fund of wit and humour irresistible. Wherever he moved he, quite unconsciously, carried with him a new, fresh, exhilarating atmosphere that had a remarkable fascination; his spirits never seemed to flag, and the humorous as well as the serious side of things seized him on the instant; added to this, his pure, earnest and devotional spirit left an influence behind him, when he left Norwich, that remains to this day in many loving memories there.

In the year 1848 he came to London at the invitation of the Domestic Mission Committee, to take charge of their chapel and mission at Spicer-street, Spitalfields. There his Sunday services, though not altogether adapted to rouse popular enthusiasm, yet by his clear reasoning and his religious earnestness, together with the lovable character of the man, always attracted to the Mission a goodly number of worshippers, and a fair supply of teachers and helpers to keep the Sunday-school, evening classes, and other institutions connected with the Mission in good working order.

For some years after he came, there was also a week-day school attached to the Mission, at which as many as thirty or forty Jewish children attended, up to a certain age. The Sunday-school was a large one, and the evening classes were well attended. Popular lectures were given on Monday evenings, often by men of note such as George Dawson, Richard Hutton and Tom Taylor. To one of Mr. Taylor's lectures his friend, the then Poet Laureate, Tennyson, came with him. The people of Spicer-street loved their missionary, and the children pressed round him in crowds for his genial recognition and winning smile.

The old chapel, as it was called, becoming too small for the Sunday evening services, the congregation adjourned to the larger school-room, and, not to leave a vacant spot in the building, classes for the neglected ragged children of the neighbourhood were started, commencing with six rough lads who were found playing at pitch and toss close to the chapel door. They came again and brought others quite as wild as themselves, and were ultimately tamed; the school rapidly improved in numbers and in the character of those who attended, and was for years afterwards a most gratifying success.

Every day of the week he was amongst the poor of his district, ministering to their various needs so far as the means placed at his disposal would allow. Seeing that amongst his poor people were many who, when recovering from illness, needed pure air and nourishing food, he, with the assistance of some kind friends at Hampstead, established a cottage hospital there, from which when the patients returned to their friends, their improved appearance was the glad surprise of all. Finding, too, that it would aid the cause in which he was so devotedly engaged, he joined the Charity Organisation Society and often presided over the Bethnal-green branch of that admirable institution. Of the mental, moral and religious influence of a man like this, moving daily amongst his people, words are altogether too weak to convey the full value.

He attracted to his work at the Mission many cultivated and influential friends who gladly did what they could to assist him in his labours, and whilst the Manchester New College was in London, many of the students used to find their way to Spicer-street and afford him most valuable assistance. His ceaseless and all absorbing interest in his work never enabled him to take any very prominent part in furthering the efforts of other churches in London, whose members yet watched his career with increasing admiration and goodwill, but on his own ground and amongst his own people he has left a beautiful and lasting influence, and the memory of a delightful personality, that none who ever came under his care or knowledge are ever likely to forget.

In the midst of ceaseless work like this, in vitiated atmosphere and with poverty, misery, and wretchedness all too prominently surrounding him, it was small wonder to his numerous friends when his health broke down, and he was forced to resign his beneficent work—the wonder was that he should have been able to continue it so long.

An admirable portrait of Mr. Corkran, subscribed for by the people at the Mission and other friends, is to be seen on the walls of one the rooms at the Mansford-street Mission, to which nine years ago the Spicer-street work was transferred. The writer of these lines enjoyed the unbroken friendship of Mr. Corkran for nearly sixty years, and the personal loss to him is unspeakable.

MR. P. M. MARTINEAU'S TRIBUTE.

Sir,—Were all sorts and conditions of Unitarian men and women asked to name the most beloved man amongst them, they would, I think, name our dear old friend who died last Sunday—Mr. Corkran.

The best years of his life—if any were best where all were so good—were given to the London Domestic Mission Society. He was on "the Press" at Norwich when he was summoned to be the missionary at the Spicer-street, Spitalfields, station. At Norwich he had given much time and thought to the poor, working hand-in-hand with Mr. and Mrs. Withers Dowson and Travers Madge, whose close friendship he kept thenceforth. But when he came to town he gave life and heart and soul to his mission work. Indeed, he was, to my thinking, pretty well an ideal missionary devoting himself to "the improvement of the moral and religious character of the poor, and the amelioration of their condition."

There was not, perhaps, a wider field for labour at the Missions then than there is now; but it was a more varied it one. There were large day-schools, and Mr. Corkran zealously watched these, and was a judicious friend and helpful stay to masters and mistresses, and a very joy to the children. It was a treat in those long ago days to walk about Spitalfields with our missionary, and note the greetings given him, the while he pointed out the wide casements in the little old houses, whence the silk-weavers courted all the light that could be got from the niggard East-end sky for work at their looms, or, anon, climbed some narrow stairs to watch the shuttle flying from the deft hands of artisans who gloried in fine old Huguenot names. Those surroundings were dear to our friend; he was a scholar, a man of culture, sentiment, and poetry. His was a kindly, cheery nature; considerate, tender, most approachable; neither narrow nor sanctimonious—indeed, if I may say it in a word, he was a disciple of Christ.

For thirty-one years he was at Spicer-street. In 1879 he resigned; his eyesight was failing and his health not strong. He joined the Committee, where his experience and judgment were of the greatest value. On his resignation his many grateful friends raised a fund that was invested and ensured to him a modest income for his life, which was happily prolonged till he was eighty-seven. There are some who may remember the "God-speed" to our missionary when we bade him farewell. Mr. Worsley, with a touching tremor of voice, aptly applied Shakespeare's fine words to him as one who had earned > —that which should accompany old age:

> As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends.

But Mr. Corkran was not a man to "sit with empty hands at home." He at once took a keen interest in Mr. Barnett's work at St. Jude's, Whitechapel, and became a member—presently chairman—of the Charity Organisation Society in that Parish. He was ever ready to help in the Sunday doings at the Missions, and often occupied vacant Unitarian pulpits. Always a capital penman he was not idle now, as many notices, letters, and articles in your columns, Sir, bear witness. Sometimes on a fine summer-day he was to be seen at the Oval, for he loved cricket. Indeed, he admired all manly sports, and many boys, middle-aged men now, can tell how he used to bowl to them, taught them to swim, and spent hours with them at the Zoological Gardens. It has been whispered by one who must be nameless here, that he was once seen on Epsom Downs on Derby-day. This may be an idle tale, but it is a fact that when our old friend was bantered about it, his only answer was a merry twinkle of the eye. Born in Dublin, he had lots of Irish humour. He told many a good story and laughed merrily when one was told him.

His late years were entirely happy. He lived with loving relations and friends—one dear niece especially was his devoted companion—and till almost the last his mind and memory were clear, he enjoyed a chat with old acquaintances, and on fine days was drawn about Mecklenburgh-square in his bath-chair by his faithful attendant—cheerful, placid, and contented.

It is no secret that he has bequeathed to the Mission a considerable sum out of the little invested fund; for where his heart was there willed he his treasure to be also.

P. M. Martineau.

Esher, March 12.

GUILDS.*

BY THE REV. JOHN ELLIS.

I.

First let us try to get a clear idea as to the essential principle of the Guild. It is lucidly stated in an article in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and in a very few words. "The essential principle of the Guild," says the writer, "is the banding together in mutual help, mutual enjoyment, and mutual encouragement in good endeavour. The spirit which directed itself to the inner business and life of each society and its members is the true mark, in some degree, of all bodies, ancient or modern, that can claim the character of Guilds. The Peace Guild of the North, in the tenth century, had this characteristic in common with the Great Trading Guild of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, or the little social or religious Guild of an English country village of a century later."

In illustration of the principle thus lucidly stated, it will help, perhaps, if I give you, in set words, the objects of one of the old English village Guilds. They are stated to be "not only devotions and orisons, but also every exercise of Christian charity, and therefore, above all things, mutual assistance of the Guild brothers in every exigency, especially in old age, in sickness, in cases of impoverishment—if not brought on by their own folly—and of wrongful imprisonment, in losses by fire, water, or shipwreck, and by loans, provision of work, and, lastly, burial of the dead. It included further the assistance of the poor and sick, and the visitation and comfort of prisoners not belonging to the Guild."

You will see by this that much that is now done by the National Government, the Municipalities, Trade Unions, and Friendly Societies, was done in simpler times by the various Guilds in which men bound themselves together, from a sense of brotherhood, under a solemn compact to encourage each other to personally aspire after a good life, and to engage in philanthropy and good endeavour.

I am not one of those who sigh for the good old times. I am prepared to admit that the personal bond which held these members of Guilds together must have relaxed as the Guilds increased in wealth and power. Also that the Guilds used their wealth and power unwisely, and tended to retard progress in trade and national life. Hence the necessity for their suppression and extinction. Granted all this. It was not, however, the fault of the Guild idea. It was the result of the corrupting influence of wealth and unrestrained power.

What was good in the Guild idea has been revived abundantly in our own time, when we are coming to see, more and more clearly, that it is more than a cash nexus that holds society together—that the eternal bond is the sentiment of brotherhood—sympathy in prosperity as in adversity. So we find nowadays, Settlements and Neighbour Guilds, whose members, from religious and humanitarian motives, bind themselves to work at the social problem and personally carry culture, joy, and generally a spirit of helpfulness into the purlieus of sin and vice, which are such an awful blot on the fair face of civic life.

* From a lecture to members of the Fitzwilliam-street Church and Schools Guild, Huddersfield, Feb. 20.

This revived idea of the Guild in modern society perhaps had its origin in Ruskin's endeavour to form a company of St. George, some time in the seventies. With your permission, I will quote the object of the St. George's Guild and the creed and covenant which each companion of St. George was required to profess and hold.

In Ruskin's words, "The object of the Society is to buy land in England; and thereon to train into the healthiest and most refined life possible, as many Englishmen, Englishwomen, and English children as the land we possess can maintain in comfort; to establish for them and their descendants a national store of continually augmenting wealth; and to organise the government of the persons, and administration of the properties, under laws which shall be just to all, and secure in their inviolable foundation on the Law of God."

Such were the objects of the Guild of St. George, and the Master required of all persons received into the St. George's Company, that the following statement of creed and resolution must be written with their own hand, and signed, with the solemnity of a vow:—

I. I trust in the living God, Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth, and of all things and all creatures visible and invisible.

I trust in the kindness of His law, and the goodness of His work.

And I will strive to love Him and keep His law, and see His work, while I live.

II. I trust in the nobleness of human nature, in the majesty of its faculties, the fulness of its mercy, and the joy of its love.

And I will strive to love my neighbour as myself, and, even when I cannot, I will act as if I did.

III. I will labour, with such strength and opportunity as God gives me, for my own daily bread; and all that my hand finds to do, I will do with my might.

IV. I will not deceive, or cause to be deceived, any human being for my gain or pleasure; nor hurt, or cause to be hurt, any human being for my gain or pleasure: nor rob, or cause to be robbed, any human being for my gain or pleasure.

V. I will not kill nor hurt any living creature needlessly, nor destroy any beautiful thing; but will strive to save and comfort all gentle life, and guard and perfect all natural beauty, upon earth.

VI. I will strive to raise my own body and soul daily into higher powers of duty and happiness; not in rivalship or contention with others, but for help, delight, and honour of others, and for the joy and peace of my own life.

VII. I will obey all the laws of my country faithfully; and the orders of its monarch, and of all persons appointed to be in authority under its monarch, so far as such laws or commands are consistent with what I suppose to be the law of God; and when they are not, or seem in any wise to need change, I will oppose them loyally and deliberately, not with malicious, concealed, or disorderly violence.

VIII. And with the same faithfulness, and under the same limits of obedience, which I render to the laws of my country and the commands of its rulers, I will obey the laws of the Society called of St. George, into which I am this day received; and the orders of its masters, and of all persons appointed to be in authority under its masters, so long as I remain a Companion called of St. George."

I have quoted this not because I here and now want you to take these vows, and enrol yourselves as Companions of St. George. I have no commission for that. Neither do I think I could persuade many of you to make open and solemn profession of such a creed, before men who had similarly pledged themselves to an ideal of life and work. Ruskin himself could not persuade many to sacrifice themselves as he did, hence the unprosperous condition of the Company of St. George. It is the curse of our time that men are so unwilling to acknowledge responsibility, and shrink from pledging themselves to high and noble aims. I quote the St. George's Creed because it represents the Guild idea—the spirit and motive of the Guild—whether in modern, mediæval or ancient times. Its motive power is God—the Fatherhood involves brotherhood and sisterhood—its aim is mutual help, mutual enjoyment, and mutual encouragement in good endeavour.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

For the Little Ones.

More than fifty years ago a young girl wrote some letters to her little sisters from the pretty country home where she was visiting, and I am sending some extracts from these letters to The Inquirer, as I think many children will like to read them now.

The girl was herself a great lover of nature; she took the keenest interest in bird and animal and insect life, and was eager to share her pleasures, whilst in the country, with her younger sisters who were then living in London.

In the first letter that I have before me she writes as follows:—"While we were playing in the garden yesterday, Johnny came running to tell us that a cat was climbing the fence near a blackbird's nest. We all ran to drive her away, but we thought we would stop first and see what pussy would do. The mother bird left her nest, and the father bird flew down from a branch near, and they both flew so near the cat, I was quite afraid for them. But pussy could not spring on them from the paling, as the top was so narrow she had to hold on with all her four feet. At last the father bird flew at her and pecked her head so hard that she fell down, and then we drove her off, and the blackbird trilled out a little song of joy! However, Pussy tried again later to get at the nest, but the birds were too sharp for her, and drove her away, and sang as if they were quite proud. Do you not think they were clever blackbirds and very courageous too, not to be more afraid of such a large animal? I think it was love for their baby birds that made them brave. We wish you were here too with us."

In another letter the young writer goes on:—"I have such curious things to tell you to-day which have just happened here. Yesterday one of uncle's labourers came to tell him that in clearing away some rubbish from the top of a great pile of bricks in the lane, he had killed two polecats (the polecat is a small animal something like a weazel) and had found a great quantity of eggs in their hiding-place. We all went with him and found geese, ducks', and hens' eggs, all whole; the place was twice the height of uncle from the ground, so the polecats must have carried the eggs up very cleverly to prevent their breaking. Old Sally, the woman who looks after the chickens, has been complaining for some time past of the number of missing eggs, but they have never been able to trace anyone stealing them; so we went to tell her of this, and last night a boy was set to watch the hen-house. This morning he told us that the eggs were stolen by rats and weazels; he saw a rat take an egg in its forepaws and push it to its hole without breaking it, and a weazel did the same with its nose! He traced both animals to their holes and killed them, and brought back the eggs. You may be sure my aunt and old Sally were pleased to find out the real thieves, for they did not like to suspect the people about, and they were vexed at losing so many eggs. Cousin Henry told me to-day about a little robin that built its nest on the Bible in the church here, and when it was taken away it built another in the same place, and the clergyman let it stay and read out of another Bible."

In a third letter she begins:—"I think in this letter you will like best to hear about the pretty squirrels which run about the woods here. They have such bright eyes and such long bushy tails, which curl up over their backs, and they run so fast I have never been able to catch one. Cousin Henry climbed a tree one day to get an old nest for me to see; it was made of sticks and long dry grass, and inside it was so very soft, for the little mother squirrel pulls the fur off her own breast to make the nest warm for her young ones.

"In a hole at the bottom of one of the trees we found a lot of acorns, and Henry told me the squirrels put them there for food in the winter. I saw some squirrels jump from one bough to another, such great distances I was sure they would fall, but they always dropped safe and ran away. I have seen such wonderful things since I came here, I wish I could write better about them all."

When the girl who wrote about these letters grew up and married, she wrote a pretty story-book, called "Leaves from the Book of Nature" (now long since out of print) for the instruction of her children, whom she loved to teach to "look up through nature to nature's God."

K. F. Lawford.

The Athenæum announced last week that "The Life of Dr. Martineau," on which the Rev. Dr. Drummond and Professor Upton, of Manchester College, are engaged, will be published next year in two volumes. The work will be in two distinct parts, the biography by Dr. Drummond being followed by Mr. Upton's account of Dr. Martineau's philosophy.

Let us reflect that the highest path is pointed out by the pure ideal of those who look up to us, and who, if we tread less loftily, may never look so high again.—Hawthorne.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The Inquirer can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
Per Quarter...	1	8
Per Half-Year	3	4
Per Year	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for The Inquirer should be addressed to the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on Thursday, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
Per Page...	4	0	0
Half-Page	2	10	0
Per Column	1	10	0
Inch in Column... ...	0	3	6
Back Page	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to The Inquirer to be made to E. Kennedy, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, MARCH 16, 1901.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

II.

The second part of Dr. Harnack's Lectures,* in which, as we described last week, he has answered this great question, deals with the history of the Christian religion in its leading phases, as it developed through the Apostolic Age into the Catholic Church, and as it is now seen in the Greek and Roman Churches, and in Protestantism.

The result of a searching study of this history is to bring out with ever greater clearness the marvellous power of the Gospel itself, as something more "simple and sublime" than successive generations of theologians and ecclesiastics have been apt to think. The Gospel Dr. Harnack in the first part of his lectures showed to be "the glad message of mercy and the Fatherhood of God," and the summons to all men to live the true life with God, as declared in the beatitudes of Jesus and realised in the Master himself. Thus while no theory of the nature of Christ may be put in the forefront of the Gospel, the power of personal discipleship has always been of the utmost moment, since he was in literal truth, "the Way to the Father." And what one sees throughout the history is this true ideal of personal religion in the love of God and human brotherhood, emerging again and again in spite of all foreign elements brought in, and the destructive forces of perverse theory and worldly practice—declaring itself yet triumphant and immortal, the spirit of life, as it was in Jesus, manifesting in the world the Father's will for His children.

In bringing this truth home to the world the life and death of Jesus worked together. By the cross mankind "gained such an experience of the power of purity and love true to death that they can never forget it," and it has made a new epoch in their history; while, whatever we may make of the resurrection stories, the triumphant conviction of the disciples that death could not hold such a one as Jesus, that as the first-born among many brethren he was alive and became to them a life-giving spirit, was the strong foundation on which the first Christian communities were built.

It was a life never to be destroyed which they felt to be going out from him; only for a brief span of time could his death stagger them; the strength of the Lord prevailed over everything; God did not give him over to death; he lives as the first fruits of those who have fallen asleep. It is not by any speculative ideas of philosophy but by the vision of Jesus' life and death and by the feeling of his imperishable union with God that mankind, so far as it believes in these things, has attained to that certainty of Eternal life, for which it was meant, and which it dimly discerns—eternal life in time and beyond time. This feeling first established faith in the value of personal life. But of every attempt to demonstrate the certainty of "immortality" by logical process, we may say in the words of the poet:—

> Believe and venture: as for pledges,
> The gods give none.

Belief in the living Lord and in a life eternal is the act of the freedom which is born of God.

Dr. Harnack distinguishes clearly between this Easter faith, which has a firm hold upon the unseen things which are eternal, and the Easter message, which tells of the empty grave and the re-appearances of Jesus. The faith has, indeed, been transmitted under the form of this message, but no such "miraculous appeal to our senses" can be the permanent foundation of spiritual truth.

From this point onward the progress of thought and life is traced, the outer integument of temporary belief always being shown to hide beneath it the profounder truth of the life with God. Together with the great work of Paul in freeing Christianity from its early Jewish limitations, we see the growth of speculation concerning Christ, when "the formation of a correct theory of and about Christ threatens to assume the position of chief importance, and to pervert the majesty and simplicity of the Gospel." "That it is a perverse proceeding," says Dr. Harnack, "to make Christology the fundamental substance of the Gospel, is shown by Christ's teaching, which is everywhere directed to the all-important point, and summarily confronts every man with his God." At the same time the message of Christ crucified exhibits God's power and wisdom, and in the love of Christ kindles the love of God.

The giving over of the Church to speculative thought absorbed men's interest; "it withdrew their minds from the simplicity of the Gospel, and increasingly transformed it into a philosophy of religion." So the Catholic Church with its orthodoxy, its discipline and its clerical caste grew up; but even so the inward power of the Gospel could not be destroyed, as is seen in the essential life of such men as Clement of Alexandria, a Greek in every fibre of his being, and in the hot-blooded African, Tertullian. Dr. Harnack's characterisation both of the Greek and the Roman Churches is exceedingly severe in pointing out the unchristian elements of which their structure is so largely composed, the doctrine which has absolutely no connection with the Gospel of Jesus, the superstitions which degrade, the elaborate ritual and ceremonial which belong just to that kind of religion which Jesus came to destroy; and yet in them also the spirit of the Christian life makes its way.

Thus of the members of the Greek Church, the Orthodox Church of Russia, Dr. Harnack writes:—

> Among these Christians, too, priests and laity, there are men who have come to know God as the Father of mercy and the leader of their lives, and who love Jesus Christ, not because they know him as the person with two natures, but because a ray of his being has shone from the Gospel into their hearts, and this ray has become light and warmth to their own lives. And although the idea of the fatherly providence of God more readily assumes an almost fatalistic form in the East, and produces too much quietism, it is certain that here, too, it endows men with strength and energy, unselfishness and love. I need only refer again to Tolstoi's Village Tales, which I have already quoted. The picture which they present is not artificial. But from much also that I have myself seen and experienced I can testify how even with the Russian peasant or the humbler priests, in spite of all the Saint-and-picture-worship, a power of simple trust in God is to be found, a delicacy of moral feeling, and an active brotherly love, which does not disclaim its origin in the Gospel. Where they exist, however, the entire ceremonial service of religion is capable of undergoing a spiritualisation, not by any "symbolical re-interpretation"—that is much too artificial a process—but because, if only the soul is touched by the living God at all, thought can rise to him even by the help of an idol.

And of the Roman Church, with its imperial spirit, so different from the lowliness of Christ, with its "infallible Pope, the 'Apostolico-Roman polytheism,' the veneration of the Saints, blind obedience, and apathetic devotion," we are told:—

> These things seem to have stifled all inwardness, and yet there are Christians still to be found in this Church, too, of the kind which the Gospel has awakened, earnest and loving, filled with joy and peace in God.

* "What is Christianity?" Sixteen Lectures delivered in the University of Berlin during the Winter-Term, 1899-1900, by Adolf Harnack, Rector of, and Professor of Church History in, the University, and member of the Royal Prussian Academy, Berlin. Translated into English by Thomas Bailey Saunders. Williams and Norgate. 10s. 6d.

When Dr. Harnack comes to speak of Protestantism it is with enthusiasm of the essential principle of the Reformation as a re-assertion of spiritual religion. He is not daunted by the ready sneer at the many divisions of Protestantism. "We want still more freedom," he declares, "still greater individuality in utterance and in doctrine." "We want still more confidence in the inner strength and unifying power of the Gospel." And he proceeds to point out the dangers of Protestantism as it exists at present in Germany, but in such a way as to furnish salutary lessons for this country also. The Protestant Church, he says, needs greater freedom, independent of State control. It needs to guard against bondage to the letter of Scripture, and the setting up of any "orthodoxy" as the mark of the true Church. It needs also greater spontaneity and variety of activity in practical beneficence, in which it may well learn of the Roman Church. But in nothing else must lessons be taken in that quarter, for the Protestant Churches too readily tend to become churches of ordinance, doctrine, and ceremony, and that is not the Christianity of the Gospel.

Thus, from first to last Dr. Harnack shows what he takes to be the essential meaning of Christianity, and the lectures conclude with the following eloquent testimony to the supreme worth of religion, which in Christianity has found its most perfect form:—

It is religion, the love of God and neighbour, which gives life a meaning; knowledge cannot do it. Let me, if you please, speak of my own experience, as one who for thirty years has taken an earnest interest in these things. Pure knowledge is a glorious thing, and woe to the man who holds it light or blunts his sense of it. But to the question, Whence, whither, and to what purpose, it gives an answer to-day as little as it did two or three thousand years ago. It does, indeed, instruct us in facts; it detects inconsistencies; it links phenomena; it corrects the deceptions of sense and idea. But where and how the curve of the world and the curve of our own life begin—that curve of which it shows us only a section—and whither this curve leads, knowledge does not tell us. But if with a steady will we affirm the forces and the standards which on the summits of our inner life shine out as our highest good, nay, as our real self; if we are earnest and courageous enough to accept them as the great Reality, and direct our lives by them; and if we then look at the course of mankind's history, follow its upward development, and search, in strenuous and patient service, for the communion of minds in it, we shall not faint in weariness and despair, but become certain of God, of the God whom Jesus Christ called his Father, and who is also our Father.

Editor's Change of Address.—Correspondents are requested to note that after the 25th inst. the home address of the Rev. V. D. Davis will be 9, Nightingale-square, Balham, S.W.

THE KING'S ACCESSION.

ADDRESS FROM THE BODY OF ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN MINISTERS IN AND ABOUT THE CITIES OF LONDON AND WESTMINSTER.

The Body of English Presbyterian Ministers, who on account of the intolerant treatment they received from their brethren on the ground of their Unitarian heresy withdrew in 1836 from the union of the "Three Denominations," retain their ancient privilege, as a separate body, of direct access to the Throne; and as on the occasion of the accession of Her late Majesty, Queen Victoria, and other national occasions affecting the People and the Throne, they have again exercised their privilege at the beginning of the new reign.

On Tuesday at noon the King held a Court at St. James's Palace to receive addresses from various bodies on his accession to the Throne. Addresses were presented by deputations from the Convocation of both Houses of the Provinces of Canterbury and York (headed by the Archbishops), the Protestant Dissenting Ministers of the three Denominations, the Body of English Presbyterian Ministers above mentioned, the Society of Friends and the University of London. His Majesty on the Throne received each deputation separately, and having heard the addresses, read his own replies. The Duke of Cornwall and York stood beside the Throne.

The deputation of English Presbyterian Ministers, who proceeded from Dr. William's Library to the Palace, consisted of the following:—The Revs. James Harwood and F. K. Freeston (secretaries), Dr. Mummery, F. Allen, W. G. Cadman, G. Carter, E. M. Daplyn, V. D. Davis, T. E. M. Edwards, A. Farquharson, L. J. Jones, H. S. Perris, W. C. Pope, F. W. Stanley, J. E. Stronge, F. Summers, J. Toye, and W. Wooding.

The deputation having been introduced, the Rev. James Harwood, as senior secretary, read the following Address:—

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty.

May it please Your Majesty,

We, Your Majesty's loyal subjects, the Body of English Presbyterian Ministers in and about the cities of London and Westminster, in the exercise of an ancient and much-cherished privelege, desire respectfully to approach Your Majesty with the assurance of our profound sympathy in the loss you have sustained through the death of Your Majesty's beloved and revered Mother, our late Sovereign Lady, Queen Victoria.

Your sorrow is shared by the entire nation, and indeed by the whole world. The sympathy which our departed Queen so graciously manifested in the joys and sorrows of others, now flows back to the Members of the Royal House, who grieve for the loss of their dearly beloved Head. It is our earnest prayer that they, in their affliction, may be comforted by the Heavenly Father, through faith in Whose Infinite Wisdom and Goodness, Her late Majesty was upheld in Her many deep sorrows.

Even in the season of bereavement, we remember with devout gratitude to the Giver of every good and perfect gift, the many blessings which we have enjoyed through our late beloved Queen. We thankfully recall the noble example of domestic virtue by which She inspired the ever-growing affection of an eminently domestic people. We cherish the memory of those great traits in Her character which further ennobled Her exalted position:—Her deep piety, Her constant adherence to the methods of Constitutional Government, Her lofty principles, Her steadfast devotion to duty. To these qualities in Her are we largely indebted, not only for the marvellous progress which marked Her reign at Home, but also for the unexampled devotion manifested to Her Throne and Person in Her Empire beyond the Seas. Nor can we, as Protestant Dissenters, fail to acknowlege with special thankfulness, the progress in Civil and Religious Liberty, and the growing co-operation for the common good between men of all sects and creeds, which have been pre-eminent during Her reign.

We desire to assure Your Majesty of our loyalty and earnest wishes on Your Accession to the Throne. Already for many years, you have manifested a deep and untiring interest in the welfare of the people, and have won for yourself a warm place in their regard, while your illustrious Consort, Queen Alexendra, long ago more than realised the affectionate hopes with which she was first welcomed in her adopted country. The happy anticipations thus created for the coming time are confirmed by the touching words you were pleased to address to the first Meeting of Your Majesty's Privy Council, and also by the gracious messages to your People at Home, in the Colonies, and in India.

We look forward therefore with earnest hope to the future. We pray that the unhappy war in which our country is now engaged may be brought to a speedy termination by a righteous and generous peace, and that, under the blessing of the King of Kings and the Lord of Lords, Your Majesty and your gracious Consort may together long be spared to enjoy the devoted attachment of a happy and loyal people.

Signed on behalf of this meeting—

William Wooding, Chairman.
James Harwood, F. K. Freeston } Secretaries.

His Majesty received the Address from Mr. Harwood, and read the following reply:—

His Majesty's Reply.

I thank you for your loyal and dutiful Address of congratulation upon my Accession and for your expressions of affection and admiration for My beloved Mother, and your participation in the general grief of My Subjects at Her loss.

Be assured that it shall be My constant care to maintain Civil and Religious Liberty and Toleration; and that the Queen and I will always endeavour to assist all who labour among My People for the progress of Truth, Morality and Peace.

The King having read his reply, handed it to Mr. Harwood, who then did obeisance, kissing the King's hand. Dr. Mummery, as senior member of the Body present, and Mr. Freeston, as secretary with Mr. Harwood, also had the honour of being presented, and the Deputation then withdrew.

A LIVING CHURCH.

Sir,—Revivals are not in the genius of our Faith. The average sober-minded Unitarian, if asked if he believed in Revivals would reply as Lord Brougham replied when asked if he believed in ghosts. "No," said he, "I have seen too many of them." Ay! God wot, we have seen too many of them—thin, shadowy, dismal, hysterical things. Anyone who has had the good fortune to meet a Unitarian (not the person who believes that God is one and trembles, nor yet the person who believes that God is one and, alas! never dreams of trembling), instinctively feels how alien to the genus is revivalism. He lives and moves and has his being in his religion, and only does not seem to pray, because his every moment is prayerful. If we do not pray without ceasing, it were as well if we prayed not at all: coming spasmodically into the presence of God and only spasmodically remembering His presence is the soul-killing thing. Mr. Lummis has afforded us a golden opportunity—which only such a wild whirling challenge would constrain us to avail ourselves of—of going on our knees in gratitude to reveal our knowledge of the existence in no scant numbers of good and saintly Unitarians whose names are in the Book of Choicest Life. Whether they prayed because they loved, or loved because they prayed, we hold it no concern of ours to publish. They are not zealous in the popular sense. It would probably lighten the ship and likewise save it if many "zealous" Unitarians were to jump overboard into the jaws of the reluctant whale. It would be safe to prophecy that they would be ultimately found sitting under juniper trees, still hot and hasty, and bandying high words with an all too merciful God. But far be it from us to jettison even such weighty ballast. When their "ism" is not on the tapis, they are the best of Samaritans, and pour into many a sad dog choice oil and wine, forgetful of their denominational vitriol and vinegar. But can it be that zealous and non-zealous alike, "we lack religion" "and we want a name"? There was once a certain Cretan who did not indeed in his haste call all men liars, but as many as his island could hold. The islanders kept silence and pitilessly let him impale himself upon the sharp point of his own slander. Now we are not pitiless, but say that Mr. Lummis at least does not lack religion. But perhaps Mr. Lummis is not a Unitarian. Ah! There are people who consider Mr. Hugh Price Hughes a great Christian, as there are people who consider a whale a great fish, but no Natural Historian is under any such delusion. We want a name! To say this of a community conspicuous for its multitudinous names is the most unkindest cut of all. Lack religion indeed! Why the very multiplicity of its names testifies to the tenderness of the consciences of the men in this community. It was for the sake of truth so many names arose. It was because of a very genuine brotherhood that they were able to tolerate each other's differences, even the infinitesimal ones. How shall we respect punctilious truth, if we squeeze all the diversities into one name? And into what name. The very high virtue, Intellectual Truth, which Mr. Lummis so highly and allegorically praises, has created the problem of Polyonymity. It would certainly be convenient if It or She could also solve it. Mr. Lummis's own mountainous effort seems only to have produced the ridiculous mus "Philalethian," of which, or rather from which, he and we are safely delivered. And besides, even if our charity, which beareth all things, had borne this, should we have been the only Philalethians? Mr. C. J. Street, whom Mr. Lummis has caused to blaspheme in respect to (or disrespect to) Yorkshire, votes for the name "Free Church," and so would I as for the second best; but the best I hold would be the "Church of God," not of course to be trumpeted abroad, nor put on notice boards, nor on heads of posters, but written in our hearts, as our esoteric name. Meantime as an exoteric name "Unitarian" will do very well, either for common understanding or common misunderstanding. The world will call us Unitarian just because we don't want to be so called, just as the world calls Quakers "The Friends," because they don't wish to be called Quakers, and just as the world called the nations Christian because they ought not to be so called, being the least true and least appropriate name. It is to be feared the Nominalists will be the death of us. Our salvation lies with the Realists. Inwardly I call all good men Unitarians, on the principle which makes Frenchmen, Germans, &c., call great and good Englishmen perfect Frenchmen, or perfect Germans, &c. If they are great and good they will perceive the compliment; if they are not, it is immaterial whether they do or not.

That which most takes my breath away is Mr. Lummis's wild statement that we don't specially stand for the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men. How long have the other churches ceased consigning the vast majority of men to eternal or even temporal torments? Wherein lay their testimony to the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men? Tillyvally! With all our faults we never were such wholesale fratricides as that implied. "Our cause" is the "Gospel of Truth!" We know that Gospel of Truth. "A' wears a lock," and keeps a key, and loves the exact sciences of Theology and Dogmatik. What is truth? Is it not matter for eternal gratitude that the wisest and truest and sweetest of men kept sublime silence. If he, then, why not we? Did not St. Chrysostom summarise Christianity in saying "Love and believe as you like"? And Paul in "If I know all mysteries and all knowledge . . . but have not love, I am nothing"? "To seek and to save that which is lost," is not this the soul and the body of Religion? All intellectual pursuit of truth may then be in the nature of a God-sent recreation—for the pursuit of which a decent library, academic leisure, "scholarly instincts," and judicial training are a few indispensable prerequisites—as Martensen's fascinating "Christliche Dogmatik," e.g., is to me, almost persuading me to be a Trinitarian (through lack of judicial training doubtless)—but Nemo credit nisi volens. But whatever I might be persuaded into regarding as truth could give me no warrant for erecting it into "a cause." Intellectual veracity let us by all means have, and the antecedent probability is that it will lead to a "Triennial Conference of This, That, and the Other." Mr. Lummis may claim our gratitude for having raised a nice "vigorous polemic" not entirely as is our ancient custom on the Name alone, but also on the thing signified by the name. If to be a Unitarian means to "lack religion," then the blasphemous Q.E.D. of the enemy is at last established—that we preach a Negation. Well, this is famous, and hath been aforetime said or sung: "Our own familiar friend, which did eat of our bread, hath lifted up his heel against us." For it was not an enemy that reproached us; then we could have borne it: neither was it he that hated us that did magnify himself against us; then we would have hid ourselves from him: but it was thou, a man our equal, our companion, and our familiar friend. E. L. H. Thomas.

Sir,—May I be permitted to protest against the continuance of the controversy which is taking place from week to week in the columns of your paper? To discuss the domestic affairs of a religious community in a public newspaper is not an edifying spectacle, and seems to me a proceeding which is calculated to do inestimable harm. The periodic appearance of these accusations is making the work of some of those who are engaged in the arduous task of building up new congregations increasingly difficult by supplying weapons to our opponents; and tends to depress the spirits and damp the enthusiasm of some of our best friends. These self-accusations have usually emanated from men who cannot be regarded as leaders amongst us or whose knowledge of the denomination is limited and imperfect. Their opinions, therefore, have no authority, and ought only to be regarded as personal views. In the present instance the whole discussion has an appearance of unreality about it which renders it neither useful nor helpful. It seems to have been worked up. It did not arise spontaneously out of the deep feelings of our people. No responsible layman has been aroused to take part in it; and only one minister of standing has contributed anything to your columns in this connection. Under these circumstances I am strongly of opinion the discussion should be brought to a close with as little delay as possible. If the condition of our churches and our people be such as it is represented to be in the articles on "Choose Life"—a condition of which no serious evidence is given by the writer of those articles—the proper place to consider it would be at a duly constituted private conference of responsible ministers and laymen, and not in the columns of a public print. From such a conference much good might be expected, and a new departure might be taken which would strengthen our work in all parts of the country. J. E. Stronge.

[When Mr. Stronge writes "No responsible layman, &c.," he forgets that one of the first to take part in the discussion of Mr. Lummis's article was Mr. Richard Robinson.—Ed. Inq.]

Sir,—It is said that we who are known to others as Unitarians have no religion, that we should have no churches, and that we need a name that shall be at once free and catholic.

It is not pleasant to be told this by those who are not of our household, but it is positively cruel of those who sit at the same table with us and engage in the same work, and for the same kind of hire, to be incessantly dinning this into our ears.

Can you imagine anything that makes our work more difficult even with sympathetic supporters? We are in a sinking ship—rotten and unseaworthy! If I were convinced of this, I would endeavour to leave her on the slimmest spar that came to my hand. Now, if it is true that we experience difficulty in retaining the ardent interest of those who think as we think, and give generously of their substance in support of our opinions, I maintain that we are engaged in a hopeless mission in seeking the salvation of those who are more or less antagonistic to us.

During the four years the Unitarian Church (it is known to residents as such, and is so spoken of by the worshippers) has been in existence here I have strongly advocated the purchase of The Inquirer by the members of the congregation. I have, and do, circulate in this youngest of our London places, where people meet once a week for worship, two or three dozen Inquirers, only to find that I am become the medium for disseminating ideas with which I cannot agree, and which absolutely contradict what I preach.

Two clear instances come to my mind wherein earnest thoughtful men have ceased their inquiries at our church until they can discover from your pages that our denominational quarrels are over. Were I these men I would do as they are doing.

I am far from denying that Unitarians do not need even a tremendous shaking up, but I contend that the proper persons to begin with are those ministers who see the necessity for a stir and an advance. The more timid ones will follow. When they are quite sure they are ready to start let them begin in their own pulpits.

Then, Sir, with your permission, we might have brief reports from the several camps every week.

W. Chynoweth Pope.

Lewisham, S.E.

Sir,—Mr. Lummis, like many another convert to Unitarianism, is gravely dissatisfied with the present condition of the denomination. This dissatisfaction is expressed in some very vigorous reproof, and every Unitarian may profit by his general denunciations of want of religious fervour, &c. No doubt it is more religion and more life that we all want, and the Church ought to stand first. This is all good, and may do good, but when from generalities we come to proposals for reconstruction and reform, I entirely disagree with Mr. Lummis. His courageous proposal to at once begin operations with the name may be magnificent, and it would certainly be war, but a more barren waste of our not too abundant energy could hardly be recommended. As hopelessly impracticable would be the attempt to make the present Triennial Conference annual. The most fatal flaw in Mr. Lummis's reconstructive programme is his neglect of the District Associations. He ignores the fact that each of these has an annual meeting, and in considering his assets he makes no mention of them. He says:—"We have our Conference Committee, and we have our Sunday-School Association, and we are to have our Union of Guilds." Yes; and have we not our District Associations in which all the churches of a district are grouped and represented, Associations which should more and more do the work of Presbyteries, strengthening the weak, guiding the unstable, advising those who require advice, bringing the force of a healthy public opinion to bear upon isolated churches which bereft of such a force are liable to some very erratic orbits? Let these Associations be strengthened in every way, for to be respected, and to do the work they are called upon to do, they must be strong, and I am convinced that this is our true line of advance in organisation.

No doubt, as Mr. Lummis says, "We want a first-class review"; but I wonder whether he has made a calculation of the number of Unitarians who could, or would, support such an organ. The truth is that the number of avowed Unitarians is constantly exaggerated. Their activity and influence is out of proportion to their number, and some of Mr. Lummis's charges are rebutted by the simple fact that he is addressing a little band, and not a great host. The real supporters of our cause are few and scattered. It is easier to blame them than to enter into their peculiar difficulties; but I am convinced that the best way to help them is to earnestly try to carry out that part of Dr. Martineau's scheme which has proved practicable: to strengthen our District Associations. I am not without hope that Mr. Lummis will be of the same opinion.

Clement E. Pike.

Newport, I.W.

BLACKFRIARS MISSION AND STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel was held in the chapel on Wednesday evening, the chair being taken by Sir John T. Brunner, Bart., M.P.

The report of the Committee, which was read by Mr. A. A. Tayler, recorded steady progressive work, and referred to the loss of a good friend in the late Miss Lister, to whose thoughtful kindness they owed a legacy of £100.

Mr. C. F. Pearson read the Treasurer's report and statement of accounts. Miss Lister's legacy, and another of £50 from the late Mr. Stephen Busk, were recorded.

The report stated that the meeting would be asked to authorise the purchase of the house adjoining the Chapel in Stamford-street, which would improve the value of the present premises and might be used as a residence for the minister or missionary, or for other purposes connected with the work, and could meanwhile be let. The price for the freehold was £700, towards which the two legacies (£150), a sum of £200 from the capital account of the Blackfriars Mission, and £150 given by Sir E. Durning and Lady Lawrence and Miss J. Durning Smith were available. The offer, if accepted, must be taken up at once.

Mr. Pearson added that it was to the thoughtfulness of their friend, Mr. S. S. Tayler, that they owed the opportunity of securing these additional premises for the mission.

The accounts showed a balance of £26 10s. 7d. due to the treasurer in place of £10 7s. 10d. in hand, with which the year began; that was chiefly due to two extra, but necessary, expenses of £24 10s. for a piano for the Girls' Club, and £20 5s. 2d. for a lantern and its electric installation, used for lectures and lantern services.

The Rev. Frederic Allen then read extracts from the Minister's report.

The report noted a slight increase in the attendances at Sunday services, and spoke of the good results of the monthly church parade service of No. 1 company of the Boys' Own Brigade. It spoke of the great need of more teachers in the Sunday-school, and of more visitors to collect for the Provident Bank. During the year £857 7s. had been collected from 1,290 depositors, the highest figures yet reached during the fifteen years of the Bank's existence. The mothers' meeting had considerably increased, but the work of the Country Cottage had been partially in abeyance, because the house at Raynes Park had to be given up and another had not yet been found. The children's happy evenings, the clubs for young women, girls, young men and boys, the gymnasium and ambulance classes, the Band of Hope and Mercy, had all been doing admirable work. The pleasant Saturday evenings for the people had been changed with good effect to a Monday meeting under the name of the Social Institute. The report concluded with a very earnest appeal for more workers.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the reports, said that as he had read over their weekly calendar it had given him a pleasant sensation of warmth. It showed an amount of work, of sympathy, of self-denial, which had given him very great pleasure, which was further increased by the details of the work carried on. He noted in the first place the admirable work of the Provident Bank, and he would again call their attention to the words which Mr. Allen used in his report speaking of the Bank, "in which the invaluable labours of the visitor-collectors achieve so much, not alone in inducing habits of thrift, but also in brightening and encouraging many who are hard pressed in the battle of life." That touched him very deeply, and if there were nothing else in the report he should still be there to wish them God-speed in the work. He was reminded of work of the same character carried on in a more systematic way by the people of Germany, as, e.g., in Darmstadt, where the organisation of the friends of the poor was half official and half voluntary. The whole town was divided into very small districts, with a captain at the head of each, who had about ten families under his care. It was his duty regularly to visit them, never to give money, but always to give human sympathy; and that organisation in Darmstadt and other places was of great value not only is raising the material condition of the people, but also their happiness in life. It was pleasant to find them doing similar work at that mission.

He then referred with satisfaction to the library and the Band of Hope; also to the cooking class, which was another Band of Hope—for the future husbands; the gymnasium and the ambulance classes, which were greatly to be encouraged; and finally to the free legal advice offered on Friday evening, which was a great service rendered to the poor. He congratulated them on inducing the slate clubs to meet there rather than in a public house, and urged them to induce other societies to follow the same course.

He referred to the address presented to the King on the previous day by the body of English Presbyterian ministers and His Majesty's reply, particularly to the King's assurance that he would maintain civil and religious liberty and toleration, and that he and the Queen would always endeavour to assist all who laboured among the people for the progress of truth, morality, and peace. Both address and reply, Sir John thought, they would do well to place upon their walls that their children and grandchildren might be reminded of what the King had said at the beginning of his reign; and he asked to be allowed to bear the cost of such a commemoration. He further said that he should be glad to follow the example of his friends Sir E. Durning Lawrence and Lady Lawrence and Miss Durning Smith in helping to provide for the purchase of the house to which reference had been made.

The Rev. T. E. M. Edwards seconded the resolution, and expressed his great interest in the work going on there amid great changes in the neigbourhood. The prevalent religious indifference in all classes made their work very difficult, but whatever might be done by changed material conditions for social amelioration he was convinced that nothing would so effectually remedy the evils from which the people suffered as the wide diffusion of religious principle. That was the great work of their mission and their church; only they must have more workers. So many of the members of their churches seemed to be simply ornamental or members only for their own advantage; their need was of members who would work for others.

The resolution having been unanimously passed, the Rev. W. G. Cadman moved the appointment of the Committee with Messrs. C. F. Pearson and W. S. Tayler as treasurers, and A. H. Biggs and A. A. Tayler as secretaries. From experience of his own work at Mansford-street, he spoke with earnest sympathy of the work at Stamford-street, especially emphasising the value of the Provident work. And altogether, however little result they might see, he was convinced that the work of their missions must tell, and the seed they had sown would spring up in many ways. This had been brought home to him that very day by the warm tributes he had heard in his district to the memory of the late Mr. Corkran. They could not tell how far their influence would go.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. J. Sudbery, and carried, after which the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie moved a resolution authorising the purchase of the house adjoining the mission for £700, directing that amount to be raised by donations or other means, and the premises to be conveyed to trustees on an open-trust for religious or educational purposes. The value of such a house, which might be used for resident workers, would be very great, for he was convinced that it was only by personal contact that they would reach the people. Mr. Corkran he thought of as the ideal missionary, with not only a kind heart, but a clear head; he never allowed his feelings to run away with him so that he lost mental grasp of a situation. That was the type of man needed for their work.

The resolution was seconded by the Rev. V. D. Davis and carried, after which a vote of thanks to Mr. Allen and all the workers was passed on the motion of Mr. Edward Warren, seconded by Mr. W. H. Abraham, and a vote of thanks to the Chair, moved by Mr. Pearson, seconded by Mr. S. S. Tayler and supported by the Rev. F. Allen, brought the business to a close. Mr. Allen referred to some instances of intolerence in the district, which he was determined to expose. Children attending their school and members of the Boys' Own Brigade had been interfered with and warned of the danger of attending such a place. Aspersions were cast on their character against which they must protest. They were trying to do a good Christian work, and had the right to stand up for what they believed to be the truth.

The meeting was concluded with a hymn and benediction.

SALVATIONISTS AND UNITARIANS WORSHIP TOGETHER.

A meeting probably unique in the experience of our churches was held in the Upper Brook-street Free Church, Manchester, on Sunday afternoon last. Lectures are given every Sunday afternoon by Mr. Peach on social or moral questions, but on Sunday last, in place of the usual lecture, a joint meeting was held with the Salvation Army. The Army marched up to the church in its usual formation with band and banners, and the church was well filled with a congregation in which Salvation bonnets or bright jerseys alternated with the more solemn suits of our Free Churchmen. Mr. Peach took the chair, and the meeting opened with a hymn, after which Ensign Weston offered prayer, during which the church echoed with unusual cries of "Amen" and "Hallelujah." Mr. Peach, in introducing the speaker, welcomed their neighbours and comrades of the Army as fellow-seekers after God and fellow-servants of Christ. They of the Free Church tried to do their part in practical redemptive work, but they also, in those afternoon meetings, tried mainly to find out the causes of things. Still they had the heartiest goodwill towards those who attacked with such conspicuous courage the consequences of our disjointed social system.

Adjutant Woodrow then spoke on the social work of the Army. At first, in deference to the supposed conventions of the "Church," he spoke from notes. Gathering however as he went on the assurance of general sympathy he began to feel more at home with us, and finally abandoning his notes he gave us a splendid full-toned and eloquent address. Ignoring theological differences he went to the root of the matter, declaring that "man building" was the common work of the Army and the Churches. But in the levels in which the Army worked this could not be attempted when the way to the soul was barred by destitution and misery. And so they tried to give "the man" a chance by first satisfying physical wants. He then sketched the vast redemptive machinery which the Army has brought into existence — shelters, slum corps, labour yards, homes, orphanages, colonies, &c., until even we sober Free Churchmen could hardly avoid shouting "Praise God," as our hearts moved responsive to the splendid story. It was a grand time, and it did us all good.

We gave them a good collection for their self-denial fund, and we sang the closing hymn as we all too rarely sing, and then Mr. Peach gave the Benediction, and the two forces separated and went their several ways, but with a deep feeling that after all we were all members of one greater army, which includes all who love the right and strive to serve their day and generation as they are able. C. P.

PROVINCIAL LETTER.

LONDON AND THE SOUTH EASTERN COUNTIES.

As an Assembly of churches, we are banded together for the overthrow of error, for the propagation of the truth, and for the culture of religious fellowship. To accomplish these results will require a large amount of patient and earnest work, as well as the exercise of an unwavering faith. If, therefore, we would not suffer the spirit of hopefulness to languish, we must keep before our minds continually the fact, that the struggle will, in the very nature of things, be a long and protracted one. With Jeremiah, we have to pull down as well as build up, to build up as well as pull down. Destruction is a process as well as construction, and often a long and tedious process. Like Colonial settlers, we have a great deal of ground to clear of noxious weeds and theological growths that have turned the fair field of truth into a wilderness of error. Like men who lay the foundations of a breakwater in the sea, and fling tons of rock and months of toil into the deep, having nothing to show but their horny hands and tanned faces, so we must expect to work long and patiently before we shall see much fruit of our labour. But as, after a time, the huge granite wall heaves its rugged shoulders out of the sea and by service as a perfect breakwater explains and justifies the hidden work of the past, so by and by the walls of a noble Christian edifice will rise out of the deep to explain and justify all our present and plodding toil. As, therefore, we look round upon our churches and discover but little evidence of outward success, we have no reason to be discouraged; for the greatest and best of all work is, as a rule, gradually and slowly developed. Growths that are rapid are apt to partake of the nature of mushrooms; but solid growths take time to mature.

And then we must remember that the position we occupy is not one which attracts the popular favour. The strongest possible prejudices have been created against us and our teaching. We have to confess that at present we are in a minority, when compared with orthodox churches. Perhaps we ought not to expect anything else. If we appeal to history, we shall discover that the leaders of every progressive movement have for a time been obliged to stand almost alone. The special mission we have to fulfil differs from that of orthodox churches. It is when we lose sight of our peculiar position as the friends of Liberal Religious thought, and place ourselves side by side with other churches, that we are apt to be discouraged. As organised churches we may be numerically weak; but as a power for Truth and Righteousness, as an influence leavening the religious world with broader sympathies and nobler conceptions of the Divine purposes, we are strong where sometimes we least suspect it. When we think how the principles for which we stand are spreading throughout society, we have every reason to "thank God and take courage." In so-called orthodox churches, the old theology has given place to the new, so that many of the advanced thinkers are able to find, to some extent, what they require in the churches where they have grown up. This keeps many whose sympathies are with us from joining our organisations. If, therefore, the churches are steadily, though slowly, moving our way, we ought to be encouraged. We rejoice that this Liberalism is so rapidly growing outside our own community, although it ignores the name which is regarded as its synonym. We should have been better pleased if men were a little more consistent and identified themselves with those churches whose creeds and articles of faith do not contradict their deepest and truest convictions. We would not for a moment try to check this growth of a Liberal orthodoxy, but we may at least urge the duty of consistency and honesty.

I have been lately much impressed with the need of enforcing the duty upon those who no longer accept the old creeds, for in our efforts to establish new centres of Liberal Religious thought we find that while many acknowledge that our religious teaching is the only one which commends itself to their reason and conscience, they hesitate to take any step which would identify them with a movement which at present is under the ban of the popular churches. At Sydenham we had proof of this. At one time it seemed that the interest excited by our special services would lead to a permanent fellowship being established; but social considerations and other influences were allowed to gain the ascendancy, so that for the present we have discontinued the mission, leaving the good seed we have scattered to an invisible husbandry. In all Forward Movement efforts their success depends very much upon having a nucleus of earnest and enthusiastic men, who will take the local responsibility of the work, and who are willing to make a little personal sacrifice in order to enlist the presence and sympathy of others. But, unfortunately, it seems as if liberal religion tends to make some of its disciples so liberal that they are utterly indifferent as to what others think on the great verities of religion.

The future of our churches will be largely determined by the efforts we now make to strengthen existing organisations, and to extend the sphere of our influence. In visiting the various churches of the Assembly I am everywhere confronted with the difficulty that is experienced in getting helpers for church work. The majority of our members prefer to be like sleeping partners of a firm, in whose transactions they take no active part, but they like to share the credit of success, if there should be any, and ascribe to themselves no blame if there should be failure. A church's prosperity ought not to depend upon the efforts of a few, but on the co-operation of all its members.

Another matter which demands serious consideration is the question which affects the position of our ministers. I am not sure that some of our churches quite realise their obligation to loyally and efficiently provide for their pecuniary maintenance. The instances are not a few in which support confessedly inadequate is rendered by congregations that are small and poor, but which, though small and poor, have among them some who might without much effort or sacrifice make that provision more adequate. Every church should consistently and intelligently understand that "the labourer is worthy of his hire," and should see that he receives it. There are those in every congregation who could be more generous, and would be, if they were only rightly approached. It has often been found that the matter has never been properly put before them by those who might have a reasonable hope of persuading or shaming them into a better way. In some cases it might be an advantage if the representatives of churches in a district could meet, and by mutual consent devise liberal things and quicken the sentiment of Christian equity towards the ministry. If any people ought to be liberal in their giving, it is those who glory in their liberal faith. Is this so? An appeal to the lists of our subscribers will answer that question.

We have also to face the fact that we are losing many of our young people. Why are we losing them? Partly because they are not early enlisted in the ranks of workers, and led to take a personal interest in the prosperity of the church of their fathers; and partly because our services are often a weariness to the flesh and a crucifixion to the spirit. George Eliot, the great novelist, once described a lady's playing of the piano as "correct, but wooden," there was no soul in it. And so our services may be very correct, but devoid of spiritual power. Worship we know is divine, but there is nothing very divine in the way in which some of our services are conducted. Depend upon it, if we are to go forward as churches, we must get rid of the conventionalism which prevails, and seek to meet the growing needs by new departures, by modes and methods born of the times and adapted to the times.

A more frequent interchange of pulpit ministrations would be a real advantage to our churches. It would help to break the monotony of always listening to one man's voice, and also give an opportunity for having truth presented from another man's standpoint. At the same time it would to some extent destroy that sense of isolation which some of our churches feel so deeply, because of the geographical distance which separates them from each other. The Provincial Assembly has urged this upon the churches from time to time, but this year it has made a definite proposal that on the 24th of the present month there should be throughout the province a simultaneous "exchange of pulpits," and it is hoped that the churches will act upon the suggestion, and thus strengthen the feeling of unity which exists among them. Since my last letter the only change which has to be recorded is that in connection with the church at Lewes. The Rev. T. Gorton, who has held the pastorate for the past four years, has tendered his resignation, which takes effect at the end of the month. The church at Reading is still vacant, and presents a fine opening for an able and energetic minister.

T. E. M. Edwards.

To Correspondents. — Letters, &c. received from the following:—E. B.; E. G. B. B.; F. B.; H. B.; W. C. B.; J. M. C.; H. M. L.; W. A. L.; F. T. M.; R. R.; J. E. S.; C. B. U.; J. W.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Aberdare: Highland-place.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on Thursday, Feb. 28, the Treasurer of the Church, Lieut.-Colonel Thomas Phillips, presiding over a fair gathering of subscribers and friends. The secretary read his report, which recited that the pulpit was again vacant. The number of subscribers were two less than the previous year, and the balance due to the treasurer had been reduced by over £12. There were over sixty names on the Sunday-school register, and the average attendance had been thirty-nine, an increase of five over the previous year. Hopes were expressed that a minister would soon be obtained, and the question of appointing new trustees was left to the Church Committee. A small Committee was also appointed to prepare an estimate for the renovation of the church and school buildings. The officers for 1901 were then appointed, and thanks were accorded to Messrs. R. L. Berry and D. H. Smith for their services in the pulpit during the past year.

Atherton (Chowbent Chapel).—During the autumn of last year, on the motion of Mr. Charles Eckersley, seconded by Mr. J. Yearnshaw, the Council of the Congregation, which includes all committees and officials, and is representive of all the institutions connected with the chapel and schools, passed unanimously the following resolution:—"That we ask our minister to further enrich our chapel services by preparing or providing in addition to the hymns and chants, such other forms in keeping with our faith, as, in his judgment, will tend to make our public worship still more devotional and congregational, and educate our children and young people who come to chapel, into the habit and spirit of worship." The Rev. J. J. Wright ultimately recommended the "Seven Services" recently issued by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and these services, now some time in use, have given general satisfaction in the ways desired by the resolution.

Bradford.—A bazaar in aid of the funds of Chapel-lane Chapel, Bradford, was opened on Thursday, Feb. 28, in the adjoining Channing Hall, by the Mayor of Bradford (Mr. W. C. Lupton), who was accompanied by the Mayoress. Mr. Byron Boothroyd, who took the chair, in introducing the Mayor, remarked that Channing Hall was opened nearly two years ago, and in the same year the entire debt was discharged. Since then it had been found necessary to repair the chapel structure, and the aim of the present effort was to wipe off the debt thus incurred. He was glad to say that everything connected with the place was in a prosperous condition, and during the past few years the congregation had more than doubled. He welcomed the Mayor and Mayoress, and commented on his Worship's catholicity of spirit in patronising that gathering. The Mayor said he well remembered the old building, which was the predecessor of that one; indeed, in his young days he had often committed trespass on its premises. Many of his friends had been connected with the place, and he held it in deep reverence. In conclusion, he remarked that it was the second place of worship in the town in point of respectability, for only the Parish Church could show a longer record of continuous ministry. On the motion of Mr. Pesel, seconded by Miss Hudson, a vote of thanks was accorded to the Mayor and Mayoress. On Friday the opening ceremony was performed by Miss Hudson, the chair being occupied by the minister. In the course of a very able and earnest address, Miss Hudson emphasised the need of more personal consecration to religion on the part of men. The work of the minister would be much pleasanter and more fruitful if he were aided in his labours by a band of reliable middle-aged men, whose example younger men and youths would be disposed to follow. Miss Hudson was heartily thanked for her address. On Saturday, March 2, Mr. J. G. Slater took the chair, and the Rev. Charles Hargrove declared the sale open. As a considerable quantity of goods remained unsold at the close of the third day, it was decided to continue

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places.' Guides on application to the Town Clerk the bazaar on Monday, March 4, when, despite the inclemency of the weather, a goodly number of our friends were in attendance. Throughout, the bazaar was much marred by the unfavourable weather, but the promoters consider the financial result, about £280, highly satisfactory, especially when it is borne in mind that it is only sixteen months since the congregation raised £550 by a similar effort.

Dunmurry.—The annual congregational meeting was held on the 11th inst., and passed off satisfactorily. The meeting-house has just been renovated, and a number of most useful improvements have been effected on the congregational property. On Sunday, the 24th inst., the re-opening services will be held, when Principal Gordon, of Manchester, will officiate both morning and evening, and collections will be made on behalf of the improvement fund.

Halifax.—The report of a presentation by the congregation of Northgate-end Chapel to the Rev. F. E. Millson, we are obliged, by an aggravating mishap, to hold over until next week.

Lewes (Resignation).—The Rev. T. Gorton, who has held the pastorate at Westgate Chapel during the past four years, has tendered his resignation. The pulpit will be vacant at the beginning of April.

London: Peckham.—The annual congregational meeting of the Avondale-road Church was held on Tuesday evening, under the presidency of the Rev. G. Carter, when there was a large attendance of members. Reports were rendered by the church secretary and the treasurer, as also by the secretaries of the affiliated societies. Amid much that was otherwise encouraging, the serious fact was revealed that the church is still struggling with financial difficulties, for the amount raised during the past year—between £140 and £150—falls short by over £20 of the treasurer's requirement to balance accounts. Three new members had joined since the last quarterly meeting, when six were welcomed. The proceedings were prolonged to a late hour in deliberation over various suggestions for the management of church affairs, including a proposal to enlist the services of ladies to a larger extent than has hitherto prevailed.

Preston.—The annual tea and meeting of the congregation worshipping at Percy-street Chapel, held on 7th inst., was not quite the success of previous years, but this, no doubt, was due to a variety of causes, not the least of which was an alteration from the date originally fixed. Mr. D. Mayor, who was in the chair, said that he felt there had been a deepening of the spiritual life in the congregation since Mr. Anderton took up his ministry not quite twelve months ago. He referred to the faith they at that chapel held; the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, and a belief in Eternal life; that was a creed worth living for, and one of service to the world at large. He expressed a hope that his hearers would place themselves in a recipient frame of mind and then they would get great good from Mr. Anderton's teachings. Mr. T. Parkinson, the chapel treasurer, made a financial statement, showing that the past twelve months had been successful, for the income from pew rents had been some £10 more than any year for some time past. The Rev. N. Anderton, who was enthusiastically received, after speaking of the difference he had found in working with a congregation like that at Preston, compared with Bank-street, Bolton, said they in Preston suffered from isolation; isolation due partly to their geographical situation, but due also to their lack of interest in their work and in the work and doings of the denomination in general. What was required in Preston was an arousing, more active interest in their work and the work of the denomination. He had, he was glad to say, noticed improvement in this direction, and he hoped they would keep on in the good path entered upon. The proceedings of the evening were enlivened by glees from the chapel choir, songs from Miss Cissie Mazor, and recitals, including a scene from The Rivals, by Mrs. M'Keague.

Richmond.—The Rev. E. M. Daplyn is to conduct special services in the Ormond road Church every evening next week, from Monday the 18th to Friday, the 22nd inst., inclusive. The services are to begin at 8 P.M. A bill making this announcement ends with the following invitation:—"You are cordially invited to come to these services. Make an effort and spare the time to come. Whatever may be your religious opinions, or even if you have no religious opinions, come, and let us try together to get some hold on the essentials of all religion; and to realise our common relation to our Father in heaven. That will bring to our lives both strength and gladness."

Rotherham.—On Tuesday week the Rev. E. I. Fripp, of Mansfield, lectured for the Church of Our Father Literary and Social Union on "Robinson Crusoe and Defoe." The chair was taken by Mr. Councillor Winter, a Wesleyan local preacher. The Rev. W. Stephens, in seconding a vote of thanks to the chairman, said that the lecture was the last of a successful course, and he thought it had been the most successful of all.

South Shields.—On Sunday evening Mr. Thomas Paxton, who is in charge of Unity Church, preached on "Christianity and War." An abstract of the sermon appeared in a local paper.

Whitchurch.—On Wednesday evening, March 6, Mr. Richard Robinson, hon. sec. of the Liverpool Branch of the South African Conciliation Committee, lectured in the schoolroom of the Church of the Saviour, on "The Causes of the War." The Rev. W. F. Turland took the chair, and said that whatever different views they might hold, they claimed in this country freedom of utterance, and he was sure Mr. Robinson would receive a patient and generous hearing. The lecturer dealt at length with the events which had led up to the war, and denounced the action of leading statesmen in this country, who, in his opinion, were responsible for the waste of money and human life, and the misery and suffering which had resulted. At the conclusion, a vote of thanks to Mr. Robinson was carried by acclamation.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, March 17.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.; 7 P.M., Lantern Service, "Other Parables of Jesus," Rev. Frederic Allen. Monday, 8.15 P.M., Lantern Pictures, "A Visit to Florence," Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. Page Hopps.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. Marchant.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M., Rev. Frank K. Freeston,

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. Perris.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. S. Farrington, and 7 P.M., Rev. Edgar Daplyn. Children's Class, 12.30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. V. Crook.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Dawes Hicks, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M., "Some Certainties of Religion," 7 P.M., "Count Tolstoi: his Excommunication," Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church High-street 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., Rev. Stopford A. Brooke, M.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Mansford-street Churchand Mission, Bethnal Green 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., "Memorial Service: C. L. Corkran," Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. G. Carter.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M., Rev. Edgar Daplyn, and 7 P.M., Rev. S. Farrington.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., P. W. Ames, F.R.S.L., and 7 P.M., Mr. T. Elliot.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church 11 A.M., Mr. W. J. Hawkins, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. P. W. Ames.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. F. H. Jones.

Bedford, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. Rowland Hill.

Blackpool, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. David Davis.

Blackpool, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. Coe.

Bradford, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M., Rev. E. Ceredig Jones M.A., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. H. Davies.

Brighton, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. Livens.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M., and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. J. R. Macdonald.

Deal and Walmer, Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. Shakspeare.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Burrows.

Eastbourne, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. G. St. Clair.

Guildford, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. Marten.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. John McDowell.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Harwood, B.A.

Liverpool, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., and 6.30 P.M. Rev. J. J. Thornton.

Liverpool, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. Klein, "What the Apostle Paul did for Christianity."

Manchester, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. Shanks.

Newport, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Clement E. Pike.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. C. B. Upton, B.A., B.Sc.

Portsmouth, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. Thomas Bond.

Portsmouth, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. Cosens Prior.

Rochdale, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M., Rev. T. P. Spedding, and 6 P.M.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Stephens.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. Agar.

Sevenoaks, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. Harold Rylett. Stables in the grounds.

Southend, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. Dear.

Southport, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved.

Torquay, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'Connor.

Tunbridge Wells, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

York, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. Rawlings, M.A.

IRELAND.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, Rev. J. Crossley, of Birkenhead.

Warrenpoint, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 noon, Rev. W. E. Mellone. The ttendance of visitors cordially invited.

Cape Town, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. Balmforth.

Sydney, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Walters.

Ethical Religion Society,

STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—March 17th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The 'Decalogue'—Is it the Foundation of Morality? V. Honour thy Father and thy Mother."

South-Place Ethical Society,

SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—March 10 at 11.15 A.M., JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "The Nineteenth Century"—"The Socialist Movement: Organic View of Society in Relation to Industry and Politics."

British & Foreign Unitarian Association.

The NEXT MEETING of the COUNCIL will be held at ESSEX HALL, on TUESDAY, April 16th, 1901. The President, Sir John T. Brunner, Bart., M.P., will take the Chair at Four P.M. Any NOTICES OF MOTION by Members should reach the Office on or before April 3rd.

In accordance with Rules 9 and 11 Nominations for the COUNCIL or for the EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE for 1901-1902 should reach this Office not later than Saturday, March 30th, 1901.

W. COPELAND BOWIE, Secretary.

Essex Hall, Essex-street, Strand, London, March 14th, 1901.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY of LONDON and SOUTH-EASTERN COUNTIES.

THE NEW CENTURY.

The Congregations and friends are cordially invited to a

UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICE,

at

LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET CHAPEL (Oxford-circus),

TUESDAY, MARCH 26TH, 1901.

The following Ministers will take part:—The Revs. W. G. TARRANT, B.A., FRANK K. FREESTON, W. C. POPE, H. S. PERRIS, M.A., and F. W. STANLEY.

Service to begin at 7.30 P.M. and close at 9 P.M.

AT the ANNUAL MEETING of the BLACKFRIARS MISSION and STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL, held on March 13th, Sir JOHN T. BRUNNER, Bart., M.P., presiding, the following RESOLUTIONS were carried:—

That the Reports now read be received, adopted, and printed for circulation amongst the subscribers.
Proposed by the Chairman.
Seconded by Rev. T. E. M. Edwards.

That the Committee and officers for the ensuing year be as follows:—
Committee.—Mrs. Bridger, Mrs. Midlane, Miss M. A. Mace, Miss L. Martineau, Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, Rev. F. W. Stanley, Messrs. I. S. Lister, G. Ling, Percy Areston, A. W. Harris, S. S. Tayler, and E. S. G. Warren.
Hon. Treasurers.—Mr. C. F. Pearson and Mr. W. S. Tayler.
Hon. Secretaries.—Mr. A. H. Biggs and Mr. A. A. Tayler.
Auditors.—Mr. H. B. Lawford and Mr. A. M. Tayler.
Proposed by Rev. W. G. Cadman.
Seconded by W. J. Sudbery.

That this meeting, having heard the proposals of the Committee for the purchase of the Freehold House, No. 51, Stamford-street, hereby authorises such purchase at the price of £700; and with that object directs the Committee to raise such sum by Donations, Sale of Stock, Mortgage, or otherwise as they may deem advisable. That the premises shall be conveyed to two or more Trustees to be appointed by the Committee, upon Trusts of an open and unsectarian character, for Religious or Educational purposes, and with a full power of sale.
Proposed by Rev. W. Copeland Bowie.
Seconded by Rev. V. D. Davis.

That the hearty thanks of this Meeting be given to the Rev. Frederic Allen and all who have assisted in the work of the Mission and Chapel during the past year.
Proposed by Mr. E. S. G. Warren.
Seconded by Mr. W. H. Abraham.

Vote of thanks to Chairman, Sir John Brunner, Bart., M.P.
Proposed by Mr. C. F. Pearson.
Seconded by Mr. S. S. Tayler.

WANTED, on April 12th, a HOUSEMAID, where two servants are kept. Comfortable home. Send particulars of last place, height, and age to Mrs. A. E. JONES, 13, Great Bedford-street, Bath.

PUPIL (over 16) received on reduced terms, if able to assist with little ones' music practice.—Apply, ELEANOR MOSS, B.A., Edgbaston College, Bristol-road, Birmingham.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

SIDMOUTH.

TO LET.—THE BALSTERS, containing a large dining-room, drawing-room, and library; five bedrooms, dressing-room, and box-room; kitchen and scullery, coach-house, stable, and offices, &c. Rent £60 per annum.—Application to be made to the OCCUPIER.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS, Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

PRINCIPAL—MISS BAILY.

HEADMISTRESS—MISS ELEANOR MOSS, B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which s opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum s based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, SOUTH MARINE TERRACE ABERYSTWITH.

PRINCIPAL — MRS. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. (Established 1893).

PUPILS prepared for the Universities; resident gymnast and French mistress; healthy conditions of life; hockey and tennis.

Prospectus on application to Miss MACRAE MOIR, Lingholt, Hindhead.
Station, Haslemere.

THE HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

(Founded by Miss J. F. GRUNER, May, 1897).

BOARDERS are received by the Misses GRUNER at Moorcroft, Hindhead, Haslemere, from whom prospectuses and further information may be obtained, the School being carried on at the HINDHEAD HALL as heretofore.

BABBACOMBE, TORQUAY.—HOME TUITION in FRENCH and GERMAN.—Rev. A. E. and Mrs. O'CONNOR would receive, for special instruction, two boys or girls as Boarders. Educated in Germany, he resided there long; and in France. Mrs. O'Connor is a native of France. Reference—W. H. Herford, B.A., Paignton.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, NANTWICH (BARKER FOUNDATION.)

HEAD MASTER, GUY LEWIS, M.A., Oxford.
ASSISTANT MASTERS—Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and Manchester College, Oxford, and H. L. JONES, B.A., Merton College, Oxford.
Visiting Masters for Science, Music, Drawing, Gymnastics and Manual Instruction.
Next Entrance Examination, April 10th.

There are a few Vacancies on the Foundation. For Prospectus and particulars, apply to the Headmaster, or to the Clerk to the Governors, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

BEDFORD COLLEGE FOR WOMEN (UNIVERSITY OF LONDON), YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET, W.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.

One Clift Scholarship in Arts, annual value £31 10s., tenable for three years.

One Pfeiffer Scholarship in Science, annual value £48, tenable for three years.

These Scholarships will be awarded on the results of the Examination to be held in the College on June 25th and 26th.

STUDENTS are prepared for all the University of London Examinations in Arts and Science. LECTURES are given in all branches of General and Higher Education.

Six Laboratories are open for Practical Work. Students can reside in the College.

Prospectus and all Particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL.

JUST PUBLISHED. Post Free 6d. Net.

Information Concerning the History and Growth of the Bible.

COLLECTED, CONDENSED, AND ARRANGED by BERTRAM TALBOT for SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS & OTHERS.

The SPECTATOR of the 2nd inst., says:—

"The treatment of the subject throughout is liberal and broad-minded. The writer accepts the well-established conclusions of modern research, and gives them in a reasonable and inoffensive fashion to his readers. This is a good little book in itself, and it will guide the student to sources where he will find these matters treated in more detail."

For further particulars see "Inquirer," pp. 151 & 159.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Also kept in stock by the S.S.A. at Essex Hall.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people ceived in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor-road, S.W

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable Apartments, well situated midway between station and beach in sunny Felixstowe. Reasonable terms.—Apply Mrs. H. ROBINSON, Kimberley House, Ranelagh-road.

LAKE DISTRICT, furnished House; 3 entertaining, 6 bed (2 double bedded) rooms, bath, w.c.—Address, J., INQUIRER Office.

BOURNEMOUTH. — Board-residence. High position, facing South, with balcony and good garden. Suitable for Open-air Treatment. Close to sea, sheltered by pines, and adjoining the car-route to all parts.—D., Cliff House, 1, Westminster-road, Branksome Park.

TWO or Three FURNISHED ROOMS, Ground floor, Bath h. and c. Nice neighbourhood. Near Free Church, Park, Terrace Gardens and Rail. Good attendance. Moderate terms.—21, The Hermitage, Richmond, Surrey.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

Absolutely PURE
therefore BEST

CADBURY'S
"The standard of highest purity." THE LANCET.
Cocoa

CADBURY'S Cocoa contains no added starch, alkalies, or colouring matter—which are often used to disguise poor and inferior cocoas. It is entirely free from all foreign substances, such as Kola, Malt, Hops, etc.

CADBURY'S Cocoa is highly nourishing and easily digested repairing waste and preserving health. It can be taken with the greatest benefit at all times and seasons—in Childhood, in Youth, or in Old Age.

The Lancet (August 11th, 1900) says:
"Whatever definition may be adopted as to
"what is pure cocoa, CADBURY'S Cocoa
"will be certain to be placed well within
"the mark."

CADBURY'S Cocoa is a Perfect Food.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE. E.C.
Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.
Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.
LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.
Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.
FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."
The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

FREDK. LONG & SON,
AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS
4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.
Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

LIVERPOOL DISTRICT MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.
SIMULTANEOUS COLLECTIONS
in support of the Work of the Association will be held on SUNDAY, March 17th, at the following places of Worship:—
LIVERPOOL ... Ullet-road Church.
" Hope-street Church.
" Ancient Chapel of Toxteth.
SOUTHPORT ... Portland-street Church.
BIRKENHEAD ... Charing Cross Church.
CHESTER ... Matthew Henry's Chapel.
Collections at WARRINGTON and GATEACRE will be held later in the year.
L. de B. KLEIN, President.
R. ROBINSON, Treasurer, 11, Old Hall-street.
B. P. BURROUGHS, Secretary, 19, Sweeting-street
Rev. H. D. ROBERTS, Missionary.

NORTH AND EAST LANCASHIRE UNITARIAN MISSION.
The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Stand, on WEDNESDAY, March 20th, 1901.
Service in the Chapel at 3 P.M., conducted by Rev. W. HARRIS, M.A., of Bolton. Sermon by the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE, of London.
Business Meeting after Service.
Tea in School at 5 P.M. Price One Shilling each.
Public Meeting in the School at 6 P.M. Chairman W. TAYLOR JONES, Esq. Addresses by Revs. W. C. Bowie, Dendy Agate, W. C. Hall, and J. C. Odgers.
Trains to Whitefield Station.
R. TRAVERS HERFORD, Hon. Sec.

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

PULPIT SUPPLY or Mission Work desired. Experienced Preacher and Worker.—Rev. HENRY CROSS, 65, Exmouth-road, Great Yarmouth.

FOR SUPPLY or RESIDENT PASTORATE.—Rev. WM. BIRKS, F.R.A.S., Fairview House, Clarendon-road, Southsea.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.
CURRENT ACCOUNTS
2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%
DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS
2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%
STOCKS AND SHARES
Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager
Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,
THE FIRS, BROMYARD, HEREFORDSHIRE.
This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.
For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss JESSIE BAKER (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

SWEET PEAS.—The best and newest varieties at lowest prices. Catalogue free. Choice mixed varieties 6d. per oz, 4 ozs. 1s. 6d.—F. ROSCOE, Steeple Morden, Royston.

Printed by WOODFALL & KINDER, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. KENNEDY, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, JOHN HEYWOOD, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), JOHN HEYWOOD, Deansgate.—Saturday March 16, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3065. New Series, No. 169.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 23, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 177
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Central Postal Mission 178
Is Nature Cruel? 178
The Religion of the Incarnation 178
A Living Church 184
The Religious Census of Ireland 189
The Essex Hall Hymnal 189
ARTICLES :—
Eleanor's Idolatries 179
Guilds—II. 181
POETRY :—
A Song in Spring 180
The Sparrow 183
OBITUARY :—
The Rev. John Byles 181
The late Rev. C. L. Corkran 183
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 183
LEADER :—
A Living Church 184
MEETINGS :—
Manchester District Association 187
A New Unitarian Church for Wood Green... 188
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 189
ADVERTISEMENTS 191

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

THE report of the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches presented to the annual meeting last Saturday makes special mention of the mission services and lectures held throughout the district before Christmas, as the first part of a programme of winter's work, to inaugurate the new century. In this case, as in the greater mission of the United Evangelical Free Churches, while the masses were not reached, great good resulted, and particularly in the stronger sense of fellowship among the churches, and the quickening and encouragement springing from united work in a common cause. Similar services are being held during the present week in the East Cheshire district, and from Yorkshire we also have reports of mission services. In Birmingham the united meetings, postponed from January on account of the Queen's death, are to be held on the 29th and 31st inst. On Friday evening the United Social meeting of Birmingham Unitarians is to be held at the Town Hall, and on the following Sunday evening there is to be a United Religious service in the same place, when the preacher will be the Rev. Stopford Brooke. In London, we would again remind our readers of the United Devotional service to be held in Little Portland-street Chapel on Tuesday evening, of which further particulars will be found in the advertisement.

THE annual meeting of the Manchester Domestic Mission was held in the Lord Mayor's parlour at the Town Hall on Tuesday afternoon, of which we hope to give a full report next week.

ON Thursday week Mr. Stopford Brooke concluded his second course of lectures on Poetry at University College, in the new Lectureship which bears his name. The first course before Christmas, as our readers will remember, was on Browning; the second course has been more miscellaneous in character, dealing with some of the lesser poets of the same period, but with a magnificent lecture on the poetry of the Revolution interpolated. The last lecture dealt with Clough, of whose "Bothie," with its "broken-backed hexameters," a delightful account was given. Altogether, of Clough's poetry Mr. Brooke said that the execution lagged behind the emotion, the language depressed and lowered the thought; but there was great attraction in his absolute sincerity of utterance, even in the most introspective of his poems. He died at a time when they might have hoped to have from him stronger affirmations of truth and greater poems. They could not part from him better than by recalling his beautiful lines:—"Say not the struggle nought availeth." In conclusion, Mr. Brooke expressed the hope that he might deal with the poetry of Matthew Arnold in a subsequent course.

AT this last lecture the chair was taken by Dr. Blake Odgers, chairman of the Stopford Brooke Lectureship Committee, who made a statement as to the lectures which have been given, and the prospect for the future. The Committee had received nearly a thousand applications for tickets, and they had issued 650 for each of the courses. Of these, over 400 were free tickets issued to teachers and students of all kinds, nurses, Arts and Crafts and Board School teachers, and clergymen. Some of the audience had come great distances, and they had received many letters of thanks from those who could not otherwise have attended. Dr. Odgers also announced that a meeting of subscribers and all others interested in the Lectureship would be called in May, of which due notice would be given.

THE excommunication of Tolstoy, which we noted last week, as published by the Holy Synod of the Orthodox Church of Russia, was not likely, except by wounding his friends, to disturb the Count's peace of mind; and certainly it would not turn him from his steadfast purpose and clear conviction of religious truth. But his wife, who is still a member of the Church, writes to the excommunicators in indignation and grief:—

Not that because of this document the spiritual death of my husband follows—that is God's concern, not men's. In the spiritual world the life of the soul remains an impenetrable mystery, and that life, thank Heaven, is not within the jurisdiction of the powers that be. But when I see this excommunication delivered by the Church to which I belong, and to which I will always belong, established by Christ in order to hallow in God's name the solemn acts of man's life, birth, marriage, and death; whose mission is to proclaim the law of charity, the remission of sins, love of our enemies and those that hate us; whose duty towards all is to pray for all; then I am at a loss to understand.

This excommunication, the Countess adds, will call forth not the approval, but the indignation of men, as is shown by the fresh demonstrations of love and sympathy for her husband, which come to him from all parts of the world.

TORN thus between loyalty to her Church and indignation at the action of its official representatives, the Countess utters a further protest and a significant warning. It seems that a secret order has been issued by the Holy Synod, forbidding priests, on Tolstoy's death, to perform any Church service. At whom, asks the Countess, is this order aimed, at the lifeless body or the living friends? But even supposing it proved impossible to find a priest who, either in fear of the God of Love and not of men or for the sake of a fee, would recite the burial service and the prayers for the dead, the threat of the Hierarchy is yet defied:—

The Church in my eyes is something abstract, and I recognise as its ministers those alone who understand what the Church really is. If it were necessary to believe that the Church is nothing but a gathering of men, who out of malice are ready to violate the foremost commandment of Christ, the law of love, all we who are its members and keep its laws would have left it long ago. And the renegades are not those who strive after truth, but those who proudly place themselves at the head of the Church, who, breaking the law of love, humility, and gentleness, have behaved like spiritual executioners. God will be indulgent to those, even without the Church, who have lived a life of humility, sacrifice of worldly possessions, love, and devotion. His pardon goes to them rather than to those whose mitres and decorations are set with precious stones, but who, like bad shepherds, cut away members of the Church whose pastors they are. Hypocrisy may attempt to twist my words into another meaning, but people of good faith will judge rightly of our intentions.

Thus it would seem that if the order of the Synod is not recalled, the Countess is prepared to assert the right of a universal spiritual priesthood, independent of a faithless Hierarchy. It is a significant sign in Orthodox Russia.

THE Bill for the Prevention of the Sale of Intoxicants to Children under sixteen years of age happily passed the Second Reading in the House of Commons on Wednesday, with a very large majority. But the real battle will be in Committee, and if the Bill is to be saved, public opinion, which, from the Archbishop of Canterbury to the working-men chiefly concerned, is warmly in its favour, must continue to make itself felt by every available means. Mr. R. Brimley Johnson (8, York-buildings, Adelphi, W.C.) has issued a shilling pamphlet, "The Children and the Drink," with a preface by the Archbishop, dealing with the whole question in three parts: the Cruelty to Children involved in the present custom, Injuries done to Children through Drink, and the Prohibition of Sale to Children.

A meeting of landowners and tenant-farmers in the neighbourhood of Windsor having resolved that to abolish the Royal Buckhounds, or alter their character, as has been proposed, would be "nothing short of a local, if not of a national, calamity," and having further resolved to promote a petition in favour of the retention of the hunt, Mr. H. S. Salt, hon. sec. of the Humanitarian League, 53, Chancery-lane, W.C., has issued the following letter of protest:—

It is greatly to be hoped that the Civil List Committee will decline to sanction any re-endowment of the Royal Buckhounds in order to provide "Innocent enjoyment" for Berkshire or Buckinghamshire landowners.

So long as the law permits the worrying of semi-domesticated animals, it is open to anyone to indulge in such a practice at his own expense and responsibility. But we strongly protest against the injustice of re-imposing on the National Exchequer the cost of a sporting establishment which is now desired only by a clique of interested persons, while it has come to be regarded with disgust and abhorrence by a large number of citizens who have a right to be considered. On the list of those who have signed memorials against the stag-hunt are members of both Houses of Parliament, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and many leading Churchmen and Nonconformists, distinguished authors, and various well-known men and women representing all sections of society.

When it is remembered, too, that it has now been placed beyond doubt that the late Queen had been "strongly opposed to stag-hunting for many years past," it is difficult to believe that the King will desire, or that the House of Commons will permit, the further expenditure of public money on this contemptible sport.

The Rev. Arthur Harvie, of Gateshead, and Mr. J. W. Johnston, of Newcastle, who went to Tantobie on Wednesday, March 6, as representatives of the Tyneside Branch of the International Arbitration and Peace Association to speak on the subject of "The War in South Africa," were disgracefully treated by a mob of the villagers. The two friends were pelted with mud and stones as they made their way to the Co-operative Hall, and the mob, who crowded into the hall, after allowing speaking for about twenty minutes, cleared the platform by a storm of unsavoury missiles, and then gave vent to their patriotism by singing "God Save the King." For some time the speakers were barricaded in the hall, and when, with the help of the police, they did at last emerge, hoping to catch their last train, they received even more severe handling, and after taking refuge in friendly cottages, had to make their way home on foot—Mr. Harvie a distance of ten miles. We are glad to be assured that except for bruises, scratches, and severe shaking, and damaged clothes, Mr. Harvie is none the worse for the adventure, but that was owing to no good will on the part of the "patriots." Mr. Harvie has our warmest sympathy.

The annual meeting of the Aborigines Protection Society is to be held at Westminster Palace Hotel on Tuesday, March 26, at 8 p.m., with Sir W. Brampton Gurdon, M.P., in the chair, and Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., M.P., Mr. A. Birrell, K.C., and Hon. J. W. Sauer, of Cape Colony, among the speakers. Attention will be called to the need for safeguarding the interests of natives in West and East Africa as well as in South Africa.

The report of Manchester College, Oxford, presented to the 115th annual meeting last January, and recently issued, contains a record of special interest in the list of some 360 books which were Dr. Martineau's, including a large number of valuable philosophical works, presented to the library by his family, and also of a considerable number of books presented by Mrs. Russell Martineau from her late husband's collection.

CENTRAL POSTAL MISSION AND UNITARIAN WORKERS' UNION.

Sir,—Early in September, the new buildings of the Unitarian College, Klausenburg, Transylvania, will be opened, and the attendance of English visitors will be warmly welcomed. In order to enable ministers and members of Unitarian congregations to accomplish the long journey and be present at the ceremony, the Central Postal Mission Committee are undertaking the arrangements. If thirty persons can be found willing to travel out together, the double journey can be made at little more than single fare. As far as can at present be ascertained, it will cost each person about £15, including hotels and visiting some of the remoter peasant congregations.

Next year, 1902, it is hoped that a suitable house may be found in South Wales, in the centre of beautiful scenery, where we can have a Holiday Home and a pink party on the old lines.

All applications should be addressed to Miss F. Hill, hon. sec., "Transylvanian Excursion," 13, Christchurch-road, Hampstead, N.W. M. Lucy Tagart.

IS NATURE CRUEL?

Sir,—Since our Creator chose to form us, not like the graminivoræ, but with teeth and digestive apparatus adapted to the consumption of flesh, it is but reasonable to suppose that it was "a part of His scheme, from the beginning of things," that flesh should form a portion of our diet. How beneficial and, therefore, valuable a portion it is, experience daily proves. But if by our physiological formation we require and are justified in availing ourselves of such food, as intellectual and moral beings we are bound to avoid inflicting any needless pain in our methods of procuring it. The "horror of the cattle-ship," or any other cruelty of which man may be guilty is not necessarily attendant on our eating meat, and, indeed, such malpractices avenge themselves on the perpetrators by rendering such food less wholesome or even absolutely prejudicial to health. The only inevitable suffering—the death-pang—is but momentary, and vastly counterbalanced by other advantages. The Jews, too, ate mutton, and the "good shepherd"—type of tenderest care—after they had enjoyed sufficiently the "green pastures" and "still waters," led his flock eventually to the butcher, and was not the less their best friend. Would he have been kinder had he left them to be torn by the wolf, or to perish of hunger in the wilderness?

Mr. Peach asks if I think that the fate which I think preferable for the domestic animals would also be preferable for man. Were he mere animal, of course it would be, but, considering that his nature is so very different, it would be strange if it were so. The "slow decay" which to an irrational creature would be mere physical pain and misery, to man—an incarnate soul—should be, and often is, a ripening for another and a higher existence.

E. G. Bayle-Bernard.

36, Patshull-road, London, N.W.

March 12.

THE RELIGION OF THE INCARNATION.

Sir,—Both Mr. Lloyd and myself have now had an opportunity of stating our views, and I have no reason to regret the discussion or to retract one word of my original article, or my subsequent letter.

Mr. Lloyd objects, not to my doctrine—which, though a pleasing, is a somewhat unnecessary assurance from one Unitarian minister to another—but to my use of a term to which he attaches a narrowly dogmatic, while I employ it in a spiritual meaning.

I see no object in pursuing a mere logomachy; but I confess myself ready to go on erring with Dr. Martineau, in the belief that God was "personally there" in Christ, i.e., incarnate in a supreme and unique degree: from which, to my mind, it follows that Christianity is the Religion of the Incarnation.

Let me express myself in heartiest agreement with the concluding paragraph of Mr. Gow's review of "Exploratio Evangelica," where he speaks of "a series of doctrines which shall contain all that is true in the Incarnation, &c.," as "an ideal to attract us all," and where he deplores the doctrinal poverty of liberal Theism, and our even worse "indifference to the root ideas, the spiritual truths contained in orthodox statements."

Finally, Sir, without intervening in the useful correspondence on "A Living Church" to which you are now opening your columns, may I ask one question: Is it remotely likely that we can have a Living Church without a Living Christ?

March 9. J. Warschauer.

To Correspondents.—Letters, &c. received from the following:—W. E. A.; J. B.; W. B.; F. C. C.; T. C.; E. D.; J. G. F.; T. W. F.; H. G.; A. H.; J. P.; P. R.; J. C. S.; W. R. S.; A. D. T; C. T.; F. W.; R. W.

Editor's Change of Address.—Correspondents are requested to note that after the 25th inst. the home address of the Rev. V. D. Davis will be 9, Nightingale-square, Balham, S.W.

ELEANOR'S IDOLATRIES.

A Lesson from Mrs. Humphry Ward's New Story.

THE critics of Mrs. Humphry Ward's recent work have had great difficulty in deciding which of "the great interests," as they put it, therein represented, was uppermost in her mind when she wrote. Was it her primary object to draw a picture of Roman Catholicism, as it appeared at its centre, exhibiting the lights and shades of that wondrously persistent and consistent system of belief? Or did she intend to espouse the cause of young Italy, the characteristics of which she has so charmingly sketched and so sympathetically handled? Or had she rather the design of setting forth the inherent nature and power of the pure Christian ideal, through the presentation of that noble conquest of self with which the book concludes? I do not know, and do not care to guess; I am grateful to find all three purposes admirably worked out and artistically blended. But, along with these, I seem to discern another significance in the story, unnoticed, so far as I am aware, by those who have written upon it. Even though it be, after all, the result of a merely subjective impression, for which the authoress would disclaim the slightest responsibility, the interpretation put upon one feature of her story, in what follows, will serve, at least, to illustrate a prevalent attitude of mind towards religious observances.

Manisty and Eleanor, when we are first introduced to them, are engaged upon an undertaking of a peculiarly instructive kind. The disappointed politician, having broken with his party upon questions connected with religion and education, has come to Italy for the purpose of studying the phenomena of ancient tradition and modern rationalism in actual face-to-face conflict. He is occupied in writing a book, which, indeed, like Mr. Casaubon's, is never destined to be completed, but which is intended to be his Apologia, his defence of the attitude he had assumed in the controversy referred to. The concrete example of Italian affairs is to be used as an object-lesson to England and the world of the pernicious consequences attendant on the practical application of liberal principles. And Eleanor is assisting him in the task—she, who in the mournful months that followed the loss of husband and child, had discovered "the inner sweetness," "the gentle restoring flame," to be derived from "the life of ideas, the life of knowledge, even as a poor untrained woman may approach it." But, what a desecration of culture on the part of both! The book they were together producing was an "impassioned defence of tradition, of Catholicism, and the Papacy, as the imperishable, indestructible things," page after page was being devoted to a "glorification of the Pope and the Mass." And yet for the two individuals working at it, Catholicism was not, and never had been, a personal faith. He was "one of the most thorough sceptics of his day," and she had ceased to believe in "a world ruled by a God," and looked forward to being engulfed, when her own light went out, in the same abyss that had already swallowed up husband and child. Reminding one somewhat of a celebrated essay of Montaigne's, the book was to be an elaborate justification of a system of things, which intellectually for the two persons concerned are meaningless as the nonsense-verses of a conjuror in a booth.

The psychological motives that give rise to this hypocritical performance are not similar in the minds of the two agents. It is true the American girl, Lucy Foster, speaks of them as though they were—Catholicism, she thinks, is for each "a thing to be passionately admired and praised, like art, or music, or scenery." But, as a matter of fact, the mental characteristics at the back of this common aim in Manisty and Eleanor differ considerably.

Manisty is swayed predominantly by impulses of pique, revenge, and self-conceit. At whatever cost, this book was to expose, with his scathing analysis, the dangers and pitfalls of a secularist state, because, although himself a secularist, its author hated his fellow-secularists. They were vulgar; he shared the proclivities of Matthew Arnold for "sweetness and light." "Is it fair," he is asked, "to stand outside slavery and praise it?" "Why not?" he answers, "if it suits my purpose?" "Your book is a plea for superstition," it is urged, and he bursts forth into a roar of argument in honour of superstition. Superstition, in short, unnecessary for him, is for the populace "the great guardian of morals"—one of those "foolish, ineffable things that bind mankind together, and send them to 'face the music,' in this world and the next." So that whilst intellectually he is all for the Darwinian views of Father Benecke, strategically he is all for the ecclesiastical views of the Priests, who bring about the worthy Father's excommunication. "I like their little idolatries," he might have said of the multitudes; "toys in the nursery keep children from mischief."

Eleanor, on the other hand, was gradually drawn into the work through a growing attachment to Manisty, and through the need she was experiencing of some one to lean upon, and of something to think of, to save her from melancholy brooding. Had the book been an exposure of ecclesiastical abuses, instead of a glowing laudation of them, it would have found in her an equally willing devotee. When, for instance, her labours with Manisty are at end, and she is brought into contact with Father Benecke, suspended on account of his heretical volume, Eleanor tries to console the latter by "dwelling on his comradeship with all the martyrs of the world, on the help and support that would certainly gather round him, on the new friends that would replace the old"—a line of reflection altogether foreign to anything Manisty would have suggested. And yet it is manifest that Manisty's attitude towards Catholicism reflected itself in her under an altered guise. She can comfort herself with forms and ceremonies which, although destitute for her of any shadow of rational significance, appeal nevertheless to her affectional sensibilities. The principles upon which they are based are no longer true, but they themselves have some beautiful feeling associated with them. Her intelligence assures her that they are but imaginary sanctities, but her sensuous nature obtains from them pleasurable experience. And she hovers round them as a moth round a flame. For the sake of comfortable emotion, she silences the protests of reason, and, like Rousseau's Savoyard Vicar, "collects herself for performing the act of worship with all the feelings required by the Church and the majesty of the Sacrament." Not even the prospect of an early morning stroll with Manisty can entice her from her "house of Rimmon," nor from being "her own dupe" by attending mass. To praise the Holy Catholic Church from a safe distance was not for her sufficient; she must herself participate in its functions. "I like my little idolatries," she says with decision, and proceeds upon her way.

One may hope that individuals of the type of Manisty are comparatively rare, but Eleanor's fetish worship has all the marks of a too familiar reality. Mrs. Ward has shown quite an exceptional genius in bringing to light mental traits and tendencies distinctive of the times in which her novels are written. When "Robert Elsmere" appeared, human interest centred about the destructive criticism of orthodox theology, and Robert Elsmere represented, with more or less fidelity, the crisis of belief through which many souls were passing. Things have changed since then, and "Helbeck of Bannisdale," by fixing attention upon the conflict between Authority and Reason, indicates, aptly enough, the extent of the change. And in the portraiture of Eleanor, Mrs. Ward appears to me to have been eminently successful in delineating a disposition of mind, with regard to religious phenomena, especially characteristic of large numbers of persons at the present day. 'When we go into a church,' these people will inform you, 'we do not want to think; we want to have our feelings touched; we want to breathe the quiet, soothing, comforting atmosphere of an inclosure, in which everything is arranged with a view of appealing to the emotions.' They readily admit that intellectually the whole thing is absurd; they know that miracles do not happen; they know that the theory of ecclesiastical authority will not bear examination; to them, as to Eleanor, "creeds and dogmas mean nothing." 'But'—so they have persuaded themselves—'all theological ideas and principles are equally false and untenable; from the rational point of view, no one of them has any advantage of probability over the others; the followers of Channing and Martineau are quite as much the victims of illusion as the rest. Why, then, associate ourselves with a body, infinitely less capable than the Roman or the Anglican, of doing for us the only service religious observances can do—the service, namely, of exciting those agreeable, poetic, artistic sensations, possessed of which, the soul can luxuriate for the moment in the softness and tranquillity of æsthetic enjoyment? We like our little idolatries!'

If there be, in modern society, an essentially irreligious and atheistic spirit, assuredly it is this. Its motives are tainted through and through with a double selfishness: the states of mind it desires are purely individual, personal, egoistic; and, for the sake of its own pleasurable experience, it is content to maintain a system of things which, from its point of view at least, is confessedly reared on the credulity of the populace. In reality, it is as injurious to the life of healthy feeling as it is to the life of honest thought. For precisely one of the tacit assumptions this tendency engenders is the notion that thought and feeling are two separate and distinct functions of the soul, each of which can pursue its own course independently of the other. The mischievous consequences of that fatal error can hardly be exaggerated. If there were in conscious experience any such thing as a sphere of mere feeling alone, then, within it, the love felt by the miser for his gold and the love felt by the theist for his God would be on one level; neither would be higher nor lower than the other. Difference in feeling would be, in that case, exclusively a difference of intensity or fervour, and, so regarded, the advantage would be rather on the side of the uncontrollable rapture or ecstasy of savage worship than on that of the more subdued and passionless devotion of the Christian saint. But, as a matter of fact, with the possible exception of the rudimentary bodily sensations, there are no feelings that we can ever experience apart from intellectual elements of one kind or another, and the very circumstance that Eleanor required her "little idolatries," for the purpose of exciting hers, is a good illustration in point. In actual life, no side of our being is more variable and unstable than feeling, and its qualitative worth—its goodness or badness—depends absolutely upon the objects which call it forth and the ideas with which it is associated. A celebration of the Mass in Brompton Oratory will, no doubt, "touch the feelings" of both believer and unbeliever, but only a woeful ignorance of human nature would confound the æsthetic pleasure of the one with the religious emotion of the other. The former may not be in itself unworthy, but most certainly it becomes so when it is palmed off as a fitting substitute for the latter, and is even pleaded as a sufficient justification for defending the integrity of Catholic worship. Mrs. Ward is far too discriminative an artist to ignore the deteriorating influence of this sort of thing upon the moral character. "It is very easy," says Eleanor to Lucy Foster, "to pretend to mourn with other people—because one thinks one ought—or because it makes one liked. I am always pretending in that way—I can't help it." "But you," she adds, speaking of the girl whose religion is primarily not a matter of the heart, but of the intellect, "no; you don't say what you don't feel, and you've the gift to feel."

Such tampering with veracity for the sake of enjoyable feeling is one of the worst symptoms of an age that is crying out about what it calls the "disease of intellectualism." It threatens to do more to undermine religion, and to alienate truth-loving men and women from religious communities, than all the false theology that has ever been preached. If one may be permitted to adapt a phrase of George Eliot's, it is "a debasing of the religious currency," and it would not be difficult to show its intimate connection with the widespread indifferentism to spiritual themes, about which we hear so much. For, as Heinrich Lang has forcibly said, "poems hold their own if they æsthetically satisfy, religions fall when they cease to be realities for the intellect."

In the presence of symptoms such as these, and at the very time when, in the interests of religion, there is urgent need for strong, vigorous, and manly thinking to do the work of spiritual reconstruction, which the scientific criticism of the last half-century has rendered imperative, it is surely lamentable to hear, even from members of our Free Churches, cheap and easy platitudes about the pride of intellect and its freezing temperature. They can have but one effect—namely, to encourage and foster a weak and vapid sentimentalism amongst us that is as far removed from genuine religious emotion as was the fondness of Eleanor for her "little idolatries." Indeed, there is a striking similarity between the mental phenomena in question. Eleanor might have used in defence of her attitude, and almost without a change of terms, precisely the specious pleas which have recently been addressed to ourselves. "We are afraid of feeling," it has been urged against us in terms of reproach. As though we had not the best of all possible grounds to be, if feeling is to be divorced from knowledge and allowed to run riot, and attach itself, like undirected force, to whatever fad or fancy comes in its way! People are becoming "weary of thinking," we are informed, and are beginning to say, "I want to be ignorant again." As though this were a sign of the times, if such it be, to call for rejoicing and hopefulness, and not rather one that should fill every well-wisher of his kind with apprehension and dread! "One grain of love is worth all the truth in the world," we are assured. As though it made no difference whatever whose love it was, or what the love was for, and that it was equally of value in the form, for example, of Manisty's wild animal craving as in the devotion of Dante to Beatrice! Let "philosophies and principles" go to the winds, we are advised, if only we can retain "humanity" and "life"! As though "humanity" and "life" were pre-eminently the characteristics of the ignorant and unenlightened, and fled in terror from the haunts of culture to the wards of "workhouses," which, to the misguided slaves of "philosophies and principles," seem too often like blots on our civilisation!

If these utterances were not so misleading and dangerous, one might be thankful that the logical consequences of a so-called "religion of the heart" had at last been fearlessly presented, and that the limited range of feelings to which it would appeal had now been made apparent. It is not at all surprising that when "knowledge" has thus been dismissed through the back door, "mystery" should be invited in through the front. That is just as we should expect: the "mysteries" correspond exactly to the "idolatries," of which we have been speaking. "A religion without mystery," so the word has gone forth, "is not worth a straw." Strange dictum, that, on the part of one who believes in a divine origin of all things! If nature be, indeed, what the materialist declares it is, then perhaps something might be said for the position that the human spirit will best be served by drawing over the abyss such patchwork of a veil as we can muster for the purpose. But if our persuasion be, as presumably it is, altogether different; if, for us, the Universe be "the Life-dwelling of an Eternal Mind," what conceivable ground can we have for fear, that in gradually exchanging "mystery" for assured fact we shall fail to meet with objects which will call forth and satisfy the deepest longing of the soul? Why on earth need we be concerned to retain "mysteries," if intelligence be at the basis of things, and is being disclosed to us with every step in the advance of our intelligence? Are we going to set up our pretty imagery to rival the thought of an infinite artist? Can it be seriously meant that the emotion obtainable from standing dumb and silent before some blank impenetrability, behind which, perchance, God may be, is preferable to the emotion of the man who could say, "O God, I think thy thoughts after thee"? No; the highest and strongest reverence, the purest trust and the most devout, come from the richest knowledge. And as a substitute for the latter, the vague, uncertain, vacillating feeling that is linked to ignorance is infinitely poorer than the child's affection for its doll.

Only one word more. However it may be with the tree of knowledge, certain it is that the tree of feeling is not the tree of life. For my part, I am completely in sympathy with Dr. Martineau's unsectarian ideal for our churches, and with the attempt to free them from all and every kind of dogmatic allegiance. I recognise to the full that theology is not religion any more than ethical science is morality or grammatical science the gift of speech. But not least of the reasons that weighed with Dr. Martineau was the fact that scientific theology itself needs, for its successful pursuit, a perfectly free and unbiassed mind, unpledged to any particular theory, Trinitarian or Unitarian. And a mode of argument which, whilst professing to exhibit the "idolatry of doctrine," virtually gives the case away by identifying doctrine with truth, and making it appear as though the latter were the inveterate foe of liberal religion, seems to me an entire perversion of all for which Dr. Martineau pleaded. At any rate, he has left us in no doubt of what he thought of the tendency I have been concerned with in this article. "Better at once to own our occupation gone," are his ever memorable words in regard to it, "than to linger on sentimental sufferance and accept the indulgent assurance that, though there is no longer any truth in religion, there is some nice feeling in it; and that while, for all we have to teach, we might shut up to-morrow, we may harmlessly keep open still as a nursery of Emotion. I trust that, when 'Emotion' proves empty, we shall stamp it out, and get rid of it."

G. Dawes Hicks.

A SONG IN SPRING.

Sing on, wild lark, this wondrous morn,
A song of life, of Spring new-born,
Soar far above this dull, dark world,
Till heaven itself lies all unfurl'd.
Sing to the flow'rs asleep below,
To ev'ry heart of bitter woe,
Trill out your wildest madrigal,
And say "Awake! Arise!" to all!

And though I dwell on clouded ways,
And cannot chant the rapturous praise
Of lovely earth and lovely Spring,
Far up the heavens on soaring wing;
Sing on, wild lark, your message roll
Into the darkness of my soul,
And flow'rs shall spring from out the sod,
And I, uprising, search for God

Edward Teschemacher.

GUILDS.*

BY THE REV. JOHN ELLIS.

II.

WITH the essential spirit and guiding principle of the Guild thus before us, we shall be in a position better to appreciate the development of Guild methods and objects in our own and other churches.

The Guild movement in our churches originated with the Rev. W. Carey Walters, shortly after his settlement with the congregation of the New Meeting House, Kidderminster, in March, 1881. Mr. Walters found that his predecessor had taken especial interest in the religious life of the young.

On two occasions the Rev. W. E. Mellone had held preparation classes, prior to a public service of dedication, when the youthful candidates were formally received into full membership of the church. To each person so admitted was given a card, as a "Memorial of the Confirmation Service," on which were printed some few "Rules for a Good Life," which I quote:—

1. To love God, the heavenly Father, with filial love, because He is supremely loveable; and to make duty, or the will of God, our first object and only title to happiness; delaying and neglecting nothing that we ought to do.

2. To revere Jesus Christ as the Son of God; to admire and imitate his life and character; to gratefully receive his teachings, and tread in his steps as the way to the blessedness of God's children.

3. To be large-hearted, trying at all times to think and do generous and noble things, without being afraid of rebuke or ridicule; and to be kind to all, willing to please and be pleased, not out of good nature merely, but from a sense of duty, a conviction that it is right.

4. To avoid slander, gossip, and foolish talking, as unworthy of creatures whom God has made and placed in so fair a world; and to set an example of perfect truthfulness in word and deed.

5. To inflict no pain on any creature for the sake of a pleasure; and to shrink from no pain which it is needful for us to bear.

6. To cultivate the free spirit of inquiry, to avoid narrowness of mind, to struggle against prejudice, to cherish the disposition to believe in truth, and to welcome all good and beautiful thoughts.

7. To respect others, and regard their happiness as equally important with our own.

8. To look up with admiration to all men and women who lead noble lives, though they may be misunderstood and hated; to honour those who are persecuted for righteousness' sake, or truth's sake; to revere especially those who, in a good cause, are willing to stand alone, with the rich and the great and the fashionable against them; and never to take the part of the mighty against right.

9. To keep before the mind the hope of immortality, and faith in our power to improve ourselves in every way; to govern and exercise ourselves in truth and temperance—growing more and more in real holiness of body and mind.

10. To be patient, steadfast in cultivating holy desires, the spirit and habit of prayer, lifting the heart to the Father, and imploring His help in full faith that there is no strength but that which comes from Him.

When the Rev. W. Carey Walters settled at Kidderminster, he was therefore surrounded by two groups of young people, who had been carefully prepared to enter upon the duties and responsibilities of manhood and womanhood, and instructed in the principles of our liberal faith. They had the regular services of the church to attend as a means of spiritual culture; they had the institutions of the church and schools as a field in which to expend their generous ardour, and they had these "Rules for a Good Life" constantly before them. But Mr. Walters could not help feeling that something was still wanting in order to get the best out of all this high purpose. The want was fellowship in these highest things. And so he called these newly-recognised members of the church to a meeting, and asked them if they would not join together as members of a guild on the lines of some of which he had knowledge in the Church of England, having for their object to promote "holiness of life and work for God." They consented, and thus was formed the "Guild of Well-Doing" in March, 1881, which was changed next year into the "Guild of the Good Shepherd," because it was thought the former title sounded too Pharisaical. A manual was prepared setting forth the objects, the duties, and the helps which members were expected to observe; a form of service for the regular monthly meetings of the Guild; a form for the admission of members; thoughts for Communion; a morning and an evening prayer; and daily devotional readings for each day of the month. The members were expected to wear a small bronze Latin cross, bearing the inscription, "In hoc vinces"—"By this conquer"—as a symbol of their purpose and a badge of recognition. On the occasion of the Guild Festival, as the birthday of the Guild came round year by year, the members would join in procession, the Guild banner preceding. The banner was also used at other church anniversaries, and on the death of a member.

All this paraphernalia of ritual and symbol was startling to the older Unitarians—who still retain a good deal of the old Puritan prejudice—and I think it largely due to its excessive Ritualistic tendency that the G.G.S. failed to take deep root in the churches of our Northern towns.

But the Guild of the Good Shepherd must not be judged by its ritual, but by its essential spirit. It exists to promote in all its members "holiness of life and work for God." It recognises as its duties the following:—To do some work, however small, for the good of mankind and the glory of God. To encourage reverence in Divine worship. To promote the interests of the Christian Faith, and to bring others to an avowal of allegiance to God. To be willing, at the call of the Guild, to undertake any act of helpfulness towards one another, or towards any who may be in need of aid. To endeavour to be faithful in all things, as disciples of our master Jesus Christ." And the helps to attain these objects recommended are:—

The cultivation of habits of private prayer and meditation, and the use of the Guild Collect as part of the daily devotions. The regular and punctual attendance at public worship and the meetings of the Guild. The devout observance of the service of Holy Communion. The reading of the best devotional books, and especially the Bible. Members are urged to cherish good thoughts, and to follow right conduct; to do faithfully the work which falls to them, no matter how commonplace or disagreeable; to guard their words so that they may neither deceive nor mislead, nor heedlessly vex or injure any one; and to keep their pleasures innocent and pure.

I can bear testimony to the fact that these objects and helps have been largely honoured by due observance. The result has been a chastened spirit; alertness in discovering human need and rendering timely assistance; a bright, cheerful willingness to use the church and its institutions for getting and giving good, in very many lives.

The parent stem threw off many branches. At one time the Guild of the Good Shepherd had as many as sixteen branches in different parts of the country, with a total of nearly 900 members. Some of these tender shoots could not bear the chill blasts of criticism and so died. Others could not endure the burning fires of adversity, and so shrivelled up. But the parent Guild still lives and flourishes after twenty years, and shows the way to many of us how to win the younger members of the church to decide for the good life, and to engage in beneficent work for others.

*From a lecture to members of the Fitzwilliam-street Church and Schools Guild, Huddersfield, Feb. 20.

OBITUARY.

THE REV. JOHN BYLES.

MANY will have heard, with deep regret, of the death of this highly-gifted and beloved minister at Richmond, Surrey, on the 14th inst. Our deceased friend was fortunate in his birth and training, having been born in Bradford sixty-one years ago of parents of the very finest Nonconformist type. He often said that the atmosphere of his home was such as few were privileged to breathe, and as he grew up he seemed moulded after the likeness of his own excellent people. Almost from boyhood he was marked out for the "pious office," and he entered the Lancashire Independent College with the stamp of consecration on his brow. His sweet and sunny disposition, his transparent purity and sincerity, his chivalrous sense of honour, all touched by an unassuming benevolence and deep religious feeling, made him the ideal student of his day. Such an able and promising neophyte of the Congregational body had no need to wait for a pulpit, and we find him speedily settled in Blackburn, winning affection and allegiance from a devoted people. Beautiful in countenance and eloquent in speech, he made a profound and permanent impression, and when he decided to accept the pastorate of the more influential and cultured congregation of Ealing, his warm-hearted Lancashire friends sent him away laden with valuable gifts and heartfelt good wishes. To the duties of his important suburban charge our friend gave the best years of his life, the best thought of his busy brain, and the love of his large heart. Surrounded by loyal and devoted friends, his fine gifts blossomed out into perfectness, and his unique personality drew to him a body-guard that would have laid down their lives for his sake. And this inner line of defence was at times needful, for as years passed it became more obvious that for the old outworn creed he had no belief and no sympathy. A few worthy men of the old school bemoaned their pastor's departure from the beaten paths of salvation, and one or two even became vindictive, and our friend, perhaps] too sensitive and scrupulous, decided to seek a chapel with a free trust, and in an evil hour accepted a call from Zion Chapel, Wakefield. This was in May, 1896, and his advent in the old city on the Calder will long be remembered. He found the place given over to gambling and betting, absorbed in professional athletics, with slums of the vilest description, and a debased public opinion, born of the old days of bribery and corruption. And, like an Old Testament prophet, his voice rang out Sunday after Sunday in strong yet pure persuasive speech—each sermon original, versatile, broad in spirit, beautiful in diction. His mind was full of dreams of the better things to come, of all that tended to man's final good. His voice was always heard on the side of charity, philanthropy, and reform. He set to work with might and main to secure a free library to draw the working-men from the public-houses, and he supported this at public meetings with a wonderful earnestness and wealth of literary allusion. He wanted everything for the people, books, pictures and statuary, music and eloquence, and in this large vision there was not mere poetic and fanciful anticipation, but he ever kept to the practical and laboured for what he saw afar off. Into that brief ministry of two and a-half years (1896-98) was crowded a wonderful activity. But the close was sad in the extreme. The deacons of his church were utterly unable to rise to the height of their prophet-preacher's ideas; they did not share his passionate desire to root up wrongs and create a reign of righteousness in Wakefield. The high-minded exponent of the good, the true, the beautiful, was pushed to the wall, and went away with all his generous longings unsatisfied, and his beautiful and sunny life clouded, and, indeed, his whole horizon darkened. After this, pain was his constant companion, and sorrow his familiar friend. He received, indeed, a most cordial welcome from the Unitarian body, with which he then threw in his lot, and his ministry at the Kettering-road Free Church, Northampton, was cheered by sympathy and allegiance; but those who know him best died one by one, and now, in less than three months after that pastorate was closed by sheer physical exhaustion, we have lost this faithful worker in the midst of his mission and his task. Our friend was a man who saw great truths and to whom had come the clearer vision. From his youth he perceived the doubts that were burdening the age, and sought the King's highway of reason. He has fallen a martyr to his fidelity to truth. A. C.

The funeral service was held last Saturday, in the Ormond-road Free Church, the Rev. James Legge, M.A., Minister of the Headingley Congregational Church, Leeds, and the Revs. Silas Farrington, and V. D. Davis taking part. Among those present in the congregation were the Revs. Frederic Allen and F. K. Freeston; Mr. Percy Preston, representing the B. and F.U.A.; and Mr. Ion Pritchard, representing the Sunday-school Association.

In the course of the service, Mr. Legge gave a memorial address, of which the following is the greater part. He and Mr. Byles were at College together, and he spoke with intimate knowledge of his friend.

IN MEMORIAM JOHN BYLES.

He was a man of singularly high-toned character, intent on worthy aims and earnest in pure purpose. He was one whom I should emphatically call an unworldly man, one who lived in the light of unseen and unrealised ideals towards which he energetically strove. He lived as seeing things invisible.

It is well-nigh forty years since I first was drawn to him as a friend, and through all those years I can see the same spirit animating him from first to last. Whatever approved itself to him as good and worthy he upheld and sought to advance with whole-hearted devotion. And all things base and mean he hated with passionate condemnation. Indeed, if there is one word that gives us the essential character of the man, it is the word "intensity." He could do nothing by halves. He was intense in his convictions, intense in his approval and disapproval, intense in his method of expressing himself. Perhaps the very strength with which he set forth his thoughts caused him at times to be misunderstood, as if he could not brook to be opposed. But this was utterly untrue. He was most tolerant even when most emphatic. He was always ready to hear opinions differing from his own. But his intensity was inseparable from his personality.

Closely connected with this quality was his readiness to endure sacrifice when what he deemed duty called him to it. He was not one to shrink back from personal suffering in defence of what he believed. He had, I understand, running in his veins a strain of Huguenot blood. Some ancestor of his passed through the fiery trials that followed the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. It seems to me he had inherited not the blood only, but the martyr spirit, the readiness for self-sacrifice, which distinguished those devoted people. With some of the conclusions to which he came in matters of faith there are those of us who have no sympathy. But, even so, we gladly recognise and rejoice in the noble spirit in which, at the bidding of conscience, he chose the thorny path, even though it led him to forsake the Church of his fathers. Far from us be the narrow bigotry which denies the Christian name to men who differ, and profoundly differ, from ourselves in their intellectual conceptions of Christian truth. When the spirit of Christ is manifest in a life of earnest service for God and man, when the heart is reverent and pure, and the character beautiful with the graces of the true Christian, who will dare refuse to own such as brethren in Christ. Certainly only the blindest prejudice could have failed to see in our beloved friend, John Byles, a truly Christian man, one who followed in the steps of him who went about doing good.

Those characteristics marked his public life and ministry as did others not less notable. He took a wide view of his duties as a minister. Though never using the pulpit for party purposes, he never hesitated to uphold the principles of righteousness in national affairs. He maintained the old prophetic principle that the nation and kingdom that will not serve God shall perish, yea that kingdom shall perish utterly. And the nation ceased to serve God which ceased to do justly. Nor did he ever in his teaching cause men to regard the Christian faith as a form of other-worldliness. Religion with him was the most intensely practical thing in daily life. It had regard to this life as well as to that to come. Very earnestly did he strive to ameliorate the conditions of life for the poor, and by urgent persuasion and entreaty sought to enlist the sympathies of his people in this great and blessed work.

Nor can one feature of his public labours be omitted in even the briefest review of his life—I mean his deep interest in the children of his charge. He himself had not a little of the child nature in his character. He was simple, unaffected, unsophisticated, and it was his delight to make his ministry an inspiration and help for the children. By some fascinating story sympathetically told he would lead young hearts to the love and practice of whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report. His published works bear witness to his power in this way; but a singular illustration of the impression made by some of his Children's Addresses occurs to me. Some years ago he was invited by the Sunday-school officers of his former Blackburn charge, to visit their town and preach again a certain sermon which he had delivered some twenty years before. It is rare, I think, that a sermon survives the changes of crowded life through twenty years.

Such was the man in the more public aspect of his life. But it was only those admitted to the circle of his friendship who truly understood the beauty, the sweetness, the winning attractiveness of his character. He was one whom it was impossible long to associate with without feeling uplifted and made stronger and better. Unconscious influence streamed forth from him that stirred and moved what was best in the hearts of those around him. But no pharisaic austerity was mingled in his make. He was bright and joyous and his ready laugh leaped forth to greet his friends' sallies, and to be the seal of good comradeship. Strong and eager as he was, he was yet full of tender sympathy. Never a great trouble or sorrow visited his friends but he was ready to share their burden and to speak great words of comfort and cheer.

And now he is gone, and the earth to some of us will seem poorer and darker because of his departure. We need comfort, and he is not here to speak it. Yea, he being dead yet speaketh. His memory abides imperishable while his friends live. And that memory may well inspire and bless and cheer us.

The subsequent service at the grave, in Ealing Cemetery, was conducted by Mr. Legge.

Mr. Byles was one of those ministers who, with rare gifts, like the late Dr. Macleod, of Birkenhead, habitually devoted a few minutes of his Sunday morning services to the children of the congregation. His published volumes of "Talk-to the Children" are widely known and warmly appreciated. Quite recently Mr. Fisher Unwin issued a new edition of his best-known volume "The Boy and the Angel," and two years ago "The Legend of St. Mark's" was published. We gratefully remember more than one of Mr. Byles's addresses, which appeared in our "Children's Column."

Mrs. John Byles and the family wish to express their sincere thanks to many friends for kind messages of sympathy. Owing to the very large number of letters received, it is impossible for the present to deal individually with them.

THE LATE REV. C. L. CORKRAN.

THE funeral of Mr. Corkran took place on Thursday, the 14th, at the Brompton Cemetery, the service being conducted by the Rev. Arthur Veysey. Among the mourners and friends present were Mr. S. G. Corkran and Mr. C. J. Corkran (nephews), Mrs. Charles Corkran, Miss Alice Corkran (niece), Mr. Richard Whiteing, Mr. P. M. Martineau, Mr. Hugh Martineau, Mr. Rupert Potter, Mr. Alfred Milnes, Revs. S. Farrington, W. G. Cadman, F. K. Freeston, and F. Summers, Mr. W. A. Bailward and Mr. E. Stainton, of the Bethnal Green Branch of the C.O.S., and a number of friends from Mansford-street Chapel, who were formerly scholars of Spicer-street Mission. Among a large number of beautiful wreaths was a floral cross from the Mansford-street Church and Mission.

A Memorial Service was conducted at Mansford-street, on Sunday evening, by the Rev. W. G. Cadman. There was a very large congregation; friends and old Spicer-street scholars, from all parts of London, assembling out of respect to the beloved veteran and pastor. Among others present were Mr. Stanton J. Preston, and Mr. E. B. Squire, representing the Committee of the Mansford-street Mission.

Mr. Cadman spoke of Mr. Corkran's devoted labours, and of the deep respect and love in which he was held by all who had at any time come under his influence. He had never known anyone with a more Christian aim and motive, and with a kindlier and more sympathetic heart. At the same time, he had a level head which bade him look beyond the impulse of the moment to the remoter consequences of any action to which he felt impelled. No man was ever so fitted as he for the kind of work to which the best years of his long life were given. Many of those present that evening were among the best fruits of his earnest, faithful, and devoted ministry. Mr. Cadman spoke of his own close personal friendship with Mr. Corkran during the last eight years, and said he had been deeply indebted to him for sympathy and cheer in times of difficulty and trial. Their beloved friend had lived and died a Christian in the truest sense of that word. With strong personal convictions and with unshaken loyalty to the Master, he had a breadth of sympathy and catholicity of spirit which recognised the good and the true in those from whom he differed most. His life of late had been consciously on the confines of the Eternal land, its forecast glory shining in upon his soul. The shadow of death had slowly and quietly crept over him—the silver cord was gently loosed, and God gave his beloved sleep. The years of increasing infirmity were not years of weariness and despondency. The good he had done, the happy memories that dwelt with him, the warm affection in which he was held by numbers who from time to time made kindest inquiries concerning him—all these things cheered and comforted him to the last, keeping him from despondency, and filling him with perpetual peace.

The memory of his word and example, and the influence of his beautiful Christian spirit, would continue after him the best legacy he could possibly have bequeathed.

At the close of the service the "Dead March" from Saul was played, the congregation standing.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

For the Little Ones.

CHILDREN who read the letters about animals last week will enjoy two more by the same young writer. One is about bees, and the other about birds' nests.

The first begins:—"We have been so busy with the bees lately that I have had no time to write, but now I must tell you all about them. One morning Johnny came running in to tell my aunt that one of the hives had swarmed—that is, when the hive is too full of bees, the queen flies out, followed by a great number. We all ran out, and there were several men following the swarm up and down the orchard, making a great noise, till at last they settled in a cluster on the branch of a tree, and when they were quite quiet the gardener covered his face with a wire cap and his hands with thick gloves, and swept them into a new hive. The hive had a glass window, so we watched what the bees would do. A great many flew away over the flower garden and bean and clover fields, and very soon we saw some come back with their bodies and legs covered with yellow dust out of the flowers. They rolled this dust into little balls, and aunt told us that the bees inside the hive would make it into wax and use it to build their cells. Some of the bees brought honey to feed the rest, and to fill the cells as they were made, for you cannot think how quickly they were done. They did seem so busy, and though we could not make out very well what they were doing, we soon saw the tiny cells filling up the hive, and aunt says in one day they will make 3,000 cells!

"Several hives have swarmed since that day, and aunt has told us a great deal about bees. She made us notice a rose tree where the leaves were full of holes, and we saw a bee settle on a fresh leaf and cut a piece so neatly and fly away with it to her nest, for this was a wild bee and she lines her nest entirely with bits of leaves. Some line their nests with poppy leaves (but this kind of bee does not live in England), and some make their nest by boring holes with their sharp little teeth in old posts or decayed wood."

The last letter is as follows:—"Cousin Henry has got quite a large collection of birds' nests. When the summer broods are hatched and flown away, he sometimes takes the deserted nests that he may see how they are made. They are so curiously different; blackbirds and thrushes, which build in the cold early spring, line their nests with a mud wall so as to keep out the cold air. Sparrows build under the eaves of buildings or in thick hedges, and use a great deal of straw and hay, and line their nests with a quantity of feathers. The nests always look untidy, but they make them just as warm whether they build in March or July. There are plenty of wood-pigeons here, and they build high up in the trees and in very unsheltered places, and yet so loosely that the eggs may sometimes be seen through the nest. The goldfinch's nest is one of the prettiest, made of fine moss and lichen, and lined with thistle-down till it is beautifully warm.

"The little wren makes a tiny nest of woven moss and spiders' webs, and so fills it with feathers that you can scarcely see her when she sits on her eggs. After showing me the nests Henry told me how differently birds choose places to build in; some take such care to hide their nests and some seem to care so little; some build in holes in hedges, and some in sand-banks, and these are very difficult to find. A good many birds choose hollow places in old trees, and Henry once saw a partridge's nest in a hole at the bottom of a tree and close to a house, and he saw the mother-bird's bright eyes as he passed."

The writer finishes by saying how often she had been told about the instinct of birds and animals, but how she understood better what this meant, since she had seen for herself some of the curious and wonderful ways of God's creatures.

I shall like to think that, reading what this girl wrote so many years ago, may perhaps lead children to take fresh interest in the beautiful things that surround them, when they have the pleasure of going into the country.

K. F. LAWFORD.

THE SPARROW.

A SPARROW with its plain brown coat—
  The best it ever wore—
Has no sweet song or cheerful note;
  A chirp—and nothing more.

Yet as it hops from bough to bough,
  Or flies from tree to tree;
As if it cared not where, or how,
  As restless as can be;

Or by a leaf well sheltered, sleeps,
  Its head beneath its wing;
God watches, cares for it, and keeps
  The thoughtless little thing.

And if He keeps the sparrow so,
  Why should I ever fear?
Life has its troubles—but I know
  God's loving help is near!

Who Wrote These Verses?

WHAT we call life is twilight;
When 'tis done, a door is opened and we see the sun.—Collins.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
In Tins
And Packets.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Tins 1lb.
And 3lbs.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Packets 1lb.
And ½lb.

JOHNSTON'S CORN FLOUR.
Sold by Grocers.
Export Oilmen.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any Newsagent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, MARCH 23, 1901.

A LIVING CHURCH.

THE paper by the Rev. E. W. LUMMIS which appeared in THE INQUIRER of Feb. 9 and 16, under the title "Choose Life," has been followed by a discussion from week to week, which is continued in our present number. On certain points great difference of opinion has been expressed, while it is not, perhaps, too much to say that there were statements made by Mr. LUMMIS, as to the condition of religious life in our community, which correspondents from different parts of the country have strongly resented and vigorously denied.

That anything written in THE INQUIRER should have a depressing effect upon those who are devoted to the work of our churches, or should place fresh difficulties in the way particularly of those who are holding lonely outposts of duty, when our one desire is to strengthen and deepen our common life, and kindle a better hope and courage, must be matter for the sincerest regret; but we confess to have heard with the utmost astonishment from several correspondents that this discussion, which arose out of a singularly earnest paper, prompted by no mere desire for a war of words, but by serious searchings of heart and longing for fuller life, has had, in their opinion, such an unfortunate result, has been "disastrous," and as one respected correspondent writes, has inflicted "cruel wrongs" upon the cause we desire to serve.

It must surely be a very superficial reading of this discussion and the paper out of which it sprang, that can see in it any "denominational quarrel"; and we should imagine it to be a no less superficial attraction towards our religious community, if anyone refrained from attendance on an earnest ministry and hearty co-operation in the work and fellowship of a vigorous church, because members of the community were thus earnestly bent upon self-examination and aspiration after truer life.

At the present moment we are caught between two fires, urged on the one hand, as we were last week, not to allow any more of such discussion, and on the other hand, by friends equally loyal, to afford ample space for the thorough consideration of the questions raised. This being so, it seems best simply to follow the course which we proposed a fortnight ago, offering this week the following further contributions to the discussion, and leaving next week for Mr. LUMMIS, if he should wish to say anything in response to what has been written on his paper.

But we certainly have no intention of closing these columns to the frank and serious discussion of any question affecting the welfare of our churches and the cause of religious truth and life to which we are pledged.

SIR,—You must allow me so far to take your readers into my confidence as to tell them that it is at your appeal that I intervene in this discussion; for I am not quite sure that I can say the helpful thing. But I cannot refuse the repeated requests with which you have been good enough to ply me.

I hope very soon, when he becomes my neighbour, to have the pleasure of making Mr. Lummis's acquaintance; and when I know the man, I shall no doubt understand more clearly exactly what he means. At present I only know that here is a man pleading very earnestly, whose words one must listen to and weigh. If I differ from much which he seems to say, it is perhaps because I do not accurately apprehend him. In two matters, however, which pervade the whole of his most interesting communications, he does not appear to me to be altogether wise. In the first place, I do not think that he can have so wide and general a knowledge of our people all over the country as to be justified in pronouncing a condemnation so sweeping; and I am not surprised that some of your correspondents resent this general condemnation. Of how many of our congregations has Mr. Lummis a personal and intimate knowledge that he proclaims so confidently their unspirituality? Some of us think of very many, either now amongst us or passed on, in whom we recognise the sweetest fragrance of piety and a noble dedication to the highest; and it does not tend to make us listen sympathetically to hear all our friends rated so soundly, without hint of exception, by one whose knowledge is certainly limited.

But in the next place Mr. Lummis allows himself to appear to set up as his ultimate ideal the thriving of our community; and much of his language seems to imply that by "thriving" he means becoming very numerous. And he recommends that we should "love more, pray more," and so on, as the means towards thriving. But there are many much lower arts than these that often tend to make churches "thrive" in numbers, influence, and power. And there are many churches that do not visibly thrive, though love is very deep and prayer is very earnest. So that I would rather bid men "love more, pray more," not that their churches may thrive, but because love and prayer themselves are good.

Now when we receive criticism and counsel under thirty heads, it is useless to try to answer in any logical order. One can but glance down column after column and make a comment here and there. I will set before each of my unsystematic comments the number of the paragraph in Mr. Lummis's articles to which it refers.

3. "Our miserable plight is evidence, not of our misfortune, but of our fault." I cannot recognise "miserable plight" in the happy and reverent assemblies for worship with which I am familiar, be the worshippers few or many. So one-sided a description at the outset vitiates the counsel that follows. Help us, exhort us, my friend, and may God give you power. But respect us and believe in us, or you cannot help us.

4. "We are the least brotherly of sects." I hope we are not a sect at all in the ordinary acceptation of the word. That we are the least brotherly either among ourselves or towards outside humanity, I utterly deny; and could deny with no little indignation, were not our accuser so manifestly sincere and so unsuspicious that his knowledge of us is not thorough.

8. "Of such religion as we have we are ashamed." My friend, my friend, do you really know? Have you read the hearts of all of us?

9. "Our practical materialism is very gross." It is "wicked." "We do not love, because we do not pray." "Unitarians are not faithful to God." I read these sentences and then I go down to our Domestic Mission and watch the workers there, or even mix with some little band of friends in my own schoolroom. And then such words as these seem to me neither wise nor just nor true; and I wonder whether Mr. Lummis has had a peculiarly unfortunate experience, or has merely written a little hastily. But surely a man would not write such grave charges hastily!

11. Then, however, comes the earnest counsel to band together to remove the causes of sin and misery. But the question between us seems to be, not whether this ought to be done, but whether our little group of churches are to set to work to do it "off their own bat," or to unite with agencies in which men of many folds are joined together in a common purpose.

13. Mr. Lummis blames men for not putting church meetings before all others. But are not our churches doing well in so far as they send men out into active work with their fellow-citizens outside our churches. It has always seemed to me our glory rather than our shame that we do not press all our social and philanthropic energies into our own individual church, but diffuse it through the larger citizenhood and do something to leaven the whole mass.

12. This paragraph is a reprobation of our "rich men." My own ever-growing experience is that our rich men are ready to contribute almost any amount of money wherever they are convinced that really good work is to be done or is being done. But you must satisfy them of that; and they will not give to agencies they do not trust. Are we to praise them or to blame?

16. Heartily do I agree with Mr. Lummis that our special cause "is the Gospel of Truth," or rather, as I think he means, of truthfulness. And with much that follows I am in cordial concurrence. But (28) "the creation of a pure dogmatic" can never be done by organisation from above. The only hope of it is from some group of men—small or large—drawn together by their own affinities of thought and sentiment.

And that leads me to express my distrust of the kind of organisation Mr. Lummis seems to desire. First, as to name. It is not a matter for a vote to which all shall be pledged, any more than truth itself. Some of us—pupils of Tayler and Martineau, believers in the teachings of Thom and of Beard—have principles in this matter from which we can never depart for the sake of conformity, though we wish to live in all brotherhood with others who do not share our principles. And then, as to organisation at large. Let me conclude by saying where I think the real fundamental difference of view between Mr. Lummis and myself comes in. His ideal, I understand, is a great national organisation, the machinery of "a Church," out of the unity of which shall grow life and spirituality in the various parts. My ideal, on the contrary is, first, life and spirituality in the individual congregation—nay, rather in the individual soul—and then growing out of that, not by forced measures, but spontaneously, just so far and so fast as this individual religiousness may bring it to birth, a larger brotherhood spreading from one congregation to another, then on to a district, a county, a province, the whole country, it may be, the whole world. But the beginning is individual religion. And as a minister I conceive my first duty to be to strive to bring that to health and strength in myself and in the little band of men and women round me who have asked me to try and help their higher life.

Finally, let me remind this earnest counsellor of ours, yes, and many a writer and speaker amongst us, that to upbraid men for lack of enthusiasm never kindled enthusiasm in one human soul. Not by rebuke, but by contagion, by an infection seizing the heart and the emotions must that divine and holy temper be generated in the world.

Richard A. Armstrong.

Liverpool, March 20.

Sir,—If I may add a contribution from a layman's point of view to this very interesting correspondence, I may assume, may I not, to begin with, that we all accept Mr. C. J. Street's position:—"The Church of God is an invisible corporation . . . its passports are of character and faith and love, not of creed or ritual"—(Inq., March 2). It seems to follow that we must never expect any ecclesiastical organisation—and that is what we are discussing—to be coterminous with the Church in this largest sense. But do we always remember this? Do we always frankly accept the consequences? Is it consistent, for example, with Mr. J. M. Lloyd Thomas's aspiration (Inq., March 9) after the name "Free Catholic"? (Free Catholic Church I suppose he would say, but he stops short with the adjectives.) If this consideration had been present to his mind, would he not rather have said, "The Free Branch of the Catholic Church"? The ambiguities of the word "Church" are insidious, and it would conduce to clearness if we could use different words for the invisible corporation on the one hand, and the ecclesiastical organisation on the other (and yet, again, for the particular congregation and meeting-house); but, at all events, the word "Catholic" seems hardly appropriate for an organisation which only claims to be a branch.

On the other hand, what is the harm if a mere branch organisation adopts a name which excludes those who do not choose to be organised on that particular basis? Such a name may, indeed, purport to exclude—but from what? Not from "the Church," not from "Fellowship," not from common activities, whether social, political, philanthropic, or even, of necessity, religious; from nothing, in fact, except what those who do not join the organisation exclude themselves from by the necessity of the case.

And here I must pause a moment to express my hearty concurrence with what Mr. H. Shaen Solly says (Inq., Feb. 23) with regard to promoting the discussion of economic subjects; and the like, that it is better that this work should be undenominational: and again, with Mr. Richard Robinson's observation (Inq., Feb. 23) as to the mistake a Church makes "if it attempts to denominationalise the social relations, the political and philanthropic predilections of its members, who probably seek very different alliances in these matters from those they form when they seek to worship"—though this seems hardly consistent with his earlier remark on the importance of our attacking social problems, if he means as an organised body.

Now, if I may humbly hope I am a member of the invisible corporation, I must ask myself why should I, or why should any man, belong to the organisation in question (I want to avoid stumbling over nomenclature, if I can), or desire that it should flourish?

An analogy which presents itself to my mind is the British Association meeting in sections. Can it meet the religious needs of me, and of others like me, better than they could otherwise be met? If I find help and comfort for myself, and, again, if aspects of religion are set forth which, as it seems to me, will be of help and comfort to others, these will be sufficient reasons.

But with our loose system of membership, and our jealousy of any inquiry going beyond the personal fitness and character of those who are to fill our pulpits, it seems to be increasingly almost a matter of chance whether, from the point of view of the individual hearer at any particular time and place, these conditions will be fulfilled.

What, after all, does our body consist of but an aggregate of particular individuals who are attracted to the services it provides? Or, perhaps, are not attracted, yet are loth to relinquish the hope of being offered more congenial nourishment in the future?

The pursuit of truth in the abstract, however fitting for the theological college, seems hardly sufficient to afford a satisfactory basis for the congregation of worshippers, unless some common ground has been arrived at, affording a presumption of a common trend.

The question is, have our ministers a message to deliver which appeals to our hearts and consciences as truth in the concrete? If so, it seems to me our congregations will justify their existence. If not, not.

In conclusion, allow me to support Mr. Lloyd Thomas in urging you to keep your columns open. The considerations which arise in connection with this subject are too numerous and too far-reaching to be briefly disposed of.

Geo. Carslake Thompson.

Cardiff, March 19.

Sir,—I quite agree with Mr. Lummis as to the desirability of one name, and the name by which we are best known is Unitarian.

Liberal Christian, Free Christian, Non-Subscribing, Presbyterian, do not tell the people where we are or what we are so well as Unitarian, and this has to be added to any of the others by way of explanation.

But the matter lies deeper than the name. The religious condition of our churches is not such as we can contemplate altogether without disappointment and solicitude. The reasons for thanksgiving are numerous. Many of our churches are conspicuous as such for their spiritual life and power. The aggregate of worth and work which they present, regarded by itself only, must often awaken our gratitude and admiration. To few of them should we look in vain for individual examples of great moral and spiritual excellence.

But it is not less true that in most of them the proportion is very large of those who exhibit but feebly and indecisively the religious spirit and life. It will not be disputed that a fuller and more general expression of the religious character, in something of the beauty and strength of its maturity, is the common want among us; even as it is confessed, by those who are recognised as speaking with authority, to be the prevailing want in the other religious communities.

Now nothing can be more simple or effective than our faith, if we only give it a fair chance. The want is not in our religion, but in ourselves. As Mr. Lummis says, "We have a special and glorious mission, but we need greater zeal, and better methods in performing it."

What, then, can we do? How can we be inspired "to love more, pray more, think more, spend more, work more"?

We are prone to look out for some specifics, to rack our brains in search of new inventions, and to be full of hope if we can only set up some fresh machinery.

I think instruments good enough are in our hands. Still, there is no reason why we should not seek to improve upon our methods, or follow the old if good, with more enthusiasm and vigour. And here, I think, with one of your correspondents, that the District Associations can render efficient aid; by seeing how far it is possible for the parts to be linked together in practical sympathy, and how the life and strength that are among us may have a freer circulation through the whole community. We need a closer drawing together. Not that we should be less independent, but more united, that there should be more real co-operation.

We are strong in one place, weak in another; one church is thriving, others are fighting hard for life; and there seems need for a more perfect brotherhood among our churches. If the lamp is to be kept burning in many places, it is a necessity that the richer and the poorer towns and villages, the strong and the weak, should be joined together in affectionate helpfulness. Our religious organisations are intended to promote fellowship and brotherly love—to advance light and truth in the world. When we seek, therefore, by means of representative associations to encourage each other in the work, to confer together about plans and agencies of usefulness, to kindle afresh in each other's hearts mutual sympathy and love, and to diffuse a healthy life-glow through all our churches, we are fulfilling the legitimate office of religious organisation, striving to increase the sum of force in individual character and individual churches through the social instincts of our being.

The demands of the age, the facts of the present day, too, join with the motives which are of all places and all ages to excite us to a more vigilant zeal.

And this, I take it, is what Mr. Lummis desires when he pleads for our names to be written in the Book of Life.

Derby. John Birks.

We have received from the Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans a contribution to this discussion, for which, as a whole, we cannot find space; but as it is divided into distinct sections which can stand quite well alone, we omit three sections on "Name," "Prayerless," and "Duty and Morality," and print the rest, leaving the sections as originally numbered. As to the name, Mr. Evans argues that Unitarian is the only practicable and really distinctive name for our churches.

---

2. Progress.—Our idea about progress has been a source of weakness. We have got hold of the idea that we are pioneers, and that we must be so. This perhaps has made us constantly distrustful of what truth we now possess, and has made us timid in proclaiming it, for fear that to-morrow something new may come to light and upset our present "truth." This has made us restless and nomadic in our habits of thought. Take, for instance, that sentence of an old friend of mine: "I am told the elder churches have not halted, that having freed themselves from some of their needless baggage they have caught up to us. Then it is high time for us to go forward."* That is not an uncommon sentiment in our midst. But why should we go forward because others have caught up to us? Perhaps there is nothing but snow and ice higher up the Mount of Progress, and if I am now on a slope that is green and fertile and life-giving, my further progress upward may be no progress at all except into death. I am not going to move forward until there is something better to progress towards. There is no progress without a goal, an ideal, to aim at. We must not think that we are so superior. There are other pioneers besides ourselves. We should be more grateful that others are catching us up, and enjoying the sky we live under, and the bread we feed upon. We must not be jealous as Joshua was of the seventy Elders who could prophesy as well as Moses; but we should be like Moses who rebuked his zeal and said: "Would God that all God's people were prophets, that God would put His spirit upon them." Our weakness has been that we have been seeking that which we do not know, and have not spoken that we do know and testified to that we have seen. We are always seeking, and seldom, if ever, finding. And the result is that we have acquired a learned ignorance, which Paul speaks of, "Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Harnack's words on this very question of Progress are timely and wise ("What is Christianity," p. 121). He says the progress of civilisation is not an Ideal. "When a man grows older and sees more deeply into life, he does not find, if he possesses any inner world at all, that he is advanced by the external march of things, by the progress of civilisation." There is such an idea as "Be still, and know that I am God." When a man knows God, he is no longer "progressing," no longer restless, nomadic; no longer wandering over the ash-pits and dust-heaps of life in the hope of picking up a few old crusts and bits of peel of "Truth." He has the bread of life to live on, and he has something substantial to give others.

3. Freedom.—Our idea of this has also been a source of weakness. We boast of our freedom to seek the truth and find it for ourselves. But I maintain that unless a church has something else to offer its guests or its inmates, there is not much home-life there, and it suggests the thought of a man inviting guests to his house, and instead of providing a feast for them informs them that the first principle of his house is freedom to seek food. But it is the first duty of a church to provide bread, the living bread. Freedom is not an ideal in itself. It is neither good nor bad per se. It is good when we have discovered a high ideal that needs room or a footing in the world; and it is mischievous when it is used for realising an ignoble idea. When we talk of freedom we should always connect with it our purpose, and state Freedom for what. Hitherto it has largely been used by us for the spread of indifference. In the most important sphere of life—namely, in religious education—we have been pleased to do nothing except allowing our children the freedom to seek and find what little religion they could, whereas in every other sphere we do not think of granting them such freedom as, e.g., in their secular education. This is certainly hugging freedom like a fetish; nay, it becomes a benumbing, paralysing fog. Such freedom is the freedom of a man wandering about in a mist on a mountain. It is not true freedom, but a case of being lost: it is the freedom of the little boat on the broad Atlantic without rudder or compass. There may be religious truths higher and better than any we can give our children; there may be homes better than any we can provide, but Providence meant that every child should be brought up in its own natural home until it grows old enough and becomes capable of making one of its own for itself. Liberty, like everything else, has its laws and limitations, if it is not to become licence and neglect. Liberty is still restraint of a certain order. It is fair and joyous detention. Our gaze is limited by the firmament above; our longings are contented with the skies. But the field that is allowed to lie fallow will grow nothing but weeds.

6. Social Questions, &c.—For my part I do not think that the pulpit should be turned into the professor's desk and the church into a lecture hall. The details of Social Questions, Biblical Criticism, and the like, are far better studied and discussed in the class; and if a man is in earnest on these things he will gladly discuss them in that manner first of all. He will lecture where his lecture can be called in question if need be. The results of Biblical Criticism, we are told, are no longer matters of opinion, but of knowledge. When results have reached that stage, by all means declare them, though I would disapprove of the analysing and dissecting process being carried on in the pulpit. But in the case of Social subjects results have not reached the stage of incontrovertible knowledge, but are largely matters of mere opinion, and are still in the discussion stage, and while in that stage should be confined to the class-room or lecture-hall. We shall find that the carriages will not all roll off to the parish church, but that the well-to-do have hearts and are desirous of a solution to these great problems when done in scientific and expert fashion.

7. Our Cause: and the Remedy.—I do not think it is very much use tinkering at our organisation in order to renew our strength, and mount up with wings as eagles. The complaint is that the life is lacking, and this must be obtained before we need think of mending the machine. A common hymn-book and a common liturgy would be welcome, if we could agree on one. The strange thing about this discussion has been that when it has been confessed that it is new life that we need, when the remedy has been looked for, attention has been turned largely, if not entirely, to organisation. Organisation won't generate life, but life will generate organisation. If we increase our organisation without at the same strengthening our life, our life will only be more crippled than it is at present. If we have not the life we cannot produce Monthly Reviews, or Quarterlies, Guild Unions, and the like. As far as I remember, from reading the various contributions to this discussion, Mr. Lummis alone tries to tell us what our Ideal is from which we should draw new life. One gentleman confesses that he is a little uncertain as to what this Ideal should be. But Mr. Lummis says that "Our Cause is the Gospel of Truth: truth of mind as well as truth of lips." But I am inclined to say that our Cause is the Truth of the Gospel, and that we believe we can present that truth more faithfully than other denominations. We have not a monopoly in truth of mind and truth of lips. Other denominations will claim that they are as sincere as we are. But our Cause is the Truth of the Gospel, stripped of its accretions, and the great central truth of the Gospel is God. Goethe said, "Let intellectual and spiritual culture progress and the human mind expand as much as it will; beyond the grandeur and moral elevation of Christianity, as it sparkles and shines in the Gospels, the human mind will not advance." And the reason why its grandeur will not be surpassed is because God is the centre of that Gospel. The message there about God and goodness has never been so pure and so full of strength. Harnack says, "The Gospel, as Jesus proclaimed it, has to do with the Father only and not with the Son": Jesus "was revealing the knowledge of God, and he was certain that it would ripen the young, strengthen the weak, and make them God's champions. Knowledge of God is the spring that is to fructify the barren field and pour forth streams of living water." The Lord's Prayer "shows the Gospel to be the Fatherhood of God applied to the whole of life." The kingdom of God "is God Himself in His power." If character is our object, this character (i.e., image) must be a copy of God's character. If morality or goodness is our object, our moral conduct or goodness must be based upon God's conduct. God is the pattern in the Mount. That is why the knowledge of Him is the most important thing in this world—because we are to be perfect as He is. Our love must not be earthly, loving only the good and those who only love us, but our love must be the same as God's love, free, unmerited, returning good for evil, overcoming evil with good, loving our enemies, as He loves his enemies. This is the only true reason of philanthropy. Why should we do so much for the careless and wicked? They do not merit our love, they have done nothing to deserve it. No, but our love is free and unmerited, a copy of God's love to us, who does not wait until we are perfect before He loves us. He first loved us. We have often said that God is Love, but we have not felt His loveableness enough, we have failed to copy, to imitate His love, and so we have had love on our lips, but sternness and severity in our behaviour. We have also indulged in high sounding words such as the Infinite, the Absolute, the Eternal, in speaking of God, but these convey little or no meaning, and do not move the soul. We need the knowledge of God, and even though we see God only through the cleft of a rock, or through a glass darkly, even if we do not know His essence, yet we know something of His attributes, His character, and unto that knowledge which we have already attained, let us walk and live by that same rule. The springs of love in the hearts of men and women need loosening, and Jesus saw that the way to do it was by being merciful and healing to physical break-down, and forgiving to moral collapse. "This is life eternal, to know Thee, the only true God." It is this knowledge that educates the Christian in righteousness. The true teacher, says the teaching of the Twelve Apostles, promotes "the knowledge of the Lord." The first thing necessary in a convert in the Early Church was that he should "receive the knowledge of the Father" (Diognetus). And then they found the reason for all their conduct in God, thus: "Let us be kind to one another according to the compassion and sweetness of Him who made us" (Clement of Rome); "Be long suffering towards each other in meekness as God is towards you" (Ignatius to Polycarp); "We best worship God by imitating Him. . . Thus the soul practises to become God" (Clem. Alex.); "When thou hast loved Him, thou wilt be an imitator of His goodness" (Diognetus); "So then, brethren, doing the will of God our Father . . . let us make choice to be of the Church of Life" (Second Epist. Clem.). As I believe, therefore, that the knowledge of Him, who ALONE is the Highest, is the most important thing in this world, inasmuch as we are called to be perfect as He is, so that the love that is in His heart shall dwell in ours and be their ruling Power and Guide, then anything that confuses and blurs this Ideal we must protest against and maintain a separate life to do so; but our message, our Ideal, our Cause, our Gospel is Imitatio Dei.

* The Inquirer, March 2, 1901.

E. D. PRIESTLEY EVANS.

Kidderminster.

"And he called the name of the place Massah, and Meribah, because of the chiding of the children of Israel, and because they tempted the Lord, saying, Is the Lord among us, or not?"—Ex. xvii. 7.

SIR,—Some seven years ago Mr. Lummis came out from the bondage of Egypt and joined our spiritual Israel in its desert wanderings. Ever hospitable to any sincere thinker as is our wont, we let out the cords of our tent and gave him place and welcome. And now after this brief season of journeying with us, he murmurs against us, because the store of manna that falls for us seems so scanty and the water of life lies out of sight deep within the rock, and Canaan is yet so far off, and our progress towards it seems so slow.

He looks back to Egypt, not for the flesh pots, but for something other. He misses the light and glamour of the stately ritual of Thebes and Memphis, and fails to see amongst the austere folk with whom he now companies the outward marks of religion to which he was accustomed. He is tempted to cry out, "Is the Lord among us, or not?"

Had he journeyed with us from the outset, he would have known that progress had been made; and if, as it seems, we have but now arrived at Meribah, what matters that? It may be that God designs a still longer journeying for us in the wilderness, in order to purify and discipline and strengthen us, so that we may prevail at length over the hosts of Ammon and Moab. Moreover, if he had asked our fathers, he would have heard that we have had leaders in olden time, "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness, placed as rulers over hundreds and fifties and tens," who have given a glory and a fame to that worthy name by which we are called, but which many blaspheme, and such there are still amongst us not a few.

It is because of the way by which we have come that we are what we are. We are travel-stained, and bear upon us the marks of our journey. The outward forms in which our religion has been expressed have, perforce, been few and simple, but it is not of words or forms that religion consists. We welcome those who join us in our pilgrimage, whether we can help them or whether they can hearten us and speed us on our way to the land of promise, but do not let them chide. Meanwhile let us all endeavour to uphold the hands of those who are placed as leaders and teachers amongst us, that the cause of God may prevail against the hosts of Amalek and let us pass from Meribah to the next stage on our journey.

WALTER H. BURGESS.

DOING is a great thing. For if resolutely people do what is right, in time they come to like doing it.—Ruskin.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETINGS.

THE annual meetings of the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches were held last Saturday in Manchester. At 3.15 P.M. a religious service was held in Cross-street Chapel, the preacher being the Rev. Joseph Wood, of Birmingham, who delivered an eloquent discourse on Ezekiel xxxvii. 3, "Son of man, can these bones live?" The preacher emphasised what he held to be the four most important things needed for our true and prosperous life as a Church:—1st, realising what Christ stands for as the life and heart of religion; 2nd, spiritualising our ethics; 3rd, spiritualising our effort; and 4th, God consciousness.

Tea was provided at five o'clock in the Lower Mosley-street schools, and a public meeting was held in the Memorial Hall at 6.30 P.M., the chair being occupied by the President, Mr. G. W. RAYNER WOOD, J.P. The Longsight Free Christian Church Choir provided music at intervals.

The Report, which had been printed and circulated, was taken as read.

THE REPORT.

The report stated that the Forward Movement building scheme was now complete. During the year 1900 the three new churches at Urmston, Bradford (Manchester), and Heaton Moor had been opened, and on Feb. 9 of the present year the Chorlton-cum-Hardy Church was opened. Of all these churches steady work and hopeful prospects were recorded. At Altrincham a parsonage had been built, adjoining the Dunham-road Chapel, and at Gorton a handsome new school building had been opened. The new school at Blackley was about to be opened, and the new church at Moss Side would be completed during the present year. The special mission services and lectures held throughout the district during the winter had resulted in much encouragement and benefit to the churches. The accounts showed contributions to the General Fund of £67 10s. 8d. in congregational collections, £135 8s. 6d. in subscriptions, £152 1s. 11d. of this being transferred to the Forward Movement account. That account received also £100 from the Bazaar Fund (of which £772 6s. 2d. is still unappropriated), £112 19s. 6d. in subscriptions, £89 8s. 6d. in congregational contributions, and £125 in grants from the B. and F.U.A. The total expenditure on this account, in support of the ministry of the new churches and other work, amounted to £587 3s. 3d., as against £562 4s. 5d. in 1899.

Looking forward to the work of the new year, the report estimated that without a considerable increase of income the result would be a deficit of over £200. The past decade had been unexampled for activity and generous giving in the district, and the governing body appeal to the churches to provide adequate means to maintain and carry forward the good work.

The CHAIRMAN, in moving the adoption of the Report, referred to the various changes of ministry that had taken place during the past year. He also spoke of the good work done under the name of the Forward Movement. Much more work waited to be done. The Association wished to render aid to the old churches as well as the new ones. Their churches stood for a noble principle, and he hoped that willing help would be given to enable the churches combinedly to promote pure and worthy views of religion in the Manchester district.

The Rev. W. Copeland Bowie was the next speaker. He brought congratulations from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. He understood their difficulties. Religious work, if it was to do much good, was invariably hard. All sorts of forces were arrayed against it They would like to see a Church in England broad enough to include every one who loved the truth and did the right—and even the outcast too; but as the world is, such a Church is impossible. They must, therefore, strengthen the things they had. They had to admit the lack of downright sincerity in the Established Church. There was a tendency to play with creeds and articles and make them to mean anything, according to situation and circumstance. There could be no worthy manhood without sincerity. He hoped the young men and women connected with our Unitarian Churches would grow up to realise what they owed to the brave men and women who fought our battles for us and secured us freedom. He deprecated the fashion of sneering at the Puritan element in our national life; it was the Puritan spirit of sturdy independence from which inspiration in modern reform had sprung. He hoped that young and old alike would gather round their churches and try to make them stronger and better, and a greater influence for good upon the community at large. He believed in no one-sided religion for the salvation of the world. There were large numbers of men and women up and down England who wanted their thoughts made a little clearer as to what they believe or reject; that religion which had not an intellectual side to it would evaporate like the morning mist. They had to minister to all the world's needs. The Church, too, which did not take its message to the sinning and sorrowful and poor in our great cities, was not a Christian Church. The great masses of the poor were outside all Churches. The problem was how to reach them; to inform their minds, and awaken their sympathies was extremely difficult. If they did their small part of the work faithfully, the great Father of righteousness and love would look upon thier efforts with approval and sympathy; but that they must do.

The Rev. James C. Street, of Shrewsbury, who forty years ago was acting as superintendent missionary of the old Manchester Unitarian Association, referring to the criticisms passed upon our churches, said that one set of people say we are dead; they dissect us and tell us why we died, and hold us forth as a terrible example. Another set, far more terrible, are like vivisectors, they bring their knives and scalpels to bear upon the living body until it cries out, "For goodness' sake, let us alone!" Our newspapers are discussing the awful condition of the body politic in which we live. But is there anything amiss with us? This meeting doesn't look as if it were very unhealthy. But the vivisectors say you are perishing; yet you give more promise of activity in the future than in the past. Mr. Lummis and others like him, comparatively new to our life and work, are scarcely able to gauge us correctly; we have to be grown into somehow. We cannot be understood all at once; we are a peculiar people. They have to stand and see us in our daily life, in all that takes place with us, before they can say what religion there really is amongst us. Ours is not simply a religion of emotion; it does not manifest itself in praise and hallelujah on the tongue merely; it goes deeper than that. He did not hesitate to say that, though brought up amongst the Methodists, and having had forty years' experience of our churches, and a wide discriminating knowledge of the other churches, he knew not where else to find men and women with the sweet graces of godliness and piety, as they are to be found in our own churches.

Mr. Arthur E. Piggott, lay-secretary of the Association, also spoke, drawing further attention to the amount of work the Association had accomplished, the activities in most of its churches, and the great need for continued support both financial and moral.

After the usual votes of thanks, the Rev. George Knight pronounced the Benediction, and the meeting terminated.

A NEW UNITARIAN CHURCH FOR WOOD GREEN.

It is now a little over ten years since the first attempt to plant Unitarianism in Wood Green was made, and rather more than nine years since the Wood Green Unitarian Society established a permanent footing in the neighbourhood by opening Unity Hall as a place of worship, with Dr. Mummery for its minister. Under his genial leadership and fostering care the Society has grown and strengthened, until the time has come when the Committee have felt that they are justified in completing their original scheme, by building a church on the land adjacent to Unity Hall, which was secured when the Hall was built. Plans were accordingly prepared, a contract entered into, and on Saturday last a large congregation met to celebrate the first stage in building the new church—namely, the laying of the foundation-stone.

The proceedings commenced with a short religious service in Unity Hall, conducted by Dr. Mummery, who gave an earnest address on the object of the gathering, and the raison d'être for a Unitarian church in Wood Green, an abstract of which we give below. The ceremony of the stone-laying, which was of a simple but impressive character, having been performed by the venerable doctor, the company returned to Unity Hall, where, after a short interval for refreshment, a meeting was held, Councillor W. J. Cowan, Chairman of the Society, in the chair. The Chairman, after a few introductory remarks, called upon Dr. Blake Odgers, who stated that it gave him great pleasure to be present; he had watched the growth of the Society with the utmost interest; he well remembered being present at a hall in the High-street and addressing a small band of workers in the early part of 1891, and again in November of the same year, when Unity Hall was opened. He had visited Wood Green from time to time since, and generally found that something fresh had been done—first a new class-room, then a kitchen, then a new organ, and now they had met to celebrate the first step in the building of their new church. He said there were a good many Unitarians, who, if they made an effort for any special object, when that was accomplished, thought that they should rest and be thankful; but that was not the way with the Wood Green people. As soon as one thing was done, they immediately started on the next; and one thing he liked about them was, that whatever they undertook they carried through, and found a very large share of the money themselves.

The meeting was next addressed by Mr. Hahnemann Epps, who said he had great pleasure in testifying to the vigour with which the Wood Green people worked. As Chairman of the London District Unitarian Society, he had had special opportunities of watching the growth of the new congregations that had been established in the neighbourhood of London in recent years, and he knew of none that had made such rapid strides as Wood Green. He was also especially pleased to be able to congratulate his old and dear friend, Dr. Mummery, on the success he had achieved. The address in the afternoon brought vividly to his memory the old days when he was a member of Dr. Mummery's congregation at Peckham. The other speakers were Mr. Howard Young, Mr. J. Sudbery, Rev. F. Allen, Mr. Bredall, and Councillors Holding and Marlow Reed. Among other friends present we noticed Mrs. Alfred Lawrence, Mr. Isaac Lister, Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, and the Rev. W. and Mrs. Wooding.

Abstract of Dr. Mummery's Address.

In his address, Dr. Mummery said:—I regard the part I take in this day's proceedings as an honour, a privilege, and joy—an expression of the affection and devotion of a congregation to whom I minister, and whom I love from my heart. I thank the Father of Light, and congratulate them on the well-sustained progress of our simple and sweetly reasonable faith in Wood Green, and I pray from the very depths of my nature that it may go on to prosper, for I feel that it has a true place in the religious life of this neighbourhood. Each Church, as the individual man, has to do that stroke of work for which God has endowed it—work that can be done by no other. We are not hostile to other Churches; we merely supplement their noble work. There are many, an increasing number of good, earnest, thoughtful men and women, so constituted mentally that they are not attracted to the popular faith; they shrink from any doctrinal test, not thereby the less religious; to them we hold out the hand of loving fellowship. Hence there is a solemn need for the foundation of a temple, where such shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, and whence His beautiful Gospel of Love shall be proclaimed. We want our religion to be altruistic, feeling that the love of God includes the love of goodness in all its loftiest forms, and carries with it the love of man, brotherhood, righteousness, and purity. Thus the genuine love of God covers the whole surface of life and duty. Speaking of religion, Dr. Mummery said that man is by nature a religious being. Religion in essence is eternal—as Max Müller observed, "There is but one religion in the world"—but in its external form it is regulated by the law of Time, of wardrobe manifold. Hence it is that we have not exactly a formulated creed; for religious truth follows the law of all other truth, development, and expansion. We dare not fix the rising sun; we must not put new wine in old bottles. God still speaks, reveals His loving will and purpose. There are still prophets of the Most High. We have no business to imprison the thought of to-morrow in that of to-day. Our children will inherit a brighter and more spiritual light than we enjoy; hence a fuller life and larger area of duty. They will be able to comprehend that charming expression of Ruskin: "It is only right service which is perfect freedom." There is not freedom in mere theological subtleties. The history of the world is from the concrete to the spiritual, maybe with an occasioned recoil. It is possible, perhaps, to formulate a creed which may be practically lasting, but it must be ethical and not dogmatic. A fine example of that is Ian Maclaren's contribution:—"I believe in the Fatherhood of God; I believe in the words of Jesus; I believe in a clean heart; I believe in the service of love; I believe in the unworldly life; I believe in the Beatitudes; I promise to trust and follow Christ, to forgive my enemies, and to seek after the righteousness of God. I cannot conceive of a creed more elevating, inspiring, and wise. It is capable of expansion; will gather force and beauty as Time rolls forward, for it is in harmony with man's best and truest thought with the spirit of the age—which, for the most part, is the spirit of God. It means conduct and holiness of life." This, John Watson's statement, is an epitome of the Unitarian faith, which regards an un-Christlike life as the only possible heresy. This creed, so religiously ethical, helps to master the most tremendous difficulty of this age—a moral reformation and the upliftment of man from the material to the spiritual—which has got to be done; it is the duty of the hour, to which we should all be loyal, no matter under what theological flag we sail. The commercial money-making spirit has blighted God's fair world; getting on, any way, is the one great purpose of life, and many lose their soul—that is, their diviner life. Men need a vision of the everlasting presence of God, such as the poor, weary, sin-stricken Jacob had at that earliest stone-laying of the old Book. "Till we touch the Infinite," Stopford Brooke says, "we are but half what we might be." We want our church to be a spot where the people shall have a beautiful vision and ideal of the eternal nearness of the Father. As one great poet says:

Closer than breathing,
Nearer than hands and feet.

Here Dr. Mummery endeavoured to realise that wonderful picture of Jacob on his way to Haran, reminding the people that, as Carlyle puts it, "From the lowest depth there is a pathway to the loftiest height, and that every place is sacred where the soul reaches the Divine. He then noted the curious fact that the foundation-stone and front of the structure would face the East. Not that the priest ministering at the altar should face the Sacred and Holy Land, which is geographically incorrect; nor is it in obedience to a still older, almost, instinct of the race, that the temple should face the rising sun. Perhaps it was the wisdom of the architect or the regulations of the District Council which determined the matter. The church did face the East—which I hope will represent the soul-attitude of the people who attend here. Truth is a dawn of which our hearts should be receptive. The keeping the heart open for heavenly influences is the characteristic of a true Church receiving the Holy Spirit. The word "receive" in the New Testament means something more than passive receptivity. Seizing, holding on, we must make for the light; hold on to God's beautiful sunshine; nothing else will impart joy and kill the disease germs of the soul. What a beautiful text, "The sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings"!

THE RELIGIOUS CENSUS OF IRELAND.

SIR,—As a matter of considerable interest to our churches in Ireland, I venture to ask you to insert this letter and the enclosed communication from the Census Commissioners for Ireland.

I am told that on former occasions members of our churches have described themselves, or been set down by others, variously as Non-Subscribing Presbyterians, or Unitarians; and some have returned themselves simply as Presbyterians, in which latter case they have been erroneously made to swell the numbers of the "Presbyterian Church in Ireland." I would suggest to the ministers of the different congregations that they should explain the matter from the pulpit on Sunday next, and ask our people to fill up the column in the Census paper for "religious profession" in accordance with the letter from the Commissioners.

W. E. MELLONE,
Moderator of the Remonstrant Synod.

[COPY.]

"Census Office, Dublin,
"March 18, 1901.

"REV. SIR,—I am directed by the Census Commissioners to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your letter of the 15th inst., and to state that if the members of your body return themselves simply as 'Presbyterians' they will be tabulated with the members of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland in connection with the General Assembly and the Established Church of Scotland.

"If they return themselves as 'Non-Subscribing Presbyterians,' they will be tabulated under the heading 'All Other Denominations,' and will also be shown separately in the analysis of all religious bodies comprised under that heading for each county.—I am, Rev. Sir, your obedient servant,

"A. W. BREW, Secretary.

"The Rev. W. E. Mellone, Moderator of the Remonstrant Synod of Ulster."

THE ESSEX HALL HYMNAL.

SIR,—It may prove interesting to many of your readers to learn that the Committee of the B. and F.U.A. have decided to publish a new edition of the Essex Hall Hymnal. The Hymnal is already used by 114 congregations, and care will be taken in indexing and numbering the hymns in the new edition, so that it may be used to a certain extent along with the present one, which will not, however, be allowed to go out of print. The Sub-Committee appointed to prepare the new book will be pleased to consider any suggestions that reach them about hymns new and old.

W. COPELAND BOWIE, Secretary.
Essex Hall, March 14.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Bath (Appointment).—The Rev. John McDowell has accepted a unanimous invitation to the pulpit of Trim-street Chapel, as successor to the Rev. F. W. Stanley, who removed to Brixton in July last. Mr. McDowell enters on his duties at once. His former pulpits were Pendleton, Melbourne, Holbeck, and Parker Memorial, Boston, U.S.A.

Chesterfield (Appointment).—An invitation to Mr. E. Gwilym Evans, B.A., of Manchester College, Oxford, to become the minister of the Elder-yard Chapel, in succession to the Rev. Ambrose Bennett, M.A., has been accepted. Mr. Evans commences his ministry in August next.

Chichester.—The anniversary services were held on Sunday last, the Rev. C. A. Hoddinott preaching in the morning, and Mr. Councillor J. A. Morris Bew in the evening, from 2 Cor. i. 24: "Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy." The attendances were good and the collections satisfactory.

Chorley.—The old chapel at Chorley, which was the birthplace of the late Sir Henry Tate, Bart., is to be renovated at a cost of £700. Of this amount nearly £500 has been raised, including donations of £50 each from Lady Tate, the widow of the late Baronet, and his eldest son, Sir W. H. Tate, Bart.

Edinburgh.—On Thursday evening, March 7, a social meeting of the congregation of St. Mark's Chapel was held for the purpose of making a presentation to Mr. William Kirkhope, on the occasion of his demitting the office of treasurer, and as an acknowledgment of his valuable services in that capacity during eight and a-half years. The presentation, which took the form of a silver tea and coffee service, with a gold brooch for Mrs. Kirkhope, was made by the Rev. R. B. Drummond, in the name of the congregation.

Guildford.—In pursuance of the plan of pulpit exchanges throughout the Province, the services at the Ward-street Church are to be conducted to-morrow (Sunday) by the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., President of the Assembly. Mr. Edwin Ellis, J.P., secretary of the church, who from the first has been a member of the Surrey County Council, has been made an alderman. As chairman of the Highways and Bridges Committee, Mr. Ellis's administration has earned public gratitude, both for signal economy and for efficiency to which cyclists over Surrey roads can bear special witness.

Halifax (Presentation).—On Thursday evening, March 7, a meeting of the congregation was held in the Northgate-end Chapel, for the purpose of making a presentation to the Rev. F. E. Millson, in gratitude for his ministry of twenty-nine years. The presentation consisted of a statuette in solid silver of "The Knight Errant," by Mr. Gilbert Bayes, and an address engrossed on vellum and beautifully bound, signed by 279 members of the congregation, and containing also pen-and-ink drawings of the chapel and of the statuette. The chair was taken by Mr. J. Sagar, one of the chapel-wardens, and the address was read by Mr. R. E. Nicholson. Having referred to Mr. Millson's long and eminent services to the public life of Halifax, and especially in every branch of its educational work, the address recorded the special gratitude of the congregation to their minister, speaking of his wise counsels and devout services, the associations which had gathered about Easter and Christmas during his ministry, the catholic spirit and wide and generous sympathies which had prompted his commemoration from time to time of men distinguished by their influence for good. It recorded also the indebtedness of the Sunday-school, and other societies connected with the chapel to Mr. Millson's constant interest and wise initiative; his warm interest in the young, his deep sympathy and practical helpfulness towards the sorrowful and troubled, his generous assistance to the poor without any sectarian or other distinction. Mrs. Millson's name was linked in gratitude with that of her husband, and the hope of the congregation was expressed that they might long enjoy his ministrations, and a strengthening of the associations of common worship, which they so highly prized. The Chairman said that Northgate End Chapel had been specially fortunate in its ministers. Many of them had been learned scholars, all had been faithful to their duties to a scattered congregation; they had been constant in their efforts to secure freedom in religious matters, to assist every movement calculated to raise the moral and intellectual qualities of their people, and to encourage a spirit of inquiry instead of taking things for granted. In all these thing they were proud to say that their present minister had worthily upheld the traditions of their ancient congregation and the best of his predecessors in the ministry. Mr. Millson had served the congregation longer than any of his predecessors, with perhaps the exception of Nathaniel Priestley, who was the first settled minister of the Northgate End congregation, and died in 1728. The next in length of service to Mr. Millson was Mr. Ralph, who was minister for nearly twenty-eight years. Mr. Turner was there for twenty-five years, and Mr. Threlkeld for twenty-two. The Chairman then spoke of Mr. Millson as at the present time the father of the religious ministry in Halifax, and went on to refer in terms of high appreciation and warm gratitude to the services he had rendered to the congregation for twenty-nine years, and to the town especially in educational matters. Messrs. R. E. Nicholson, Edwin Scott, and J. Teal having added further tributes of grateful appreciation, the Chairman made the presentation and Mr. Millson responded. He thanked his friends for their great kindness, both on his own account and Mrs. Millson's. Those who were present and those who had gone had given him many of the things which made ministers happy. They had given thoughtful consideration to many plans which he had thought it his duty to put before them, though he daresay upon many occasions they might have thought them very revolutionary. He could not appropriate all that had been said of him, but he would put it down to the kindness which had been shown to him for nearly twenty-nine years. He had tried to be useful and to be their friend, and he recalled Browning's couplet—

"What I aspired to be,
And was not, comforts me."

Nearly seventeen years ago the teachers in the Sunday-school presented him with a beautiful set of John Ruskin's works. He often used them, and he could not take them into his hands without thinking of the thoughtfulness and kindness which prompted that gift. As to their gifts that night, he could think of nothing that would be more acceptable; the address bearing the names of the congregation would be dear to him and his wife as long as they lived.

Horsham.—On Tuesday week the Rev. F. K. Freeston lectured in the Free Christian Church on "Robert Browning, Poet and Prophet." The chair was taken by the Rev. J. J. Marten, and the lecture, which was much appreciated, was fully reported in the West Sussex County Times, of March 16. The Rev. H. M. Lewins also lectured recently on "Christopher Columbus." On April 12 the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards is to lecture on "Shelley."

Lancaster.—On Sunday week the services in St. Nicholas-street Chapel were conducted morning and evening by the Rev. L. de Beaumont Klein, of Liverpool. In the evening the chapel was quite full and chairs had to be brought in. A long and appreciative notice of the preacher and his services, by the Editor, appeared in the Lancaster Standard. The annual meeting of the congregation was held on the following Wednesday, and was largely attended, the minister, the Rev. J. C. Pollard, being supported by the officers of the congregation. The Committee's report chronicled a year of great activity and energy, during which the chapel had been renovated, electric light introduced, and an organ at last secured and successfully opened. The necessary additional funds had been raised, with the exception of £36 due to the organ fund, and there was still the valuable harmonium to be disposed of. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Miss Lamport for her hospitable provision of tea.

Lewin's Mead Domestic Mission.—The annual meeting was held on March 19, when Mr. P. J. Worsley presided over a fair attendance of subscribers. The missionary's report, read by the Rev. A. Lancaster, was a record of good work accomplished under adverse circumstances. The Sunday-school had a membership of 213, with an average attendance of 170. The penny bank had a total deposited in small weekly subscriptions of £338. A Band of Hope was started in October, and showed a membership of 212. The Total Abstinence Society, Men's, Boys', and Senior and Junior, and Girls' Club, flower show, and men's discussion class, also showed a record of successful work. The secretary's report was read by the Rev. Dr. Warschauer, and the treasurer's by Mr. J. K. Champion. The latter showed the receipts on the general account to have been £209, and the expenditure £254, the adverse balance being attributable to extensive sanitary repairs. The reports were adopted on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Norgrove. Thanks were voted to the preachers of the annual sermons on behalf of the mission—the Revs. A. N. Blatchford and Dr. Warschauer—on the proposition of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. E. Sibree.

London: Bermondsey.—At the Band of Hope meeting on Tuesday, a delightful entertainment was given by fourteen members of the Stratford Band of Hope and Temperance Guild, under the efficient direction of Miss Haylock. The programme comprised eighteen items, including piano solos and duets, mandoline solos, songs, recitations, &c. There was a large muster of Bermondsey young people, and friends from Stamford-street and Newington Green were also present. A hearty vote of thanks to the young artistes was moved by Mr. A. W. Harris, seconded by Mr. Harold Titford, and carried with acclamation, and was acknowledged by Mr. W. J. Noel.

London: Essex Church.—In connection with the simultaneous exchanges arranged by the Provincial Assembly, the services on Sunday next, morning and evening, will be conducted by the Rev. F. W. Stanley, of Brixton. Special collections will be taken for the Assembly funds. On Sunday last the Rev. Frank K. Freeston referred with high appreciation to the life and work of the late Rev. C. L. Corkran, and also to the much-lamented decease of the Rev. John Byles. On Wednesday, at the Congregational Society, a Shakespeare recital will be given by Mr. A. H. Paget, of Leicester.

London: Peckham.—On Wednesday, March 13, the annual tea and prize distribution meeting of the Avondale-road Sunday-school was held. The meeting was well attended by members of the church, under the presidency of the Rev. G. Carter, and recitations and songs were given by teachers and scholars, after which the prizes were distributed, each teacher prefacing presentation to his or her own class with a short address. Another feature of interest was the surprise presentation by Mrs. Bredall of books to four of the elder scholars, whom she had noted as most regular attendants at the church services.

London: Wandsworth.—The annual church meeting was held on March 13, when there was a good attendance. In the absence of the Chairman of the outgoing Committee, Mr. J. F. Schwann, the chair was taken by Mr. Hugh James, treasurer. The reports were of an encouraging nature, and the balance-sheet, notwithstanding heavy items for improvements, showed that the new century opened with a small sum in hand, the total income being £664. The reports of the Sunday-school, Band of Hope, Social Union, and other affiliated societies were also satisfactory. The usual routine business was transacted; the treasurer and the secretary (Mr. H. B. Lawford) were reappointed, with warm appreciation of their services during the year; delegates were chosen for the Provincial Assembly, and for the New Century Meetings at Whitsuntide. The Rev. S. Farrington and Mr. W. Blake Odgers, K.C., were welcomed as visitors, and gave addresses in reply, Mr. Farrington referring to the importance of a deepened religious life in our congregations, and Mr. Odgers pleasantly acknowledging the part taken by Wandsworth friends, especially by Mr. Herbert Lawford, in connection with the recent London Bazaar. A vote of appreciation of the services of the Rev. W. G. Tarrant, as minister, was passed by acclamation, and Mr. Tarrant, in a brief reply, expressed his deep gratitude to all his helpers, old and young, in the work of the church and other institutions, and his hope that that work would go on and increase. The business proceedings ended with a vote of thanks to the chairman. Mr. Tarrant, who had been unable through indisposition to take services on the two preceding Sundays, preached on Sunday morning, and is now happily resuming full duty again.

Maidstone.—The annual winter treat and distribution of prizes to the children attending the Earl-street Sunday-school took place at the Concert Hall on Wednesday, March 13. Over one hundred and fifty scholars and adults sat down to tea, and many more were present at the meeting afterwards, when an interesting programme was carried out by the teachers and scholars. Mr. M. A. Ruck presided, and presented the prizes and medals. He gave an encouraging address, and other addresses were given by Mr. F. W. Ruck and the Rev. S. S. Brettell. In conjunction with the event a Sale of Work was arranged in aid of the church funds by the members of the Sewing Circle, which was revived last November, and realised over £20. The Circle has organised regular social meetings, and promises to be of great service to the congregation. Mr. Brettell, in his usual "Review of the Month," refers to the services held in Maidstone in memory of the Queen, and expresses regret that in the services held at All Saints' Church, attended by the Mayor and Corporation, no Nonconformist minister was allowed to take part, and yet further regret that when the Nonconformists held a United Free Church memorial service, they, in their turn, excluded the Unitarian, the minister of the oldest Free Nonconformist Church in the town.

Manchester: Bradford.—The Ladies' Sewing Society, connected with the Mill-street Free Church, in order to assist both church and school income, propose to hold a Jumble Sale on Monday, April 1. Any help to this end will be heartily welcomed. Parcels may be sent to Mrs. Whatmore, 517, Mill-street, Bradford, Manchester; or to the Rev. W. E. Atack, Cheetham House, North-road, Clayton, Manchester.

Nottingham: High Pavement Chapel.—The Sunday evening lectures of the Rev. J. M. Lloyd Thomas on "Some Social Aspect sof Christianity," to which we have already referred, have been attended by a large concourse of people, and have been greatly appreciated. The subjects have been considered from the high standpoint of Christian brotherhood, and in the next and concluding lecture Mr. Thomas will deal with the important subject, "What are the Churches doing?"

Pudsey.—The annual meeting of the congregation of Unity Church has recently been held, Mr. J. Thompson presiding over the largest attendance known in the history of the church on a similar occasion. The report of the secretary, Mr. J. Tyndall, showed a balance in hand, special references being made to the increase in the attendance at services and of the offertories during the last ten weeks. The Sunday-school report showed good progress. In the Social Union report, special mention was made of the lectures of the Rev. Charles Harvey Cook, of Holbeck, and the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A., of Bradford, as being helpful to the members. The Ladies' Sewing Society raised £30 during the year. The minister, the Rev. W. Harold Davies, gave a suitable address.

Rotherham.—Mission services, under the auspices of the Yorkshire Unitarian Union, were conducted at the Church of Our Father, on Sunday morning and evening, March 10, by the Rev. C. Harvey Cook, of Leeds, who preached eloquent sermons to large congregations. His discourses were entitled, "Left to the Imagination" and "The Cry of all the Ages." On Wednesday evening, March 13, Mr. Cook again preached, on "The Gospel of Jesus."

Scarborough.—The first of the meetings in connection with the Yorkshire Unitarian Forward Movement was held at the Old Town Hall on Tuesday evening last. The Rev. Charles Hargrove, M.A., delivered a lecture on "What shall I do to be saved," Mr. A. Bailey in the chair. The lecturer pleaded in earnest, eloquent terms for a return to the simple faith, unfettered by creeds, of the early days of Christianity. Questions were invited at the close, and the manner in which they were answered evoked the applause of even the orthodox visitors. The attendance was far more than was anticipated, particularly considering the wild night, being estimated at about 250, the success being mainly attributed to the widespread method of advertising, handbills being delivered to every house. In continuance of the Forward Movement, lectures and services are to be held in the Westbro' Church on March 21, 26, and 28, concluding with a social evening on the 29th, and it is hoped will deepen the spiritual life, and in the words of a member of the congregation, "succeed in softening some prejudices against a religious faith, which has been good enough for some of the finest intellects of the world."

Stalybridge.—A meeting connected with the Forward Movement was held in the Town Hall on Monday evening last, to hear a lecture by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, on "A Unitarian View of Jesus." The evening was cold, a piercing east wind blowing, but an audience of close upon 200 came together, and though most of them were Unitarians, there was a fair sprinkling of strangers. The young men and women of the congregation had rallied round the minister and distributed 2,000 handbills and pamphlets in the town. The audience were delighted with Mr. Bowie's lecture. The Rev. W. Harrison presided. Mr. James Jackson proposed, and Mr. Councillor Warhurst seconded, a vote of thanks to the lecturer.

Wakefield.—On Sunday last memorial services were held, both morning and evening, in Westgate Chapel, as a tribute of affection, gratitude, and esteem to the late John Byles. No pains had been spared to render the services impressive, and in the evening especially the large congregation was deeply moved. The Rev. Andrew Chalmers, who had been to Richmond, where Mr. Byles died, officiated on both occasions.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, March 24.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Frederic Allen; 7 P.M., Musical Service, solos by Mrs. Clara Bridger and Mr. R. H. Williams. Monday, 8.15 P.M., Social Institute Concert, under the direction of Mrs. C. Bridger.

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 AM., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. K. Freeston.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. Page Hopps.

Deptford, Church-street 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. George Ward.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. Stanley. Special Collections for Provincial Assembly.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. Perris.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Rev. Edgar Daplyn, 11.15 A.M., "St. Augustine's Confessions," and 7 P.M., "The Invisible Temple." Children's Class, 12.30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. V. Crook.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. J. Marten, of Horsham.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M., "Hope!" 7 P.M., "The Unitarian Gospel," Rev. Alexander Farquharson.

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M., Rev. W. Wooding B.A., and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church High-street 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., and and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. G. Carter.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Hamilton Vance.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., P. W. Ames, F.R.S.L.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge, and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church 11 A.M., Rev. T. E. M. Edwards, and 6.30 P.M., Mr. A. J. Clarke.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev Dr. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.m., Rev. John McDowell.

Bedford, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. Rowland Hill.

Blackpool, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. David Davis.

Blackpool, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. Coe.

Bradford, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. John Ellis.

Brighton, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-road North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. Livens.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel Blackfriars, 11 A.M., W. Blake Odgers, K.C., LL.D.

Deal and Walmer, Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. Shakspeare.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Burrows.

Eastbourne, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M. Rev. G. St. Clair.

Guildford, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. G. Tarrant.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. Dawes Hicks.

Leeds Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A.

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Jenkyn Thomas.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Harwood, B.A.

Liverpool, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M., Rev. R. A. Armstrong, B.A., and 6.30 P.M., Mr. Albert Crompton.

Liverpool, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Dr. Klein, "The Gospel of Jesus and the Social Question."

Manchester, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. Shanks.

Newport, Isle of Wight 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. Clement E. Pike.

Oxford, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. J. E. Odgers, M.A.

Portsmouth, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. Thomas Bond.

Portsmouth, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. Cosens Prior.

Rochdale, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. P. Spedding.

Scarborough, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. L. H. Thomas.

Sidmouth, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. Agar.

Sevenoaks, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. Harold Rylett. Stables in the grounds.

Southend, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. Dear.

Southport, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. Wellbeloved.

Torquay, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'Connor.

Tunbridge Wells, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

York, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. Rawlings, M.A.

IRELAND.

Dublin, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, and 7 P.M., Rev. Silas Farrington, of London.

Warrenpoint, co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 noon, Rev. W. E. Mellone. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

Cape Town, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. Balmforth.

Sydney, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Walters.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—March 24th, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The 'Decalogue'—Is it the Foundation of Morality? VI. Thou shalt not Kill."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—March 24, at 11.15 A.M., JOHN A. HOBSON, M.A., "The Nineteenth Century"—"The Influence of Prose Fiction."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

PULPIT SUPPLY or Mission Work desired. Experienced Preacher and Worker.—Rev. Henry Cross, 65, Exmouth-road, Great Yarmouth.

BIRTHS.

Cliff.—On the 8th March, at St. Helier, Hampton, near Evesham, the wife of Arthur Cliff, of a daughter.

WANTED, on April 12th, a PLAIN COOK, where two servants are kept. Comfortable home. Send particulars of last place, height, and age to Mrs. A. E. Jones, 13, Great Bedford-street, Bath.

PUPIL (over 16) received on reduced terms, if able to assist with little ones' music practice.—Apply, Eleanor Moss, B.A., Edgbaston College, Bristol-road, Birmingham.

WANTED, for the Upper Chapel, Sheffield, a Gentleman to act as SUPERINTENDENT of the SUNDAY SCHOOL, and to assist the Minister in Missionary and general work. Further particulars from the Secretary, to whom applications, accompanied by two references, should be sent.

WANTED, a MOTHER'S HELP for Minister's house in the country. Must be fond of children. Apply, stating age and salary required, and giving reference, to Mrs. E. L. H. Thomes, Handforth, Cheshire.

LEWIN'S MEAD DOMESTIC MISSION, BRISTOL.

The post of MISSIONARY is about to become VACANT. Applications should be addressed to the Hon. Sec., Rev. Dr. Warschauer, Oakfield, Hampton-road, Bristol.

YOUNG LADY requires situation as CHILDREN'S MAID, or Maid to an elderly lady.—A. Biss, Bathwick, Bath.

WANTED, Situation as COMPANION HELP, to assist in light household duties; or useful to companion to elderly lady where servant is kept. Age 26. Trustworthy. Good references.—Address E. J. M., Myrtle Villas, Dewsbury Moor, Dewsbury, Yorks.

WANTED, Gentleman or Lady as ORGANIST at Rhyl-street Domestic Mission, Kentish Town. Small salary attached.—Communications to Mr. Wilson.

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE, The Firs, Bromyard, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss Jessie Baker (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

THE "INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

Reckitt's PARIS Blue.
The Best is the Cheapest.

JUST PUBLISHED. Post Free 6d. Net.

Information Concerning the

History and Growth of the Bible.

COLLECTED, CONDENSED, AND ARRANGED

by BERTRAM TALBOT for

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS & OTHERS

The Spectator of the 2nd inst., says :—

'The treatment of the subject throughout is liberal and broad-minded. The writer accepts the well-established conclusions of modern research, and gives them in a reasonable and inoffensive fashion to his readers. This is a good little book in itself, and it will guide the student to sources where he will find these matters treated in more detail."

For further particulars see "Inquirer," pp. 151 & 159.

Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.
Also kept in stock by the S.S.A. at Essex Hall.

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE. E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

Directors.

Chairman — Sir H. W. Lawrence, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—Mark H. Judge, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. Hardcastle, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss Orme, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
Stephen Seaward Tayler, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. Henry Rutt, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "Birkbeck, London."

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

Schools, etc.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Principal—Miss BAILY.

Headmistress—Miss ELEANOR MOSS B.A.Hons.

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which is opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum is based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,
SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

Principal — Mrs. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. (Established 1893).

PUPILS prepared for the Universities; resident gymnast and French mistress; healthy conditions of life; hockey and tennis.

Prospectus on application to Miss Macrae Moir, Lingholt, Hindhead.

Station, Haslemere.

CONAMUR, SANDGATE.—SCHOOL FOR GIRLS AND LITTLE BOYS.

Miss JARVIS and Miss CLARA BERRY, having added to their House and Playgrounds, can now take more PUPILS.

BABBACOMBE, TORQUAY.—HOME TUITION in FRENCH and GERMAN.—Rev. A. E. and Mrs. O'CONNOR would receive, for special instruction, two boys or girls as Boarders. Educated in Germany, he resided there long; and in France. Mrs. O'Connor is a native of France. Reference—W. H. Herford, B.A., Paignton.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, Nantwich
(BARKER FOUNDATION.)

Head Master, GUY LEWIS, M.A., Oxford.
Assistant Masters—Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and Manchester College, Oxford, and H. L. JONES, B.A., Merton College, Oxford.
Visiting Masters for Science, Music, Drawing, Gymnastics and Manual Instruction.
Next Entrance Examination, April 10th.

There are a few Vacancies on the Foundation. For Prospectus and particulars, apply to the Headmaster, or to the Clerk to the Governors, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN
(UNIVERSITY OF LONDON),
YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET, W.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.

One Clift Scholarship in Arts, annual value £31 10s., tenable for three years.

One Pfeiffer Scholarship in Science, annual value £48, tenable for three years.

These Scholarships will be awarded on the results of the Examination to be held in the College on June 25th and 26th.

STUDENTS are prepared for all the University of London Examinations in Arts and Science. LECTURES are given in all branches of General and Higher Education.

Six Laboratories are open for Practical Work. Students can reside in the College.

Prospectus and all Particulars on application to the Principal.

PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY of LONDON
and
SOUTH-EASTERN COUNTIES.

THE NEW CENTURY.

The Congregations and friends are cordially invited to a

UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICE,

at

LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET CHAPEL
(Oxford-circus),

TUESDAY, March 26th, 1901.

The following Ministers will take part:—The Revs. W. G. Tarrant, B.A., Frank K. Freeston, W. C. Pope, H. S. Perris, M.A., and F. W. Stanley.

Service to begin at 7.30 P.M. and close at 9 P.M.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs Robert Turner, 94 Grosvenor-road, S.W

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front, close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 rooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. Pocock.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss Chaldecott Stirling House, Manor-road.

BOURNEMOUTH. — Board-residence. High position, facing South, with balcony and good garden. Suitable for Open-air Treatment. Close to sea, sheltered by pines, and adjoining the car-route to all parts.—D., Cliff House, 1, Westminster-road, Branksome Park.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. Sidney P. Potter.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable Apartments, well situated midway between station and beach in sunny Felixstowe. Reasonable terms.—Apply Mrs. H. Robinson, Kimberley House, Ranelagh-road.

SIDMOUTH.

TO LET.—THE BALSTERS, containing a large dining-room, drawing-room, and library; five bedrooms, dressing-room, and box-room; kitchen and scullery, coach-house, stable, and offices, &c. Rent £60 per annum.—Application to be made to the Occupier.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised Temperance Hotel in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "Quietude, London."

Printed by Woodfall & Kinder, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. Kennedy, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, John Heywood, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday March 23, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3066. NEW SERIES, No. 170.] LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 30, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 193
LITERATURE :—
The Ascent through Christ 196
Pages from a Journal 197
Publications Received 194
ARTICLES :—
Guilds—III. 198
Bridgend Chapel Trust 199
The Philosophical Journals on the late Professor Sidgwick 202
Broken Shells 203
CORRESPONDENCE :—
Is Nature Cruel? 199
The Religion of the Incarnation 199
A Living Church 200
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 199
LEADER :—
A Religion of Self-Sacrifice 200
MEETINGS :—
London and South Eastern Counties Provincial Assembly 195
Manchester Domestic Mission 203
North and East Lancashire Unitarian Mission 204
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 205
ADVERTISEMENTS 206

NOTICE.

The next issue of "The Inquirer" will be published on Thursday, April 4th. Advertisements and Editorial matter should be sent as early as possible.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

"IF a Mission is not ethical it is not Evangelical." So writes the Rev. C. F. Aked, the well-known Baptist minister, of Pembroke Chapel, Liverpool, in the Christian World in an article on the lessons of the recent national mission of the Evangelical Free Churches. This article will doubtless be met with indignation in certain quarters, but Mr. Aked never hesitates to speak his mind. He believes with all his heart that this country can be won for Christ, but not by the methods chiefly used in the recent Mission :—

There is no gain in persuading ourselves that we have done much better than we have done. Satisfaction with existing conditions would be absolutely fatal. A conviction that there is no problem to solve, that we have no errors to correct, no lessons to learn, would ruin us. Far better if strict accuracy is impossible, let there be too much searching of heart rather than too little, too little self-complacency rather than too much.

The great mass of thoughtful and educated people were not reached. "The old phrases have lost their meaning and their power—that is the simple fact: not with everybody, but with many, and those the best-brained men and women of our time. . . . These people bring up with them a certain mental and moral equipment which is not only untouched by the old shibboleths and methods, but which is actually repelled by them." "We are still running the new wine into the old bottles—and the end is disaster."

ASKING how better results are to be obtained, Mr. Aked quotes from "J.B.'s" article on "The Evangelist's Evangel," published on the eve of the Mission: "A presentation of religious truth to outsiders should avoid conventionalism as the plague, and amongst other things the conventionalism of texts," and goes on to plead for variety of method, a social gospel, a firmer courage and a larger charity. As to the Social Gospel, he writes :—

There is no danger that any evangelist will forget his evangel for the individual sinner; there is danger that he will water down his parable against civic injustice and national unrighteousness, against the tyrannies of commerce and the treacheries of the street. "Mere morality" and "political preaching" and similar puerilities, urged as serious objections to this preaching, may be remorselessly brained—with a feather! We have come to this, in this country, that if a Mission is not ethical it is not evangelical.

IN the same spirit we find Mr. Henry B. Binns writing in Present Day Papers, in the first of a series of articles on "The Social Ideal" which appeared in the February number. "The love of Christ constraineth us," he pleads must be applied to social as well as individual regeneration.

Let us consider the application of this to the present position of the churches. I think there can be no doubt among those who are familiar with our common humanity, that the lack of vitality so sadly apparent in much contemporary religious life is directly due to the absence of this ideal. Nothing so certainly stamps a Church with inefficiency as hesitation to face those social and industrial evils which mar the lives of thousands of men and women. Surely the Good Tidings cannot be inadequate for the needs of men! . . . . Religion only exists in so far as it is practicable; and it exists in order that it may be practised. Impracticable beliefs can furnish no religion at all. They are the stones of tradition offered instead of bread to hungry children.

In the March number of Present Day Papers, Mr. Binns continues his study of the Social Ideal, dealing with "Primitive Man," and to the same number May Kendall contributes a thoughtful and stimulating paper on "The Burden of Brotherhood."

LAST Saturday Mr. Stopford Brooke lectured to the students of University College, Aberystwyth, on "The Influence of the French Revolution on English Literature," and on Sunday preached in the Congregational Church. The announcement that he was to do so, we learn from the Christian World, "led to the insertion of an advertisement in a local paper calling the attention of 'all professing Christians' to certain Scripture texts which were supposed to point to the enormity of a 'Unitarian' occupying a 'Christian' pulpit. The editor permitted himself a few pungent remarks protesting against 'the bigots who prepared this advertisement,' and the upshot was that Dr. Brooke had very large congregations—a happy circumstance to which the ill-advised advertisement no doubt in some degree contributed."

IN speaking of Dr. Winnington Ingram's appointment as Bishop of London, we referred to his little book on "Work in Great Cities," as showing the quality of his work in the East-end, as Head of Oxford House and Rector of Bethnal Green. In the lecture on "Social Work" there is a specially interesting account of boys' clubs; and as to the value of clubs generally, as furnishing wholesome interests and recreation to counteract less desirable attractions, it is said, "There is no good wasting your breath in abusing publicans; it is useless, besides being usually quite unfair. Devote your energies to cutting them out." As to the Relief of Distress, Dr. Ingram advises the formation of a Parochial Committee, consisting largely of laymen, on which some representative of the local Nonconformists should be asked to serve, and which should keep in touch with the relieving officer of the district and the Charity Organisation Society, and he adds: "On no account let the question of help be decided by profession of creed, but solely by character, lest, in your endeavour to support the 'household of faith,' you turn it into a 'household of hypocrites.'"

DR. WINNINGTON INGRAM'S lecture on "Preaching and Teaching" is full of sound advice. The preacher, he says, who truly realises his mission, will never enter the pulpit except with awe, for preaching rightly understood is the delivery of a message from God. This thought should always determine the character of a sermon.

We have all heard the story of the French surgeon describing a brilliant operation. He enlarged on the rapidity with which it had been performed, the brilliancy of the execution, and the entirely new light which it threw on the science of the subject. "But what," some one asked, "happened to the man under the operation?" "Oh," he replied, as if it was of no consequence whatever—"the man? He died." We smile at such a story—probably an entire invention itself; but it has its use if it impresses on us the palpable absurdity of looking on a sermon as a work of art in itself. Its periods may be most polished, its diction perfect, its style irreproachable; but if it fails to move a soul nearer to God, it is dead—dead and useless. The roughest and most unpolished utterance from an earnest man which quickens the better feeling of one soul, is as a sermon worth ten of it.

A good sermon, it is added, must be one thing at a time, with one central message, which can be expressed in a sentence and carried away. "'Is the sermon done?' asked some one of a friend who was coming out of church. 'No, it's over, but it's got to be done,' was the reply; and it can only be done if people can carry away in their minds what they have got to do."

Counselling young preachers, Dr. Ingram says that at first sermons certainly ought to be written. "It takes time and practice to get the ideas into logical order. You would be almost certain to grow discursive until you have had some practice in writing; and it is quite a mistake to suppose that a written sermon cannot be delivered with quite as much spirit as an unwritten one." Witness Dr. Liddon. But there are conditions necessary to make a written sermon effective.

In the first place, it must be written with the congregation before your mind all the time: you must be addressing them as you write; you must have before you the sea of faces, and even the individual faces of those whom you have met in your visiting, and are desiring to win to God. No one can write a dry essay if he is in touch with the life of his people, and has them before him as he writes.

In the second place, you must never write a sentence that will not travel down a church. There are some sentences so involved and complicated, so full of Latinised words and long syllables that they never reach the bottom, but get hung up half-way on one of the pillars. Write short sentences in good Saxon, with a clean swing about them, and they will hit the man at the back by the door, as well as the half-deaf man who has been squeezed up under the pulpit. When the poor people say that they can "hear" you, they really mean "hear and understand."

We should be glad to call the attention of our readers to an article in last week's Spectator on "The Power and Function of Quakerism." Referring at the outset to J. S. Rowntree's little book on "The Society of Friends," recently published by Messrs. Headley Bros., the article shows how Quakerism, with its one essential summed up in the words, "The Kingdom of God is within you," is nearer to the religion of Jesus than any of the great churches of the world. It represents most perfectly in England that mysticism blended with most practical ethics, of which other instances are seen in Germany in Tauler and the Moravians, and in Italy in the early Franciscans. The examples of John Woolman, and his attitude towards slavery in the United States, and of Elizabeth Fry with her work in this country among degraded prisoners, are quoted as showing how "the retired, simple man of the inner life" may understand the great world and its problems:—

> The work of both John Woolman and of Elizabeth Fry did not proceed so much from the reason as from the heart, from a heart cleansed from all that is false, misleading, derived from prejudice. They are exemplars of the saying of their Master: "If thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light." How superficial in their presence seem the taunts of the "practical" man! How little the subjects of controversy! How the ambitions of the world sink into nothingness! Hers is the practical side of Christian quietism, with its heroic attitude of the inner mind, derived from the blending of the inner Christian idea with the ethics of Christianity applied in the actual stress of life. We do not doubt the loveliness of many a saint, of many an obscure monk or priest, in the great guarded fold of the orthodox Christian Church. But for fidelity and courage, as well as for inward light shining in a dark world, where will you find the superior of these saints of Quakerism?
>
> The rough workaday world, the writer of the article concludes, may need to be addressed and controlled by a stronger and more definite organisation than that afforded by Quaker rule; yet the world would be spiritually poorer without the Society, since Friends are "the guardians of, and witnesses for, the higher spiritual life enjoined by our Lord."

Thomas Pargeter's (of Foxcote) Charity.—The thirty-fourth annual meeting of the trustees of this charity was held on the 18th inst. at the office of Messrs. Harding and Goode, 32, Waterloo-street, Birmingham. The following trustees were present:—The Revs. E. P. Hall, A. W. Timmis, L. P. Jacks, A. H. Shelley, E. D. Priestley Evans, Henry McKean, Henry Eachus and J. Hardinge Matthews. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—The Rev. E. D. Priestley Evans, chairman; and the Revs. J. Hardinge Matthews and E. P. Hall auditors. Mr. F. H. Jordan was reappointed treasurer, and Mr. Charles Harding secretary to the trust. The few vacancies arising from the death of annuitants during the past year were filled up, as they arose, by the election of suitable candidates from a very large number of applicants. The present number of annuitants receiving aid from the charity, including two elected at this meeting, is 106, ninety-eight of whom receive £20 a year, and the remainder £16 a year each, the latter being the amounts paid when two or more sisters are recipients of the charity. The trustees have been enabled materially to increase the number of annuitants in consequence of liberal gifts which have been made by friends from time to time to the charity, and also of the annual donation of £100 which has been contributed for some years past anonymously to the funds and directed to be applied as income. These gifts bespeak the high estimation in which the charity is held by the donors, and it is hoped the example will be followed by others who are in a position to contribute to the funds of the charity. The number of applicants is still exceedingly large, and is constantly increasing. Applicants must not be under fifty-five years of age; and in the selection of annuitants preference is given to those candidates, being eligible, who have received the education and occupied the position of gentlewomen.

Even our failures are a prophecy,
Even our yearnings and our bitter tears
After that fair and true we cannot grasp;
As patriots who seem to die in vain
Make liberty more sacred by their pangs.

—George Eliot.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

To Publishers.—[All Books, &c., sent to The Inquirer will be acknowledged under this head, with name of publisher and price, if supplied. The necessities of our space, however, compel us to limit the number selected for critical notice and review]

Royalties of the World. In twelve parts. Parts I. and II. at 6d. (George Newnes.)

A Short Introduction to the Literature of the Bible. By R. G. Moulton, M.A. 3s. 6d. (Isbister and Co.)

The Theist's Prayer Book. By Keshub Chunder Sen. 6d. (Philip Green.)

A Study of Social Morality. By W. A. Watt, M.A., LL.B. 6s. (T. and T. Clark.)

Another Englishwoman's Love Letters. By Barry Pain. 2s. (Fisher Unwin.)

Heroes of the Reformation: Huldreich Zwingli. By S. M. Jackson. 6s. (Putnam.)

The Children and the Drink. With a preface by His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury. 1s. (R. Brimley Johnson, 8, York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C.)

The Hope of England. By Z. H. Lewis. 2s. (Swan Sonnenschein.)

The Literary Year Book and Bookman's Directory. Edited by Herbert Morrah. 3s. 6d. (George Allen.)

William Morris. By J. W. Mackail, M.A. 1d. (53, Fleet-street.)

Life's Upper School. By Mrs. A. C. Osler. 1s. (Philip Green.)

Among the Syringas. By Mary E. Mann. 6s. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Psychology of Jingoism. By J. A. Hobson. 2s. 6d. (Grant Richards.)

Temperance Critic, Review of Reviews, Woman at Home, Harper's, Monthly Review.

The Liberation Society's Triennial Conference falls due this year, and will be held at the Memorial Hall, London, on April 30 and May 1. It will be composed of delegates from various public bodies throughout the Kingdom; and, having regard to the many ecclesiastical questions now before the public, the proceedings are likely to be of unusual interest. They will close with the usual public meeting at the City Temple on May 1, when Mr. Thomas Shaw, M.P. for the Hawick burghs, and late Solicitor-General for Scotland, will preside. Particulars may be had on application at 2, Serjeants' Inn, Fleet-street, London.

Many friends will hear with regret and the warmest sympathy that Robert Collyer has been burnt out of his snug quarters high up in the great block of buildings in New York, where he had made his nest; but the misfortune is not so serious as a note in the Christian World implies, for his theological library was not burnt—it was safe from harm in his study at the Church of the Messiah. After his experience of the great Chicago fire, this, as the Christian Register remarks, will have seemed to Collyer's sturdy spirit but a little thing.

It is not the wall of stone without
That makes the building small or great,
But the soul's light shining round about,
And the faith that overcometh doubt,
And the love that stronger is than hate.

—Longfellow.

LONDON AND SOUTH EASTERN COUNTIES' PROVINCIAL ASSEMBLY.

UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICE.

THE united devotional service arranged by the Provincial Assembly to be held in Little Portland-street Chapel, on Tuesday evening, was naturally attended chiefly by Londoners, but of them both ministers and congregations were well represented, and the body of the chapel was fairly filled. The service throughout was helpful and uplifting, the reverence of the assembly finding adequate expression in the prayers and hymns alike.

The opening hymn was Frothingham's "O Lord of Hosts, whose guiding hand," after which the Rev. F. K. Freeston gave the first address, followed by prayer. Then after the chant, "God be merciful unto us and bless us," the Rev. W. C. Pope read Psalms 23 and 19 (part), Paul's address on Mars Hill, and a passage from that helpful American writer G. S. Merriam. Samuel Longfellow's hymn, "I look to Thee in every need," was followed by prayer by the Rev. F. W. Stanley, and between the next two hymns, T. H. Gill's "Our God! Our God! thou shinest here," and Newman's "Lead, kindly Light," the Rev. W. G. Tarrant gave the second address, the Rev. H. S. Perris giving out the last hymn, and concluding the service with Collect, Lord's Prayer, and Benediction.

Mr. Freeston's address we shall publish next week, Mr. Tarrant's we are glad to be able to add here.

ADDRESS BY THE REV. W. G. TARRANT.

This occasion is not one when it is necessary or desirable to declare, as to strangers, those special principles which mark off our theology or our church-life from others. Nor does it appear appropriate to discuss existing organisations, or to propose new ones. We are all, I assume, sufficiently aware of the needs of our churches, and we know what our principles are, if we cannot claim to be as devoted to them as we should be. But the chief objects of our meeting include something more even than a renewed dedication of ourselves to our work as religious people in the service of these high principles; and while I trust each one of us will go hence feeling more deeply than hitherto the solemn responsibility that rests upon us, and inwardly pledging himself to greater faithfulness, that is not the theme towards which I would specially draw your minds by these brief words.

We believe in "the Holy Spirit, the Lord and Giver of Life." Under His providence we have come together at the end of an age in which our paths have been widely diverse, and at the beginning of an age where, doubtless, our experiences will be outwardly very different. The one Lord of Life has brought us all thus far, and to Him we all look for guidance hereafter. We have learned some part of His will, and blessed are we if we go on to do it. Blessed are we if, amid whatever is doubtful, we daily live as under a divine rule, and seek in all things not our will but the will of God.

In order that this wisdom should be ours He gave us lovers and teachers, our parents and friends, and inspirers of many kinds, from the first. He has sent us here and there through the world, and has nowhere left us without witness of His sovereignty. We have never been able, even when wayward or wicked, to go from His presence. Dull, indeed, we must have been if we had failed, under such a discipline, to catch some gleams of what a man's life should be. In measures differing according to the grace given to us we have gone forward with halting footsteps, must we not confess, towards the goal. Some have been speakers and teachers, some have been silent workers—but all of us have tried to obey the law of righteousness, we have loved truth and mercy, we have longed to see justice done around us and the wide world over; we have joined, in various ways, the fellowship of those who seek to make the world a beautiful, orderly, and holy place. Our business as well as our worship, our pleasures as well as our prayers, have been marked with a seal as for a King; and if we have neglected that seal, if we have been disloyal—seeking our own when we should have sought His—the Lord of Life has still been merciful. He has thwarted our selfish plans, He has stung us into shame, and broken our hearts with penitence.

We would fain do better, hereafter, more wisely, more constantly, more effectively. The needs of those around us appeal more piteously than ever in our ears. We see the ruinous ignorance, the ungoverned passions of men; we are face to face with vices that have fortified themselves with the worldly interests of thousands in all classes of society; and by our words and our lives in public and in private, in the church and school, in the Press and in business, we would help to cure the ills of the world, and to make the twentieth century of Christendom a truer monument of the power of the spirit of Jesus than any past age has been.

But who are we, that we should cherish such desires and dare to express these longings of our hearts? At times we feel as if it were better to say nothing about it—the work is so great, and we so weak and unworthy. Our leaders—we had leaders once, and they did well; they helped to make the past age the wonderful time it was, so full of strenuous warfare for truth and liberty and the fuller life. But they are gone, or going—and what are we, to enter into their labours!

Let us turn to the Lord and Giver of Life; and, as we look away from ourselves to Him, may the meek wisdom of an untroubled confidence come back to us—not a confidence in our strength and cleverness, but a quiet assurance that the All-perfect, the All-wise, the Eternal One loves us perfectly, that He has given us just what is best for us to have and to do, and that He never asks from any soul more than that soul can truly give. But He does ask that; and, if we give Him simply and honestly our trust and our diligent heed daily, He will bless our work wherever it is done.

And, oh! my brothers, He will give us life more and more abundantly—the life that is glad and free from burden, the life that leaps from soul to soul and works the miracle of regeneration; that miracle which we long to see done in young souls and in all around us. Why does any man who loves truth and goodness fear anything? Perfect love casteth out fear. That man whose love, though far from perfect, is of this divinely pure and radiant kind has the earnest of the spirit, and may quietly but unshakenly expect that the good work begun in him will not be defeated. Only let him—let us all who love God at all—rejoice in using to the full our present possessions of "joy in the Holy Spirit." This is the Kingdom that is opened to the lowliest child of the Father. We cry "Alas! for our fathers, the prophets who have departed"; and yet, in very truth, God is with us—God, the inspirer of all prophets, who gives to each one to speak some one word of His message, and who needs the service of the least as well as of the greatest.

They have gone "into the world of light"—verily to prepare a place for us. Did they not prepare this our place on earth for us? Did they not teach us to desire wisdom, and to love God, and to glow with their own fire of zeal for the right? We stand here by their help. They smoothed the rock that is under our feet; peace and joy be with them! And this peace be ours, to walk on, firmly and hopefully, every day, till their joy and ours is one.

We believe in "the Holy Spirit, the Lord and Giver of Life." We believe in "the Holy Catholic Church," made holy by the indwelling of the true and loving life, grown Catholic through the knowledge of Him who is worshipped by all and who is the Father of all. We believe in "the Communion of Saints"—in the fellowship that transcends all bounds of party and sect, that transcends all limitations of utterance and form, and that, being established in union with the Eternal, includes time past, present, and to come, and all souls that live unto God therein. And, best of all, we believe in "the Forgiveness of Sins." How should our failures, or our faults, or veriest sins, stand between us and the forgiving Love! They are many, but that is greater than them all.

These things we believe. If at any time any one of us doubts any of them, may He who is greater than our hearts help our unbelief. But always, while we believe them, it shall be with us according to our faith. The days and years will come, and wherever our duty leads us, we shall go on to know more of the blessedness of the pure in heart, whose one desire is to love God, to help mankind, to follow Christ and complete the triumph of his Gospel. And when, long before our successors hail another opening century, we pass one by one through this veil of perishable things it will be well with us. We shall not, any one of us, have lived and worked in vain. We shall not wholly die, even to this world, for every word spoken, and every deed done, in love and truth, shall go on living and bearing fruit to the honour and glory of our Father in Heaven. "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom." "Go forth and preach 'good tidings to the poor.'" "Heal the sick, raise the dead, cast out demons; freely ye have received, freely give."

I WOULD go near thee—but I cannot press
Into thy presence—it helps not to presume.
Thy doors are deeds; the handles are their doing.
He whose day-life is obedient righteousness,
Who, after failure, or a poor success,
Rises up, stronger effort yet renewing—
He finds thee, Lord, at length, in his own common room.

—George MacDonald.

LITERATURE.

THE ASCENT THROUGH CHRIST.*

Mr. E. Griffith Jones, in his book "The Ascent through Christ," writes from the standpoint of the orthodox believer, and we have before us the work of a very earnest and deeply religious inquirer examining into the bearings of modern thought upon his own religious beliefs. He appears to us to have found in the theory of evolution a freshening stream of thought, which, if it may be permitted to run freely through the well-trimmed lawns of the traditional faith, can do nothing but quicken with newness of life the deep-rooted truths of revelation concerning the Fall of Man, the Incarnation, and the Atonement.

In order, as it were, that this new stream of thought may flow freely through the old garden, certain weeds in that garden must be pulled up and vast masses of tangle removed, and a river-bed made and neatly guided so as to irrigate, but not wash away, the true faith.

The Garden of Eden is one of the first to be dug over for this purpose, and in such a way that Adam and Eve and the apple are turned underground and lost to view altogether. In the newly-arranged garden we see dimly some unknown representative of early man doing for the first time something or other which in some exceedingly faint way he just feels to be wrong. The moral state of this early man may be gathered from the statement made elsewhere and for another purpose, that had the Christ, the Ideal Man, appeared to primitive man, it would have been a mere casting of pearls before swine.

Christ's appearance was consequently delayed until mankind had attained to sufficient moral receptivity to be able to appreciate this perfect Ideal.

Man, then, has clearly risen. But for all that man fell, and though he rose somewhat, in spite of his fall, he remains a fallen race, below what he might have been if he had not sinned. A false step was taken, and mankind, through all its generations, was inevitably the worse, morally worse, for it.

Thus the doctrine of the Fall holds good; the story of the Garden of Eden is not inspired history, or inspired legend, or inspired parable, but inspired myth. It teaches the lesson that sin is a fall, and that with the first fall of the first man who fell the whole race fell.

Turning to the teachings of evolution, we learn that once off the right line of development degeneration sets in, and instead of progressing a species deteriorates. That all mankind would fall if the first man fell seems therefore to be the teaching of Evolution no less than of the Faith.

Passing by the doubtful point as to whether the man who first committed sin was the first man, and not asking whether, perhaps, the first man and some of his descendants remained sinless, a doubt which the new interpretation of the Eden story naturally raises, but which the author appears to have overlooked, though he recognises that some families fell more and others less, we turn to criticise what we regard as the main error of the book.

Had Mr. Griffith-Jones examined more fully the cause of man's rise in spite of his fall, he would, we think, have been brought face to face with a power of Redemption to which he has given merely a subordinate instead of a supreme place.

Without entirely overlooking that vast difference between man and brute which lies in the re-acting self-consciousness both moral and mental, whereby man learns from his mistakes and, in a far deeper revulsion, repents of his sins, Mr. Griffith-Jones has seen, only to despise, the God-given grace of Repentance.

The power of repenting is surely a gift of the grace of God, which, though often sought for with tears and not found, yet when it has been given, has been a power not lightly to be "despised and rejected" by the earnest seeker after God's way of redeeming man, in spite of his fall, and even more than restoring innocence, of making fallen man rise to a clear-sighted and virtuous abhorrence of sin, such as, before his fall, he had not had.

Repentance, as an inflowing grace of God, mingling with the flowing stream of evolution and washing away the sins of the world, or rather by its special power of causing the sins of one generation to sink and only the pure waters to flow on to the succeeding generation; repentance in the race as well as in the individual, the onflowing of the drunkard's children as the inspired apostles of chastity and temperance — what mean these facts? Do they spell degeneration? Are we not touched here by the very finger of God? Why say any longer that if one man fell the whole race must fall also?

It is not true. But as God has given to every man the faculty of moral choice, so in all ages men fall; and the consciousness present with us of having fallen comes from our own falls, and as a moral consciousness, refers to our own sin, not to Adam's. But God has never left sin open to us to enter into, without also making provision through repentance for redemption from the falls that were likely to ensue.

In stating the case thus, we do not mean that repentance is in a man's own power; we mean that it is in God's power, and that sometimes it is offered to man's free will to choose or to reject, and sometimes it is forced upon him against his will, and sin, moving too rapidly in the atmosphere of Divine Love, reaches that speed at which, like a shooting star, it is set on fire and burnt out; not of his own will, but perforce man finds his sin scorched out of his own soul; he has collided with God's Love, and, astonished, finds himself adoring his Creator for an unforeseen redemption.

May not a heretic, no less than a believer in the traditional faith, plead guilty to the belief in a mystery? We seek it with tears and find it not; we seek it not and it has come. We too fathom not the mysteries of this atonement. We look at life, we look at the facts of life; we see a sinner, we see a saint; again we see a sinner and, spite of prayers, no saint; we do not understand it; to-day it seems we have repentence offered, will we choose it? Yesterday we desired it not, yet it came. It is a mystery. Yet it is. And it redeems from sin, more than restores, exalts into higher life than ever we knew before.

And may not the believer in redemption through repentance, find this faith also full in line with evolution? We mean that repentance, beginning in human life as a grain of mustard seed, smaller and slower of growth than the kingdoms of sin, is yet in the fore-ordained providence of God destined to grow greater than all human guilts and to overshadow them, like weary birds of the air, beneath the vaster outspreading love of those everlasting arms?

To write upon the divine plan for redeeming a fallen race, and to have not a single chapter on the subject of "Repentance" is little writing a history of Christianity that begins with Paul. Surely Christ has something to do with it? asks the puzzled reader in the one case, and so in the other. "Is there no mystery or nothing of consequence in the one sinner that repenteth? What if all sinners followed that one sinner's example? The example of one sinner may be as enlightening on the subject of redemption as that of the one "sinless Christ" on the subject of uninterrupted progress. It may be a seed thought on the whole subject of the fallen race.

Once, however, having recognised sin as a fall, and not having recognised repentance as the divinely-appointed means of redemption, Mr. Griffith Jones is, in his anxiety for the salvation of the human race, apparently so neglected by God, obliged to look round for some sign or other that God still cares. Instead of preaching repentance he preaches Christ, somewhat forgetting, as it seems to us, that Christ preached, saying "Repent."

Now, why preach Christ? What is Christ, so far as redemption is concerned, but just one more of God's many calls to repentance?

Surely Christ and all his work, and his death, and his sacrifice; and his love — may we also add, his baptism in the Jordan?—falls into line as tending to make men repent. If he failed in this, would he succeed in saving them?

Without objecting to Mr. Griffith Jones's view of there being redemption from sin through Christ, we plead that this redemption is but one part of a larger whole, redemption through repentance. Only so far as Christ leads men to repentance, only so far is he the means of redeeming them from sin.

Repentance is the river, Christ a tributary stream, of the providence of God for the restoration of a frequently falling race.

Passing on now to the larger question of the Ascent of Man through Christ; we rejoice to notice that the theory of evolution has so vastly refreshed the Faith, that it is no longer absorbed entirely with the question of redemption, but is putting forth, first the blade, if not the ear, and then the full corn in the ear, of the Thought of Progress, the Ascent through Christ. As the title of the book suggests, this is its main subject, and when we remember that the book is intended for orthodox readers, it will doubtless be a surprise to many to find that a brighter Paradise is looked for, and a more exalted manhood, than ever existed before the Fall.

Merely to make up for the Fall, is just to be at the beginning. Christ's work is much more than this. Indeed, having removed the obstruction, he begins his work. Had man never fallen, the Incarnation would have taken place. Mankind is motived by ideals. God in any case would have revealed to man his ideal man, so that mankind might know what manner of men God wished them to become.

* "The Ascent Through Christ: A Study of the Doctrine of Redemption in the Light of the Theory of Evolution." By E. Griffith-Jones, B.A. Sixth edition. Hodder and Stoughton. 3s. 6d.

Christ, we are told, is the ideal man. Accidentally—owing to the Fall—he had to be redeemer also, but primarily he is the perfect man, the ideal for mankind to follow and be motived by.

As the life flowed into the stream of things, and sentiency flowed into the stream of life, and self-consciousness flowed into the stream of sentiency, so the ideal flowed into the stream of self-conscious life, and became as the others, a fresh power poured forth from the resident forces of God into the process of evolution.

To the objection that the perfect man, on any ordinary theory of evolution, was not to be expected till the end of the process, Mr. Griffith Jones replies that the ideal is needed to motive the process, and therefore before the end.

To this and to the whole hypothesis of the sinlessness and perfection of Christ, we answer and suggest as an alternative opinion that part of the process of evolving a perfect man consists in committing to man the refined spiritual labour of idealising or putting forth ideals himself; and that this highest function of the soul would be barred out and atrophied were God, during the process, to delineate the perfect man Himself and settle that question once for all.

It is sufficient, we believe, for the upward motiving of human life that God has made the soul form ideals of a human life higher than the present human life. And, were it not God's doing, it would almost seem regrettable at times that the presentation of a loftier ideal by another life should so often lead inferior men to become spiritually parasites, imitators even of Christ, which after all, in the long process of the ages, may prove less helpful than patiently to labour themselves for spiritual revelation of their own, and for that purity of heart which is privileged to have visions of God.

There is a danger in too much dependence, lest, worse than any other death, the spirit itself fall on sleep.

With these main criticisms we commend to our readers a book worth reading, and a book that should do good. Critically, we note that views of the Bible are evolutionary on Genesis, stationary on the Old Testament, and retrogressive on the New. The Law appears as antecedent to the Psalms and the Prophets, and the Virgin Birth, Resurrection and Bodily Ascension are upheld, though with interesting notes in defence thereof.

For the rest we sympathise deeply with the earnestness and clear sincerity of the writer: his main concern is with the inward religious truths so deeply felt within the soul; and he is brave and even daring in bringing this deepest inner life to look at itself in the vast mirror of creation, as the lights and shades flit over the ever-changing scene of its mysterious evolution; and the soul has to understand how its own deepest pieties, sorrows and yearnings may yet be at home there, and in the consciousness of sin, and amid the fearful forces of evolving worlds, see the opening arms of an everlasting Love that would rather all outward worlds should perish, than that one inner world of one soul should fail, ultimately, to find in God its saviour.

The book is a noble defence of the Love of God for man. Wilfred Harris.

PAGES FROM A JOURNAL.*

The thirty-two papers of which this volume consists vary greatly in length as in subject and method. "A Visit to Carlyle," which comes first, is followed by some delicate bits of description of Nature at different periods of the year. Then, suddenly, after "The Break-up of a Great Drought," we are confronted with the stiffest part of the volume—twenty-six pages on Spinoza, with a "Supplementary Note on the Devil." The connection is not at first obvious: "Spinoza," we read, "denies the existence of the Devil," and the note is mostly concerned with Bunyan's "Holy War." Next come some little essays, headed "Injustice," "Time Settles Controversies," and so forth, with "An Apology" for sitting still and reading books "in these latter days of anarchy and tumult, when there is no gospel of faith or morals"—surely too sweeping a statement. "Belief, Unbelief, and Superstition" are then discussed, all in four pages, and we have a longer paper on "Judas Iscariot." Immediately after, we are back again on the literary road: "Sir Walter Scott's Use of the Supernatural" occupies three pages; Coleridge, Wordsworth, and Dorothy Wordsworth are treated at greater length in a paper called "September, 1798"; then come Milton, Byron, Goethe, and Matthew Arnold; a striking little classical story, called "A Sacrifice"; a brief allegory of half-a-page, "The Aged Tree"; and, finally, seven stories or sketches, some told by correspondence, some brief, but the last much the longest of anything in the book. It is difficult to "place" a volume of this kind, but it is undeniably interesting; there are many shrewd and suggestive remarks, and pathos and humour are found very near together. "Clara Hopgood," the last of Mark Rutherford's books which we remember having read, was not a pleasant story; though, no doubt, like Fielding's "Amelia," it was "sincerely designed to promote the practice of virtue." "Pages from a Journal" is a much pleasanter book than "Clara Hopgood," in spite of the sadness of some of its pages.

The paper on Carlyle records a vigorous onslaught by the Sage of Chelsea on Sir John Bowring, which need hardly be quoted, though many persons would agree to-day that Bowring's Chinese policy was a mistake. More satisfactory is the reference to Carlyle's tenderness. The sketches of the days and months are good, especially "June."

Mark Rutherford admits that there is much in Spinoza which is "beyond" him, a confession in which many others would join; but there are illuminating passages in the criticism of the great philosopher. Take this as an example:—

> It would be difficult to find an account of joy and sorrow which is closer to the facts than that which Spinoza gives. He lived amongst people, Roman Catholic and Protestant, who worshipped sorrow. Sorrow was the divinely decreed law of life, and joy was merely a permitted exception. He reversed this order, and his claim to be considered in this respect as one of the great revolutionary religious and moral reformers has not been sufficiently recognised. It is remarkable that, unlike other reformers, he has not contradicted error by an exaggeration, which itself very soon stands in need of contradiction, but by simple sanity which requires no correction.

The book is rich in thoughtful comments on life, such as the following:—"If I permit myself to dispute, I always go beyond what is necessary for my purpose, and my continual iteration and insistence do nothing but provoke opposition. Much better would it be simply to state my case and leave it." "We do not train ourselves day by day to become better, as we train ourselves to learn languages or science." "What is most to be envied in really religious people of the earlier type, is their intellectual and moral peace."

One of the most pathetic sketches, though the pathos is restrained, is "The Governess's Story." The poor governess's lover is attracted by some one else. "We ought always, I suppose," she says, "to be glad when other people are happy, but God knows that sometimes it is very difficult to be so, and that their happiness is hard to bear." She continued teaching in different families till she was about five-and-forty. "After five-and-forty I could not obtain another situation, and I had to support myself by letting apartments at Brighton. My strength is now failing; I cannot look after my servant properly, nor wait upon my lodgers myself. Those who have to get their living by a lodging-house know what this means and what the end will be."

There is much compressed power in the little four-page sketch, "James Forbes," which some writers would have spun to many times its length. "Atonement" is also clever—the story of a man who kicks his faithful dog so savagely that the poor brute soon dies. The man feels the blow of the kick in his foot for weeks, and longs to make atonement. At last he rescues a mongrel from a fire, and as he drops from the window falls heavily on that foot, breaks his ankle, and has to suffer amputation. He rejoices when he hears the news, and loves and cherishes his mongrel ever after.

"Mrs. Fairfax," which concludes the book, is a clever and satisfactory story, though the humour here and there is a little mordant. We go back a little, and end our notice with the conclusion of the essay on Judas Iscariot:—

> He underwent no trial, and is condemned without plea or excuse on his own behalf, and with no cross-examination of the evidence. No witnesses have been called to his character. What would his friends at Kerioth have said for him? What would Jesus have said? If He had met Judas with the halter in his hand, would He not have stopped him? Ah! I can see the Divine touch on the shoulder, the passionate prostration of the repentant in the dust, the hands gently lifting him, the forgiveness because he knew not what he did, and the seal of a kiss indeed from the sacred lips.

Dendy Agate.

* "Pages from a Journal, with other Papers." By Mark Rutherford. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.

To Correspondents.—Letters, &c. received from the following:—D. A.; S. H. B.; W. H.; J. K.; G. P.; P. P.; E. S.: E. H. S.; A. W.

Editor's Change of Address.—Correspondents are requested to note that the Editor's home address is now 9, Nightingale-square, Balham, S.W.

GUILDS.—III.*

BY THE REV. JOHN ELLIS.

The other guilds in our churches dating from this earlier time are modelled more or less closely after the pattern of the Guild of the Good Shepherd, the chief difference being that they lay less emphasis on the necessity for avowed allegiance to Christ, and, perhaps, greater emphasis on the need for social intercourse, or the cultivation of some special virtue which shall find expression in a life of active service.

I will now mention three of these which have stood the test of time, and still bear splendid testimony to the value of these institutions in the life of the church.

The Guild of St. Christopher was founded on March 8, 1883, at Upper Brook-street, Manchester. The Rev. Silas Farrington, like many another of us, felt that something was lacking in his church organisation to bind the young people to the church and concentrate their youthful energy on good endeavour as the main thing.

Literary and social societies did not do this, nor did dramatic societies, football clubs, cricket clubs, &c. They had all these, but they did not attach the people to the main objects of a church. So, after discovering to his young friends their real need, he succeeded in forming the Guild of St. Christopher, whose object is :—

To join all its members in a common endeavour to make their lives of service, and by faithful fellowship to encourage each other in pure and worthy living.

Like the Guild of the Good Shepherd, it put forth branches, some of which died down, and some, after a period of quiescence, burst again into vigorous life; and although the parent guild has, I believe, in recent years merged its work in a larger, all-inclusive union, it may rightly claim to have given the idea to many a flourishing guild that exists under another name in our churches to-day. Says a writer who described it in 1892 :—"Its activities are not literary like those of some American guilds, neither does it encourage anything like ceremonial religion. Like the religious hero whose name it bears, it would put all its religious strength into some form of human helpfulness. It has many a blessed incident and memory. It has cheered the sick-rooms of some now departed, and provided the graves in which they are buried. It has assumed the care and education of orphans, and cultivated the disposition of service. It has been the source of nearly all good undertakings and accomplishments in the church with which it is connected during the last eight years."

The guilds at Birmingham Old Meeting and Newhall Hill are, perhaps, the most flourishing in numbers and activities among the older guilds. The Old Meeting Guild is called the Guild of Kindness, and its objects are :—

To unite the young people of the congregation, the elder scholars of the Sunday-school, the teachers, and other persons connected with the Old Meeting in services of mutual kindness for each other, and the poor and needy.

This organisation seems to gather together all the departments of the church and Sunday-school. Great importance is placed on religious instruction and the culture of the devotional spirit. Each year the minister (the Rev. Joseph Wood) prepares those who are ready for Church membership, and receives them at a service of Confirmation. The monthly meetings are generally conducted by the Warden, as in the other guilds, or by some appointed leader, and the various sections include classes for musical drill, needlework and sewing, elocution and recreation; a gymnasium, cricket, and tennis clubs are carried on, and entertainments are also promoted. "It is clear," concludes a recent report, "that we have in the Guild an institution of much service to its members. It is the connecting link between the school and the church, and it teaches all in connection with it that "no man liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself."

The objects of the Newhall Hill "Church and Schools Guild," founded about ten years ago by the Rev. W. Mellor, as stated in the Manual, are :—

1. To strengthen the religious principles of its members.
2. To stimulate their endeavours to lead good lives.
3. To bind them together in a bond of Christian fellowship.
4. To attach them to, and induce them to work for, the success and prosperity of Newhall Hill Church and Schools.

The last (as well as the first) report shows how faithfully these objects are carried out. At the monthly meeting usually an address is given, or a paper read, on some topic which touches life and character, bright hymns are sung; prayers offered, and all are drawn to the Source of Strength. At this meeting also members consider how they can make their Guild really useful in the community. The flower mission instituted by Mr. Mellor is still continued; sick are visited, and the wants of the poor get attention according to ability. Writes one :—"The Guild was formed to suit our special wants, on an independent method; but in the one great principle, of doing what little we can 'to make the world more blessed with self-denied endeavour,' we are united with all other guilds. It is a noble work in which guilds are engaged. Let us be true to our principles and we shall find them a blessing to ourselves and others. We know not how far our influence may reach."

Is this last saying trite and commonplace? "We know not how far our influence may reach." Look at it in connection with our subject. The Rev. John Cuckson, feeling, as all ministers who are in earnest about their work feel, how important it is to encourage the devotional and generous life of the young in his charge, gets a glimpse of the Guild of the Good Shepherd idea. It touches his need. He adopts the manual and methods and starts a guild at Springfield in July, 1887. Immediately similar societies begin to spring up in the American Churches, and in less than fifteen years they have in America the Young People's Religious Union with some 5,000 or 6,000 members.

"We know not how far our influence will spread." The Rev. Francis E. Clarke, with the same feeling, gathered about him the young people of his minister's class, and proposed a society to "promote an earnest Christian life among its members, to increase their mutual acquaintance, and to make them more useful in the service of God." And so the "Society of Christian Endeavour" was started in February, 1881, in an obscure parsonage in Portland, Maine, by a simple, earnest, unknown Congregational minister. Twenty years after there are over 56,000 societies all over the world, with more than 3,000,000 members, a large proportion of whom have taken the following active member's pledge :—

Trusting in the Lord Jesus for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would have me do; that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible every day, and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and midweek services, unless prevented by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Saviour; and that as far as I know how throughout my life I will endeavour to lead a Christian life.

As an active member I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present at, and to take some part, aside from singing, in every Christian Endeavour Prayer meeting, unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master. If obliged to be absent from the Monthly Consecration meeting of the Society, I will, if possible, send at least a verse of Scripture to be read in response to my name at the roll-call.

Think of the social force of 3,000,000 consecrated young souls. It should make for the purity and peace of the world.

"We know not how far our influence will spread." The Wesleyan body, always conservative, was slow to move, until the Leeds (Roscoe-place) Wesley Guild was formed in 1894, and soon demonstrated its practical value to the young people and the church. The Rev. C. H. Kelley read a paper before Conference, and the members immediately seized the opportunity and proceeded to organisation. In 1897 there were 620 branches and 34,017 members in the Wesleyan churches. In 1900 there were 1,130 branches with 75,154 members.

"We know not how far our influence will spread." Feeling the same need that others have felt, in 1897 I organised several of the most earnest and devoted of the younger members of my church into a union for fellowship in the highest things, and for mutual encouragement in good endeavour, on the lines of the Young People's Religious Union of America, and the Society of Christian Endeavour.

As soon as the doings at the weekly meetings and the methods we adopted were described in our denominational papers, we were besieged with correspondence.

The need was found to be wide-spread. I must perforce read a paper on the subject of the "Young People" at the National Conference in Leicester. The result of that effort has been the formation of similar societies in Portsmouth, Warrington, Highgate, Mansford-street, Derby, and other places. And the Conference hopes to gather up all these guilds and societies into one grand union, at a meeting in London to be held on Thursday in the coming Whit-week.

I hope and pray that this movement will spread in our churches as it has done in the orthodox bodies. We are exhorted to "Choose Life." The life of our church depends upon the young. And this movement is calculated to produce workers rich in enthusiasm who, for the love of God and man, are willing to spend themselves in the service of others.

* From a lecture to members of the Fitzwilliam-street Church and Schools Guild, Huddersfield, Feb. 20.

BRIDGEND CHAPEL TRUST.

Our readers may know that for some seven or eight years past there have been disputes between the Rev. Wm. Parry, claiming to be the minister of the chapel, and the Trustees of the endowment who had taken the responsibility of dismissing him and refusing to pay him the income.

Last week Mr. Parry's action against the Trustees, claiming the income of the endowment, came on for trial before Mr. Justice Buckley, and after a patient hearing extending over part of three days, the Judge dismissed the action and ordered Mr. Parry to pay the Trustees' costs. The judgment, which took nearly an hour to deliver, went very fully into all the facts. The main trust was a trust of 1734 to apply the income "for the support of the ministry of the Gospel and its ordinances" at the chapel in question, and the Judge held that this was a trust for a purpose and not for a person, and that it was the duty of the Trustees to select the person to carry out the purpose who would thus be the servant of the Trustees, and this was the position his Lordship thought Mr. Parry held. Another branch of the Trust directed payment of about £8 per annum "to the minister of the congregation," but Mr. Justice Buckley held that Mr. Parry did not fill that position, as the facts before him failed to prove any election to such an office, and, moreover, at the time, in 1893, when the Trustees ceased to pay the income to Mr. Parry, there was no real congregation worshipping at the chapel.

It is to be hoped that the decision will terminate this unfortunate dispute, and that the Trustees may now find a way to devote the income of the fund towards the objects for which it was intended.

IS NATURE CRUEL?

Sir,—Mrs. Bayle-Bernard says:—"Our Creator chose to form us . . . . with teeth and digestive apparatus adapted to the consumption of flesh." This is not so. We are most closely allied, in our internal organisation, as well as in outward form, with the frugivorae, or nut and fruit eaters, and therefore Nature seems to have clearly indicated that the kind of diet best suited to man is similar to that which sustained his "probably arboreal" ancestors.

The question whether slaughter or natural death is the more merciful for lower orders of animals is less easy to decide in their case than in that of man, since their woes must always remain inarticulate, and this being so, some of us prefer to give them the benefit of the doubt. However, it must be remembered that the system of killing does not exist for merciful purposes, but merely to gratify our appetite, and so this plea must be regarded solely as a justification of an action performed with a selfish object. The slaughter of animals arises naturally and logically from that attitude of mind which looks upon the universe as created for man. We smile at the old story of the sun and moon being set in the firmament "to give light upon the earth," but we seriously accept the theory that all things on or under the earth were made expressly to feed and serve humanity, and that man—and particularly the English man—has a God-given right to be master wherever he sets his foot. Is it not possible that every brute and every plant, from the highest to the lowest, may have been created as man was, to live its own life and develop its powers to the utmost?

Birmingham. Theodora Mills.

THE RELIGION OF THE "INCARNATION."

Sir,—I should have preferred to let this discussion end, so far as I am concerned, with my previous letter, had not Dr. Warschauer sought to close it with a misrepresentation of my position. He says that I attach a narrowly dogmatic meaning to the "Incarnation," while he attaches to it a spiritual meaning; as if the question were only one between him and me, and that one opinion was as good as another. This is not the case. I stated what the meaning is which was attached to the term by those who invented it, and therefore ought to know, and it has been used in the same sense, commonly called the Nicene, by all Christians of the East and West ever since. This Dr. Warschauer does not attempt to controvert. The definition, therefore, is not mine, but everybody's, and I accept it as the only legitimate one. That a precise dogmatic meaning should be attached to a dogma is perfectly natural. If Dr. Warschauer contends that "flesh" may mean "spirit," there is no more to be said. But he might say with equal propriety—"I believe in the resurrection of the body"—only, by the "resurrection of the body" I mean the "immortality of the soul."

Walter Lloyd.

Gloucester, March 27.

THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

Did you ever hear of a kind of plant called the "dodder"? A plant of this sort begins life with good little roots of its own which it sends down into the soil for nourishment, and it looks as if it were going to be a plant of some character. But, by degrees, it fixes suckers into the stems of other plants near it, and draws the sap from them which is to keep it alive. After this its roots die away, it is no longer connected with the ground, and has no real life of its own.

There is a word I have heard sometimes which you will not find in the dictionary. This word is doddering, and I should think it comes from the name of this weak, rootless plant. For the word is applied to people who have no firm wills, who can be turned and twisted in any direction, and are ready to follow any advice, bad or good, that comes to hand.

Now think! God has given to each of us a conscience to tell us what is wrong, and warn us from giving way to it. He has given us—a glorious gift—wills of our own by which we can choose the right and do it. These we will say are like the roots of the young dodder. But suppose we listen to bad advice, and give way to temptation, and say "Oh! it's only this once, it's only a trifle, it does not matter, I'll do right another time," what happens? We all know what happens. It is much harder next time to do right, and each wrong deed, however small, helps to form a habit. So, by degrees, we hear less clearly the little voice within, and the will which God gives us to make us strong and brave grows weak. In this way, like the dodder, we may be said to be losing our roots.

There was a little drummer-boy in the army who had become a great favourite with his officers, and one day the Captain of his regiment (of course, very wrongly) offered him a glass of rum. "No, sir!" said the drummer, "I'm a temperance boy, and I can't touch drink."

"But you must take some. You've been on duty all day beating the drum and marching, and I insist upon it." The boy stood firm. The Captain turned to the Major who stood by and said, mockingly: "Our little drummer's afraid to drink. He'll never make a soldier."

"How is this?" said the Major, "do you refuse to obey orders?" "No, sir," said the little drummer, "I've never refused to obey orders, and have always tried to do my duty; but I must refuse to drink this rum."

"Then," said the Major, "I command you to take a drink, and you know it is death to disobey orders."

That little lad had a sad history. His father had died a drunkard, and he had made a promise to his widowed mother that he would refuse the first taste of drink.

Was it an easy thing, do you think, for him to stand firm now—to bear, first of all, the contempt and ridicule, and not give way; and then the Major's threat, which he believed would be carried into execution? You will be glad to hear that the courage of the boy and his brave faithfulness to principle taught his officers a lesson, and the boy rose even higher in their esteem. But remember, he did not know this would be the result of his refusing to drink the rum. This is an example of the sort of courage the world needs—the courage of one

> Who, fearing God, fears none beside;
> And dares do right, whate'er betide.

It is in every-day little things that most of us have to stand firm to what is right. Think of all the small chances you have each week to be brave in doing what you ought to do, and in refusing to comply in any way with what is wrong.

"One with God is a majority," said a brave man once who was doing what was right, though it was very hard to be true to principle when there was no friend to stand by him and support him. Do you know, it is a great truth, and this man found it so, that what is good and right must win in the end.

Let us remember that we can all help towards this end—even the little ones among us can do so. God calls upon us all to be true and brave and honest in every small detail as well as in matters that may seem much more important, and we none of us know how far the results extend of any word or deed of ours.

Think of the weak dodder, whose roots die away! What are our roots from which we are to gain our strength? I think these are our roots—the voice of God within us which warns us to turn from what is wrong; the wills He has given us by which we can make ourselves do what is right; and the help and strength which He gives in answer to every whispered prayer we make.

Frances E. Cooke.

The Inquirer.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE INQUIRER can be had by order of any News-agent in the United Kingdom, or direct from the Publisher, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. If by post, the prepaid terms are :—

	s.	d.
PER QUARTER...	1	8
PER HALF-YEAR	3	4
PER YEAR	6	6

One Shilling per year extra will be charged if credit is taken.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements for THE INQUIRER should be addressed to the PUBLISHER, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C., and should reach the office not later than Twelve o'clock on THURSDAY, to appear the same week. The scale of charges is as follows :—

	£	s.	d.
PER PAGE...	4	0	0
HALF-PAGE	2	10	0
PER COLUMN	1	10	0
INCH IN COLUMN... ...	0	3	6
BACK PAGE	5	0	0

Births, Marriages, Deaths, 6d. per line. Minimum charge, 1/6

Situations Vacant and Wanted, 4d. per line.

All payments in respect to THE INQUIRER to be made to E. KENNEDY, 3, Essex Street, Strand, London, W.C. The requisite remittance should accompany all Orders and Advertisements.

LONDON, MARCH 30, 1901.

A RELIGION OF SELF-SACRIFICE.

THE approach of Easter recalls to us every year with renewed vividness the story of the great self-sacrifice, and bids us, if we have grown heedless of the supreme truth of our human life, once more ponder the secret of JESUS, to find in it the deliverance of our souls from all ignoble aims and faithless fear.

The shadow of the Cross falls upon our path, and we recognise in it the symbol of Divine discipline, and in submission to that discipline, a brave and even joyful acceptance of its pain, the way of life for each true son of man. The shadow may darken our immediate prospect, but only to give deeper insight. Through suffering the soul rises to a nobler strength, through the suffering of unselfish love to vision of the heavenly radiance and unspeakable peace.

The shadow does indeed fall upon our path as with reverence we repeat again the "Old, Old Story," yet with a sure knowledge of its ultimate word of victory and peace. And there are those to whom it comes as more than the renewal of sacred memories and a quickening of faith, for while the shadow falls the agony of the Cross is in their own hearts, they themselves are called to suffer desperately, it may be even unto death, and the cry of desolation has broken from their lips. Yet that is not the end. For they are chosen, in the line of many faithful martyrs, to be witnesses to the divinest truth, and their strong Helper is near at hand. Their victory is with the CHRIST, in his spirit fighting out the good fight of faith, until the fulness of the FATHER'S love, in all tenderness and holy comfort, is revealed to them in the silence. They are the constant witnesses, even those who with patient courage suffer in the humblest places of our common life, touching the deepest sympathies, telling of a strength which endures, a love that conquers, and the great hope which is for all mankind.

Theirs is the right standard of fidelity, in utter submission and self-surrender, and of them as of their Master, we learn the secret of true life. But this great lesson is not simply of passive suffering, for the victory of the Cross does not stand alone, an isolated act, it was the completion and perfecting of the life and ministry of JESUS, the final and most heart-searching testimony to that of which his whole life bore witness. And so it is with those who have learnt to suffer in his spirit. Their pure influence penetrates the whole of life, and the Cross becomes to us the ensign of an active service. That same spirit, which can suffer even unto death, with complete surrender to the FATHER'S will, is seen to be the true spirit of our life in every aspect of its duty. Suffering and strenuous service, rising into a glorious and triumphant joy, blending with love which never faileth, are woven like threads of life into the very texture of our being, to make it strong and beautiful, as the vesture of our immortality, clothing which is unsoiled and cannot perish, for those whose place is in the FATHER'S household.

So the appeal comes to us for the perfecting of our religion, both individually and in our churches, that we should go out from self, in strenuous service, in more complete devotion, surrendered to the FATHER'S will, in joy or sorrow, in suffering or exultation, entering into the true life of the children of GOD. It is not ours to choose what we will suffer, our choice must be simply to be faithful in whatever comes.

Neither the agony nor the passionate triumph of the martyr of old is likely to be our lot, and yet there is no lack of opportunity for us to prove the mettle of our spirit. It is no light service to which we are called, in loyalty to truth, in patient bearing of opprobrium, suffering abuse with no bitter word in return, only the answer of more eager and unwearied service in unselfish love. "In the spirit of CHRIST, for the Kingdom of GOD," that is the great watch-word, of which the Cross stands as symbol, for the redeeming of our common life from its burdens of evil and the building up of a faithful, pure, and happy community.

Mr. LUMMIS, in the letter which follows these lines, touches on the vital question of what there should be in our Church-life. If the fellowship of these churches is to be strong with purifying and uplifting influence in the world, it must be through the consecration of their members in the One Spirit, learning more perfectly the secret of self-sacrifice, as members one of another, for the deepening and strengthening of the common life of devotion and willing service, as brethren, as children of the FATHER in heaven, whose life is complete only in the household, and thence goes forth into active service. So they will be taught and led, and a new gladness and benediction will be theirs as in fuller measure they learn to do the FATHER'S will.

A LIVING CHURCH.

SIR,—Among the many letters and reports in your columns which bear reference to this theme, not a few are inspired by the spirit of helpfulness. In extended controversies it generally happens that some contributions are rhetorical rather than thoughtful, and others are defective both in logic and urbanity; and this discussion cannot be excepted from the rule. But on the whole, taking into account the greater power of good than of evil, I hope our conference may be of service to our cause.

Much personal criticism has been directed against myself, in which I find one or two points which it may be useful to notice. I was painfully surprised to find that what I intended to be an appeal to my brethren was received as an attack, a rebuke, a challenge. The explanation was not far to seek. It seems that some ministers, while they resent the suggestion that we fail in brotherliness, nevertheless look upon me as an alien, an outlander, because I have only been a Unitarian for six or seven years. Others call me a guest, and vaunt their hospitality. There enters here a matter of principle. I have been freely chosen as their minister by three free churches in succession; it seems to me I stand, eo ipso, equally with every other free church minister, a member of our untrammelled society. What has my theological history to do with that? I cordially recognise the genial welcome with which many of my fellows have greeted me; but my gratitude for induction into this gracious circle (which no hasty words shall induce me to malign) is all bestowed where it is solely due, on one man and one woman.

The suggestion that my judgment is premature—that I speak out of insufficient knowledge—is certainly relevant, but cannot, I think, be maintained. For six years I have been eagerly and continuously interested in our denominational condition. I have studied my INQUIRER, read innumerable reports of churches and larger societies, attended two Conferences and very many meetings, conversed on this topic, whenever I could, with senior ministers and laymen, and obtained some personal acquaintance with between forty and fifty of our congregations, belonging to every District Association in Great Britain except the Eastern and Southern and those of Wales. I submit that I ought to have gathered material for a sound induction. Those who insist that I must not make general statements until I have read the hearts of all our people, appear to hold that there is no induction except per enumerationem simplicem.

Two other elementary fallacies are prominent in these criticisms. I do not say that they are characteristic of the writers' ways of thinking: they arise, apparently, out of a curiously significant misapprehension of my meaning, but they are, whatever be their origin, fatal to sound reasoning. I pointed to certain defects in our character as a denomination; I assigned certain functions to Our Church, the Church for which I hope. This conception of an organic unity is so far aloof from the individualistic minds of my critics, that they persistently represent my strictures as directed against all Unitarians, particularly and singly. They set themselves to prove that some of the functions in question cannot well be discharged by our churches, in the plural—that is, by our several congregations. Now this, Sir, is one of the fallacies of the undistributed middle, not unlike the fallacy of division. And when my lament over our practical materialism is met by a reference to the Liverpool Domestic Mission, we have an instance of the converse fallacy of accident. The critic, in this case, is a man high above the suspicion of false logic. I do not impute it for a moment. He misunderstands me, and the fallacy results from that misunderstanding. At the same time he does me the justice to doubt whether the sense of my words as he reads them can really be the meaning in my mind.

How did the misapprehension arise? I forgot, as I wrote, that the idea of a Church—"a really organic whole, capable of speaking and acting, thrilling its health and power into every slightest part"—this idea, however much a part of my necessary thought, is foreign to the minds of many native Unitarians. I would entreat them not to assume as a self-evident truth that the Church Ideal is therefore worthless or mischievous. Now and then a good thing may arise, even out of Nazareth.

In a similar degree my readers failed to take in their general and impersonal application my review of some of our faults and needs. They began at once to apply them to the best Unitarian they knew, with an inevitable result. Writing as a Unitarian to Unitarians I did not think it needful to rehearse what we all know, that men and women who stand in our eyes for the perfect flower of human character, the very salt of the earth, are to be found without seeking among the rich and poor of our unfettered congregations. Are they not our glory and our joy, the seal of our apostleship, the stay of our hope? Nevertheless, these very congregations amid which, not sparsely, these sweet souls bloom, lack something—something good, something strong and holy, fragrant of heaven; something which other congregations, enfolded in membership one of another in some great church, most happily possess. You "bred and born" Unitarians, those of you who do not know it, nor feel the want of it, and cannot imagine what the immigrants are murmuring for, will you not at least believe that it is no mere fiction which we conspire to foist upon you? It is not "stately ritual" and "outward marks" for which we pine, but the spirit of corporate worship of which these were but the utterance.

The faculty of such worship we possess not less than they, and by its inhibition we maim our religion: not only our powers of love suffer, but our powers of prayer, for common prayer should be the fullest and purest form of human intercourse. Yet this Church life, the necessary condition of perfect individual life, is likened by my critics to a shroud, and to a patent boiler. "The life must be in the individual first, in the congregation next, to make association in a church worth while." So pronounces one who has no doubt. And since no man can live his full life save in a congregation of men, and no society save in wider association, the ultimate Church will never, on this plan, become worth while. Does anyone else really believe that the perfect hermit is the best unit of society, the most self-contained society the best unit of inter-association? And all this time our congregations are yearning for fellowship one with another, and the human heart cannot assuage its appetite for communion. What really blocks the way? A pedantic theory, which not one pen in all this controversy dares avow and justify. Give the life of the congregation its needed scope in the greater society of the Church, and the life of every member will be transformed with a glow and grace that are the tokens of God incarnate in humanity. Thus shall we build a temple of the Lord, and escape from that temple wherein some are now content to pray: "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men, revivalists, zealous, lovers of exact science, or even as Hugh Price Hughes."

"Artificial bonds will not promote life." This crisp dictum, interesting to any ambulance corps but nowise germane to my plea for a church, nevertheless reveals in one word the secret dread of some who oppose it. "Bonds": they fear that in the larger life they will lose some of their freedom. But what do they mean by freedom? Independence? That is an ideal which can never be wholly realised, ἐλεύθερος γὰρ οὔτις ἐστὶ πλὴν Διός, and which, if realised, would be atomic disruption. Release of our powers for good from all that clogs them? Nothing clogs them more than dissociation; interdependence, not independence, is their condition of health. The admirable note of Mr. Priestley Evans, in last week's Inquirer, relieves me of the need of saying more on this head.

I am rebuked for making my spiritual demands subservient to the "thriving" of our congregations. Well, my words were: "Unless we love more, pray more, think more, spend more, work more than has been our habit, we shall not thrive." Do my critics not wish our congregations to thrive? I do, and our cause also, and, if so may be, our Church. In so far as our failure to thrive is a consequence of grievous spiritual faults and defects in us, I feel that it is the measure of a neglected duty and a cause betrayed. To love, pray, think, spend, work is in itself, for the individual soul, to thrive indeed: but I was thinking of something greater, of that Church which, inchoate and formless as it stands, seems to me even now the fairest fane of God yet builded of living stones. Alas for the world, if this Church does not thrive. Alas for us, if through our fault it dwindles.

Our cause is the Gospel of Truth. If it be not that, we have no cause. Freedom, with no use for it, cannot be called a cause. Our creed is not a cause, save in so far as it is the best truth we can yet know. If we discovered its untruth we should reject it, following truth, not the creed. Intellectual pursuit of truth is a duty, not a pastime. It does not exclude other duties, but together with the use of faith to guide and correct the intellect, and the will to accept and preach in love the truth God yields to our searching, it is our special duty. He who is intellectually convinced by Martensen of the doctrine of the Trinity, and can give no better reason for rejecting it than "nolo credere," is not a loyal Unitarian, but a faithless Trinitarian. My assertion that other Churches besides our own stand for God's Fatherhood and for human brotherhood is not "wild," but sober and true. To seek and save the lost is not our special duty and privilege, but belongs to every Christian and to all Christendom.

So far on principles and aims. For my practical proposals briefer space will serve. Only one argument has been used against my project for obtaining what would be, beyond doubt, of much help to us, a common name. That is, that there are some who could not conscientiously promise to accept a name unknown, for fear that the name chosen might be inconsonant with sacred principles. Such an objection, however, could only apply to certain names. Could we not rise for once to the height of Paul's exhortation, and in deference to weaker brethren discard all such names from our list? It would be known to the Conference Committee what words they must avoid. It surely cannot be that, rather than agree to any name but our own choice, we will wreck the attempt to fix one? If not, where lies the difficulty?

No fatal objection, Sir, it still seems to me, has been urged against an annual Conference. Those who attack it a priori forget the experience of our orthodox friends. If the B. and F.U.A. really suffered—and that result is by no means certain—I yet place the welfare of our Church and churches above the dissemination of our views. Much of the work of the B. and F.U.A. is, even now, quasi-ecclesiastical: and the same men who now do that work so well for the one society could do it even better for the other. I heartily agree with the proposal to strengthen our District Associations; but I know of no good argument for that, which does not apply with tenfold force to the strengthening of the Conference.

The objection against my plea for social and economic work and inquiry, that it is not well to "denominationalise" such efforts, surely rests on a misunderstanding. To form separate Unitarian agencies for this and that is one thing (sometimes a good thing), but to go in whole, as a church, for this or that, using existing organisations, is another. The latter is what I propose. But our usefulness in this, as in many other directions, can never be fully expressed until our organic Church is fully realised.

One last word for my poorer ministerial brethen. Are they doing, or going to do, good work? Are they agencies our rich men can trust? If so, cannot Mr. Armstrong induce some rich men to act as he says they readily will, when those conditions are satisfied? What arguments are there against this plea, save those of selfishness? A central stipendiary board, in touch with all our existing augmentation funds, could be organised in a month. It would be possible so to distribute the burden of contribution that a strange blessing, the freedom from wearing anxiety, the delight of buying now and then a book, came into two hundred homes, and not one man felt discomfort through giving beyond his means. So practical, so simple, so distinctively Christian—surely also, so pleasant a use of the power of wealth—does no rich Unitarian covet the honour of being first to make it?

E. W. Lummis.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL JOURNALS

ON THE LATE PROFESSOR SIDGWICK.

The much-lamented decease of Professor Sidgwick has called forth in the philosophical journals, and particularly in the January number of Mind and of the International Journal of Ethics, both warm appreciations of his noble personal character and interesting critical estimates of his philosophical position and influence. In the latter of these journals Professor Sorley, Mr. Sidgwick's successor at Cambridge, thus writes:—

"Henry Sidgwick, who died at Terling Place, Essex, on Aug. 28 last, was one of the three or four most prominent philosophical writers, and by far the keenest philosophical critic, of his day in England. He was born in 1838, the son of a Yorkshire clergyman and one of a family of scholars, and was educated at Rugby School and at Trinity College, Cambridge. . . . His reputation in the world of letters was made in 1874 by the publication of 'The Methods of Ethics.' But before that date he was known to a large circle of friends in Cambridge, Oxford, and London, as a man of subtle and perfectly balanced intelligence, of great brilliance in discussion, and of unique personal charm. It was known, too, that his sensitive and upright moral principle had led in 1869 to his resignation of his Fellowship at Trinity, because he was no longer able to accept the theological test which he had with good conscience subscribed to on his admission, and which was, at that time, still required of persons admitted to fellowships. The problem which involved this sacrifice in its solution forms the subject of his first independent publication, 'The Ethics of Comformity and Subscription' (1870)."

In connection with this publication Professor Sorley should have mentioned, but strangely omits to do so, that it was issued at the desire of the members of the alas! too short-lived "Free Christian Union," in the formation of which Dr. Martineau, Professor Sidgwick, and Professor Knight, of St. Andrews, were the leading spirits. This same number of the International Journal of Ethics contains also a very able and acute paper on the "True Significance of Sidgwick's Ethics" by a Cambridge Idealist, Mr. F. H. Hayward, who thus emphasises the strong tendency in Sidgwick's mind towards compromise and eclecticism:—

We might almost say that Sidgwick was inspired by a furor for compromising. His system is primâ facie the most remarkable ethical compromise in existence. He seems to have had a suspicion of any pretentious and apparently homogeneous system of thought, convinced, no doubt, that any such system was dowered from birth with failure.

In an interesting memorial article in Mind, Mr. Leslie Stephen thus refers to this characteristic of Sidgwick's mode of thought:—

Sidgwick, of course, could hardly found a school in the ordinary sense. A "Sidgwickian" as connoting acceptance of a definite philosophical platform, would be almost a contradiction in terms. At any rate where there were two Sidgwickians, they would necessarily resolve themselves into a debating society. Sidgwick had not the attraction of the teacher who has attained definite results, and can give the watchword to a band of enthusiasts. His influence was free from the defects, if it had not the characteristic merits of such a position. It did not lead to ignoring difficulties, but to facing them fairly.

If we compare the three eminent contemporary ethical thinkers, Green, Sidgwick and Martineau, it may, we think, be said with a certain amount of truth that in Green's writings we see an affinity with German mental tendencies; that in Sidgwick, with his sound common-sense, his indifference to philosophical completeness and unity, and his unadorned mode of expression, we have the typical English thinker; while in Martineau's thought and style we are reminded of such French philosophers as Maine de Biran, Cousin, and Jouffroy, and feel the justice of Mr. Jackson's acute suggestion, in his interesting and able work, that "the moulding of generations by which Martineau became an Englishman left in him something of the genius of his ancestry." We have a striking instance of Sidgwick's tendency to oscillate between two opposite schools of ethical thought in his attitude towards Utilitarianism. As the summum bonum or standard of right conduct, he, as Mr. Hayward points out, sides with J. S. Mill, and makes the tendency to produce happiness the ultimate ethical criterion; but when he comes to treat of the sanction, or ground of moral obligation, he breaks altogether with Hedonism and Empiricism, and agrees with Dr. Martineau that the notion of Oughtness or Rightness is "ultimate and unanalysable."

Mr. Hayward, as becomes an idealist of the Hegelian school, expresses great surprise at the subordinate importance which Sidgwick in his ethical works assigns to the idealistic theories which at the time when he was writing were being expounded and accepted with enthusiasm in the lecture-rooms of Oxford and Glasgow, and were winning adherents far and wide.

"In his 'Methods,'" says Mr. Hayward, "Sidgwick never did full justice, even critically, to the idealist's point of view. He occasionally refers to it; he criticises a few of its minor characteristics, but he never faces the weighty metaphysical arguments of Green and Green's successors. In view of the influential position of Oxford thought, it is astounding that a five-edition treatise on the leading methods of Ethics should devote only a few scattered remarks (mainly footnotes) to the most important of contemporary systems, and that Idealism, so far as dealt with in the text, should be treated merely as a form, and not, apparently, a leading form, of Intuitionism."

In this inability on Professor Sidgwick's part to see the alleged truth and vast importance of the Hegelian theory of ethics, we have another point on which his view coincided with that of Dr. Martineau. The explanation may be that both Sidgwick and Martineau had lived to see Sensational Idealism become the dominant philosophy in these islands and then in less than a generation sink almost into complete oblivion, and they both seem to have thought that the rapid glorification of Absolute Idealism would at no very distant date be followed by a similar collapse. Mr. Hayward's complaint, however, that Sidgwick "never faces the weighty metaphysical arguments of Green," is no longer appropriate; for it so happens that in a paper written by Professor Sidgwick a few months before his death, and read by him at a meeting of an influential philosophical society in Oxford, he gives a very lucid and effective criticism of the metaphysical principles on which Green founds his ethical and religious theories. At the opening of his paper, which is printed in the present number of Mind, Sidgwick draws a most important and necessary distinction between two very different conceptions of the Universe which are often confounded with one another under the general name "Idealism." To Idealism of the Berkeleian type, which, while analysing all reality into the Self-existent Spirit and dependent spirits, yet clearly distinguishes between Spirit and its thoughts and activities, he proposes to give the name "Spiritualism" (as indeed Professor James Ward had already done in his Gifford Lectures), and to confine the word "Idealism" to those theories, commonly called Hegelian, which suppress or subordinate the distinction between the thinker and his thought, and simply represent the Universe as essentially Thought or Thinking Activity. Green, according to Sidgwick (and we may add that Martineau, in conversation, took the same view), is drawn at times toward "Idealism" and at other times towards "Spiritualism," but in the later years of his life he moved more and more away from Hegel. To confirm this, Sidgwick gives two interesting personal reminiscences:—

I remember writing to him after a visit to Berlin in 1870, and expressing a desire to "get away from Hegel"; he replied that it seemed to him one might as well try to "get away from thought itself." I remember, on the other hand, that in the last philosophical talk I had with him he said, "I looked into Hegel the other day and found it a strange Wirrwarr." The sentence startled me; and the unexpected German word for "chaos" or "muddle" fixed it firmly in my mind.

This reminiscence exactly accords with the experience of Dr. Martineau, who enjoyed a similar philosophical talk with Green about the same time, and who was accustomed to sum up the impressions which this conversation made upon him with the words:—"If Green had lived a few years longer, he would have accepted Lotze's philosophy."

We regret that we have not space to indicate the chief dilemmas into which Professor Sidgwick shows Green to have been forced in his endeavour to combine the "Idealism" which captivated his intellect with the "Spiritualism" which was nearer to his conscience and his heart; but we earnestly recommend all who study the "Prolegomena to Ethics" to study likewise this last masterly product of Sidgwick's remarkable genius for philosophical exposition and criticism.

The articles written in memory of this distinguished thinker have not left unnoticed the active interest taken by him and by his gifted wife in the well-known society for the investigation of occult psychical phenomena. In reference to this matter Professor Sorley thus writes:—

He was one of the founders and the first president of the Society for Psychical Research; and the scientific character of the Society's work is in all probability largely due to his influence. He fully recognised the strange mixture of conscious and unconscious deception in the mass of evidence brought before the Society; but he seems to have arrived at the conclusion that, after all necessary sifting, the alleged facts were sufficient to establish the hypothesis of telepathy—that, under certain unknown conditions, communications could pass from mind to mind without the usual intermediation of the senses. Further light than this on the destiny of the soul he did not find; and it is noteworthy that even the hypothesis of telepathy does not seem to have been utilised or referred to by him in the writings which he gave to the world as contributions to philosophy.

This just, but evidently unsympathetic, statement may be compared with one penned in a different spirit by Mr. F. W. H. Myers who, in his charming paper written in memory of the beloved friend whom he was himself so soon to follow into the Unseen World, says:—

I shall not here attempt to define the various conclusions—or non-conclusions—at which this cautious thinker arrived in the course of his long research. I will quote only a few sentences—for him of unusual definiteness—to which he signed his name, at the close of that laborious statistical inquiry into hallucinations over which he presided, and which fills the tenth volume of our Proceedings (Vol. x., p. 394), "Between death and apparitions of the dying person a connection exists which is not due to chance alone. This we hold as a proved fact. The discussion of its full implications cannot be attempted in this paper—nor, perhaps, exhausted in this age."

It is fortunate for us that Mr. Myers has preserved the memory of the most beautiful and characteristic words spoken to him by this genuine philosopher, this devoted lover of truth, as he lay serenely awaiting near-approaching death:—"As I look back on my life, I seem to see little but wasted hours. Yet I cannot be sorry that you should idealise me, if that shows that I have made my ideals in some degree felt. We must idealise or we should cease to struggle."

CHARLES B. UPTON.

BROKEN SHELLS.

Gathered on the Shores of Thought.

Fear not, my son, to face a stormy world.
Brave hearts grow braver, cheery souls more bright
With the rough polish of perpetual toil.

. . . .

WHO will write a book on the Constellations of Great Men—the tragic poets of Greece, the Italian painters of the sixteenth century, the Elizabethan dramatists, the Lake poets, and other pleiadine groups among the stars of intellect? Who will search out the causes of such clusterings, and tell us whether the times make the men, or the men the times; or whether the phenomenon is due to the universal law of periodicity?

. . . .

The basis of civilisation is the accumulation of ideas from many minds, from many races, from many generations. The human race progresses just in proportion to the wideness of the gathering ground, and the ease and rapidity with which ideas are communicated. The great communicator of ideas is language in its many aspects; the language of spoken sounds, of written symbols, of musical tones, of pictured forms and colours. Fine art is the use of language for the communication of thought.

. . . .

Civilisation is, in this world, man's prerogative alone, since he alone has the capacity for definite language. What a gulf is here between man and all other living creatures! How was that gulf first bridged—at one bound, or step by step? Without doubt it was accomplished once for all under the law of "critical epochs."

. . . .

The ancient pine tree stands upon the hill-side alone, but marvellously picturesque. Its lower boughs have been long dead and broken off. Each jagged stump projecting aimlessly is in itself an ugly and unmeaning thing, yet the tree would be less picturesque without it. Taken as part of a larger whole it becomes an element of beauty. Is there any ugliness in nature which is not thus harmonised by extended vision?

. . . .

Is there a greater blot on civilisation than the existence of a known but unelminated "criminal class"? It is a blot which will be wiped out when our ideas about punishment have become rational. We are all brothers, and we have no moral right to injure a brother because he injures us. When it is necessary for the protection of society that one of us should be captured and restrained, our duty to that one is to teach him, and to keep him until he is taught. To let loose upon society a recognised robber is absurd. But the object to be attained is reformation only: not revenge, which is wicked; nor deterrence of others, which is unjust. If this system were pursued for a generation, there would be no criminal class.

. . . .

All Fine Art consists of two elements, the thing to be said and the language for saying it. The thing to be said is primary, the language secondary. First, the artist's thought, then the speech in which he utters it. The end is important, the mechanical means unimportant, save as it expresses well or ill the living thought. Critics too commonly invert the values, degrading Art by estimating it upside down. Is it ignorance or pure cussedness?

Birstall-hill, Leicester. F. T. MOTT.

THIS faith [that we are always in God's hand] cannot remove the shadow of death from life, but it makes it like the shadow of home to those who enter it—nay, even to those who watch them enter, with breaking hearts—the shadow of home. Some go with tranquil looks, their quest accomplished, their work done, unconscious of the shadow as they see the light beyond, while others go in gloom, after a wayward journey, having cheered no fellow-traveller, and done no worthy deed—but they, too, are going home, and though the welcome may be sorrowful, it is Love's welcome still. Death may cancel many things; but it can never cancel the Fatherhood of God. This is the message of the Spirit that transcends time, and gives, for time's despair, the peace of eternity.—May Kendall, in "Present Day Papers."

MANCHESTER DOMESTIC MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

THE sixty-seventh annual meeting of the Manchester Domestic Mission, by the kindness of the Lord Mayor, was held at the Town Hall, in the Lord Mayor's Parlour, on Tuesday afternoon, March 19, the Rev. S. A. Steinthal in the chair. The reports, which had been previously printed and circulated, were taken as read.

THE REPORT.

The Committee's report spoke of the past year as in every sense satisfactory for the society. Good work had been done at the Missions, and the response to the appeal for funds had given assurance of the churches' sympathy. Much regret was expressed that the Rev. H. S. Street had been obliged to resign the charge of the Renshaw-street Mission to remove to a healthier climate, and earnest appreciation of his work was recorded. The removal of the Rev. Wilfred Harris from the district had deprived the society of his services as secretary, which had been much appreciated. Mr. E. J. Russell, who had succeeded to the work, and had also rendered invaluable services at Renshaw-street, had also left the district, taking with him the lasting gratitude of the Committee.

The treasurer's accounts showed the balance in hand increased from £49 17s. 3d. to £61 11s. 2d., receipts from subscriptions £394 13s. 6d., from donations £215 9s. 9d., and from chapel collections £40 11s. 6d., giving with other sources of income a total of £821 13s. 9d. for the support of the two Missions. There had been a nett increase of subscriptions of £14 15s. 6d., but, as the treasurer pointed out, the amount received in donations in the past year was quite exceptional, and there was need of a large increase in annual subscriptions.

The Hon. Mrs. DE BEAUMONT KLEIN, of Liverpool, moved the first resolution, for the adoption of the reports, acknowledging the faithful services of the missionaries, and expressing regret at Mr. Street's resignation. Having expressed her satisfaction at the nature of the reports, Mrs. Klein spoke as follows of the work of the Missions:—

That work I take to be essentially social work, of that higher kind which should be indistinguishable from what is specifically called religious work. This seems fully borne out by Mr. Street's notable words, where he says, 'We have not tried to sectarianise those we influenced, but we have tried to teach a simple religion, and to show that all real religion must find expression in honest, pure, unselfish life.' These words will go straight to the hearts of all of us who believe that when every type of dogmatic teaching, and even every attempt at theological definition, has proved unsatisfactory and inadequate, we can still find life and inspiration in a message of sympathy and good-will towards men; we can still find a foundation for practical ethics in the essential qualities that go to constitute the human character.

Our Domestic Missions are doing a work the importance of which to the individual, to the family, and to the State can hardly be exaggerated. Who, indeed, can calculate its far-reaching consequences in souls that have been awakened by the life-giving touch of true brotherly sympathy? A word, a look, will sometimes provoke a responsive echo in men and women battling with the fatalities of life; how much greater, then, will be such an influence, when, behind it, lies an organisation such as is provided by the Domestic Mission. I also rejoice to remember that this word 'organisation' does not imply any of those limitations or obstacles which so often defeat the object in view. No creed or shibboleth has to be uttered in order to pass your gates. To every human child they stand ever wide open, and over them might be written the words—

'Gather fresh hope all ye who enter here.'

Your gates are the very antithesis of those terrible portals which Dante describes in his poem, over which were written words of hopelessness and despair, inspired by a theology which has no place to-day in our conception of God.

It is our faith that this labour of love —represented by the Mission—will fill a permanent place in the social history of our race, and that it is laying stepping-stones leading mankind to a religion truly universal. The work may seem small and insignificant, a mere drop in the ocean of ignorance and suffering; but impatience should not blind us to the fact that the biggest mountains are made up of invisible atoms and that the vast ocean is made up of minute drops. If your work be but as the grain of mustard seed, yet it has even then its potential future, its promise and its blessing. Any work whose aim is to raise human beings from the slough of selfishness into the purer atmosphere of altruism is in itself a great work, on whatever scale it may have to be carried out.

As I find it so beautifully set forth in the report, your missionaries have in many cases brought harmony and happiness into homes divided by the selfish instincts of those who dwelt in them. This, in itself, is a great result; it means placing men and women upon the path of that evolution of human love which begins in the home, which widens into citizenship, and is destined to find its fulfilment in universal brotherhood. We are a long way off from that fulfilment; yet to co-operate in any degree in this great work is a privilege of which some of us perhaps are not sufficiently conscious. In the scheme of work of your Domestic Mission, I am glad to see that all the principal aspects of social activity are included. The Band of Hope appears to be a great success. This means a good foundation for all future work. Then I notice, with pleasure, the mention of a holiday spent with profit in the country. To the toil-worn workers in the city slums, such a glimpse of nature must have been invaluable. Indeed, all of us are made better by such moments of communion with natural things. We feel bodily and mentally refreshed; more light, more fresh air, a wider horizon, the green meadows and the familiar flowers have mysterious appeals to much within us. We only think, perhaps, of organic comfort and physical benefits; but all these come to be transmitted by the alchemy of Nature into moral impressions of inestimable value for the higher growth we are striving to promote. Not unconnected with such results is the development of the æsthetic feelings, that appreciation of the beautiful in natural things without which even truth seems to lose some of its perfection.

This resolution also includes thanks to the ministers. All, I think, will agree with me that it is our simple duty to give our best thanks to those faithful workers for their unremitting labours during the past year. We know only too well their difficulties, the trying nature of their duties, the self-denial needed for such a work. We know how moments of discouragement will come to them in proportion to their very earnestness and zeal; for this, too, they have need of our support and sympathy. It is not easy to find terms here to express all one feels. But we can, at all events, assure those worthy workers of your Mission of our gratitude and respect. We recognise in them the devoted pioneers in a work directly related to the social improvement of our national life, and the religious hopes of Humanity.

And now, in concluding, I wish to express to the members of the Committee my own thanks for being permitted to stand here to-day, and to say these few words on behalf of a cause which I have much at heart. Words of counsel would scarcely become me; words of encouragement you hardly need, seeing how successful the work of this Domestic Mission is; but I know that words of fellowship and sympathy cannot fail to be acceptable to you. I gladly welcome any opportunity which seems to draw us more together, which tends to make for more union between our various work, which helps to make our churches more fully interested in each other. Individualism may be the source of certain manly virtues, but isolation is a source of certain weakness. It seems almost absurd to be always preaching about love and brotherhood, and yet to practice indifference and to maintain a sort of aloofness, as if we were not all workers in the same field and in the same interest. Whether it be in Liverpool, in Manchester, or elsewhere, the work of our Domestic Missions is one work; it fulfils the same aims, it represents the same ideals, it is the outcome of the same spirit, and everywhere upon that precious work the same supreme blessing—the blessing of the Beatitudes—must ever rest.

The Rev. J. E. Manning, in seconding the resolution, referred to similar work at Sheffield, and expressed his satisfaction that students of the Home Missionary College took part in it in Manchester. He pleaded that more of their young people should give personal help.

Mr. D. A. Little, as treasurer, having made a statement, the resolution was warmly supported by Mr. E. C. Harding, who spoke as a subscriber to the Mission for fifty-eight years, and said that he did not think they had ever had a healthier report.

The resolution having been passed, the missionaries responded.

The Rev. J. W. Bishop, in his reply, said that such meetings were an inspiration to the missionaries. He pleaded that members of the Committee should visit the missions, which were preparing the people to take proper advantage of the better conditions—e.g., in the housing of the poor—which all felt must come. He also referred to the missions as giving many folks another chance to become respectable citizens.

The Rev. S H. Street, regretting the necessity of his own removal, spoke hopefully of the prospects of the work. He sincerely thanked the Committee and friends for their kindly references to Mrs. Street and himself. He appealed for more workers, and pleaded that the present buildings were altogether inadequate for the work, and that better buildings should be erected.

The Rev. Dr. Klein moved, and Principal Gordon seconded, the appointment of the Committee and officers for the coming year, with Mr. Little as treasurer, and the Rev. W. E. George as secretary. Votes of thanks to the Lord Mayor and to the Chairman brought the meeting to a close.

NORTH AND EAST LANCASHIRE UNITARIAN MISSION.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The forty-first meeting of this Society has been held at Stand, on Wednesday, March 20. In the afternoon service was held in Stand Chapel, conducted by the Rev. Wilfred Harris, of Bolton, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie.

The business meeting followed, Mr. W. T. Jones, of Whitefield, in the chair.

THE REPORT.

The report of the Committee stated that the past year had not been marked by any new development in the work of the Mission, but the policy of husbanding resources had been steadily pursued. The reduction of grants, even when it meant hardship to aided congregations, had been loyally accepted, and the efforts of the congregations to raise independence funds had been partly achieved. Subscriptions to the Mission had risen from £56 14s. in 1899 to £136 4s. 1d. in the past year, which was most encouraging, but still far from sufficient, if their work was to be extended, or even to escape further curtailment. Valuable Postal Mission work had been continued by Mr. and Mrs. Crompton, of Rivington. Reference was made to the death of the Rev. John Wright, one of the founders of the Mission, to whom, as its first secretary, they had been profoundly indebted. The new century demanded fresh zeal, and the report concluded with an appeal to the present supporters of the Mission to be true to the spirit of its founders, and furnish means for a forward movement.

The adoption of the report was moved by the Chairman, and seconded by the Rev. C. J. Street, who said that he considered the report satisfactory. Referring to Blackburn, he said he would give up the mission in despair if they allowed that town, which was a great centre of population, to go without attention. He referred to the matter ten years ago, and he was convinced that if they went in a right spirit to Blackburn they would succeed. It wanted a good deal of money and a great amount of determination. The Manchester and District Forward Movement had been in existence six years, and during that time four new churches had been opened. Why could it not be done in their district?

A vote of thanks was accorded the retiring officers, and on the motion of the Chairman, seconded by the Rev. A. Dolphin, the following were elected to serve for the ensuing twelve months:—President, the Mayor of Bury (Councillor T. Holt); treasurer, Mr. F. Eckersley; auditor, Mr. J. Mills; chairman of committee, Mr. T. Harwood; vice-chairman, the Rev. J. J. Wright; secretaries, the Revs. R. T. Herford and John Harrison.

Thanks were also accorded the Revs. W.

Harris and W. C. Bowie for the part they had taken in the service, and to the Stand congregation for their cordial reception.

PUBLIC MEETING.

After tea in the schoolroom, a public meeting was held, at which the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie represented the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the Rev. Dendy Agate the Manchester District Association of Presbyterian and Unitarian Churches, and the Rev. W. C. Hall the East Cheshire Christian Union.

Mr. W. T. Jones, who again presided, extended on behalf of the Stand congregation a cordial welcome to the delegates present, and said that it was thirteen years since a similar meeting had been held at Stand. In the report a touching reference was made to an old friend of his, who, perhaps, more than any other person, made him take an interest in the work of the mission, and who was well known to them all. He meant the Rev. John Wright, whom he (the chairman) could remember having heard speak on mission work nearly thirty years ago. Mr. Herford was assisting in the work which Mr. Wright then advocated. Referring to the Forward Movement mentioned in the report, the Chairman said they all ought to assist that movement, which had for its purpose the increasing of the number of churches in the North and East Lancashire district. He thought they could not begin the new century in a better way than by helping in the development of the Forward Movement. He was sure, however, that none of them desired to interfere with or overlap the work that was being done by the churches of other denominations, nor did they want to make converts from other churches. There was ample room in their district for more churches, and for the development of the mission. As Mr. Street pointed out that afternoon, the thickly-populated district of Blackburn was without a Unitarian Chapel, as also were St. Anne's, Lytham, Nelson, and various other places where work was awaiting them. In a recent report of the Manchester Missionary Society it was stated that three out of every four people in the British Isles did not attend Sunday services, while in the populated districts the attendance, proportionately, was much less. There was sufficient room for their church to make headway, and it was only by hard work and unity that they could hope to be successful. Their forefathers had fought nobly for freedom for their opinions, and in the beginning of this new century they were not going to be behind. If the Committee would put forward their best efforts, and if the members would put their hands into their pockets a little more they would see their efforts crowned with success.

The Rev. W. C. Bowie said he did not think any religious organisation could exist or make itself sufficiently felt in the world unless it was constantly going forward, breaking new ground, and bringing its influence to bear upon fresh hearts and minds. If the work was taken up wisely and energetically the existing places of worship would be encouraged and inspired. It was not for a sectarian motive that they wanted to go forward, but because they felt convinced that there was a large number of men and women up and down the country who could not find the satisfaction for their minds which they were seeking and pining for. And it was because they were conscious of having something of a religion that would teach the mind, quicken the heart, and help in the building up of a fine manhood and a splendid womanhood, that they wished to spread light and help among others. There was a denominationalism which was narrow and small, and there was also denominationalism which was helpful, healthy, and good. Unless there was unity, earnestness, and hard work, no movement could hope for success. He felt that there were too few laymen and ministers who, while others were talking and dreaming, were busily at work.

The Rev. Dendy Agate said he was struck by the difference of feeling existing among laymen in matters religious and political. He sometimes wished that their laymen took their religion with half the seriousness and devotion that they applied to their political work.

The Rev. W. C. Hall said that most people at the present time were not simply indifferent to Unitarianism but to all thoughts of religion and activity. He thought the forward movement had a promising future, because there were so many people unchurched. The High Church and Ritualist party were the people who were attacking the indifference of the times, and, in spite of their religious articles, were doing a good work. He did not despise the Oxford Movement; it was saving the religious life of the Church of England at the present time. He believed it was for the Unitarians, along with the Ritualists, to attack the indifference of the age. They should show that they were fighting for something vital, and in a few generations it would be evident that two great bodies—the High Ecclesiasts and the simple Unitarians—were making religious progress. He thought it would then be found that the work of the Unitarians would be to counteract the false doctrines of the Ritualists and to take the lead of the movement—which they long ago ought to have had.

The Rev. J. C. Odgers said it was sometimes good for the members of every Christian denomination to try to see themselves as others saw them. Reforms in religion as in all things must begin with a few. Another objection was that the doctrines of Unitarians were for thinkers only, not for the sinning, suffering, sorrowing world at large; that Unitarianism was a theology but not a religion; that it was destructive and not constructive. They replied that the destruction had not been caused by them, but by the progress of thought and knowledge; that it was their duty reverently and devoutly to follow truth whithersoever it might lead them, and whatever the consequences might be; but that a purified theology had not killed their religion, and it was their strongest desire to show that with all the change of thought in theological matters, the bed-rock of their faith was undisturbed. If they pointed out what seemed to them to be errors in the accepted creeds of Christendom, it was that a purer and more spiritual Gospel might come in. Reformers had always been stigmatised as destroyers and iconoclasts, yet subsequently the world discovered its indebtedness to them. Another objection was that they had no God whom the people at large could realise, whereas they could realise an incarnate God in the Christ of history—a God who came to earth, under human conditions and limitations, who walked the very hills of Galilee and the streets of Jerusalem, and so came within the compass of human comprehension. But they had to ask, did Jesus ever say that he was God, did his disciples regard him as the Almighty: did not Jesus always pray to the Father, and confess that he himself was in every way subordinate to Him? They could not preach a doctrine which seemed to them to be disproved by the very words of Jesus. But they could preach Christ as the Great Teacher of men, who came with a divine message on his lips, who realised the Father's presence more intensely than any before or since, and in the unity of the spirit was one with Him. Mr. Odgers concluded with a reference to Ian Maclaren's story, entitled "His Mother's Sermon," and said that as Christians it should always be their endeavour to speak "a gude word for Jesus Christ."

A vote of thanks to the Chairman, moved by the Rev. R. T. Herford, and seconded by the Rev. W. C. Bowie, brought the meeting to a close.

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

[Notices and Reports for this Department should be as brief as possible, and be sent in by Thursday Morning.]

Aberdeen.—The anniversary social meeting of the Christian Unitarian Church was held on Monday evening, March 18, in the Trades' Hall, Belmont-street, and was largely attended by members and their friends. After tea Mr. W. Cruickshank took the chair, and made a statement as to the site which had been secured for a new church, and what lay before them in the building of it. The Rev. Alexander Webster spoke of the two periods of his ministry in Aberdeen, from 1884 to 1891, and again during the last six years. Those, he said, had been the busiest years of his life in public work, but he had felt obliged now to resign his seat on the School Board, to devote himself entirely to his congregation and the building of the new church. He was confident that they would secure the aid they had in view, and that the congregation would loyally do their part.

Clifton.—During the winter months the minister has been holding each Sunday morning a class of religious instruction for the younger members of the families connected with the congregation. On Sunday last, March 24, these meetings found an appropriate conclusion in a Dedication or Confirmation Service, when eight of the members of the class were welcomed into the church and received the Holy Communion, in the presence of the congregation, on expressing the desire to enter into full fellowship with the church in worship and in work. Each of the communicants received a copy of "A Book of Daily Strength," while the young people themselves had provided the lovely flowers which adorned the communion table; altogether the occasion was a quietly impressive and, it is hoped, a helpful one. We are also glad to be able to record large evening congregations which for some time have been attending a course of addresses entitled "What is Unitarianism?"

Deal.—During March several interesting lectures have been given. A fortnight ago Miss Addiscott gave an address on the benefits of a circle of Religious Fellowship, and a resolution was passed without opposition to establish such a circle in connection with the Central Postal Mission, and twelve members immediately enrolled. It is intended to work for a Christmas-tree in December. A library has also been started.

Dunmurry, co. Antrim.—After undergoing extensive alterations and repairs this church was reopened on Sunday with special services conducted by Principal Gordon. The scheme of renovation, which has been effectively carried out, includes the removal of the front gallery in order to introduce more light, the painting of the furniture, the colouring of the walls, and the polishing of several handsome marble monuments. The vestry and session room, together with the congregational hall and school buildings, have also shared in the work of restoration. In the case of the school buildings, now known as the Courthouse, some additions have been made which enhance their value very considerably. The entire cost of the undertaking was close upon £300, and the work is completed free of debt. The collections taken, added to the donations sent by friends unable to attend, amounted to £58 17s. 8½d. The choir was augmented by the addition of friends of other denominations.

London: Forest Gate.—The Upton-lane Literary and Social Union has just closed a very interesting and successful session by an entertainment. The social club, lately formed, is preparing a juvenile play for representation on its own account.

London: Islington.—The various social activities connected with Unity Church have been carried on with much vigour during the winter. The Literary Society's fortnightly meetings have been both instructive and amusing. In October the opening lecture was given by the President, Dr. Hicks, on "The Moral Problem of Goethe's Faust." This was followed by a number of other valuable lectures and a dramatic entertainment. On the alternate Thursdays, Dr. Hicks has given a course of lectures on "The Beginnings of Philosophy." Under the presidency of Dr. Hicks, and superintended by Mrs. Stuart and Miss Dunn, the Girls' Club is considered to be most successful. It has forty members, all of the class it was desired to interest. Miss L. K. Garrett continues to hold her girls' class, for work and recreation, on Tuesdays. The Dorcas Society holds its meetings, at the ladies' houses, once a month. The popular Monday entertainments have now completed their twenty-fifth season, and have proved more than usually successful; frequently they have included a dramatic sketch, which never fails to attract. A delightful evening was given by Mr. H. Keatley Moore and his Croydon choir, and another by "The Finchley Glee Club," through the introduction of Miss Mary Preston. Last week an enthusiastic audience crowded the schoolroom to its utmost limit, to hear an entertainment by the friends of Mrs. Titford, which brought the season to a conclusion.

London: Newington Green.—A very successful social evening was held by the Temperance Society in the School House on Friday week, all the items on the programme being provided by the members, and concluding with a short sketch, entitled The Twopenny Tub, written by one of their number and well acted by seven others.

London: Peckham.—The Rev. D. Amos, of Greenwich, gave, on Tuesday last, a lecture to the Avondale Literary Society, on "Sir Thomas More and his Utopia." Much interest was excited, and the lecture was followed by an animated discussion, for the most part on Socialism, a subject upon which Mr. Amos promised a lecture on a subsequent occasion.

Preston.—On the 14th, 16th, 23rd, and 26th inst. about a score of the children, ages ranging from seven years to sixteen years, have been busy presenting to full houses, in the Percy street schoolroom, the Rev. T. Leyland's musical play, The Magic Rose. The training of the children, the preparation of the dresses, and the result have been eminently creditable to all concerned. The object was to make a contribution to the fund being raised to enlarge the school, and about £8 has been realised.

Pudsey.—A very pleasant reunion of old members of Unity Church and school was recently held, through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Verity, of Littlemoor Hall. In spite of inclement weather, 230 sat down to tea, and a public meeting followed, at which Mr. Verity presided, and addresses were given by the Rev. C. Hargrove, Mr. Joseph Marshall, the Rev. C. H. Cook, Mr C. Stainer, and the minister, the Rev. W. H. Davies. Much encouragement was derived from the meeting. On a subsequent evening the children of the school were similarly entertained.

Richmond.—The special services held in the Richmond Free Church, by the Rev. Edgar Daplyn, every week-night from March 18 to 22 inclusive, made a deep and gratefully acknowledged impression upon those who attended. The weather was unintermittently stormy and inclement throughout, yet night after night came those who found help and suggestion concerning the things of the spirit in the direct and simple utterances both of prayers and addresses. Very warm were the expressions of appreciation made both to the minister of the church and to Mr. Daplyn himself. The experiment, instead of proving a failure, proved a benefit and blessing. It has left behind it a desire that such services should be held again and again. Those who attended them will enter with a deepened interest into the ordinary Sunday services of their church.

Rotherham.—In continuance of the services arranged in connection with the Yorkshire Unitarian Union Mission, the Rev. John Fox, of Hunslet, was missioner on Wednesday night March 20, at the Church of Our Father. The subject of his discourse was "The Consecrated Life."

Saffron Walden.—On Sunday, 24th inst., the Rev. J. A. Brinkworth completed the twenty-sixth year of his ministry at the General Baptist Chapel. The evening service was devoted to a meditation upon "The Past, The Present, and The Future." It was a brief review of the past state and condition of the cause as contrasted with its present status, and hopefulness for its future. A good congregation was in attendance. The morning service was devoted to the improvement of the death of an old Sunday-school scholar. At the recent annual financial meeting an encouraging report was presented. There had been an increase in free-will offerings, seat rents, quarterly and other collections, and the Sunday-school funds. A balance of £3 2s. due to the treasurer had become a credit of £2 8s. 8½d. Since October, 1899, there had been a decided increase in the congregation, more especially on Sunday evenings, and this, in particular, with the men. The one grave difficulty was agricultural depression as affecting the glebe-lands.

Scarborough.—In continuance of the Forward Movement, the Rev. H. Rawlings, of York, addressed a fair audience on Thursday, March 21, on "The Unity of God and the Unity of Man," and on Tuesday, March 26, a lecture, entitled "What we Affirm," was delivered by the Rev. C. Harvey Cook, of Leeds. On Sunday, March 24, a visit was paid by the Rev. E. L. H. Thomas, the former pastor, who delivered two excellent sermons on "Something Simple and Sublime" and "Treasures New and Old."

South Shields.—The cause of Unitarianism is making headway here, increasing interest being shown in all church work—strangers being present at every service. The old prejudices against this movement are disappearing—a noteworthy feature being the fact that the minister is presiding for the second time over a popular weekly meeting held in the Gospel Temperance Hall. On Wednesday, March 22, a crowded attendance gathered in the schoolroom of the Unitarian Church, to listen to a programme rendered by Sunday-school scholars. The first part consisted of recitations, action songs, &c. During an interval a short address was given by the resident minister (Mr. T. Paxton), the entertainment concluding with a musical operetta, Alice in Dreamland.

Walthamstow.—The Sunday-school anniversary services were held last Sunday, when the Rev. T. E. M. Edwards addressed about eighty children in the afternoon, and preached to a fairly good congregation in the evening. The special hymns, chant, and anthem, "Forward be our Watchword," were very well sung.

Whitchurch.—On Wednesday, March 13, a Sale of Work was held in the schoolroom of the Church of the Saviour. Satisfactory proceeds were handed over to the church funds; and on the 20th a most successful entertainment was held, the schoolroom being crowded. The Rev. W. F. Turland presided, and the programme was very creditably rendered. On Sunday, March 24, the Rev. E. Turland, of Newbury, preached morning and evening; the congregations were very good, especially in the evening, when the church was quite full. On the following evening Mr. Turland gave an interesting lecture in the schoolroom on "The Languages of the World."

Each morning is a fresh beginning. We are, as it were, just beginning life. We have it entirely in our own hands, and when the morning, with its fresh beginning comes, all yesterdays should be yesterdays with which we have nothing to do. Sufficient is it to know that the way we lived our yesterday has determined for us our to-day. And again, when the morning with its fresh beginning comes, all to-morrows should be to-morrows with which we have nothing to do. Sufficient to know that the way we live our to-day determines our to-morrow.—R. W. Trine.

ABERYSTWYTH

("The Biarritz of Wales")

Is highly recommended for invalids. It possesses the most equable temperature, its shore being swept by the Gulf Stream and the S.W. breezes of the Atlantic. The drainage is perfect, and the town is supplied with the purest water from Plynlimmon. The late Sir James Clarke, M.P., says: "A fortnight in Aberystwyth is equivalent to a month's residence in most watering places." Guides on application to the Town Clerk

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, March 31.

☞ It is requested that notice of any alteration in the Calendar be sent to the Publisher not later than Thursday Afternoon.

Blackfriars Mission and Stamford-street Chapel 11 A.M., Mr. A. B. Midlane, "Man's Need of Man," and 7 P.M., Mr. A. J. Clarke, "Our High Calling."

Brixton, Unitarian Christian Church, Effra-road, 11 A.M., and 7 P.M., Rev. F. W. Stanley.

Croydon, Free Christian Church, Wellesley-rd., West Croydon, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. Page Hopps.

Deptford, Church-street, 11.15 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. J. Marchant.

Essex Church, The Mall, Notting-hill-gate, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Frank K. Freeston.

Forest-gate, corner of Dunbar-road, Upton-lane, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. H. W. Perris.

Hackney, New Gravel Pit Church, Chatham-place, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. R. H. U. Bloor.

Hampstead, Rosslyn-hill Chapel, Rev. Edgar Daplyn, 11.15 A.M., "Prayer," and 7 P.M., "Voluntary Goodness." Children's Class, 12.30.

Highgate Hill, Unitarian Christian Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. A. Ferguson.

Islington, Unity Church, Upper-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Dawes Hicks, M.A., Ph.D.

Kentish Town, Clarence-road, N.W., 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Alexander Farquharson. Morning, "The Lesson of Passion Week." Evening, "The Anguish of Jesus."

Kilburn, Quex-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. J. E. Stronge.

Lewisham, Unitarian Christian Church High-street, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Chynoweth Pope.

Little Portland-street Chapel, 11.15 A.M., and and 7 P.M., Rev. H. S. Perris, M.A. 3 P.M., Children's Service.

Mansford-street Church and Mission, Bethnal Green, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Cadman.

Peckham, Avondale-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. Carter.

Plumstead, Common-road Unitarian Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. L. Jenkins Jones.

Richmond, Free Church, Ormond-road, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. S. Farrington.

Stepney-Green, College Chapel, 11 A.M., P. W. Ames, F.R.S.L., and 7 P.M., Mr. F. Talbot.

Stoke Newington, The Green, 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. Wooding, B.A.

Stratford, West Ham-lane Unitarian Church 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Mr. T. Elliot.

Wandsworth, Unitarian Christian Church, East-hill, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. W. G. Tarrant, B.A.

Wood Green, Unity Hall, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. Dr. Mummery.

PROVINCIAL.

Bath, Trim-street Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. John McDowell.

Bedford, Library (side room), 11.15 A.M., Rev. Rowland Hill.

Blackpool, Banks-street, North Shore, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. David Davis.

Blackpool, Unitarian Church, Masonic Hall, South Shore, 11 and 6.30.

Bootle, Free Church Hall, Stanley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Morley Mills.

Bournemouth, Unitarian Church, West-hill-road, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. C. C. Coe.

Bradford, Chapel-lane Chapel, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. Ceredig Jones.

Brighton, Christ Church (Free Christian), New-rd., North-st., 11 and 7 P.M., Rev. H. M. Livens.

Buxton, Hartington-road Church, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. Street.

Canterbury, Ancient Chapel, Blackfriars, 11 A.M., Mr. J. W. Brown.

Deal and Walmer, Free Christian Church, High-st., 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. T. Shakspeare.

Dover, Adrian-street, near Market-square, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. S. Burrows.

Eastbourne, Gildridge Hotel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. G. St. Clair.

Guildford, Ward-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. Lang Buckland.

Horsham, Free Christian Church, Worthing-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. J. Marten.

Leeds, Mill Hill, 10.45 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A.

Liscard, Memorial Church, Manor-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. H. Dolphin.

Liverpool, Ancient Chapel of Toxteth, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. J. Harwood, B.A.

LIVERPOOL, Hope-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
LIVERPOOL, Ullet-road Sefton Park, 11 A.M and 6.30 P.M. Rev. Dr. KLEIN. Evening, "Authority as a Foundation of Religious Belief: its Past and Present Value; its Meaning for the Future."
MANCHESTER, Strangeways, 10.30 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. R. SHANKS.
NEWPORT, Isle of Wight, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. CLEMENT E. PIKE.
OXFORD, Manchester College, 11.30 A.M., Rev. W. E. ADDIS, M.A.
PORTSMOUTH, General Baptist Chapel, St. Thomas-street, 6.45 P.M., Mr. THOMAS BOND.
PORTSMOUTH, High-street Chapel, 11 A.M and 6.45 P.M., Mr. G. COSENS PRIOR.
ROCHDALE, Blackwater-street, 10.30 A.M., and 6.30 P.M., Rev. E. S. HICKS, of Bolton.
SCARBOROUGH, Westborough, 10.45 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. E. RATTENBURY HODGES.
SIDMOUTH, Old Meeting, High-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. W. AGAR.
SEVENOAKS, Bessell's Green, The Old Meeting House, 11 A.M., Rev. R. C. DENDY. Stables in the grounds.
SOUTHEND, Unitarian Church, Darnley-road, 11 A.M. (Children's Service), and 6.30 P.M., Mr. DEAR.
SOUTHPORT, Portland-street Church, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED.
TORQUAY, Unity Hall, Lower Union-street, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M., Rev. A. E. O'CONNOR.
TUNBRIDGE WELLS, Mechanics' Institute, Dudley-road, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.
YORK, St. Saviourgate Chapel, 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M, Rev. H. RAWLINGS, M.A.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, Stephen's Green West, 12 noon, and 7 P.M., Rev. G. H. VANCE, B.D.
WARRENPOINT co. Down, Unitarian Church, Dromore-road, 12 NOON, Rev. W. E. MELLONE. The attendance of visitors cordially invited.

CAPE TOWN, Free Protestant (Unitarian) Church, Hout-street, 6.45 P.M., Rev. R. BALMFORTH.
SYDNEY, N.S.W., The Australian Church, I.O.O.F. Temple, 11 A.M. and 7 P.M., Rev. G. WALTERS.

ETHICAL RELIGION SOCIETY, STEINWAY HALL, PORTMAN-SQUARE, W.—March 31st, at 11.15, Dr. WASHINGTON SULLIVAN, "The 'Decalogue'—Is it the Foundation of Morality? VII. Thou shalt not Commit Adultery."

SOUTH-PLACE ETHICAL SOCIETY, SOUTH-PLACE, FINSBURY.—March 31, at 11.15 A.M., Professor EARL BARNES "The Influence of the Drama on Life."

PULPIT SUPPLY.—The Rev. D. AMOS, 76, South-street, Greenwich, S.E.

LEWIN'S MEAD DOMESTIC MISSION, BRISTOL.

The post of MISSIONARY is about to become VACANT. Applications should be addressed to the Hon. Sec., Rev. Dr. WARSCHAUER, Oakfield, Hampton-road, Bristol.

MRS. C. E. SCHWANN wishes to recommend highly a lady with University honours, training, and practical experience. Can prepare pupils for examinations. French and German (acquired abroad), drawing, painting, embroidery. Resident (£100) or non-resident.—4, Princes-gardens, London, S.W.

MARRIAGES.

STEINTHAL—GUNTON—On the 22nd March, at St. James's Church, Birch, Manchester, by the Rev. F. G. Butler, M.A., Arthur H. Steinthal, third son of the Rev. S. Alfred Steinthal, to Constance Mary, second surviving daughter of the late Mr. George Gunton, of Manchester.

DEATHS.

HARE—On Tuesday, the 5th March, at Birchgrove, Taunton, Maria, the dearly beloved wife of Charles Hare, aged 74.

Board and Residence.

A FEW young people received in PLEASANT HOME near Victoria. Terms moderate.—Mrs ROBERT TURNER, 94 Grosvenor road, S.W.

BOARDING HOUSE.—THE FELL, TROUTBECK, WINDERMERE, is situated 550 feet above sea level, and about 2½ miles from the station at Windermere. Every home comfort. Moderate terms.

BOURNEMOUTH — Elvaston, West Cliff, BOARDING ESTABLISHMENT. Unrivalled position on sea front close to the Highcliffe Hotel. 50 ooms. Full-sized billiard table Lovely grounds, with access to Cliff Promenade. Due south. Near Unitarian Church.—Mr. and Mrs. POCOCK.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Most comfortable private BOARDING-HOUSE; close to sea; sheltered among the Pines; south aspect. Billiard-room (full-sized table). Terms moderate.—Address, Miss CHALDECOTT Stirling House, Manor-road.

BOURNEMOUTH. — Board-residence. High position, facing South, with balcony and good garden. Suitable for Open-air Treatment. Close to sea, sheltered by pines, and adjoining the car-route to all parts.—D., Cliff House, 1, Westminster-road, Branksome Park.

ST. LEONARDS.—"Crantock," 59, Warrior-square First-class BOARD and RESIDENCE, newly furnished and redecorated. Sea View, excellent cuisine, billiard room, sanitary certificate.—Mr. and Mrs. SIDNEY P. POTTER.

FELIXSTOWE.—Comfortable Apartments, well situated midway between station and beach in sunny Felixstowe. Reasonable terms.—Apply Mrs. H. ROBINSON, Kimberley House, Ranelagh-road.

WEST CENTRAL HOTEL,

Proprietor, FREDERIC SMITH.

Recently enlarged, remodelled and refurnished, now affording

ACCOMMODATION FOR ABOUT 250 GUESTS.

The best patronised TEMPERANCE HOTEL in London. Highly commended by leading Unitarian Ministers.

Spacious Coffee, Reading, and Drawing Rooms. Electric Light. Lift.

Apartments, 1/6 to 2/6. Breakfast, 1/3 to 2/-. Service, 1s.

77 & 101,

SOUTHAMPTON ROW, LONDON, W.C.

Telegrams: "QUIETUDE, LONDON."

19TH CENTURY BUILDING SOCIETY
ADELAIDE-PLACE, LONDON BRIDGE. E.C.

Interest on Loans reduced to Four-and-a-half per Cent.

DIRECTORS.

Chairman — Sir H. W. LAWRENCE, Bart., 21 Mincing-lane, E.C.
Deputy-Chairman—MARK H. JUDGE, A.R.I.B.A., 7, Pall Mall, S.W.
F. H. A. HARDCASTLE, F.S.I., 5, Old Queen-st., S.W.
Miss ORME, 118, Upper Tulse-hill, S.W.
STEPHEN SEAWARD TAYLER, "Fairholme," 8, Mount Ephraim-road, Streatham-hill, S.W., and
Mrs. HENRY RUTT, 1, Randolph-gardens, N.W.

PREFERENCE SHARES £10, Interest 4½ per cent. DEPOSITS received at 3, 3½, and 4 per cent., withdrawable at short notice.

LIBERAL ADVANCES promptly made. Monthly repayment, including principal, premium, and interest for each £100 advanced—21 years, 13s. 6d.; 18 years, 14s. 9d.; 15 years, 16s. 1d.; 10 years, £1 1s. 8d. Survey Fee to £500, half-a-guinea.

Special facilities given to persons desiring to purchase houses for their own occupation. Prospectus free.

FREDERICK LONG, Manager.

HINDHEAD, SURREY.

GENTLEMAN'S furnished 8-roomed COTTAGE to LET for Spring and Summer months. Owner will be in residence during Easter week and pleased to show.—STANNUS, The Cottage, Hazelgrove, Hindhead, near Haslemere.

SIDMOUTH.

TO LET.—THE BALSTERS, containing a large dining-room, drawing-room, and library; five bedrooms, dressing-room, and box-room; kitchen and scullery, coach-house, stable, and offices, &c. Rent £60 per annum.—Application to be made to the OCCUPIER.

DAILY or WEEKLY re-engagement desired as GOVERNESS or SECRETARY. English and arithmetic (Cambridge Higher Local), good French, Latin, German, music, drawing. Excellent references.—Miss TALBOT, 38, Westhere-road, West Hampstead, N.W.

RE-ENGAGEMENT desired; 3 years HOUSEKEEPER to gentleman, and 13 months the care (as COMPANION, &c.) of an Invalid Lady, whose death is the cause of leaving. Mrs. MAYNARD, care of Taylor, Jeweller, Wakefield.

WANTED, a lady (young) as NURSE to three little girls; eldest 4 years, youngest 2 months; under-nurse kept.—Apply to Mrs. WALTER SHIPMAN, Cleveley, Altrincham.

WANTED, on April 12th, a PLAIN COOK, where two servants are kept. Comfortable home. Send particulars of last place, height, and age to Mrs. A. E. JONES, 13, Great Bedford-street, Bath.

WANTED, for the Upper Chapel, Sheffield, a Gentleman to act as SUPERINTENDENT of the SUNDAY SCHOOL, and to assist the Minister in Missionary and general work. Further particulars from the SECRETARY, to whom applications, accompanied by two references, should be sent.

WANTED, for Country Sanatorium, COOK-HOUSEKEEPER or LADY COOK with practical knowledge of good cookery. Salary from £40.—Apply by letter to DOCTOR, 21, Wimpole-street, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton Bldngs., Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

CURRENT ACCOUNTS

2% on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. 2%

DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS

2½% on Deposits, repayable on demand. 2½%

STOCKS AND SHARES

Stocks and Shares purchased and sold for customers.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Telephone No. 5 Holborn.
Telegraphic Address: "BIRKBECK, LONDON."

FREDK. LONG & SON,

AUCTIONEERS, SURVEYORS, HOUSE & LAND AGENTS

4, Adelaide Place, London Bridge, E.C.

Rents Collected, and the entire management of Property in any part of London or Suburbs undertaken. Valuations for Probate, &c.

THE "INQUIRER" CALENDAR.

SUNDAY SERVICES are advertised at a charge of 10s. per year, prepaid, a space of two lines being given to each announcement; extra lines are charged 4d. each. Orders can be sent for a portion of the year, not less than thirteen weeks, at the same rate. Calendar Notices not prepaid £1 the year. Single Announcements 6d. per line. All information as to the change of preachers should reach the Office not later than Thursday.

Essex Hall, Strand, W.C.

Schools, etc.

BABBACOMBE, TORQUAY.—HOME TUITION in FRENCH and GERMAN.—Rev. A. E. and Mrs. O'CONNOR would receive, for special instruction, two boys or girls as Boarders. Educated in Germany, he resided there long; and in France. Mrs. O'Connor is a native of France. Reference—W. H. Herford, B.A., Paignton.

EDGBASTON COLLEGE for GIRLS,

Bristol Road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

Principal—Miss BAILY.

Headmistress—Miss ELEANOR MOSS B.A.Hons.

—o—

A limited number of Boarders taken at residence of Principal.

The College, which s opposite the residence, has accommodation for 120 Pupils. Lawn tennis, gymnasium, asphalte playground. Field.

The Curriculum s based on the Cambridge Examination regulations, and Resident Pupils have the advantage of Public School life combined with home comforts.

Application to Secretary.

HIGH SCHOOL FOR GIRLS,

SOUTH MARINE TERRACE
ABERYSTWITH.

Principal — Mrs. MARLES THOMAS.

Pupils most successfully prepared for Public Examinations. Scholarships have been obtained at the University Colleges. Special attention paid to the physical side of education. Gymnasium. Swedish drill.

HINDHEAD.

MISS MACRAE MOIR'S SCHOOL

FOR GIRLS. (Established 1893).

PUPILS prepared for the Universities; resident gymnast and French mistress; healthy conditions of life; hockey and tennis.

Prospectus on application to Miss Macrae Moir, Lingholt, Hindhead.

Station, Haslemere.

THE HINDHEAD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

(Founded by Miss J. F. GRUNER, May, 1897).

BOARDERS are received by the Misses Gruner at Moorcroft, Hindhead, Haslemere, from whom prospectuses and further information may be obtained, the School being carried on at the HINDHEAD HALL as heretofore.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE SCHOOL,

GOWER STREET, W.C.

Headmaster—J. LEWIS PATON, M.A., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.

SUMMER TERM commences MONDAY, April 22.

The School is carried on in strict accordance with the principles laid down by the Founders of University College, and is organised as a first grade modern and classical school.

Examinations for four entrance scholarships will be held on June 18.

For prospectus, apply to the Office, Gower-street, W.C.

T. GREGORY FOSTER, Ph.D.,
Secretary.

WILLASTON SCHOOL, Nantwich

(BARKER FOUNDATION.)

Head Master, GUY LEWIS, M.A., Oxford.

Assistant Masters—Rev. J. H. WOODS, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and Manchester College, Oxford, and H. L. JONES, B.A., Merton College, Oxford.

Visiting Masters for Science, Music, Drawing, Gymnastics and Manual Instruction.

Next Entrance Examination, April 10th.

There are a few Vacancies on the Foundation. For Prospectus and particulars, apply to the Headmaster, or to the Clerk to the Governors, 38, Barton Arcade, Manchester.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The FIFTY-SIXTH ANNUAL MEETING will be held at GORTON, on GOOD FRIDAY, April 5, 1901.

11. 0 A.M.—RELIGIOUS SERVICE in Brookfield Church. Preacher: Rev. John Page Hopps, of Croydon. A Collection will be made in aid of the Funds of the Association.

12.15 P.M.—Dinner in the School. Tickets 9d. each.

2 0 P.M.—BUSINESS MEETING in the Church. Chairman: Rev. S. A. Steinthal (the Retiring President).

4. 0 P.M.—Tea in the School. Tickets 6d. each.

5.30 P.M.—PUBLIC MEETING in the School. Chairman: Rev. George Evans, M.A.

Reader of Paper: Rev. J. H. Wicksteed, M.A. (of Padiham). Subject of Paper: "A Great Religious Teacher: Friedrich Fröbel."

A Collection will be taken at the Evening Meeting, in aid of the 20th Century Fund.

Cheap Return Tickets to Manchester to holders of Railway Certificates. For method of securing the same apply to the School Secretaries.

UNITARIAN CHURCH, WEST HILL ROAD, BOURNEMOUTH.

A SALE OF WORK

will take place in the LECTURE HALL, in aid of the Church Funds, on WEDNESDAY, April 10th, commencing at 3 o'clock.

Contributions in money or goods will be thankfully received by Mrs. Coe, Whinsbridge, Grosvenor-road, Bournemouth.

WIDOWS' FUND.—The ANNUAL MEETING of Members of the Society for the Relief of Necessitous Widows and Children of Protestant Dissenting Ministers will be held at the SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION, 56, OLD BAILEY, on MONDAY, April 1st, 1901. The Chair will be taken at Two o'clock.

Society for the Abolition of Vivisection

Offices: 62, Strand, London.

"It is a painful and humiliating truth that the human mind, by being familiarised with scenes of cruelty and horror, may be brought at length to extract from them a kind of insane gratification, which, like other perverted passions, extinguishes all the finer and better sympathies of our nature. . . . The natural feelings of commiseration which we entertain for the sufferings of a helpless and unoffending animal are entwined with the best and tenderest sympathies of our nature, and we cannot part with the one without tearing up the other by the very roots."—Sir Philip Crampton.

The above Society appeals to the Public for aid.

E. M. WRIGHT, Secretary.

Silver-Plated Goods and Cutlery.

TEA and COFFEE SETS, ENTRÉE DISHES, CRUETS, BUTTER (and JAM) DISHES, SPOONS and FORKS, &c. Electro-plated on Nickel Silver, also superior Steel Cutlery, supplied direct from the Manufacturer,

W. J. SEARS,

144, ELDON STREET, SHEFFIELD
(Estab. 1889).

HOME FOR HEALTH CULTURE,

The Firs, Bromyard, HEREFORDSHIRE.

This HOME provides a course of Systematic Daily Exercise, combined with regular outdoor life and occupation, for Ladies and Children who are not in normal health. The exercises are given in a Gymnasium fitted with Swedish apparatus, and consist of Ling's Swedish Movements. Special Treatment is given for Spinal Curvature, Anæmia, Hysteria, Indigestion, Neuralgia, &c.

For further particulars, apply to the Principal, Miss Jessie Baker (Trained by Mme. Bergman Osterberg).

Post Free 6d. net.

Information Concerning the

History and Growth of the Bible.

For full particulars see "Inquirer," pp. 151, 153 & 175.

Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Also kept in stock by the S.S.A. at Essex Hall.

The Methodist Sunday School Record of March 7 says:—"This is a handy, useful, and valuable little work—'multum in parvo.' Many people consider that the popular conception of the Bible is the most formidable obstacle in the pathway of Religious Progress. Unitarians are therefore invited to circulate this booklet among their orthodox friends, for although not actively sectarian in purpose, the outcome of a free inquiry naturally tends to the position Unitarians hold with regard to the Bible."

JUST PUBLISHED.

Demy 16mo. cloth gilt, 1s. post free.

LIFE'S UPPER SCHOOL.

BY

Mrs. A. C. OSLER.

Contents:

Loyalty—Learning—Cui Bono?

A Booklet dealing with the DISCIPLINE of ADVERSITY and SORROW.

"It is to achieve the power of helpfulness that 'Life's Upper School' should fit us; to be able to carry not only our own burdens, but the loads—great and small—of our fellow-wayfarers; and to carry them faithfully, reverently, silently."

PHILIP GREEN, 5, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

MRS. GASKELL AND KNUTSFORD

By Rev. G. A. PAYNE.

Eleven Illustrations. Introduction by Edna Lyall.

(Manchester: Clarkson & Griffiths. London: Gray and Bird. 3s. net, postage paid).

"Delightful little volume."—Manchester Courier.

"A very beautiful book."—Liverpool Daily Post.

"Lovers of Mrs. Gaskell's stories have cause to thank Mr. Payne for his labour of love."—Literary World.

JOHN PAGE HOPPS' MONTHLY

THE COMING DAY.

Enlarged. Price Threepence.

Contents for APRIL.

The Scientific Bequest of the 19th to the 20th Century.
A Prophecy for the New Century.
The Execution of Jesus.
The House of Lords: a Survival.
John Bully's National Anthem.
The St. Paul's Shambles.
The Vulgarity of Militarism.
Milton on the Mob.
Notes by the Way; Notes on Books, &c.

London, Edinburgh, and Oxford:
Williams and Norgate, and all Booksellers.

JOHN HARWOOD'S "RECITALS."

The "CHRISTMAS CAROL," and varied programmes of two hours' duration, from Shakspere, Dickens, Sheridan, Colman, and other Popular Authors. Special terms for Unitarian and Free Church Societies. Address: Fair View, Pendleton, Manchester.

Printed by Woodfall & Kinder, 70 to 76, Long Acre, W.C., and Published for the Proprietors by E. Kennedy, at the Office, 3, Essex-street, Strand, London, W.C. City Agent, John Heywood, 29 and 30, Shoe-lane, E.C. Manchester (Wholesale), John Heywood, Deansgate.—Saturday March 30, 1901.

The Inquirer.

A Journal of Liberal Religious Thought and Life.

ESTABLISHED IN 1842.] [REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

No. 3067. NEW SERIES, No. 171.] LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 6, 1901. [ONE PENNY.

CONTENTS.

NOTES OF THE WEEK 209
LITERATURE :—
The Miracles of Unbelief 210
ARTICLES :—
An Easter Eve Fête 210
Renewed Consecration 211
The Gospel of the Clod 211
The Empty Tomb 212
A Kempis on Eastertide 213
The Resurrections of Christian Faith ... 214
The Power of His Resurrection 217
Spring has Come 217
OBITUARY :—
William Blake 214
THE CHILDREN'S COLUMN 215
LEADER :—
Easter Faith 216
POETRY :—
Spring's Anthem 214
From "In Memoriam" 216
"Around the Wintry Tomb" 216
The New England Daughter 218
CORRESPONDENCE :—
A Friendly Message 215
Is Nature Cruel? 218
Christianity, the Religion of the Incarnation 218
MEETINGS :—
Birmingham Unitarian Twentieth Century Celebration 218
Leicester Free Christian Church 220
PROVINCIAL LETTER :—
North Midland District 220
NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES 221
ADVERTISEMENTS 222

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

EASTER promises to come to us with beautiful days. The bitter March winds, we will hope, are done with for this year. In the quiet nights the clear moonlight over the sleeping earth has brought mystic breathings of a life deeper and more glorious, in which our troubled days are embosomed, in which truth and love, peace and Divine strength abide. It is the light of the Easter moon, which cast deep shadows in Gethsemane. Other tradegies now darken the earth, but over them also is that Divine silence of infinite Compassion, and the unchanging purpose of good.

THE returns of the Census of the people of this country, which was taken on Monday, will direct renewed and widespread attention to facts already generally known. The papers have shown us in diagrams the enormous increase of population during the century, from the not quite nine millions of England and Wales in 1801 to over thirty-two millions of the present year, while the million of the 1801 London has leapt into a greater London of over six millions. These are appalling figures, when one remembers what is contained in that dense mass of people crowded into the greatest city that the world has ever seen. Other huge towns have grown up throughout the country, and among the diagrams in the Daily News was one showing the rural population of 1801 as 75 per cent. of the whole, shrunk in 1901 to 33⅓ per cent.

"Thou has multiplied the nation and not increased the joy" was the text of a sermon referring to the Census, preached last Sunday by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, and published as the April number of his Mill Hill Pulpit. The sermon pictures not only the increase of population and the growth of great cities, but the spread of empire, "by God's blessing or our own reckless daring," but then does not shrink from adding the darker shades of the picture, sufficiently indicated by the remembrance of £11,000,000 annually spent in the support of hundreds of thousands of paupers, and £162,000,000 in strong drink. Speaking of Leeds, as typical of many industrial centres, Mr. Hargrove quotes the following words of the Medical Officer of Health :—"It is strange that a town which has grown so quickly should have so many miserable houses in it. . . . It is our immediate predecessors who built the courts and alleys which make the slums of to-day."

"WE have many more conveniences, many more excitements, many more advantages," than the dwellers in our towns of a hundred years ago—but, asks Mr. Hargrove, "have we more joy?" There have been many substantial gains, for which we must be thankful, but do even pure water and cheap artificial light, and sound drains, "make amends for clouded skies and dreary streets, and flowerless courts and smoke-darkened walls on every side?" And the sermon concludes with the following passage :—

Happiness does not come even with "amazing increase" of population, of territory, of wealth. We all know that. Nor, though we can estimate to some extent a national progress in virtue, is there any means of computing the amount of Joy which exists among us.

But this is our duty, even while we reckon up our numbers and weigh our resources, to remember that not in these consists the real prosperity of a people. For Joy is the true crown of a people's glory; joy of conscience, recognising the Eternal Law, and making It the Directress of policy; joy of goodwill, binding all classes together in common regard for the welfare of the whole body; joy of intelligence, enlightened to see how wonderful and beautiful is the world we live in; joy of faith, that God is in all and over all, and that God is love. Oh "happy the people that is in such a case," though they may be few in numbers, and their territories small as those of Israel; yea, "Happy art thou, O Israel, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, the sword of thy excellency." Happy the people which seek its salvation in observance of the Law of God, whose confidence is in the righteousness of its cause, whose sword is never drawn but in defence of liberty and right. Theirs were the joy of heaven itself, for them the Kingdom were already come!

AMONG those who presented addresses to the King at St. James's Palace, on March 12, were fifty-three members of the Society of Friends, distinguished from the other deputations present by the absence of all distinctive dress, and also by the characteristic language of their address, which included the following passages :—

We rejoice at the public declaration of the solemn purpose to devote thyself to the utmost to the promotion of the highest interests of the people, and to the zealous fulfilment of what thou hast so fitly called "the great and sacred responsibilities" which, in the ordering of Divine providence, have devolved upon thee. In these noble purposes thou wilt be followed by the heartfelt sympathy and prayers of multitudes of loyal subjects.

While sympathising with measures now in progress for the welfare of the people, and with efforts which are being made for the settlement by arbitration of international differences, we would respectfully but earnestly urge upon the King the unspeakable importance of the maintenance of a peaceful policy in all our relations with other countries.

Great indeed is the responsibility inseparable from thy exalted position. May it be thy consolation to know that He who is the inexhaustible fountain of wisdom and strength is able and willing to supply out of the fulness of His Grace all the need of them that trust in Him. To the bounteous care and guidance of Almighty God we earnestly commend the King and Queen.

The King's reply, after a word of thanks, was to the following effect :—

I share your faith that my Government cannot be strengthened and guided to the attainment of the general welfare but by the blessing of God; and I solicit your efforts and prayers that my counsels may ever be directed in accordance with the lessons of our holy religion.

The Society of Friends has rarely failed to be conspicuous in every movement having for its object the establishment of peace among nations, and the growth of mutual help and loving-kindness among my people; and I pray that my reign may witness a widespread acceptance of these principles, which I shall keep ever before my eyes.

A NATIVE of the Hampshire village of Otterbourne, Miss Charlotte M. Yonge died there on Sunday week, in her seventy-eight year. The village, which is about four miles from Winchester, is only half as far from Hursley, where in 1835 Keble settled as vicar. Thus, as a girl of twelve, Miss Yonge came under the High Church influence which powerfully affected her whole life, and of which her novels were so popular an expression. With the proceeds of "The Heir of Redclyffe," published in 1853, she provided Bishop Selwyn of Melanesia with his missionary schooner, and other literary earnings she devoted freely to religious work. For thirty years she edited the Monthly Packet, and was to the last a contributor to the Guardian. Many children will gratefully remember her "Book of Golden Deeds," published in 1864 in Macmillan's Golden Treasury Series, her "Cameos from English History," and other pleasant stories.

Sir John Stainer, who died at Verona last Sunday, only sixty years of age, resigned the Chair of Music at the University of Oxford two years ago on account of failing health, having held it for ten years, in succession to the late Sir F. Gore-Ouseley. A Londoner by birth, Stainer as a boy was a chorister at St. Paul's with his friend, the late Arthur Sullivan. At the age of nineteen he became organist at Magdalen College, Oxford, and took both musical and arts degrees in the University. He was also appointed organist to the University and examiner in music. In 1872 he succeeded Sir John Goss as organist at St. Paul's, where he quickly revolutionised the music of the services. After sixteen years of distinguished service he retired, and settled again at Oxford, and was appointed to his professorship there. As a composer Stainer is best known by his "Crucifixion." His works include also the oratorio Gideon and a large amount of church music.

In printing his memorial address at the funeral of the late Rev. John Byles, we spoke of the Rev. James Legge, M.A., as minister of the Congregational Church at Headingley. Mr. Legge informs us that he is no longer minister of that church, but though still resident at Headingley, is at present without ministerial charge.

THE MIRACLES OF UNBELIEF.*

The miracles of unbelief referred to by Mr. Ballard are those believed by the atheist and the agnostic and the advanced New Testament critic. All these alike, in Mr. Ballard's opinion, fail to find "an adequate cause" for the existence and order of the world and for certain events in the course of its history. In rejecting the New Testament miracles, they are obliged to accept and to believe in miracles of a far more irrational type, and are consequently held up to ridicule by a writer whose best plea for Christianity is that all other things are worse.

We candidly acknowledge a general thread of true argument running through Mr. Ballard's book, and welcome this bold attack upon the absurdities into which religious unbelief has often driven even the cleverest of men.

The title of the book and its main idea are distinctly good; but beyond this we have not much praise for it. It is not sympathetic, and it will not be of much interest, we think, to those whose Unitarian training has familiarised their minds with a form of Christian belief in which miracles are absent, whilst neither atheism nor agnosticism rules in their place.

We could wish that writers like Mr. Ballard would pay more attention to the teaching of Jesus himself, and learn to appreciate better the position of those who neither regard him as an impostor illegitimately born, nor yet as God the Son working miracles.

The New Testament itself represents him as refusing to work miracles, and as refusing to ask God to work them for him, and even denying the generally accepted and most popularly believed miracle about Moses having given the people bread out of heaven to eat; as refusing to believe that the eighteen on whom the tower in Siloam fell were worse sinners than others; as pointing the would-be seers of miracle to the orderly changes of the weather, and their ability to foretell future events from present natural phenomena; and, above all, as emphatically declaring that the craving to see a miracle was wicked and adulterous. These things should, at least, raise the question, Did Jesus himself believe in the New Testament miracles? A question which never seems to have occurred to Mr. Ballard, but which, nevertheless, is fundamental to the whole theory of miraculous Christianity. For if, when Jesus had said that no miracles should be given, we still believe in them, his character for truth-speaking is not improved.

Two thousand years hence the puzzled historian may wonder at the fearful war raging in London and throughout England and the whole world during the reign of Queen Victoria. They will marvel, too, at the record of the soldiers marching to the beat of the drum, even on the Sundays through the streets, and attacking and besieging cities whose inhabitants were represented in other memoirs as peacefully assembled in the churches and chapels for religious worship. Will the man be mistaken who solves the puzzle by suggesting that the besieging forces and their famous general are but the record of a religious missionary and his figure of speech; that a certain Mr. Booth called his followers an "army," and that they actually and literally carried out the metaphor into wearing military uniform, living in barracks, and beating drums, and having a war cry? Is there, then, any other instance of a similar figure of speech on the lips of a religious teacher having a similar effect, and leaving to the puzzled historian of a future age a similar puzzle? Did not Jesus call himself a physician, command his disciples to heal the sick, to raise the dead, and to become fishers of men; and did not his followers record in the language of their Master's metaphors the doings of his life?

We, at least, suggest to Mr. Ballard, that the same cause produces a like effect to-day. Let us explain the unknown by the known whenever we can, and accept for our history of Christianity causes, non-miraculous, which are known by our own experience to be capable of producing the observed effects. In other words, the belief that Jesus believed in miracle or ever wrought a miracle is not necessary in order to explain the Christian records.

Wilfred Harris.

* "The Miracles of Unbelief," by Frank Ballard M.A., B.Sc. Messrs. T. and T. Clark. 6s.

AN EASTER EVE FETE.

A curious fête is held in Florence every Easter Eve, and two years ago I was fortunate enough to be amongst the spectators. "Sabato Santo" (Holy Saturday) is a general holiday, and from a very early hour crowds were astir, both townspeople and country-folk making their way towards the cathedral. By eleven o'clock the open space in front of the cathedral and beautiful campanile was filled with a densely packed, swaying, good-humoured multitude in holiday attire. It was a pretty scene; the weather, though somewhat cold, was brilliantly fine, and the sun shone upon the gay uniforms of soldiers and gendarmes, and touched with colour the picturesque costumes of the Italian women and children.

In the middle of the square a car was stationed, drawn by four white oxen, and garlanded with flowers. The car, we were told, contained fireworks, and at mid-day an artificial dove was to be sent off from the high altar of the cathedral, right along a line passing out through the west doors, across the square, and into the car.

The "Scoppio del Carro" (Explosion of the Car) is the moment of excitement for all good Florentines, for the people believe that if the dove is so skilfully fired as to set off the fireworks in the car at once, a prospercus year and a good harvest may be confidently expected. So sincerely do they believe in this harmless, if superstitious rite, that on occasions when the explosion has not been quite satisfactory, they have rioted, and blamed the priests; so the latter take care now to ensure that all shall go well, and conceal a man in the car to attend to the fireworks.

Inside the cathedral people were sitting and standing in vast numbers, a clear passage being kept by the soldiers from the high altar to the open west doors. Shortly after eleven a procession came slowly down between the crowds, boys carrying candles, banners, and a great crucifix, priests following in gorgeous robes, and, last of all, the Cardinal Archbishop, followed by a long train of attendants. The object of this procession was that the Archbishop might bless the oil that is used for the lamps in the Baptistery, the old church opposite the west front of the cathedral, and in which all the little Florentine babes are bound to be christened. After an interval the procession returned, and as twelve o'clock struck the dove was despatched. The noise that followed was absolutely overpowering. The fireworks exploded, guns were fired in the square, people shouted and cheered, the great organ in the cathedral pealed, and all church bells were set ringing after having been silent since early on Good Friday.

Possibly we may smile over the simple amusements and little superstitions of the Italians, but in witnessing the "Scoppio del Carro" fête one could not be otherwise than impressed with the happy enjoyment of the crowds—men, women, and children, soldiers and police, fruit and flower sellers, all pushing and jostling each other in the brilliant spring sunshine, and all with the utmost good humour, the one desire being to be present at this semi-religious, semi-pagan festival. In spite, however, of the sunshine and of all that appeared to be so propitious, if one might judge by the delight and excitement of the Florentines, the dove on this particular occasion did not seem to have fulfilled its duty satisfactorily, for we heard subsequently that there were heavy rains just after Easter, amounting almost to floods, that the Archbishop died a few days after the fête, and that there were riots in the town, all of which were popularly put down to the failure of the "Columbino" on Easter Eve.

K. F. Lawford.

RENEWED CONSECRATION.

BY THE REV. FRANK K. FREESTON.*

Thou Lord of Hosts, whose guiding hand
Has brought us here before thy face;
Our spirits wait for thy command,
Our silent hearts implore thy peace.

Our spirits lay their noblest powers,
As offerings, on thy holy shrine;
Thine was the strength that nourished ours;
The soldiers of the Cross are thine.

While watching on our arms at night,
We saw thine angels round us move;
We heard thy call, we felt thy light,
And followed, trusting to thy love.

And now with hymn and prayer we stand
To give our strength to thee, great God;
We would redeem thy holy land,
That land which sin so long has trod.

Send us where'er thou wilt, O Lord,
Through rugged toil and wearying fight;
Thy conquering love shall be our sword,
And faith in thee our truest might.

Send down thy constant aid, we pray;
Be thy pure angels with us still;
Thy truth, be that our firmest stay;
Our only rest, to do thy will.

O. B. Frothingham.

The noble and inspiring hymn which we have all just sung has already, I hope, struck the note and set the tone of our devotional service this evening. We have come together at this time, not in order to whip up an extra spurt of devotional feeling, but because the feeling was already in our hearts and only longing for an occasion of united outpouring. For a new time has dawned upon our hopes—not new in kind, or degree, but new in opportunity, in suggestion, new in its appeal to our ambition and our imagination, new in its awe and sense of a God, who is near at hand and guiding the world, yea, bringing on the one far-off divine event, the coming of the kingdom of heaven on earth. "Why make so much of a new century?" some may say; "None of us shall live to see it die. Time is always moving on, and always the same." Yes, but there are milestones along its course, and there are special points in the solemn march of the silent years when we eagerly look behind and before, and ask ourselves "Whence?" and "Whither?"

We look behind, and in deep, reverent gratitude, conscious, alas, of things left undone, or done amiss, of a too easy familiarity with things gracious and precious, of a too ready self-sufficiency, or worse, and we are abased at their remembrance; yet, conscious also, for we cannot deny it and, therefore, dare to say it, that the strength of God has nourished us, the armour of God has been lent to ours, the angels of His invisible presence have hovered around us, we have heard His call, and seen His light and felt His love, and now—now we look before into this strange alluring future, and there is in our hearts a deeper desire to consecrate ourselves afresh, to dedicate our churches afresh, to the new times and the divine things. The past has put us into possession of the great words and hopes of religion; it has given us, as we think and say, a purer Christianity and a truer theology; it has bequeathed to us in this Provincial Assembly denominational freedom and ecclesiastical liberty; it has formulated for us our trinity of Love, and Righteousness, and Truth which are three in one to the eye of faith. Our churches have played a pioneer part in that widening out of religious thought which they now watch and appropriate as though it were their own particular accomplishment. But they must be more than watchers, for it is not all theirs, and they cannot live on their past, however strenuous it was. The work of the Spirit, more urgent, more difficult, still lies in front, still calls for effort. We shall stand or fall in this new century, not by our previous history, but by the faithfulness or laxity with which we accept our present duty, by the spiritual or unspiritual energy with which we strive to feed the religious hunger of to-day.

And the word that comes to me to-night is one partly of rebuke, but partly of encouragement: "To whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to whom men commit much, of him will they ask the more." That is a searching test. Do we accept it and apply it? It means that in proportion as we claim that our principles and teachings are wider, or truer, than those of others, we invite and justify their counterclaim that the tree must be known by its fruits. Practically, and for the most part rightly, the world judges a faith by its works. The real religious difference among men lies not in their variation of theological opinion, but in the personal approximation of their life to their belief.

O friends, much has been given to us, planted for us by faithful forefathers, watered by their willing sufferings, but if God is to give the increase we must offer ourselves as His earnest co-workers in these new and precious days. The greater the gift, the greater the requirement. What do we more than others? Do we the more love and serve, and give, because the more we believe? We can only live on what we love and serve; we can only give when we have. But in giving more we increase our treasure. Love deepens, life grows large, as it is bestowed on others, from scantiest sources, and slenderest means, rising by its own generosity into spiritual prosperity.

Then let us give more freely, we who have so freely received—give our will, and thought, and spiritual effort to feed the hunger of the world, and comfort its aching heart. God is doing so much for us, and others are daily helping our lives; we must be willing to spend, and be spent in our turn; asking for nothing again, yet finding therein our joy and gain, not because we crave the reward, but because it is the way of God. Let us look upon our privileges not so much as sources of personal satisfaction, but rather as incentives and opportunities for the higher service of man. Let us regard our religion as philanthropy, our Christianity as a call to chivalry, our theology as a word of prophecy, our "truth" as beauty, poetry, and joy, to be taken as water of life to the thirsty and the weary. Let us look upon our worshipping as a thanksgiving that God allows us to help on the coming of His kingdom; upon our preaching as a Gospel, a God's message, for the saving of souls; upon our churches as places in which to make people more like Christ. Then we shall know, not only how to be abased, but also how to abound. Then all things will be ours, whether the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all things are ours, and we are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

* An address given at the Provincial Assembly United Devotional Service in Little Portland-street Chapel, on Tuesday evening, March 26.

THE GOSPEL OF THE CLOD.

"Let no flower of spring pass us by."—Wisdom of Solomon ii. 7.

With winds of Siberian rigour attacking us from the North-East with unusual persistence, giving us, indeed, no respite by night or day, spring has seemed to be a dream rather than a reality. All the open pastures have felt the cold scorch—colder each night till it sealed the earth with frost. Against the hills the dry blast has been pounding like waves upon the rocks. Months back the sun, with his first step of ascent, proclaimed the annunciation of the year. But the life has lain sealed and hidden. Impassive and unpromising has been the face of Nature this long while past.

Now, to life comes liberty. The hidden life beholds the light. From the earth has come the earliest intimation of that divine energy which shall yet embody itself in forms as manifold as they are beautiful. What tender creature could dare to face so hard an earth, so cold a sky? we have said; and even then the bleat of a new-born lamb fell upon our ears through the untempered winds.

On the off-side of a river's embankment facing west I have seen here and there a hardy daisy, yet prudently nestling on its contracted stalk amid its sheltering leaves. With the crimson in the tips of its petals, it is surmised by some that it is transforming the cold vibrations of the light into a scant sufficiency of living heat. The willow's pearls have even turned into "palm," and are now diffusing their sweet almondy scent. Premature promises of honey from the gorse would greet the prospecting bee if only he dare venture out. To-day I saw, amid the sheltering branches of neighbouring trees, a wild plum in blossom. The arums—"lords-and-ladies"—are careful to hide among the hedge stems, but wag their big green tongue-like leaves, and with a curiously animal motion lap the wind as it rushes through the leafless brushwood. But there is one flower of spring which above all others this year I cannot forget. Behind the shelter of the Downs, I came, even in the early days of March, on a field tinted with a light-blue wash of speedwells. So frail, yet so daring, I have found it often among the earliest of the early risers.

Nor is the sweet fraternity of the sod left to bear testimony of life alone. From overhead in the air and on the branches come the welcome notes of the harbingers. The lark must see that all's right at any rate with its bit of the world to be trolling it so blithely. The thrush has his message of hope to impart to a friend in the distance. The chaffinch laughs and chatters as though he knows all about it. Hark! from the plantation yonder comes the soft cooing of ring-doves with their inimitable accent of domestic cosiness. Among other members of the Parliament of Fowls the rooks are discussing with much eloquence the practical politics of house-building. But be it from fowl or be it from flower, there comes alike the irrepressible utterance of the earth-life and the earth-gladness. And these are not earthly but divine.

Eye and ear are greeted with a triple message of joy and hope this spring, this Easter-tide.

"The flowering of the buttercups," said Lowell, "is always a great and religious event in my year." Perhaps we do not take the children of Nature with quite sufficient seriousness. We trifle about their "prettiness," They are more than pretty, even as a child's prayer is. They are the prayers and praises of the earth. Let no flower of spring pass by us heedless of its message. They tell forth the holy gospel of the clod. They insist, full face upon us, never a year missing, that the grace of God is treasured in the clay beneath our feet. They tell us God is here.

> Tell them, I am, Jehovah said
>
> . . . .
>
> At once, above, beneath, around,
> All Nature, without voice or sound,
> Replied, "O Lord, Thou art."

But the season declares not only the fact of the Divine Presence, but, if one may say so, the very mood of the indwelling Spirit. And it is a mood of unmistakable character—of great gladness. That was a spring thought of the ancient writer that God saw everything as He made it; and, behold, it was very good. When He makes a beginning the morning stars sing together. In the annual childhood of the world He rejoices. Later days, as in the case of our personal lives, may obscure for a time the beauty of the initial purpose. Parched faith will intervene then. The quickening spirit will seem occasionally to have withdrawn. The current of vitality and joy may then subside. Not so now. This is the time to charge one's heart with hope and against the stress that is sure to follow—against the dulness, and dustiness, and inertia to replenish the heart with freshness. It was said of Emerson that when one met him the fall of Adam seemed a false report. Yes, indeed; and when one beholds the glad fresh face of Nature, it is of rising, not of falling, that he thinks. Fear is cast out, and hope reigns. Matter shows no longer Satanic. The old pessimisms vanish at the back of the retreating east wind. Earth has her hour of prophecy now, and it is a prophecy of imperishable goodness and unconquerable love.

Beyond all demonstration of the physicist there is a mystical intercourse, a true sympathy between the spirit in Nature and the spirit in the heart of man. They find one another out. Rich chords of the music of the one provoke harmonic tones in the other. To-day the ground is fragrant and the air is buoyant, but the lift they give us is not merely a matter of physical exhilaration. It is the unique influx into every natural heart of the same spirit of life which is manifesting itself so wonderfully about us, and which within the soul is health and grace. For "he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the God of Truth."

And then there comes the special Easter message to us. There is the great unveiling of the nearness of God and the utterances of His joy in the work of His hands. He who has apprehended these things will probably not find his faith fail in other respects. Still there is something more—the grand conviction that God's eternal life, which, in its measure, Nature proclaims, is also ours, while we look up to-day to a Prince of Life, of whom men have felt from the first that he, at all events, must be immortal. He knew it himself. "I am," said he, "the resurrection"—the power of rising again, the energy of immortal life. It is his name, then, that we blend with the assurance that reaches us from every flower of spring. We die not. From out our earthly parts proceedeth that which ever lives. The good, the beautiful in us is perennially young. Here before our very eyes is the ever-living One at His work. I believe in God the Father who is to-day creating—imparting life—in heaven and earth. This is the season of His greatest activity in Nature. May He be not less graciously active in our hearts. He loveth His son; He showeth him the things He doeth. And greater works than these His miracles of vital beauty on the face of the earth will He show him; even the growth of the spirit. For as the Father raiseth up these creatures of loveliness from a world of seeming death, so shall He quicken the spirit of man, His son, into freshness of life, making his conscience responsive to His call and moulding his character in infinite grace.

Brighton. H. M. Livens.

THE EMPTY TOMB.

Covered over with so large an aftergrowth of legend and of story—like ivy clinging round its walls—how seldom have we seen the naked stonework of the tomb of Christ, and ever looked in and seen that it was empty!

Have we, with all our talk of trifles, ever seen the sight they saw who on that Easter morn beheld that the tomb was empty? Have we seen the utter void that they then gazed upon?

What was it else that gave them, that had loved Jesus so tenderly and so well, the power to tell men that he lived with God and was not to be found in the grave?

What was their evidence, and upon what testimony did they speak? To us the value of their evidence is twofold: first, they had the uncommon experience of having been witnesses to the life of Christ; and secondly, they had our common human nature.

If, then, the aftergrowth of miracle have hidden the truth away, it is possible that in our common human nature, deeply touched by a loving life, and standing by the grave, we may find the void that these men found and the deep foundation of their witness to the faith of Christendom: a witness that all mankind, had they been there and with the same love of the same man in their hearts, would equally have attested and with the same conviction—that the grave was empty.

This seems to me to be the nature of the witness which bore witness on Easter Day to the empty tomb and the Risen Christ. It is our universal nature giving its general witness with unwonted power and conviction in one remarkable instance and on one particular occasion—the occasion offered by the death of Christ. The occasion stands marked in history. On that occasion Humanity without hesitation could stand by the tomb and say, "He is not here. Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is risen."

And in coming back to this simple truth, though we may lose our miracles, we yet may gain a deeper witness and a stronger assurance than we ever dreamed before that Easter Day could give us. For then, in the persons indeed of a few, mankind once for all put to the test of the grave of Christ its belief in immortality. And for all mankind that occasion and that test has a supreme meaning. The disciples of Jesus came, as all mourners come, to look into the grave, and they found, as all mourners do, that he they loved was not in the grave. "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here. He is risen."

Is there any true mourner who has not felt something of the same? To whom has the grave ever yet been full? Who is there has not found it utterly, ah! heart-rendingly, empty?

Let us go back, then, to our common human nature, and see if God's revelation of eternal life is not waiting for us there; and let us now consider again this story of the empty tomb and this perception that Christ was risen in the light of human nature.

Peter and John and Mary Magdalene had the same sort of human nature that we have, and the first thing they felt, as we should have done, when they looked into the tomb, was the absence of Jesus: they perceived the emptiness of the grave, the hollowness and the void that had no answer to the fulness of the heart. The grave was empty; there was no Jesus in it. The voice, the loving look, the comfort of a single word, one last sign or token—not a trace of the Great Teacher, not a single utterance of faith, not one parable, nor the least sympathy, nor any spirit that cared for the Kingdom of God was there.

"He is not here," they said; and what more natural or more profound could your human nature or mine have said? He was not to be found in his grave; where, then, should they look for him—where was he?

Needed it an angel—other than God's own—to turn their hearts to God? The eyes that looked up into heaven and far beyond and somewhat back of the power that brought the sunrise on that Easter morn, while their tears fell like dew on the glistening earth, were looking up to God for their Christ. God had taken him, God only knew where he was. They knew not, and they looked to God. He was with God, he was risen. The sorrows of earth were over for him. And this was what he had said: That he should go back to the Father, and that in a little while they should look for him and not find him, and again a little while and they should see him, "Because I go unto the Father," and that then they should love "one another."

They remembered his teaching them to fear not them which kill the body; and, standing by his grave, they were knit together in a great contempt of death, and for treasures laid up on earth and not far rather in heaven, and the fear of death went from them, and the faith of Christ came to them. Why seek ye the living among the dead? And they went forth to Galilee to take up, fearless and filled with his faith, his work, where his spirit seemed to beckon them. And there already in Galilee they found themselves preceded by their message, and in the hearts of them that had loved him the same faith already present. For human nature there also, may we not think, had found the same answer to fling in the teeth of death.

Yet only those who had been to the tomb could bear witness to the awful emptiness that they alone had seen. To them and to their witness Christianity emphatically trusted. For whoever else was unconvinced, those who had been and seen, who had stood by that grave and that silence, were beyond the reach of doubt. They could proclaim and die for, if they could not more logically explain, what that Easter morn had done for them, and what, through their preaching, it ought to do for all mankind—banish the fear of death and bring forth immortality to light. Wilfred Harris.

A KEMPIS ON EASTERTIDE.

That ancient and curious little book, from which at Christmas a quaint carol was quoted here, recurs to mind again now when all the Christian world is setting its thought on Easter. For fully three hundred and fifty years (whether à Kempis can be proved to have written the original meditations or not) this small volume has carried within itself abundant evidence of the sameness of motive that runs through all festival sermons. Small wonder if the preachers of to-day fail to find any novelty in approaching Eastertide, when the saint of the solitude, the master of the "Imitation," himself treads the well-worn round of the story of that death and resurrection, as chiefly the symbol of the "death unto sin and life unto righteousness" that Paul had declared some fourteen centuries before.

This at least is true enough of the actual outline of these old, old sermons. But, of course, in treatment they bear the marks of their age, their monkish writer, and a certain quaint realism which has lasted on, in the Roman Church, unto our own day. A meditation, say, of Cardinal Wiseman on the Passion, is but one of these à Kempis sermons, because the school of systematic meditations is much the same in all ages. To those unused to such a mental and spiritual process, as are the majority of the readers of The Inquirer, there will be a something not altogether acceptable in some of these sentences; yet, for those who look through the externals, there will be plainly visible a tenderness of the devout life which a swifter generation may well envy. The translator, one Thomas Carre, himself a monk, in his dedication speaks with euphuism of the exalted joy of the pure-hearted preacher. "Yes; this otherwise humble monk, having learnt the holy pride which St. Jerome taught, apprehends himself more worth, better, greater than the whole world; he contemns it, he transcends it, he lives above it, as a true bird of Paradise. If he employ his talents, it is upon bread. If he spent any time, it is to redeem time misspent, and to teach the world to use time to the purchase of eternity."

The Easter sermons are naturally led up to by Good Friday meditations, and while in these there is strong emphasis laid upon the beauty of the life of self-sacrifice, and the discipline of suffering, there are far more curious touches of sensuous realism, as in meditation on the sufferings, contemplation of the wounds, and the cruel acts of the Jews, than is, of course, possible in the emblematic act of the resurrection. Straight from the sufferings of the crucifixion come the words of comfort and encouragement to the sons of adversity. "Faint not therefore in your tribulations for the name and love of Christ; but suffer all patiently with an humble heart as Christ and all the saints did, who by suffering torments subdued their foes. For by suffering adversities a man becomes better; brighter than gold, clearer than glass; more pure from the spots of vice, and more accomplished in virtue; stronger than the enemy, more lovely to our friends. One becomes more cautious in the custody of oneself, more prone to compassion, more fitted to humility, more fervent to pray, more given to heavenly things. These are the happy fruits of patience which do most shine in Christ's most bitter Passion."

But just as direct from continued thought upon the last hours come these following strokes of fancy—images from the very time and circumstance of the writer's own age. "Consider now, O you faithful of Christ, whether you ever heard or read of such a contumely, and so cruel a punishment inflicted upon any of the holy kings and prophets of old as now is put upon this Lord of Prophets, King of Angels, Highest of Priests, and Lamb of God. . . . For they present him sharp thorns in lieu of roses and lilies. Instead of gems and precious stones they afford him rough blows. For his regal crown, a garland of sea-thorns. For his golden chain, an unmerciful box on the ear. For his silken stole, an ignominious white fool's-coat. For his royal purple, red drops of blood. For his kingly sceptre, a reed tossed to and fro with the wind. For a horse, an ass. For a sword, a rod. For gilded spurs, iron nails in his feet. For his warlike banner, a cross with a title written upon it. For the spear of a king, a soldier's lance. For his bishop's mitre, a handkerchief on his naked head. For a doctor's pulpit, a marble pillar. For his cup, a sponge. For nectar, myrrh. For compassion, scornful derision. For his farewell, a curse."

And later the monastic life finds its special emblems too. "A wicked thief was his Chamberlain; a scoffer, his Infirmarian; for his Wardroparian, one that stripped him of his garments; for his Refectorian, a brewer of gall; for his Dormitory, a grave; for his bed, a hard stone hewn out of a rock."

Through this avenue of quaint symbols of the suffering Christ—through the dark stillness of the grave—do we come in the pictured story of the Church's year, as shown us in this antique echo from the cloister, to the glorious outburst of the Easter morning. The solemn silence is at an end: again the bells may break the air with their clang and ripple: the sound of music, psalm and hymn, be heard in place of the sombre monotone of Tenebrae. Lovingly are the joyful outbursts of the festival anthems dwelt on, all their treasured sweetness of long association lingeringly drawn out, each phrase, each word, but the fountain-head of a stream of holy rapture at this most gladsome time of all the year. And what is so marked—that very delight of Eastertide which touches the hearts of us moderns, the sense of the community of the thought of Easter's resurrection and the world's new birth in Springtide—this is just as conscious a joy to the gardening monk—that à Kempis whose pages seem almost bordered with the lilies and roses and all fair flowers of the simple earth.

"Now the elements which were clouded and shut up, as it were, by the winter cold, begin by little and little to open themselves and clear up, and dispose themselves to the future solemnity by a certain pleasantness of the Spring. For the earth which had lain a long time sterile and uncultivated, openly shows a vigorous fruitfulness, and brings forth pleasant young grass. Trees and undergrowth send out sweet flowers, and are adorned with fresh green leaves, as with their new summer garments. The birds of the air having got the hoary winter over, sweetly warble, and flying through the fields and woods they congratulate the happy return of the calmness of the air, and the fruitfulness of the coming harvest. The sun, moon, and stars stream out their beams clearer than ever. In fine, there is no creature which applauds not Christ's Resurrection by a certain renovation and newness. . . . Where all things then, as well the highest as the lowest, concur to sing and announce the same truth, let no show of doubt possess the heart."

Then, when the song of praise has had its due part in this sermon, the preacher turns to his actual teaching—his application. The sins, which are the soul's death, her grave, are denounced as the very hell whose gates the death of Christ had burst asunder; and he who would enter into the true joy of Eastertide must sanctify the season by a willed conversion to God, a decision for righteousness. "Be therefore the flying news of the world far from us; let foolish fables be avoided; let your words be edifying, that they may give grace to all that hear them; let our Saviour's wonderful works be repeated over and over again; and let the good news of Jesus of Nazareth be continually heard among you with joy and delight to you all."

And at the close, the figures of the Paschal feast arise in the preacher's mind, to be, as with the insignia of Calvary, melted into the spiritual air of the soul's needs.

"Who is he, then, that celebrates Easter in spirit? He that departs from vice to virtue; and riseth out of his old life and evil customs into a new state of devotion. Who is he that worthily honours Easter? He that contemns secular honours, and aims at God's glory in all his good actions. Who is he that offers a kid upon Easter-eve? He that is truly penitent for his sins, and desists from sin in time to come. Who is the true Hebrew that passeth the Red Sea? He who, leaving sensuality, embraces spiritual delights, and forgetting the things which are by-past, springs on apace on his way. Who is the true son of Abraham? He who makes a progress from servile fear, to the true liberty of the sons of God. Who is worthy to sit at Christ's table? He that willingly humbles himself for the love of Christ. Who is fit to enter into the kingdom of heaven? He that contemns the kingdom of this world, and all the pomp and glory thereof; such an one is a friend of God, a Citizen of Heaven, and the Lord of the World."

Here the sermon ends, and I close my little old book, with a hope that others may find in these few passages from it a certain odour of sweet thought and devoutness that may linger as a flower from the old monk's garden in the gladness of this new Eastertide.

Edgar Daplyn.

Some people's busy lives are merely an unquiet way of doing nothing.—Seneca.

SPRING'S ANTHEM.

Go thou and stand upon the topmost height
Of some great mountain piled t'wards heavenly meads,
And watch the Sun-God whip his weary steeds,
Scatt'ring red wreckage in his westward flight.
Stand by the deep, and hear with sudden roar
Triton arise and lash the sea to rage,
Till mighty ocean staggers forth to wage
His everlasting battle 'gainst the shore.
But I, who tread this budding world of spring,
Feel the deep thrill of Nature's calmer ways;
The lark upsoaring on triumphant wing,
The thousand lovely flowers that meet my gaze,—
All seem to me like purest souls who fling
To God a sweeter, grander hymn of praise.

Edward Teschemacher.

THE RESURRECTIONS OF CHRISTIAN FAITH.

Christianity has shown a marvellous power of revival. Again and again has it seemed to be dead, only to reappear with new vigour and in nobler form. Of its various resurrections, none is more remarkable than the first, as we shall realise if we put ourselves in sympathy with the disciples in those days of fear and bewilderment that followed the Master's death upon the cross. There can be little doubt that the cross proved a stumbling-block to them and put an end for the time being to their faith in Jesus as the Messiah. They set out for their Galilean homes, feeling that all their hopes of him had been disappointed, that their beliefs about him had utterly broken down. Only a little while ago they had confessed him as the Christ and had been discussing which of them, when his throne was established, would sit on his right hand and which on his left; now they realised that he in whom their expectations were centred was crucified, dead, and buried.

When, however, the first shock of their grief and disappointment was spent, and they began to move among the scenes for ever associated with him, his image rose again in their minds with all its graciousness and power. His voice seemed to echo once more from the hillsides where they had so often heard him preach; the flowers at their feet and the birds in the air reminded them of his deep and beautiful sayings; the world of men and women and little children recalled to them his large and tender charity; his spirit seemed in the very air they breathed; and can we wonder if some of them believed that he actually appeared to them at the breaking of bread in their homes or as they sat at their nets by the shores of the still lake? With the question as to the objective reality of these early Christophanies, we are not now concerned; whatever their nature they were the effect and sign and not the cause of reviving faith. This revival was due to the impression which the life and teaching of Jesus had made on the disciples, and which the scenes of their intercourse with him served to deepen. Could he, they asked, who had moved among them as a soul apart, marked out by his personality for a divine and special destiny, could he be other than the Messiah? Nay, they felt, by indisputable right of character, he was and is the Christ of God, and not death itself can annul his title or defeat his mission. And again, as their faith in him revived, they sought to embody it in a creed or set of beliefs about him. They searched the Scriptures to discover the time and manner in which he would accomplish his work; and thus there gradually grew up the belief that he would quickly come in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory and establish his kingdom on the earth. The Gospels bear abundant witness to the strength and universality of this belief; it dominated in an extraordinary manner the thoughts and life of the Churches—Jewish and Gentile alike. So with eyes uplifted to heaven the believers awaited the advent of the Son of Man.

